OLD VERSION

[Greek Hymnody, § xvi. 10.]

I. Introduction.—The Old version of the Psalms, obsolete as it seems, on the ground of its general type of arrangement and the general character of its style, possesses an interest for a small circle of even the most fastidious bibliophiles and connoisseurs of books and an object of curious books; and has some value as an historical work. The accidents between its originator, Thomas Mor: the, and its first congener, the Psalter, which, to the extent of which it was made sacred ballads for the people of the time, has more than one exception. His taste, his choice of metre, his style of composition are in common, which has become a consecrated measure, and has been adopted as a metre by the Lake poets, and for centuries has been the standard of English poetry. The earliest and most lasting success of the version is due to this adoption of a few metres, the Thackeray's and Thackeray's metres. As Puritanism increased, music decayed. The Scottish Psalter of 1564 is in strong contrast with the English one, and both are similar in their composition in the earlier pieces by Whitham and later ones by Craig and Pass, its affinity with the Psalms of Marot and Beza: but the revised Scottish Psalter of 1650 was reduced to the monotonous uniformity of the English metre, which had proved of greater practical usefulness. To this element there was added, in the Geven editions, an imitation of the metrical Psalms of Mor: and Beza. And in the Elizabethan editions a slight German influence is discernible.

II. Early Editions.

Sternhold's psalms were originally composed for his own "Godly solace" (Stryke) and sung by him to his organ. Some may have been written in his lifetime, and repeated in his presence. The list, undated, was dedicated to him, and contains 19 psalms.

A short preface says that he does not deem them "in any part to be compared with" Sternhold's "most exquisite ditties." There were reprints of this book, both by Whitechurch and John Kyngston in 1553 (Cotton).

III. English Psalms.

During the troubles at Frankfort among the congregation of exiles, the Puritan party resolved to frame an order of Service in place of the Book of Common Prayer. This order was drawn up by Knox, Whittingham, Gibby, Fox and Cole, whilst still at Frankfort, but was not printed till they had settled at Geneva. It appeared as:

The orium of prayers and ministers of The Generals, &c., used in the English Congregation at Geneva: and approved by the famous and godly learned man, Jacob Calv. Imprinted at Geneva by John Crespin, MDLV.

The progress of the Psalter is connected with the editions of this book, which contain, immediately before the Catechism, the metrical psalms, with independent pagination. The separate titlepage of the 1556 edition is:

One and Fifty Psalms of David in English metre, wherein 37 were made by Thomas Sternhold, and the rest by others. Conferred with the Hebrews and in certain places corrected as the text and sense of the Prophet require. (Smith.)

The psalms are those by Sternhold and Hopkins, pub. in 1551, with 7 fresh ones, which, from later editions, are known to be by Whittingham. A metrical rendering of the Ten Commandments by Whittingham is appended. Among these psalms is the earliest Quartino, "O Lord, comfort the distressed" (51st). The Psalms of Sternhold and Hopkins had undergone a revision, probably by Whittingham, who was a good Hebraist. The general preface to The Forme of Prayers, &c., contains, among other interesting remarks on the value of metrical psalms, an apology for altering the revised words of Sternhold. (It may be noted that Warburton ridicules the bridegroom "ready trimmed" (shaven), in Ps. 19, really falls on the revisers, not on Sternhold.) The revised text was permanently adopted in all subsequent editions of the Psalter.

The contents of a lost edition of The Forme of Prayers, &c. (1558), cannot be ascertained. But Livingston, in his splendid work on the Scottish Psalter, to which this article is largely indebted, has conjectured, for reasons which will appear below, that it contained 9 fresh psalms by Whittingham, and 2 by Pullain.

In 1561 and probably in the earlier half of the year appeared another edition of The Forms, of which there is an unique copy in St. Paul's Cathedral Library. The Psalter in it is entitled:

Four Score and seven psalms of David in English metre by Thomas Sternecholle and others: conferred with the Hebrews, and in certain places corrected, as the sense of the Prophet require. Whereunto are added the Songs of Simmon, the Lord's prayers. (The account here given is from a collation by Dr. Simpson, Librarian of St. Paul's, and another by Major Crawford in Notes and Queries, June 2, 1855.)

The contents of this book are a reprint of all the pieces in 1556, with the addition of 9 fresh psalms by Whittingham: 2 by John Pullain, already, it is probable, published in 1558; 24 with the signature of William Kethe (W. Ke); and the L.M. 100th Ps ("All people that" (p. 43, ll.), set to its familiar tune which had appeared in the French Psalter of 1531 and was set there to the 134th Ps.), and with the extraordinary signature "Tho. Ster." There are also a version of "The Song of Simeon" and two of "The Lord's Prayer" by Whittingham; a third, of the "Lord's Prayer," anonymous, which is known from the English Psalters to be by D. Cox; and a prose prayer to be said before a man begins his work. It is in this edition that the influence of Marot and Beza's Version is most perceptible. Several of the psalms, by Pullin (114th), and Whittingham (e.g. 121, 124, 127), and most of Kethe's, are either imitations of French metres, or are set to French tunes. There are 180 tunes, 18 of which are from Marot and Beza's Version; the rest (except Ps. 67th, 125th) are in the 1569 ed. below. This is probably the book alluded to in a passage in "A Brief Discourse off the Troubles begonne at Frankfurd":—

"The congregation prepared themselves to depart (from Geneva), saving certaine whiche remained behind, to reste, to witt, to finishe the Bible (the Geneva Bible) and the Psalmes both in meteer and prose, which were already begone," &c. (The prose Psalms were disapproved, and presented to Queen Elizabeth. The metrical Psalter was only advanced another stage towards completion.)

Later Editions.

Two further editions may be added, although they to a certain extent anticipate the after history, in order to present here a complete view of the development of the Psalter at Geneva. There is an unique edition in the Peterborough Cathedral Library, incorporated in "The Forme of Prayers and Ministration of The Sacraments, deceywed the English Church at Geneva approved and receyued by the Church of Scotland," pub. by Henri Marieschal (no place of pub.). The origin of this book is puzzling. The title-page, table of contents, calendar, and sermon by William Steuart are identical with the Scottish Psalter, 1565. But the Psalms are not from the Scottish Psalter. The 1561 edition (St. Paul's) is first reprinted in block. Then all the remaining numbers are filled up from the English Psalter, omitting its duplicate psalms. At the end are printed "The Elements of Almighty God." ("Attend, my people."), "A Prayer" ("The Spirit of grace grant us, O Lord."), "The Lord's Prayer," D. cuv., "The XII Articles of the Christian Faith" ("All my belief," &c.), "A Prayer unto the holy Ghost to be sung before the Sermon," "The Lamentation of a Sinner" (2nd, (beginning of it lost), "A thanksgiving after the receiuing of the Lord's Supper," and "The Song of Simeon" (W. Whitt). In 1569 an edition of "The Forme of Prayers," &c., pub. by Crespin at Geneva (Scotoiam), contains a reprint of one of the English complete editions of the Psalters (app.) with the substitution of Whittingham's version of the "Nunc dimittis." The singular feature in both these editions is the preference of the English Psalter to the Scottish, notwithstanding the far closer affinity that existed between the Churches of Scotland and Geneva. The 1566 edition appears entirely ignorant of the special psalms of the Scottish version of 1564. The 1569 edition adopts the English version by preference, and as a consequence rejects the majority even of the genuine gien Evan psalms, written by Kethe. A notice may here be inserted of the unique reprint of the 1641 edition existing in the Britwell Library of S. Christie Miller, Esq., and through his kindness collated by Major Crawford specially for this work. It is slightly smaller (4 by 2 1/2 inches) than the St. Paul's book, and, unlike that, is in black letter. The title is the same, but there is no imprint of the place of publication. It was, however, undoubtedly printed in Great Britain, perhaps in Edinburg, probably for the use of the Geneva exiles. Many of the misprints of the Geneva edition, due to foreign printers, are corrected; and there are perhaps 5 variations in the melodies. But the only substantial change is the substitution (Ps. 190) of the signature of W. Ke (Arche) for the obvious blunder of the gienvan edition (Tho. Ster.). It is from the Geneva 1591 edition apparently that taken for incorporation in the complete of 1644, rather than from the Genev Fuller details of this collation than — in this article are given by Major Crawford Quercus, June 3, 1832, pp. 423-424.

IV. English Editions, I

Meanwhile psalm-singing a powerful religious engine in 1559 (see Watte'sBibliotheca) a r of the Psalter was published. bably the illicit edition refer Stationers' Registers:—

John Hay obtained a patent to print the Psalms in metre on the Lord of June in this year (Vid. the Ann.)
He would risk no more illicit prnt.; the book was to be lawfully published. It is possible that this patent applied also to the earlier 1560 edition (Ch. Ch.)
(if it is Dayr's, which is doubtful, which was called by the censor in the same terms; and looking back at it we now see that the text is that of the intended Psalter ("Benedictus," "Nunc Dimittis," Ten Commandments, and Response ("Lord have mercy on us," &c.), The Lord's Prayer and Creed. In that edition. The attempt to separate the Psalter from the Prayer Book, and to take away Genevan suspicions, that was, to separate the Psalter from the Prayer Book, and to take away Genevan suspicions, had begun in the earlier book, was developed in the edition 1564, and was to continue in this new new movement seems to be connected with the names of Wischone and Hopkins, Norton and Cox, and perhaps Grindal (see § 3). The reference to Wischone, unlike John Paulin, the other new contributor to the English edition of 1566, was not a Genevan exile; on the contrary, he appeared at first to be a party of Cox, which defended the Prayer Book of Edward against Calvin's Service Book introduced by Knox. His contributions to the Psalter also have no affinity with Geneva; The likeness of his 67th Psalm to Coverdale was remarked above. John Hopkins's place of exile is unknown, but it is not probable that he was at Geneva; and be reapresent now, bringing apparently Sterndoll's more, and contributing a large number of Psalms.
The influence of Whittingham, on the other hand, has ceased. He had left England before the edition 1561 was published; two of the psalms by him in the Christ Church edition of 1560 are now rejected, and his contribution to the English edition has attained its maximum; it may even be doubted whether he had any personal share in editing the earlier edition of 1560;
the new Psalms by Hopkins, which, it is apparent have may have already appeared in the lost Genevan edition of 1566. The German influence is increased by two translations ("Vespers," "Veni Creator, Lord, by Thy dear word"); and the admission of uninspired hymns, such as "The Lamentation," &c., is an entire departure from Genevan precedent and accord with Luther's practice. [For Becon and Norton see below, § IX.]

§ VI. The English and Anglo-Genevan Psalters compared.

A careful comparison of these two editions with that of Geneva (1561), throws an interesting light on the internal history of the English and Scottish Psalters and their forms. Leaving out of sight the whole contents of the 1566 edition, which is incorporated in the three books, the only material common to the Christ Church ed. (1560) and the Geneva at Paul's (1561) consists of the 9 psalms by Whittingham, 2 by Pullan, and the version of the Lord's Prayer by Cox. These 9 psalms of Whittingham and Pullan, both Genevan exiles, excite no surprise in the Genevan edition of 1561; but their previous appearance in the English, 1560, lends great plausibility to Livingston's conjecture that they had originally appeared in the lost Genevan edition of 1558, and passed thence to England with the exiles; and if this was really the case, then the only absolutely new matter common to 1560 and 1561 ( Geneva) is somewhat surprising, viz.: — The Lord's Prayer by Cox, the stouter antagonist of Calvin.
( It is given as anonymous in 1561, not as by Cox.)
With this exception, the two editions are identical.

The version of the "Nunc Dimittis" in 1561 ( Geneva), is a distinct one to that in Christ Church, 1559, and written by Whittingham, who was then under Calvin's influence, and did not throw in his lot definitely with the English Prayer Book till 1563, when he became Dean of Durham; his selection of both this and the Lord's Prayer
(2) for versification follows the precedent of Beza's continuation of Massey's Psalter, pub. in 1551. It would be natural also to suppose that if the compilers of 1561 (Geneva) had seen the 95th of Christ Church, 1560, they would not have left that psalm a blank, as they did. The independence of the English work is marked more strongly still, when the 1561 (Geneva) is compared with Daye's edition, 1560-1. If the Genevan editors had known of the three new-found Sternhold's, and eight renderings of Hopkins, all of which French Psalms they have left blank, it is scarcely conceivable that they would have omitted them. There is only one absolutely new piece common to them both, the Old 100th ("All people that," &c.), signed, in the Geneva edition, Tho. Ster. (1) In these facts we seem to catch sight of two companies of editors at work independently. The English one is under the direction of Hopkins and his colleagues, using the old material of Geneva with a certain reserve, shown by the rejection of Whittingham's 67th and 71st. The Geneva one is under the direction of Kethe, adopting the previous Genevan work in its entirety, and unaware (except in the case of the Old 100th, and Cox's Lord's Prayer, which may have reached them in ms.) of the versions which Hopkins and the others were publishing in England. If now we compare the complete Scottish, 1564, and English Psalters, 1585, we see that they are the direct descendants of these two separate movements. The Scottish Psalter adopts the Geneva, 1561, in the block. The English adopts the 1560-1 Daye in the block, with a slight reduction of the Genevan element (Whittingham's 115th and 129th, and Pullain's 149th), and only uses the Geneva 1561 to fill in the blanks not supplied by England, with 9 renderings by Kethe.

VII. The Complete Psalter.

In 1562 The Complete Psalter was published by John Daye, entitled—

The whole Book of Psalms, collected into English metre by T. Sternhold, John Hopkins, and others, conferred with the Ebrue, with apt notes to sing them withal. Faithfully preserved and altered according to the original in the Queen's Masseyt Instructions. Very mete, &c. (See Christ Church title-page.) Only one copy is known to exist. It was examined by Dr. Allen (Observations Exemplified Historical Notes, pp. viii.-viii.) and by Livingston (Scottish Psalter). The details here are from the latter.

This is the first edition in which Hopkins's name is given in full. On comparing it with Daye's edition, 1560-1, we find that all the psalms are reprinted except the 223rd and 50th by Whittingham, the Old Hundredth ("All people," &c.), the 125th by Wisdome (all displaced for the moment, but to reappear in the fuller English edition of 1565); and Whittingham's 115th and 129th, and Pullain's 149th (all of which disappear permanently from the English Psalter, though preserved in the Scottish, 1564).

The new contributions to the Psalter consist of 39 psalms by Hopkins, 25 by Norton, the 102nd signed "J. H.," but probably also by Norton, 8 by Kethe, the 111th signed "N.," but probably also by Kethe (see § x.), and by Mareckant. The pieces before and after the Psalms in Daye, 1560-1, are also reprinted. There are given before the Psalms "The Song of the Three Children," and "The Humble Sute of a Sinner." After the Psalms are added "The Complaint of a Sinner," and a second hymn called a "Lamentation." The 9 psalms by Kethe are the same as those in the edition of 1561 (Geneva), and they present with the new no striking. With the exception and 134th, they are r. m., and tunes. Livingston thinks the with little regard to English some French Psalms may be the explanation of "honour and majesty," &c., whole of the new contribution other hand, c. m.

The contrast illustrates the English and Scottish Psalms the c. m. of Sternhold tonously dominant; and the Fr of Whittingham and Kethe are admitted; in the Scottish not Kethe's and Whittingham's as 1561 (Geneva) reprinted, but t Pont and Craig, which are all of those of the English Psalter cline to irregular metres. T from the French model is furthe the verisimilitude of the English Prayer Book, and of three hundred inspired hymns. We seem to see in these, as wedome's psalm, and the translut of 1560-1 (see § v.), the real old influence of Luther on Co English Hymnody, Early, § IV.]

VIII. Final Alteration.

Though complete as a Ver still had some slight alteration before it assumed its final shape of 1563, of which Lea Wils notice (Miss. Brit. Mus.) that some extra psalms in an Appen (Brit. Mus.) this Appendix collected 50th of Whittingham, t "All people," &c., and Wisdome the splendid folio of 1565 (Br. Appendix has disappeared; b that composed it are inserted renderings in the body of the Whittingham's 23rd is also added addition of all was made not cmi an importation from the See the alternative 130th Psalm by misprint for "J. C." the initia John Craig (q. v.).

IX. Authors.

The book was the work of hands. (1) Thomas Sternhold is us as a Hampshire man (Fuller's Wood's Athenae). An entry, h registers of Awe in Gloucester on a blank page, between the y 1560, in printed characters, up later date, says—

"Let it be remembered for the long that from it sounded out the Psalm of metre by Thomas Sternhold and John former lived in an estate near Blake Hayfield; the later in an estate in Awe called the Woodend. And in said John Hopkins there is now to be the Tudor family being painted upon it on both sides is written, in Saxxen char part of the thirteenth chapter of St.; the Romans, which was done at that perpetu relative operis memoriam."

Miller (Singers and Songs of to whose industry this extract is due, may be known as the man of the Hayfield estate is still well known in the Wooded estate re- mains in the hands of the descendants of the house, however, was washed away when the house was abandoned. In 1777, the house was purchased by the present owner, who has restored it without a degree. He became a Robes to Henry VIII, and rec- ognized by the King's favour, the opinion of the House of Lords, and obtained the King's assent (see § 11). Wood caused musical notes to be set to all the poems of his work, and observed that the poems were composed in the early version, and were not written in the name of the poet. He is the author of 40 poems, all in the early form of c.m., and the early version is the one used in the usual setting of the psalms in Suffolk. Wood conjectures that the poems may be the same as one John Hopkins, who was the organist of the Church of England, and who graduated at the University of Oxford in 1544 or 1545. He also mentions a John Hopkins, who died at Hallingfield in Suffolk in 1570, as possibly the same man. Wood speaks of him as a composition of a Latin stanza prefixed to Foxe's Martyrs and supposed to be by him. In the history of the metrical version we catch sight of him first in 1551. He then disappears (his place unknown), until the close of 1560, when he brings a large contribution of four psalms to the Day's edition, 1560–1; and his name is printed in full, as the last contributor to the version, in 1562. His contribution from first to last consists of 60 psalms, all in c.m., but distinguished from Sternhold's by having four rhymes in a stanza—a change which eventually greatly altered the stresses and cadence of the metre. (See § x.)

(3.) William Whittingham was of greater mark. He was senior student of Christ Church, Oxford, and afterwards travelled in France, Germany, and Geneva, returning in 1553. He fled from the Marian reign to Frankfurt, 1554, and thence to Geneva in 1555. There he married Calvin's sister Catherine, and succeeded Knox as pastor of the English Church, an eminent share in the translation of the Geneva Bible, and stayed behind the main body of the exiles to finish it. His thanks to the magis- trates for their hospitality to him and his companions were given May 30, 1560, and he was immediately sent to Geneva for England. He left England, however, the same year with the Earl of Bedford and Warwick. He was made Dean of Durham in 1563, and had correspondence with the Eves of York and Winchester. He was fond of music, and is said by Dr. Watson to have introduced the use of the metrical Canticles in the Cathedral. Wood charges him with acts of vandalism there, especially the destruction of the image of St. Cuthbert. He protested against the habits. When Abp. Sandys visited Durham during the vacancy of the see, he refused to attend his sermons. Sandys excommunicated Livingstone and invalidated his Genevan orders, received from Calvin. Whittingham died before the struggle ended, in 1579. He is the author of 12 psalms in the English and 16 in the Scottish Psalter. The short period of his residence in England in 1560 makes it doubtful whether he can have had any personal share in publishing the 1560 edition, and favours the conjecture that the psalms from his pen in that edition appeared in the lost edition of 1558. His influence on the Psalter was, in the first place, that of scholarly revision of the work of Sternhold, and of Hopkins's seven early psalms from his knowledge of Hebrew; and, in the second, the publication of Psalms in England, especially notable in the 1550 Psalter. The first l.m. is his (51st) "O Lord, consider thy distress" (see § 11.

(4.) John Fullan was also one of the original students of Christ Church, Oxford, admitted in 1547. He was a Yorkshire man, previously at New College, Oxford (a. a. 1541). He was one of the Genevan exiles in company with Whittingham and Kethe. He became Archdeacon of Colchester under Elizabeth. His name appears among the signatories of the Articles in Convocation, 1562, and also attached to a petition in the same year so that the psalms appointed at common prayer be sung distinctly by all the congregation...and that all the psalms have proper place in the organs may be removed. (The "psalms" mean those in the Prayer Book, not metrical psalms.) Besides the 148th and 149th Psalms (the latter only found in the Scottish Psalter), he paraphrased Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, Esther, Judith, and Susannah. His influence on the Psalter is slight, though of the same kind as Whittingham's; but it is worthy of remark that to his version of the 148th Psalm we owe a fine metre, again employed in the New Version for the same psalm ("Ye boundless realms of joy"), and also in one or two of Watts's richest compositions (e.g. "Lord of the worlds above".

(5.) Robert Wisdom was educated at Cambridge, where he took a B.A. degree. He was curate of Stistead in Essex. His protest against Roman doctrines brought him into trouble for a sermon at Oxford; and about 1538 he was obliged to bear a flag by Stokelsey, Bp. of London. Two years afterwards he was complained of to Bonner, and summoned before the Privy Council, as a priest of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, and imprisoned in the Lollard's Tower. In 1543, in company with his friend Becon and others, he recanted and burnt his books at Paul's Cross. (See Recantation at length in Foxe's Ages and Monuments, ed. 1846, Appendix xli.)
He retired with Bacon to Staffordshire, and revoked his recantation. Here, too, he wrote "a postill . . . upon every gospel through the year," translated from Ant. Corvinus, pub. 1540. And here he wrote an exposition of certain Psalms of David, and turned some of them into verse. If the 67th Psalm, con tained only in the Christ Church ed. 1560, and the 125th ("Those that do put their confidence") were among those, they are perhaps the finest pieces of the Old Version. In the reign of Edward VIth (July 1550), he obtained the rectory of Settrington in Yorks shire, in the gift of the king, and was mentioned by Cranmer (1552) for the arch bishopric of Armagh, which he declined.
He was deprived in Mary's reign (1554), and at Frankfort was a hot advocate of the Prayer Book of Edward VIth, on the side of Cox.
In the autumn of 1559 he appealed to the royal visitors of the northern dioceses against one Thornton, who had intruded into his benefice at Settrington. He was instituted Archdeacon of Ely in the diocese of his friend Cox, Feb. 27, 1560. He preached at court, and at Paul's Cross that year. His name occurs among the signatures of the Articles, and the petition about organs, etc.
(see above, 4) in 1562. He d. at Wilburton
(a parish which, with Hadleigh, was then annexed to the Archdeaconry) in 1568. [For a full account of Wisedome, see Athena Cantbrigeneae, by C. H. and T. Cooper, 1830.
The three pieces by Wisedome have a marked individuality. The 125th Psalm is written in an 8-line stanza, of which lines 1–4 are in the metre of Hopkins, with the double rhyme, and lines 5–8 are in a metre very common in Parker's Psalter, with a middle rhyme in lines 5 and 7. The 67th Psalm (1560) is
tr. from Luther, with help from Coverdale.
(See Eus wollt uns Gott gemädig seyn.) The third piece is the hymn "Preserve us, Lord, by Thy dere word," a tr. from Luther, on which much satire has been expended (see Warton's Eng. Poetry) for its conjunction of Turk and Pope. (See Erhalt uns, Herr, zu seinem Wort.) It is plausible to associate the author of the German matter and precedent, and the movement in favour of the Book of Common Prayer, which first shows itself in 1569, in some measure to Wisedome, whose pieces are then first inserted.
(6.) The initials E. O. (the author of the hymn "Da pacem," found first in Daye's edition of the Psalter, 1560–1, though it possibly may have appeared in the last page of the end of Christ Church, 1560), have been conjunctively attributed by Rev. H. F.
Sheppard to Edward Gough, author of The Scholae House of Women (a satire), and a Praise of Women (Herbert's Catalogue). But the discovery of the German original ("Gib Fried zu unser Zeit o Herr," composed by Wolf gang Köpfel, and pub. in the Strasburg Gesangbuch of 1533, see p. 276, l.), which is followed in sense and metre, lends greater probability to the conjecture of Mr. Mee that the translation is by no less a person than Edmund Grindal, afterwards Abp. of Can terbury, who was a Strasburg exile.

5th psalm signed T. C. is evidently copied from the Scottish Psalter, and was not inserted earlier than 1581. "T. C.," as a misprint for J. C., was perpetuated in the French editions—one of the clearest instances of the uncertainty which attaches to the evi dence of the signatures. The English critics, ignorant of the Scottish Psalter, have (until Livingston pointed out the error, and even subsequently) allotted the initials to Thomas Churchyard, a late writer of the Elizabethan time.

X. Details of Authorship.
As the initials of the writers are attached to each piece from 1560 onwards, it would seem easy to identify the authorship. But, as a fact, the signatures of late editions are full of errors, and even in the earliest there are curious printers' freaks.
Thus 118, 137, which are elsewhere W. W., are so in 1560-1. The c. H. 1666, elsewhere assigned, is J. H. in 1564. The interchange of J. and X. common in late editions, is favoured by J. to 1545 (Adoe), and X. to 1526 in 1569 (General), and X. to 132 in 1564. Other instances will be observed in this and 49 x.

The verdict here is based on the signatures of Sternhold's 1st edition (Brit. Mus.), 2nd

XI. Authorization.
A hot dispute, often biased by party con siderations, has raged as to the nature of the authority of the Version. It may be read large in Heylin's Ecclesiae Restauratae, War ton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, and Todd's Observations on the Metrical Versions. It is agreed on all hands that it was not sanctioned by Convocation or Parliament; the dispensations were the nature of the royal authority. This authorization is stated in three formulas of the title-pages, none of which there is any reason to distrust. In the Christ Church edition of 1560 the book is said to have been "allowed according to the order appointed in the Queen's Majesties Injunctions." In 1562 the formula is "Faithfully purused, and allowed according to the order appointed in 1566 (Bodleian) the formula is adopted, which remains in all subsequent editions, "allowed to be sung . . . . before and after morning and evening prayer: as also before and after the Sermon." "The order in the Queen's Injunctions" refers to the 51st in the Injunctions of 1559; which forbade the printing of all books except classics until they had been "purused and licensed" by certain appointed officers of the Queen; but in 1562 the officers so licensed were said to be "allowed." The title-pages of 1560 and 1562 consequently prove no more than authorized and legal printing. The titlepage of 1566 has been held (even by Heylin, who discounts it in consequence,) to assert the royal permission of use in public worship. The assertion, however, may be more implicit than explicit. By a more celebrated clause of the Injunctions, any unlicensed "or sung before and after sermons," and hence the Psalter among the rest. The use of it before and after sermons was not forbidden by the Act of Uniformity, and had become a cherished custom; which may therefore not have needed express authorization. (It is curious, however, that the Lords Committee in 1641 suggested "to add lawful authority to have them sung before and after sermons"—as if the practice was illegal.) The book itself bore on its face the object of use in public worship; parts of it had been so used for years, and in the words of Parker (Dec. 1559, to Exeter, see Psaltors. § vi.) "permitted in this Church of England;" if it was printed, its use in public worship was a certainty. With the most vivid knowledge of all this, the Queen's officers "allowed" it, i.e. licensed it to be printed; the permissive use in church was the corollary of this allowance rather than its gist. If the patents of 1560 and 1568 to John Daye for printing the Psalms could be recovered, they might furnish decisive evidence; but we only know, from Barker's Report in 1582 (Stationers' Registers) that "in privilege or private license granted to John Daye are among other things the Psalms in metre with notes to sing them in the churches, as well in four parts as in plain song;" which is not more distinct than the title-pages. A comparison of the three other royal authorizations of Psalters seems unfavourable to the interpretation of "allowance" by "permitted use." Both in King James's Version, in the New Version, and Sir Richard Blackmore's, the word "allowed" is used apparently in the sense of licensed" or "approved," but the permissive use is granted in other words, such as "recommended." (King James) or "permitted to be used." (New Blackmore). Whatever be the technical authorization, of its printed by the Stationers' Services 1580, which quote it as if it a plain book, are an evidence. (F. prints, Liturgical Services, 184)

XII. Success.

Few books have had so long a vogue. With the growing Puritanism came to be esteemed the part of God's public service; psalms, with the first and second heard in many places with a psalm book, are an evidence. (Heylin). The parentage, its use as a badge, and the illegal practice of "Psalms" with the Liturgy bring "frowns of great people," such as Cosin. But the Restorative change of feeling. The Puritans Conference petitioned in vain the amended or superseded; the Bishop lay outside their commission, antiquated words were changed, and analogies drawn from Rous and Clurton, in a more modern air. In 1710 B p. Ben a strenuous defence of it as a monument of the Reformation. Then superseded by The New Version in a few churches within the men still living.

XIII. Merits.

The chief claims to excellence have been put forward in behalf of the Version are its fitness as an in instruction and spiritual good to people, and its fidelity to the has found patrons in Beveridge and Romaine. We ought in chief the times and the conundrum. The great burst of Elizabeth was still in the future; Sternhold was to make the Psalms the books of the court and people; and this consumed the metres and treatmen by contemporary ballads, or even in Henry VIII's Primers, or the poetry of the age, they will by Fuller's words "to go abroad," and this is the explanation of the exaggerated estimates of Sternhold as poet, quoted in § ix. We to this, that they were written for the mass; even Warton tempers by confessing that "had they poetically translated, they would have been acceptable to the common people" Lastly, a very substantial instance to that of faithfulness to This faithfulness has been acknowledged by Keble and Beveridge, contrasting the inaccuracy of the New Version (D-Old Version, 1710), points out the pated some of the subsequent revsn Authorized Version of 1611. Still, the use, it must be confessed, to be all dead. The likeness to the human corpse to the living body (Quire). From the times of Doh the OLIVER, THOMAS, was b. at Tregynon, near Newtown, Montgomeryshire, in 1725. His father's death, when the son was only four years of age, followed by that of the mother shortly afterwards, caused him to be passed on to the care of one related after another, by whom he was brought up in a somewhat careless manner, and with little education. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker. His youth was one of great ungoddliness, through which at the age of 18 he was compelled to leave his native place. He journeyed to St. Albans, Wrexham, and Bristol, miserably poor and very wretched. At Bristol he heard G. Whitefield preach from the text "Is this not a braid plucked out of the fire?" That sermon turned the whole current of his life, and he became a decided Christian. His intention at the first was to join the followers of Whitefield, but being discouraged from doing so by both Whitefield's preachers, he subsequently joined the Methodist Society at Bradford-on-Avon. At that town, where he purposed carrying on his business of shoemaking, he met John Wesley, who, recognizing in him both ability and zeal, engaged him as one of his preachers. Oliver joined Wesley at once, and proceeded as an evangelist to Cornwall. This was on Oct. 1, 1753. He continued his work till his death, which took place suddenly in London, in March 1759. He was buried in Wesley's tomb in the City Road Chapel burying ground, London. Oliver was for some time co-editor with J. Wesley of the Arminian Magazine, but his lack of education unfitting him for the work. As the author of the tune Helmsley, and of the hymn "The God of Abraham praise," he is widely known. He also wrote "Come Immortal King of glory!" and "O Thou God of my salvation," whilst residing at Chester; and an Elegy on the death of John Wesley. His hymn "Hymn 867" reprinted (with a Memoir by the Rev. J. Kirk) by D. Sedgwick, in 1868.

Olney Hymns. A collection of hymns by the poet Cowper (p. 264 l.), and John Newton (q.v.), sung originally either in the church or at the prayer-meetings at The Great House at Olney, and pub. as

They were probably given out verse by verse, like many of those by Watts and Doddridge, and often suggested by Newton's sermons. In the preface Newton says, that besides the principal motive of promoting the faith and comfort of sincere Christians, the hymns were designed "to perpetuate the remembrance of an infinite and everlasten friendship" between himself and Cowper. The project was formed in 1771. Whether it was simply suggested by Newton's perception of Cowper's poetical powers, or intended to occupy a mind in which there were symptoms of approaching madness, cannot be decided. Cowper contributed 67 hymns. Two of them—The Happy Change ("How blest Thy creature is, oh! God") and Retirement ("Far from the world, oh! Lord, I flee")—had been written immediately on his recovery from his first attack of madness, at St. Albans, in 1764. "Jesus, where'er Thy people meet," had been written for the opening of the large room at The Great House as a place for prayer-meetings (April 17, 1709). The only other hymn whose date is approximately known is Light shining out of darkness ("God moves in a mysterious way"), which, despite of its rational fortitude, was written under the most painful circumstances.
The known hymns by Newton previous to 1778 are few, and during the early part of that year the shock of Cowper’s calamity made him “hang his harp on the willows.” In his Diary, Nov. 30 of that year, he speaks, however, of then making one hymn a week: and there are memoranda of composition at intervals to Jan. 39, 1778 (see Newton’s Life by Rev. Josiah Bull). Twelve hymns by Newton and Cowper appeared in the Gospel Magazine (1771-78); thirteen were attached to Omicron’s Letters (1774); R. Conyers’s collection has several; and one or two others are found in obscure hymn-books. The complete Olney Collection appeared in 1779, arranged in three books. 1. “On Select Texts of Scripture”; 2. “On occasional Subjects”; 3. “On the Rise, Progress, Changes and Comforts of the Spiritual Life.” It contained 348 hymns and 3 other pieces, and has gone through many editions. Except in refined tenderness, Cowper’s hymns are indistinguishable from Newton’s. Both follow Newton’s stern yet wholesome caution, that in hymns the “imagery and colouring of poetry, if admitted at all, should be admitted very sparingly and with great judgment.” Both in their best pieces exhibit great excellence of structure. Both authors are vague as to the aim, capabilities, and limitations of hymns. Several pieces are disquisitions or soliloquies (“What various hindrances we meet” is really not a hymn, but a fine instruction on prayer). With the splendid exception of “Glorious things of thee are spoken,” there is scarcely a trace of jubilation. Out of the many themes of Christian praise one alone is denounced—the surpassing mercy of Jesus to His sinful elect: and even the rapt contemplation of this drops away into sad reflection. Gloom is a characteristic of the book. The despondence, sense of exile from God, and the gladness, of the Psalms, are selected for versification. The contemplation of nature suggests sorrowful resemblances to the work of grace in the human heart, not the vision of God’s majesty and love. Hymns describing the heavy self-abdication, dejection, descent of the regenerate, form the largest and most darkly real portion of the book, and those of Newton have more unrelieved dejection than Cowper’s. But Newton’s despondence arose from his sense of ingratitude for his election, never from doubt of it: and hence alongside of it there are hymns full of rational faith, strong confidence, and, above all, fervent clinging love of Jesus. Verses often occur, which from their direct force, are vigorous maxims; and, though there is a large quantity of tame, sentiment-like doggerel, there are a considerable number of pure English hymns, of melodious cadence and Scriptural ring. The earlier hymn-books that most nearly resemble them are: Shepherd’s Penitential Cries and the Collection by Newton’s friend, Dr. Conyers. The intense love of the Saviour, which animates them, endeared them to numbers in the earlier part of this century, and the finest of them are still in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. [See Cowper, William; Newton, John.] [H. L. B.]

It was only repeated in the author's 304, and later editions c. 1833, 1853, otterill's 1815 Appendix to his Hymns, No. 293, in st. i., iv., iv., in later collections. Two texts, with the same opening stanza, both begin by the 3rd stanza of Kelly and Cottrell, which read:—

1. "God is the God still; we will restore thee:
   He himself appears thy friend;
   His foes shall flee before thee;
   Here their boastful triumphs end;
   Great deliverance"

2. "And God is the God still; we will restore thee:
   He himself appears thy friend;
   His foes shall flee before thee;
   Here their boastful triumphs end;
   Great deliverance"

In the 2nd stanza of T. Kelly."

When these are changed in the Cottrell's text, it has been rendered extensively by R. Bingham in his Hymns, 1871, as "Sut eee! in alia sanctorum montibus ja n."

\textit{On what has been sown. J. Newton. [Close of Service.]} This hymn is in C. U. in three forms, as follows:—

1. The original form, No. 1, st. of 6. This is found in a few of Newton's \textit{Hymnologia Christi Latina}. This stanza is the sixth of Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 256.

2. The same stanza, with the addition of a doxology as given in common Praise, 1792.

3. The same stanza, with the addition of J. Newton's "Short Hymn," as "To These our wants are known," from the \textit{Olney Hymns}, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 103. This is No. 129 in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873. [J. J.]

Once in Royal David's city. C. E. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Christmas] 1st Recomposed for Little Children, in \textit{Hymns for Little Children}, 1848, p. 30. It is based on the words of the Credal: "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, Born of the Virgin Mary," and is in 6 st. of 4. It is usually given in a correct form and ranked as one of the most popular of Mrs. Alexander's hymns for children. [J. J.]

Once more before we part. [Close of Service.] The details concerning this hymn, and other which have grown out of it, are as follows:—

1. Once more before we part. By J. Hart, in his \textit{Ps. & Hymns}, &c., No. 79, as follows:—

   "Once more, before we part,
   We'll bless the Saviour's name;
   Remember His mercies every heart,
   Sing every tongue the same."

ONDERDONK, HENRY U. 869

"Hush up His sacred word,
   And feed them on and grow;
   Go on to seek, to know the Lord,
   And practice what you know."

This is in C. U. in Spurgeon's \textit{O. O. H. Bk.}, 1866, and other collections.

2. Once more before we part. By J. Hart and R. Hawker. In 1841 R. Hawker opened a Sunday School at Charles, Plymouth, and then, apparently, he pub. his Ps. & Hymns by the Children of the Sunday School in the Parish Church of Charles, Plymouth, &c., 1841. In this Coll. Hart's hymn appears in this form:—

   "Once more before we part,
   Bless the Redeemer's name;
   Write it on every heart,
   Speak every tongue the same."

Chorus. Jesus the sinners' friend,
   Him Whom our souls adore;
   His praises have no end;
   Praise Him for evermore.

"Lord, in Thy grace we came;
   That blessing still impart;
   We met in Jesus' name,
   In Jesus' name we part."

"Still on Thy holy word,
   We'll live, and feed, and grow;
   Go on to know the Lord,
   And practice what we know."

Jesus the sinners' friend,
   Here, Lord, we came to live,
   And in all truth increase;
   All that's ails us forgive,
   And send us home in peace."

Jesus the sinners' friend,
   Now, Lord, before we part,
   Help us to bless Thy name;
   May every tongue and heart
   Praise and adore the same."

Jesus the sinners' friend, &c.

The portions above in italics are from Hart's hymn, and the last stanza is also Hart's, 1841; the rest of the hymn is by Dr. Hawker. This text was repeated in several later collections.

3. Come, brethren, are we part. This, as No. 610 in the \textit{Comprehensive Hymnbook}, 1844, is composed of st. i. and ii. with the chorus from the Hart-Hawker text, and a new stanza as st. iii. This text is repeated in Spurgeon's \textit{O. O. H. Bk.}, 1866, No. 149; but in the ascription the fact that st. iii. is from the \textit{Comprehensive Hymnbook}, 1844, is ignored.

4. Come, children, are we part. Text in some American collections for children, and the \textit{English Hymns, S. S., H. Bk.}, 1879, is composed of st. i. and ii. of the \textit{Comprehensive Hymnbook} text slightly altered.

[W. T. B.]

Once more we meet to pray. Lent. We have traced this hymn to Matthew Wilkes's enlarged ed. of G. Whitefield's \textit{Col. of Hymns}, 1742, Corrected and Enlarged, with some \textit{Original Hymns}, &c., Lond., 1798, No. 300. It is in 4 st. of 4, and headed "Distress." It subsequently appeared in several collections, including the American Baptist Psalms, 1843; Spurgeon's \textit{O. O. H. Bk.}, 1866, and others. In Spurgeon the text of st. iv. is slightly altered. This appears to be one of the "Original Hymns" named in Wilkes's title-page, but whether by him or not we cannot say.

[J. J.]

Once Thou didst on earth appear. C. Wesley. [God manifest in the Flesh.] This is a center thus composed: st. i. from \textit{Short Hymns}, 1762, vol. ii., No. 790; st. ii., "Jesu, Short Hymns", vol. ii., No. 649; and st. iv., \textit{Hymns for Families}, 1747, No. 29. In this form it was given in the \textit{West H. Bk.}, 1801, and from thence has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America. In the 1875 ed. of the \textit{West H. Bk.} st. iv. is omitted. [J. J.]

In the autumn of 1633 he was sent by Duke Johann Christian of Liegnitz-Brieg as his plenipotentiary to Berlin, and also to the Swedish chancellor Oxenstierna. When Wallenstein obtained the mastery over the Silesian duchies, Opitz accompanied Duke Johann Christian to Thorn in 1635. He lived in Danzig, where in June, 1637, he was definitely installed as Historiographer to King Wladislaw IV. of Poland. Here, from this place of rest, he did his best, by correspondence and otherwise, to atone for the oppression of his brethren in Silesia. During the pestilence which visited Danzig and the surrounding country, Opitz died on Aug. 17 by a discussed beggar to whom he gave an alms, and whose frightful appearance so affected him that he returned home, sickened of the pestilence, and d Aug. 20, 1639.

A few of Opitz's hymns are found in recent German hymn-books, while two have passed into English, viz.:

   In his Epistel, 1628, p. 11, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "On the Light," and in his Zeitschriften, Isaiah 60." Repeated in the Geistliche Poem, 1638, p. 132, and in the Ohio G. B., 1870, No. 55. Tr. as:
   Zion, awake and brighten. In full by E. Croennwett, as No. 51 in the Ohio H. H., 1880.

2. 0 Licht, geboren aus dem Licht. Morning.
   His finest hymn, and a special favorite in Silesia. 1st pub. in his Zeitschriften. Parts in Z. Z. Poem, Danzig, Breslaw and Leipzig, 1634, p. 48, in 3 st. of 10 l., and entitled "Morning Hymn." Bausen, in his Versuch, 1833, p. 865, speaks of it as "of singular beauty in form and contents," and as a "pious prayer for the Fatherland and for the Church in her sore troubles. Repeated in his Geistliche Poem, 1638, p. 231, in the German of the Extracts of his 1636, and recently in the U. S. B. H., 1851, No. 470. Tr. as:
   Thou Light, from Light eternal springing. A good and full tr. by H. J. Buckell, in his Hs. from the German, 1842, p. 17; repeated, slightly altered, in the Dalston H. H. B., 1848.
Opprobriis, Jesu, satur. C. Coffin. [Passion tide.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the Ferial hymn at Matins throughout Passion Week, and after till Maundy Thursday. It is also in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 54, and in some modern French Reees. J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman in his Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, also give the text. Tr. as:—

His trial o'er, and now beneath. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 72, and his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 40. It has been repeated in a few collections, and also, altered as "From judgment taken, to beneath," in the Hys. for the Use of St. John the Evangelist's, etc., Aberdeen, 1870. In the Suppl. Hys. to H. A. & M., 1889, Chandler's tr. is altered by the Compilers to "O scorned and outcast Lord, beneath."

Other trs. are:—
1. Up that dark hill funeral, faint with III. I. Williams, in the British Mag., April, 1834; and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1838.
2. Like faithful Abraham's holy child. R. Campbell, 1850.
3. Now to the cruel scourge, the twined thorn. W. J. Blew, 1852-55. The 1st st. of this tr. of "Et jam flagellis," which is st. vii. of "Vando quis auditi, Del," p. 648. The tr. of "Opprobrius, Jesu, satur" begins with st. II.

Optatus votis omnium. [Ascension.] This hymn is probably of the 6th or 7th cent. It is found in two ms of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 74 b.; Jul. A. vi. f. 50 b.); in a ms. of the 11th cent. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 249); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, it is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 52, f. 26). It was included in the Ambrosian Breviary, 1539, and some Carthusian and Cistercian Brevisaries. The printed text is also in Mosca, No. 175, and Daniel, i. No. 55.

Translations in C. U.:—
1. Delight and joy of earth. By W. J. Blew, of st. i.-iv., in his Church Hys. & Tone Bk., 1852-55, and Rice's Sel., from the same, 1870. In the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal N., No. 135, st. i.-iv. and viii. are from this tr., and st. v.-vii. are from Mrs. Charles's tr. of the same hymn altered. This cento begins "Delight of all the earth."
2. O mighty joy to all. This begins with st. v., "O grande cumetia gaudium," and was tr. by W. J. Blew as above, 1852-55.
3. At length the longed-for joy is given. By Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 104. This is given in full or in part in several collections, and is the most widely used of the trs. of this hymn.

Johann Heinrich Oswald or Oswald, of Nimmersatt, near Liegnitz, in Silesia, b. at Nimmersatt, June 30, 1751. After passing through the school at Siegmeilberg he was for seven years clerk in a public office at Breslau. In 1775 he became Secretary to the Landrecht of Prittwitz at Klotz, with whom he remained two years, and was thereafter in business at Hauburg and at Breslau. Through J. D. Hermes, Oberconsistorialrat at Potsdam, whose daughter he married, he became acquainted with King Friedrich Wilhelm II. of Prussia, and in 1791 was appointed reader to the king. He accordingly removed to Potsdam, and was in 1791 appointed as Goethe rath. After the king's death, on Nov. 16, 1797, Oswald received a pension, and I retired under their respective firth lines (see Index); the rest in C. U. are:—

1. Father, Whose love and truth fulfill. Holy Baptism.

2. Glory to God: with joyful adoration. Praise to the Father.

3. Great God, o'er earth and heaven supreme. Men the Scenery of God's Bounties.

4. Great God, our fathrin, for whose ears we have heard. Ps. xii.,

7. Jehovah hath spoken, the nations shall hear.

8. Lord, may the inward grace abound. Holy Baptism.

10. The Saviour, gracious King. Advent.

11. O God, the help of all Thy Saints. Ps. x.

12. O Thou, the Lord and Life of men. Christ the life of Men.

Several of these hymns are not in Oswald's

1. 0: Let him whose sorrow.

A very good tr. from Bunsen's text, by Miss Cole, in her Sacred Hymns from the German, 1841, p. 181 (H. from the Ger., 1864, p. 189), included in Alford's Ps. & Hymns, 1844, and others. Since its reception into H. & M., 1861 (unmetered save st. vii. and the change to the plural), it has attained a wide popularity and is found in many English and American collections. In the Unitarian Hymn. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, U.S., 1853, the Hymnary, 1872, and others, it begins with st. ii., "Where the mourner weeping," and in C. H. Bateman's Sacred Melodies, 1872, with st. iii., "God will never leave thee." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874 (in order to make up 4 double st.) (four lines, beginning "On Thy truth relying," were added by J. Montgomery's "In the hour of trial" (p. 544). This form is also in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, and Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1884.

Another tr. is: "When in thine hours of grief," by

Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 71. [J. M.]

Otfrid of Weissenburg, was b. about the beginning of the 9th cent., according to some in Franconia, according to others near the Lake of Constance. After receiving the elements of his education in the Benedictine monastery of Weissenburg in Alsace, he went, about 830, to the cathedral school at Constance. He afterwards studied at the school of the monastery of Fulda, where, under the care of Bernhard Maurus, he learned to love his mother tongue. In 846 he left Fulda, and, after a short stay at St. Gall, settled as a monk and priest at Weissenburg, where he became head of the monastery. Here he wrote and completed about 865 a German poetical Life of our Lord (or Harmony of the Gospels), or Evangelienbuch, in 5 books of 15,000 lines (first printed at Basel in 1571; recent ed. by G. Graf, 1813; J. Keller, 1856; P. Piper, 1878; O. Erdmann, 1882; tr. into modern German by G. Raup, 1858, F. Rechenberg, 1862, J. Keller, 1870, &c.), a most interesting work philologically, and the earliest example of a long German poem in rhyme. (Allg. Deutsche Rieb. xxiv. 529; Goethe's Grundrisse, vol. 1, 1884, p. 22, &c.) Besides this he wrote a number of rhymer prayers in German. Two which have been ascribed to him, and have been tr. by Miss Winkworth, are noted under their first lines, see D. his lisse tohritin (p. 318, l.), and Der thir eigenhaft (p. 443, l.). They are in his manner, but appear to be of later date. Miss Winkworth also gives a tr. of a section of the Evangelienbuch, which begins thus—:

Mönert unah thiau fär. This is chapter xviii. of Bk. 1, and is on the Epiphany. It is in Wackenroder's Erinnerungen an die kirchh., ii. p. 8, in 25 st., of 4 l.; in Erdmann's ed. of the Evangelienbuch, 1882, p. 47, &c. Erdmann, in his notes at p. 370, speaks of this chapter as the "first detailed mystical exposition of the Return of the Magi to their own land." The removing of the Magi from their home and their home-going by another way—mind us of our Home, the glorious Paradise (lines 1-10); we have lost it by pride, self-will and disobedience, and sojourn in sorrowful banishment (11-28). In order to reach Home again, we must follow the new way of purity, humility, love and self-denial (31-46)." The only tr. is "Now warneth the Wise Men's fate." By Miss Winkworth, 1889, p. 17. [J. Our God is love: and all His saints. [Brotherly Love.] We have not been able to trace this hymn beyond Cotterill's ed., 1819, No. 129, where it is given in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "For Christian Love." It is not by Cotterill's author. Although sometimes attributed to Wilkinson, its authorship is unknown. It is in somewhat extensive use. [J. J.]

Our God, our God, Thou shinest here. T. H. Gill. [Whitsun. Ed.] Written in 1846, and 1st pub. in G. Dawson's Ps. & Hymns, 1846, No. 119, in 7 st. of 4 l. In 1853 it was given in Hedge & Huntington's Hymns for the Ch. of Christ, No. 726, with the omission of st. vi., and thus came into American C. U. It was rewritten by the author for his Golden Chain, &c., 1869. No. 55, in 8 st. of 4 l. It is entitled "The Glory of the latter days," and is accompanied with the quotation from Milton:

"The power of Thy grace is not passed away with the primitive times of old, and faithful men imagine, lest Thy kingdom is now at hand, and Thou standing at the door."

The Bap. Hymnal, 1879, No. 756; Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 361; Horder's Cong. Hymnus, 1881, No. 185, and other modern English collections follow the 1869 text. The text "Come, Holy Ghost, in us arise," in the American Bap. Service of Song, Boston, 1871, is also from the 1869 text, and is composed of st. v-vii. The author says of the full text, "I approve of both forms, but the earlier has more freshness and freedom." [J. J.]

Our God, our help in ages past. J. Watts. [Ps. xc.]. This is the first part of his c. m. rendering of Ps. xc., in 9 st. of 4 l., which appeared in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 229, and entitled "Man Frail, and Tied Eternal." This version of Ps. xc. has come down to modern collections in the following forms:

1. The original, in a few instances in full, but often in an abbreviated form of st. i., ii., iii., iv., v., vii., etc.

2. The altered text by J. Wesley, 1st pub. in his Ch. of Ps. & Hymns, 1737, where it begins, "O God, our help." In this text alterations are introduced in st. i., ii., iii., iv., v., vi., vili. This arrangement in 7 st. was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1740, No. 39, and has been retained in all subsequent editions of that collection. A collection of New Hymns with the original and these changes by J. Wesley, will show that in nearly every case the staves taken are i., ii., iii., iv., v., vii., etc., and the alterations, if any, are by J. Wesley. In Bage's Annotated H. A. & M., 1867, a rendering into Latin by G. S. Almer, 1866, "Auctoritatem quamdam, non verborum," is given of the H. A. & M. text, which is the original, with J. Wseley's "O God," for "Our God."[J. J.]

3. A curious arrangement of Watts with Tate & Brady was given by Toplady in his Ps. & Hymns, 1776, No. 308, in 10 st. of 4 l. This is the original to modern collections.

4. In Stowell's Manchester Coll., 1831, Ps. xc. is composed of st. i., ii., from this version by Watts; and iii., iv., by another hand. It is repeated in the 1877 ed. by J. Stowell, as the original central st., with a grand opening and a most fertile finish.

If Watts's original it would be difficult to say how the subject is introduced with such simplicity and force; and how the words rise with such poignancy and beauty. The whole is so full of the spirit of the text, and so perfectly adapted to the feelings of the Christian, that it is a musical proof of the power of devotion and religion. Watts, as an artist, has shown to us what a noble and beautiful poem of praise he could write if he had only lived to perform it. [J. J.]

Ours times are in Thy hand, Father. We wish them there. W. F. Lloyd. [Recognition.] The opening st. of this hymn is:

"Our times are in Thy hand, Father, we wish them there; Our life, our soul, our all, we leave Entirely to Thy care."

This hymn appeared in Hymns for the Poor of the Flock, 1841, No. 237, in 6 st. of 4 l., each stanza opening with the same first line. This was repeated in Ps. Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, Lond., D. Walsh, 1842, Pt. i., No. 64; and again in A Few Hymns, and Some Spiritual Songs.
selected 1856 for the Little Flock, No. 209. In Spurgeon's 'O. H. Bk., 1866, the text is slightly altered. Spurgeon's date, "1835" we cannot authenticate.

Our times are in Thy hand, and Thou Wilt guide our footsteps, &c.
Sir J. Bowring. [Divine guidance.] The first stanza of this hymn reads:—

"Our times are in Thy hand, and Thou Wilt guide our footsteps at Thy will;
Lord, to Thy purposes we bow:
Do Thou Thy purposes fulfill."

The hymn appeared in Beard's Unitarian Coll. of Hys., 1837, No. 37, in 3 st. of 4 l. but is not marked, in common with other hymns by Sir J. Bowring, as "Original." In the 3rd ed.
229, it was given in an unaltered form. In the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, it reads "My times are in Thy hand," &c.

the two closing lines of each stanza are omitted. These alterations and omissions have gone far towards utterly spoiling the hymn.

Palmer, Horatio Richmond, M.R.C.S., was b. April 26, 1834. He is the author of several works on the theory of music; and the editor of some musical editions of hymn-books. To the latter he contributed numerous tunes, some of which have attained to great popularity, and of which are in I. D. Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos, London, 1881. His publications include Songs of Love for the Bible School; and Book of Anthems, the combined sale of which has exceeded one million copies. As a hymn-writer he is known by his "Yield not to temptation," which was written in 1838, and pub. in the National Sunday School's Magazine, from which it passed, with music by the author, into his Songs of Love, &c., 1874, and other collections. In America its use is extensive. Dr. Palmer's degree was conferred by the University of Chicago in 1886. [J. J.]

Palmer, Ray, D.D., s. of the Hon. Thomas Palmer, a Judge in Rhode Island, was b. at Little Compton, Rhode Island, Nov. 12, 1808. His early life was spent at Boston, where he was for some time clerk in a dry-goods store. At Boston he joined the Park Street Congregational Church, then under the pastoral care of Dr. S. E. Dwight. After spending three years at Phillips Academy, Andover, he entered Yale College, New Haven, where he graduated in 1836. In 1838 he became pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Bath, Maine. During his pastorate there he visited Europe in 1847. In 1850 he was appointed to the First Congregational Church, at Allot, New York, and in 1865 Corresponding Secretary to the American Congregational Union, New York. He resigned in 1878, and retired to Newark, New Jersey. He d. at Newark, Mar. 29, 1887. Dr. Palmer's published works in prose and verse include:—

(1) Memorial and Select Remains of Charles Pond, 1829; (2) The Spirit's Life, a Poem, 1827; (3) How to Live, or Memoirs of Mrs. W. L. Watrous, 1830; (4) Doctrinal Test-Book, 1839; (5) Spiritual Improvement, 1839, republished as Church Hours in 1851; (6) What is Truth? or Hints on the Formation of Religious Opinions, 1860; (7) Remember Me, or The Holy Communion, 1865; (8) Hymns and Sacred Pieces, with Miscellaneous Poems, 1868; (9) Hymns of My Holy Hours, and Other Pieces, 1868; (10) Home, or the Unlost Paradise, 1873; and (11) Voices of Hope and Gladness, 1864.

Most of Dr. Palmer's hymns have passed into congregational use, and have won great acceptance. The best of them by their combination of thought and emotion, are superior to almost all others of American origin. The first which he wrote has become the most widely known of all. It is:—

1. My faith looks up to Thee. Faith in Christ. This hymn was written by the author while fresh from College, and during an engagement in teaching in New York. This was in 1836. The author says concerning the composition, "I gave form to what I felt, by writing, with little effort, the stanza. I recollect I wrote them with very tender emotion, and ended the last line with tears. In short time after this the hymn was given to Dr. Lowell Mason for use, it thou was very good, in a week then being compiled by him and Dr. T. Hastings. In 1843 it was put as Spiritual Songs for Social Worship: adapted to the use of Families, &c. Words and Music arranged by Thomas Hastings, of New York, and Lowell Mason of Boston. It is No. 141 in 4 st. of 8 l., entitled "Self Consecration," and accompanied with music by Dr. J. Mason. There given as My faith looks up to Thee," but subsequently known as Oicet. (Orig. text of hymn in Thirn's Coll., 1882.) It has passed into most modern collections in all English-speaking countries, and has been rendered into numerous languages. That in Latin, by H. M. Magrill (p. 708, l. 5, begins, vide Tu me specta mecum.)

2. Feast of everlasting love. Praise for renewed Spiritual Life. This also appeared in the Spiritual Songs, &c., 1831, No. 191, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "Praise for a Revival."

The hymn which are given below are all in Dr. Palmer's Poetical Works, N. Y., 1876, and the dates appended in brackets are those given by him in that work.

3. Thou who roll at the year around. (1832.) Close of the Year. In several American collections.

4. Away from earth my spirit yearns. (1833.) Holy Communion. Appeared in Lowell Mason's Union Hymns, in 4 st. of 4 l. In the Church Prize Bk., N. Y., 1872, it begins with st. ii., "Then, Saviour, art the Living Bread."

6. Stealing from the world away. (1834.) Evening. Written at New Haven in 1834, and is very popular in America. The words and music are "My soul, bless'd, in the presence of Thy face, and with Thine Holy Spirit, I will sing." (Psalms, LXXVIII. 1, 2.)

7. Thine (Thy) holy day's returning. (1834.) Sunday Morning.

8. Wake thee, O Zion. (1842.) Zion Requiem.

9. We stand in deep repentance. (1834.) Lent.

This last, No. 9, in common with Nos. 10, 11, 12, is marked "original," in the Presbyterian Parish Hymns, 1843. Probably they were given to the editors of that book in ms., and had not previously appeared.

10. And is there, Lord, a rest? (1843.) Rest in Heaven. Written at Bath, Maine, in 1843.

11. O sweetly breathe the lyres above. Conscription to Christ. This was accidentally omitted from Dr. Palmer's Poetical Works, 1876. Rev. W. Duffel says:—

"It was written in the winter of 1842-43, at a time of revival. At the previous Communion several had been received under circumstances that made Braddock's hymn, "O happy day that fixed my choice a most appropriate selection. Not caring to repeat it, and needing something similar, I wrote Palmer composed the present hymn."

12. When downward to the darksome tomb. (1842.) Death Uncontemplated. Written at Bath, Maine, in 1843.

From 1843 there comes a long break, and Dr. Palmer seems to have done no more hymn-writing until called upon by Professors Park and Phelps, of Andover, for contributions to their Sabbath Hymn-Book, 1858. His hymns written for that important collection rank amongst the best that America has produced. This is specially true of the first four (Nos. 13-16) from the Latin.

13. Jesus, Thou joy of loving hearts. (1858.) Tr. of a cento from "Jesus dulcis memoria" (p. 588, l. 11.)

14. O Bread to Pilgrims given. (1858.) Tr. of "O sacra lustra" (q. v.).

15. O Christ our King, Creator Lord. (1858.) Tr. of "Rex Christe, factor omnium" (p. 588, l. 11.)

16. Come Holy Ghost, in love. (1858.) Tr. of "Veni Sancte Spiritus" (q. v.).

17. Jesus, these eyes have never seen. (1858.) Christ loved, though unseen. This hymn is written by many as next in merit and beauty to "My faith looks up to Thee."

18. Lord, my weak thought in vain would climb. (q. v.) The Incorruptible. This hymn deals with the mysteries of Predestination in a reverent and devout manner.

The next group, Nos. 20-27, appeared in Dr. Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1863.

21. Eternal Father, Thou hast said. (1860.) Missions.
22. Jesus, Lamb of God, for me. (1853.) "Jesus, the Way of Salvation. Written in Albany, New York.
23. Take me, O my Father, take me. (1864.) Lent.
24. Wouldst thou eternal life obtain? (1864.) Good Friday.
25. Come Jesus, Redeemer, abide Thou with me. (1864.) Holy Communion.
26. Lord, Thou on earth didst love Thine own. (1864.) Fellowship with Christ.
27. Thou, Saviour, from Thy throne on high. (1864.)

Prayer.

The next four (Nos. 28-31) present another group. They appeared in D. E. Jones’ Songs for the New Life, 1889, and the Reformed Dutch Hymns of the Church, N. Y., 1890. The dates of composition are from Dr. Palmer’s Poems, 1876.

28. Lord, Thou hast taught our hearts to glow. (1865.) Ordination, or Meeting of Ministers.
29. When inward turns my searching gaze. (1868.)
30. O Jesus, sweet the tears I shed. (1867.) Good Friday.
31. Jesus, this (my) heart within me burn. (1868.)
32. Love.

The hymns which follow are from various sources.

33. O Christ, the Lord of heaven, to Thee. (1867.) Universal Praise to Christ. Appeared in the author’s Hymns of my Holy Hours, 1867. It is a hymn of great merit, and is widely used.
34. Behold the shade of night is now receding. (1869.) A tr. of “Ecce jam noctis.” (p. 339, l. and Various.)
35. Mid evening shadows let us all be waking. (1869.) A tr. of “Nocte surgentes.” (p. 309, l.)
36. I give my heart to Thee. (Aug. 20, 1866.) A tr. of “Cor meum Tibi dedo.” p. 362, ii.
37. Holy Ghost, that promised came. (1873.) Whitewednesday. From the author’s Poems, 1876.
39. Lord, when my soul her secrets doth reveal. (1865.) Holy Communion.

Most of the foregoing hymns are in C. U. in G. Britain, and all are found in one or more American hymn-books of importance.

Palmer, William. [Various.]

Palms of glory, raiment bright. J. Montgomery. [Heaven in Prospect.] Written for the Sheffield Sunday School Union, and first printed on a broadsheet for use at the Anniversary in June 1829, in 6 st. of 4 l. It then appeared in T. Russell’s Sel. of Hys. . . An Appendix to Dr. Watts’ Ps. & Hys. N. B. [1833, see p. 260, l.]; again in Montgomery’s Poet’s Portfolio, 1833, p. 240; and again in his Original Hys., 1833, p. 160, where it is headed “Heaven in prospect.” It is of more than usual merit, and is widely used.

[J. J.]

Pange lingua gloriosi corporis mysterium. St. Thomas of Aquino. [Holy Communion.] One of the finest of the mediæval Latin hymns; a wonderful union of sweetness of melody with clear-cut dogmatic teaching. It was written for the office of the Festival of Corpus Christi, which St. Thomas drew up in 1263, at the request of Pope Urban IV. The metre and the opening line are imitated from Fortunatus. It is found in the Roman (Venice, 1478; and again, untouched, in 1832); Morarible of 1502, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1736, and many other Breviaries. Wherever employed, it was always primarily for use on Corpus Christi, either at Matins (Sarum), or at Vespers (Romans). It has also been used as a procession on Co Votive Office of the Blue Forty Hours, and others.

The hymn is found in a ms. belian (Asam. 240, P. 175), 13th cent. (Add. 2894 f. 23), also in Wachner, 1, p. 184; Konigstein, 1, p. 44; Christliche Archiv, 1838 and 1848, and of other sources.

6. Sing the precious Blood. &c. Hyl. & Tune II. Sel. from the same.

PANGE LINGUA GLORIOSI

268 in H. A. & M., 1861, and No. 309, revised ed., 1875, is said in the Index to be by the Compilers, "based on tr. from Latin by E. Caswall."

This is, however, not entirely correct. An examination of the text shows that st. i., ii., and iv. are Dr. Neale's tr. rewritten; st. v. Dr. Neale's tr. very slightly altered; st. iii. Caswall's tr. rewritten; and st. iv. a tr. by the Catholic. This tr. is repeated in the Lyra Eucharistica, 1863, without alteration; and with a nearer approach to the original in the Altar Hymnal, 1884.

9. Of that glorious Body broken. This tr. in the Sermon, 1868, No. 123, is Caswall's altered (except in st. ii. and iii.) almost beyond recognition. It is repeated in Thrift's Coll., 1882, with slight changes, except in the crucial st. iv. This is materially changed in the wording, although it remains the same in doctrinal teaching.

7. Of the Body bright and glorious. In Dr. Pusey's tr. of Horne's Paradise of the Christian Soul, 1847.
9. Speak, my tongue, the mystic glory. J. D. Chambers. 1852 and 1852.
12. My tongue, the mystic doctrine sing. J. W. Bennett. 1859.

Tunc ergo sacramentum. This portion of the "Pange lingua," consisting of st. v. and vi., and sung in the office of the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, &c., as noted above, has been tr. by all the above-mentioned translators, and each tr. has been as the conclusion of the original hymn. In a few instances the stanzas (v., vi.) are given as a separate hymn in the English Hymnal, as in Latin. These include (1) Caswall's "Down in solemn fallin' when" appears in some Roman Catholic hymn-books for missions and schools; (2) a set in the Alto Hymn, 1884, in st. 2, the first being Caswall altered, and the second the doxology from H. A. & M., as "Down in lowly worship bending," and (3) Neale's tr. altered to "Bow we then in venerating," in the 1863 Appendix to the Hymnal N.

Dr. Neale's estimate of this hymn is well known. His words are so few and to the point that we may quote them here:

"This hymn contests the second place among those of the Western Church with that of the Stabat Mater, the Jesu dulcis Memoria, the Ad Reginae Agnii Dapsco, the Ad Supernum, and one or two others, leaving the Dies Irae in its unapproachable glory." (Med. Hymn. 3rd ed., 1887, p. 119.)

Concerning translations, and of his own in particular, he says:

"It [the hymn] has been a bow of Ulysses to translators. The translation above given [his own] claims no other merit than an attempt to unite the best portions of the four best translations with which I am acquainted — Mr. Wackerbarth's, Dr. Pusey's, that of the Leeds book, and Mr. Caswall's... The great cross of the translator is the fourth verse."

Before continuing Dr. Neale's remarks it will be well to give the original Latin of st. iv., which reads:

"Verbum caro, panem verum verba carmen efficac. Fitate sanquis Christi memori, et soli sufficit אהדו לבראש היחליא."

Dr. Neale continues, "I give all the translations:

(1) 'God the Word by one word maketh'

Very Bread His Flesh to be:

And what that Cup partaketh,

Tastes the Fount of Calvary:

While the carnal mind forsaketh,

Faith receives the Mystery.' [Leeds H. Bk.]

"Here the incantation of the Word, so necessary to the antithesis, is omitted: and so exact a writer as S. Thomas would never have used the expression by own word.

(2) 'At the Incarnate Word's high bidding,'

Very Bread to Flesh doth turn:

Wine becometh Christ's Blood-shedding:

And, if sense cannot discern,

Guiltless spirits, never dreading,

May from faith sufficient learn.' [Wackerbarth]

"Mr. Wackerbarth's l. 2 reads, 'Bread to every flesh,' &c."

"Here the antithesis is utterly lost, by the substitution of Incarnate for made flesh, and bidding for word, to say nothing of Blood-shedding, for Blood.

(3) 'Word made Flesh: The Bread of nature,'

Thou by word to Flesh dost turn:

Wine, to Blood of our Creator.

If no sense the work discern,

Yet the true heart proves no traitor:

Faith unaided all shall learn.' [Pusey.]

"Here the antithesis is preserved, though at the expense of the vocative case. And surely S. Thomas, in an exact dogmatical poem, would not have spoken of the Blood of our Creator, Mr. Caswall, following the hint given by the last version, and substituting the apposite pronoun for the vocative, has given, as from his freedom of rhyme might be expected, the best version.

(4) 'Word made Flesh, the Bread of nature,'

by a word to Flesh He turns:

Wine into His Blood He changes:

What though sense no change discern,

Only the heart in faith, learn,

Faitb the lesson quickly learn.'

"In both these last translations [Pusey and Caswall], however, the panem verum of S. Thomas is not given; and Mr. Caswall brings in the worse than unnecessary article — 'by a word.' [It must be noted that Dr. Neale must have quoted Caswall from memory or from some other source than Caswall's Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 112, where l. 2 reads, 'by his word to Flesh He turns;' and l. 6, 'Faith her lesson quickly learn.'] These readings of 1849 are repeated in Caswall's Hymns, & Poems, 1873, p. 63. Did Dr. Neale misread Caswall, or did Caswall publish a text distinct from that in his Lyra catholicae?

"Since the first edition of my book [1851], Hymns Ancient and Modern have produced a translation put together from former ones,—but nearer my own version than to other any other. Their fourth verse is their weakest —

'Word made Flesh. True Bread He maketh'

By His word His Flesh to be:

Wine His blood; which whom takest

Must from carnal thoughts be free:

Faith alone, though sight forsaketh,

Shows true hearts the Mystery.

'It is needless to observe that the italicised line and a half is not in the original. 'Persevera,' too, is scarcely English. I have substituted an alteration of Dr. Neale's — Ancient and Modern for my original 5th verse. ('Therefore we, before it bending')."
After this exhaustive criticism by Dr. Neale we must give his rendering of the same passage. It reads:—

"Word made Flesh, by Word He maketh
Very Bread His Flesh to be;
Man in wine Christ's Blood partaketh,
And if senses fail to see,
Faith alone the true heart wakeeth,
To behold the Mystery."

These examples of translations could be increased to the total number known. The result, however, would be to add materially to the length of this article without increasing its historical value.

[J.J.]

Pange lingua gloriosi proelium certaminis. V. H. C. Fortunatus. [Passiontide.] This is one of the finest of the Latin Mediaeval Hymns, and perhaps the best of its author. It has been some times, apparently without reason, ascribed to Claudianus Maurus, who d. c. 474. In its full form it consists of 10 stanzas of unrhymed trochaic tetrameter verse. In some of the ms. there is added a doxology, but in very various forms. F. Leo in his ed. of Fortunatus's Opera poetica, Berlin, 1881, p. 27, gives it from a St. Petersburg ms. of the 8th or 9th cent., two ms. of the 9th cent. in the Bibl. Nat. Paris (No. 1153, and Lat. 9347), &c. Mone, No. 101, prints it from a ms. of the 8th cent. now at Trier; a ms. at Trier of about the end of the 8th cent., or beginning of the 9th; a ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, &c. It is found in a 10th cent. Mozarabic service book in the British Museum (Add. 30846 f. 70); in four ms. of the 11th cent. there, viz. two English Hymnaries (Harl. 2961 f. 210; Vesp. D. xii. f. 120 b); a Spanish Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 109), and a Sequentiary written at St. Gall (Add. 17706 f. 51 b), &c. Also in Daniel, 1, No. 140, and in R. pp. 37, 333, from a Bern ms. of the 10th cent., and other sources. In his notes Daniel quotes the following stanza:—

"Quando index orbis alta vectis axe veneris,
Ex crucis tuae tropaenum inter astra subieris;
O sis anxis salutum et salutis aurora."

Dr. Neale in translating this verse says it "seems ancient," but the only source quoted by Daniel is the Corolla Hymnorum, Cologne, 1806. (The text of 1806, i. 8, reads, "Salutis anchora.") From the Trier ms. of about the end of the 8th cent. Mone prints four additional stanzas, which are not by Fortunatus, but are probably of the 7th cent., and never really came into use.

The hymn very early came into extensive use, and is found in most mediaeval Breviaries and Missals. In the older Sarum (Venice, 1475), Paris of 1616, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, it is appointed or used from Passion Sunday to Maundy Thursday; in the later Sarum, it was used at Matins; and vi. x. beginning "Lustria, sex qui jam peraret," at Lauds. In the Roman, Sarum, and other Missals, it is appointed to be used on the third Friday in the proper beginning (see "Papal missa"), stanza viii. "Crux fidelis inter omnes," being first sung by the clergy, or a solo, then st. i. vii. ix. x. by the people: each stanza being followed by either the first, or second ("Duc-lemum, uti claves") part of st. vii. The Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries also appointed st. viii. x. ("Crux fidelis") for the feast of the Invention of the Cross (May 3). In the Roman Rec. of 1632 it was altered, the first part beginning "Pange lingua gloriosi proelium certaminis" (see note on page 862); but, as Dr. Neale points out, it is not to the glory of the termination of our Lord's conflict with the Devil that the poet would have us look, but to the glory of the struggle itself; and the second part beginning "Lustria, sex qui jam peraret" (in the Roman Rec. of 1697), and in the Rec. of 1667, pl. ii. begins "Lustria sex qui jam peraret.

We may add that stanza reference to the ancient belief of Christ was made from which sprang a need of the Tree of Life: this seed or that according to one version gives his expulsion from Paradise another version, given to him who guarded the Garden Medieval forms of this legend: Gould's Curious Myths of the Classical, p. 71. i. The Original text:—

(ii) Pange lingua gloriosi

The first part of the hymn, st. tr. thus:—

1. Sing, my tongue, the glorious
2. Sing the conflict great and joyful
3. Spread, my tongue, the word of God M. Neale, in his Mediæval Hymnology, printed

Other translations are:—

1. Sing, my tongue, the glorious
2. Rehearse, my tongue, the glorious
3. O my tongue! rehearse the glory.

5. Sing, my tongue, the war of glory.

5. Sing the Cross! the conflict telling in the Juvenile Miss. Mag. of the P. L. May, 1867, and his Songs of the Christian Life, 1876.

(ii) Lustria sex qui jam peraret.

This is not headed as a separate translator, but in the hymn usually given as such:—
PANGE LINGUA GLORIOSA

1. Thirty years among us dwelling. By J. M. Neale, as above.
2. Six lustres past; His life in flesh. By J. Caswell, in his Psalter, 1852.
3. Years three ten had been, completing. By W. B. J. Blew, as above, and Rice's Sel. therefrom, 1870.
4. Till the thirty years were finished. By Mrs. Charles, as above, and in the People's Hym., 1867, as "When the thirty years were finished."

Other translations are:
1. No verse threes ten years completed. J. D. Chambers, 1847.
2. Thirty years' even now fulfilling. J. W. Burt, 1859.
3. Thirty winters has He numbered. H. M. Macgill, as in Pt. i. above.

ii. Roman Breviary Text:

trans. from Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 111, and his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 51. Found in a few collections in from 4 to 6 stanzas. In Schiff's Christ in Song, 1869, the opening line reads, "Sinf, my tongue, the Saviour's battle," and several other changes by the editor are made in the text.

Other translations are:
1. Sing, O my tongue, the glorious crown. Primer, 1706.
4. Sing with the Confident, O my tongue. J. D. Ayward.
5. Sing, my tongue, with glowing accents. T. J. Potter.
6. Sing, my tongue, the glorious combat. J. R. Beete, 1849.
7. Sing, my tongue, the contest glorious. H. Newsham, in his Sentence of Winters, 1864.
8. Sing, my tongue, the glorious laurel. J. Wallace, 1774.
9. Nos. 2-5 are in O. Shipley's Annae Sanctae, 1884.

(ii.) Lustra sex, quiam perigit, tempus impens corporia. This part has been trans. as:—
Thus did Christ to perfect mankind. By E. Caswall, as above, in a few hymn-books.

Other translations are:
1. Six Lusters past, the Sabbath came. Primer, 1706.
2. Full thirty years were freely spent. Primer, 1706.
3. The thirty years have all been passed. Bp. J. W. Williams, 1845.
4. Rare six lusters are completed. J. R. Beete, 1849.
5. They have the sweetnessest blossoms waving. R. Campbell, 1768.
6. No verse thirty years are past. J. Wallace, 1774.
7. Already thirty years have shed. C. Kent.
8. Now, when full thirty annual suns. J. D. Ayward.
9. Of these vers. Nos. 2, 5, 7, 8, are in O. Shipley's Annae Sanctae, 1864.

(iii.) Centos.
Several centos are in C. U. and are formed either from the two parts, or from two or more translations. These are:
1. See the destin'd day arise. By Bp. R. Mant.
2. This is a paraphrase or free tr. of portions of both parts. It appeared in his Ancient Hymns, &c., 1817, p. 53, in 7 st. of 4 l. (edi, 1871, p. 94).
3. In its full or in an abbreviated form its use is extensive.
4. Sing, O my tongue, devoutly sing. In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, No. 43.

5. Sing, my tongue, the Saviour's glory. This, in P. & Hs. fitted to the O. of Prayer, 1861, is composed almost word for word from the tr. of both parts by E. Caswall, st. i.-iv. being from Pt. i. and v.-vi. from Pt. ii. Its right designation is "A Cento from E. Caswall's tr." It is given, with slight alterations, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871.

6. All within a lonely mansion. In Kennedy, 1865, No. 577, Pt. ii., is st. i. from Caswall, and st. ii.-v. from Neale.
7. Sing, my tongue, the Saviour's triumph. This in the Sarum, 1868, No. 108, is st. i.-v. from Caswall, and st. vi.-viii. from Neale.
8. Now the thirty years accomplished. In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 230. In this cento st. i., iii. and v. are from Neale, and st. ii., iv. and vi. from Caswall.
10. Faithful Cross! above all other. This in the Altar Hymn, 1884, is Dr. Neale's tr. as above, with st. viii. as the opening of the hymn, and also as a chorus at the end of each of the other stanzas, and the addition of the stanza noted above in the Carola Hymnica, 1806, which Dr. Neale gave in his Notes as "When O Judge of this world, coming."

When these various translations and centos are all taken into account it is found that the use of this hymn in modern hymn-books is extensive. [J. J.]

Pannuletio, Th. [Greek Hymnody, § xiv.]

Parent of good. Thy works of might. J. Fawcett. [Delight in God.] Appeared in his Hymns, &c., 1782, p. 81, in 9 st. of 6 l. and entitled "Delight in God." It is used in an abbreviated form, from 6 st. in Dr. Alexander's Augustine H. Bk., 1849, to 3 st. in the American Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Book, Boston, 1868.

Park, Roswell, D.D., of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was b. at Lebanon, Connecticut, Oct. 1, 1807, and educated at Union College and West Point. Previous to receiving Holy Orders he was in the army, and also held the appointment of Professor of Chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania. He was ordained in 1843, was President of Racine College, Wisconsin (1852-59), Chancellor of the same College (1858-63); and Principal of a school in Chicago from 1863 to his death. He d. at Chicago, July 16, 1869. He pub. Sketch of West Point, 1840; Pædology, 1841; Handbook for European Travel, 1853; and Poems, 1836. His best known hymn is for Holy Communion. It begins "Jesus spreads His banner o'er us," and was pub. in his Poems, 1836. It is in C. U. in G. Britian and America. [F. M. B.]

Park, Thomas, F.S.A., was b. in 1760 and d. in 1835. He was an engraver, but found more congenial work in literary pursuits. In addition to publishing Nase's Modern, an original work of prose and poetry, in 1818, he also edited several works, including the Works of J. Hammond, 1805; Works of John Dryden, 1806; the Works of the British Poets, in 42 small volumes, 1808; Poetical Works of Isaac Watts, 1807, and others. His hymn:

My soul, praise the Lord, speak good of His Name, His mercies record, &c., Ps. 103, or Universal Praise, appeared in Ps. & Hs. Selected from Various Authors, with Occasional Alterations, for Use of a Parish Church. By a Country Clergyman, Lord's Day Book, 1807, p. 556. In 5 st. of 8 l. There is appended thereto the following note:

favoured with the above hymn from my obliging friend. This almost extemporaneous effusion of his peculiarly neat and poetic pen was excited by my expressing (in a letter) adding some psalmic information) regret that I had only one set of words for Handel's simple, sublime tune for the 14th Psalm.

For these details we are indebted to Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church, 1681, p. 329. The opening line of this hymn is composed of the first two lines of W. Kethe's Version of Ps. cxvi. in the Old Version, 1631. [J. J.]

Parker, Matthew, d.d., was b. at Norwich in 1504, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1523. His appointments were many and influential, including that of Dean of St. Paul's, Chaplain to Queen Anne Boleyn and Henry VIII., Prebendary of Ely, Master of his College, Vice Chancellor of his University, and Dean of Lincoln. On the accession of Mary he was deprived of everything, and lived in obscurity till Elizabeth ascended the throne. In 1559 he was raised to the See of Canterbury. He d. in 1575, and was buried in his own chapel at Lambeth. His munificence is well known, as also his connection with the "Bishop's Bible." He was well versed in Saxon literature and Early English history; published several important works; and left his large collection of ancient MSS. to his College. His Psalms, written in 1555 (see Psalters, Eng. § viii.), was printed without date (about 1560) and anonymously. This led Wood in his Athenae Oxonienses to attribute the Psalter to John Keeper, of Wells Cathedral. This question of authorship is further discussed in Psalters, English, § ix. [J. J.]

Parker, Theodore, m.a., was b. at Lexington, Massachusetts, Aug. 24, 1810; laboured with his father as a farmer and mechanic; entered Harvard College in 1830, but continued his work at home and attended the College for examinations; attended the Divinity School from 1834 to 1835, and became pastor of the Unitarian congregation in West Roxbury, June 21, 1837. He received the degree of m.a. from his College in 1840. Changes in his theological views led him to undertake the pastorate of a congregation in Boston, in January 1846. He continued his writing, preaching, and lecturing till 1859, when, blest at the lungs compelled him to seek relief in Europe. He d. at Florence, May 10, 1860. His publications were numerous, and have been republished in G. Britain. An extended list is given, together with 12 poetic pieces, in Putnam's Singers and Songs of U.S.A., 1875. His life has been published by Weiss, and by Frothingham. A few of his poetical pieces are given in American Unitarian hymn-books. These include:—

1. In darker days and nights of storm. Almighty Love. "Introduced in a sermon which Mr. Parker preached entitled 'The Practical Effects of the Ecclesiastical Conception of God.'" In Putnam as above.

2. O Thou great Friend of all the sons of men. Jesus the Son of the Glorious Truth, and the Life. This in the original is a sonnet (see Putnam as above). Altered for use as a hymn it is widely used by American Unitarians; and is also given in some English hymn-books. [J. J.]

Parr, Harriet, was b. at York in 1828, and has published several works under the nom de plume of "Holme Lee," including Maud

Talbot, 1854: Sylvan Holt Wap and Wool, 1861: M 1867; and several other works. Parr is known to hymn Past is her day of grace. J. Koble. [Christ weeping over Jerusalem.] The poem from which this is taken is dated 1819, and was given in Koble's Christian Year, 1827, in 6 of S. 1., for the 10th S. after Trinity. The hymn, No. 195, in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, is composed of st. i., based upon the first part of Koble's poem, and st. ii.-iv. from the two concluding stanzas of the poem.

Pastore percurso, minas. Guillaume de la Brunetiè. [Conversion of St. Paul.] This hymn was given in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 914, and in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn at 1st and 2nd Vespers on the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul. It is also in several later French Breviaries; J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 85, with omission of st. i., 4th, and Carol Newman's Hymns Eclesiæ, 1838 and 1865, in full. Tr. as:

1. The Shepherd slain, the wolf returns. By J. Chandler, from his Latin text as above, in his Hymns of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 99. It was included in Oldknow's Hymns, 1850, and others.

2. The Shepherd smitten is, and, &c. By J. Williams, in his Hymns, tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 176. It is used in an abbreviated form. In Johnson's English Hymn, 1861, No. 210, it begins, "The Shepherd smitten and laid low." The rendering in W. J. Blew's Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, "The spoiler fierce is lying low," is mainly from this tr., beginning with st. v.

3. The Shepherd now was smitten. By F. Pott, in his Hymns fitted to the Order of Common Prayer, 1861, the People's H., 1867, and others. In one or two American books st. vi.-viii. are given as "Christ's foe becomes His soldier." The alterations in H. A. & Jt., 1861 and 1875 were by the Compilers.

4. O Lord, Thy voice the mountain shakes. This, in the Hymnary, 1872, is adapted from J. Williams's tr. as above, with a change in the order of stanzas, and several alterations.

Translations not in U. S.:—

1. Smitten is the Shepherd good. R. Campbell. 1850.

2. They smite the Shepherd: fired with wrath. J. B. Chambers. 1866.

Pater superni luminis. Cardinal Bellarmine. [St. Mary Magdalen.] Included in the Roman Breviary. Venice, 1608, f. 445, as the hymn at Vespers on the festival of St. Mary Magdalen (July 22), and repeated in later eds. Patrick, St., the 2nd Bishop and Patron Saint of Ireland, was s. of Calpurnius, a deacon, and grandson of Potitus, a presbyter, and great grandson of Odisius, a deacon, was b. most probably near Dumbarton, in North Britain, in 372. According to his epitaph to Cornicetus, his father was also a decurio, a member of the local town council, and a Roman by descent. Hence probably the name Patricius. St. Patrick alludes in Cornicetus, § 5, to his having been originally a freeman, and of noble birth. His birthplace is noted in his Confession, § 1, Bauanavem Taberniae. Some have identified that place with Boulogne-sur-Mer, in France. His mother’s name was Conessa, said to have been a sister of St. Martin of Tours. According to Tirenchan’s Collections (circa A.D. 690), Patrick had four names—(1) Magonus, which Tirenchan explains by clarus, illustrious; (2) Suetum (Suecustus), god of war, or brave in war, said to have been his baptismal name; (3) Patricius; and (4) Cathraige (Cothrighe), given because he had been a slave to four masters. At the age of 16 he was carried off with many others to Ireland, and sold as a slave. There he remained six years with Milecho, or Millic. He was engaged in feeding cattle (pecora), though the later writers say that he fed swine. In his captivity he became acquainted with the Irish language. His misfortunes were the means of leading him to Christ, and he devoted himself to prayer, and often frequented, for that purpose, the woods on Mount Sleewish. Having escaped after six years, he spent some years with his parents, and then was stirred up, when still a youth (puer), to devote himself to the evangelisation of Ireland. According to Secundinus’s Hymn (St. Sechnall), which is probably not much later than the age of St. Patrick himself, the saint received his apostleship “from God,” like St. Paul. No reference is made in that hymn, or in the later so-called Hymn of St. Patrick, to any commission received from Pope Celestine, as is asserted by later writers. St. Patrick does not in his own writings allude to the external source whence he obtained ordination, and, as he speaks of his Roman descent, it would be strange for him not to have mentioned his Roman consecration, if i From some “sayings” of separate page of the Book probable that he travelled Italy, and that he was on deacon, priest, and, after was probably a bishop when his missionary labours were, however, Christians that period. with their pagan king, Laoghaire, and his court, at Tara, the royal residence." (Lyra Hib. Sacra, 1878, 2nd ed.)

3. Dr. Todd in his work S. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, 1864, gives a metrical rendering of the "Breastplate," which begins:

"I bind unto myself to-day,
The strong power of an invocation of the Trinity,
The God of the Trinity in Unity,
The Creator of the elements."

The tr., which extends to 78 lines, was mainly the work of Dr. Whitley Stokes. A more correct version by the same scholar is given in the Rolls' edition of the Tripartite Life, 1877; and that revised version, with a few modifications, according with no critical notes, explanatory of the alterations made on the former version, is given in the 2nd and 3rd editions of the Writings of St. Patrick, by Dr. C. H. H. Wright. Dr. Whitley Stokes, therefore, is to be regarded as the real translator from the original Irish. Dr. Petrie's translation, though highly acceptable as a first attempt, has been proved in many particulars to be erroneous. There is no mention of Tara in the hymn. An uncertainty yet exists as to the meaning of a few words.

4. In Dr. Macgillivray's Lyra Hibemica Sacrae, 1878, Dr. Todd's tr. was repeated (with notes), together with a second tr. by James Clarence Mangan, the opening lines of which are:

"At Tara to-day, in this awful hour,
I call on the Holy Trinity:
Glory to Him who reigns in power,
The God of the elements, Father, and Son,
And Paraclete Spirit, which Three are the One,
The everlasting Divinity."

5. A popular version of the hymn for congregational use was written by Mrs. Cecil F. Alexander, for St. Patrick's Day, 1889, and sung generally throughout Ireland on that day. The opening lines are:

"I bind unto myself to-day,
The strong Name of the Trinity,
By invocation of the same,
The Three in One and One in Three.
I bind this day to me for ever,
The power of faith, Christ's incarnation;
His baptism in Jordan river;
His death on Cross for my salvation;
He bursteth from the sordid tomb;
His rising up on to the morrow;
His coming at the day of doom;
I bind unto myself to-day."

Mrs. Alexander's version is given, along with that of James Clarence Mangan, in the Appendix to the Writings of St. Patrick, edited by Dr. C. H. H. Wright (R.T.S.), 1889.

6. Another metrical version of this hymn was given in the Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette for April 5, 1889. It is by Joseph John Murphy, and the opening lines are:

"I bind an armour on my breast,
The Threefold Name whereby I call,
Of Father, Son, and Spirit blest,
The Maker and the Judge of all."

7. The tr. in Stokes and Wright's edition of St. Patrick's writings was set to music as a cantata by Sir R. Stewart, and was performed for the first time in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on St. Patrick's Day, 1888. Dr. Thomas French, Assistant Librarian of Trinity College, Dublin, writes as follows respecting this hymn:

"The tr. called the 'Liber Hymnorum' belonged to Arnp. Usher, and forms one of the volumes of the Umbrie Collection now in the Library of Trin. College, Dublin. There is no interlinear Latin tr. in the original. It was given by Petrie in his account of the hymn 'for the satisfaction of the learned.' [The St. Patrick authorship is tradition only, so far as I know. Dr. Todd in his S. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, p. 426, says: 'It is undoubtedly of great antiquity, although it may now be difficult, if not impossible, to adduce proof in support of the tradition that St. Patrick was its author.'] Petrie and Todd make the age of the 6th or 7th cent. of Whitley Stokes 11th or 12th."

We may add that St. Patrick's Latin works were pub. by Sir James Ware, 1636, in the Acta Sanctorum of the Bollandist Fathers, 1688, by Villanueva, 1835, and by others, as R. S. Nicholson, 1868, Miss Cusack, 1871, and, above all, by Dr. Whitley Stokes, in the Rolls' Edition of the Tripartite Life, 1887. The latter three works contain also translations. Trs. of the whole, or a portion of St. Patrick's writings, have been pub. by Rev. T. Olden, 1876; Sir S. Ferguson, L.L.D. Transactions of Royal Irish Academy, 1885, and more completely in the Writings of St. Patrick, edited by Prof. T. Stokes and Dr. C. H. H. Wright, 1st ed. 1887, 2nd ed. 1888, 3rd ed., edited, with notes critical and historical, and an introduction by Dr. C. H. H. Wright revised and enlarged. London: Religious Tract Soc., 1889. [C. H. H. Patris aeterni Soboles coaeva. Charles Guite. [Deodation of a Church.] This hymn is appointed for use at Lauds on the Feast of the Dedication of a Church, in the Sens Breviary, 1782; the Paris Breviary, 1786; and later French Breviaries. It is based on the "Christe ecumenici" (p. 226, ii.). The tr. is also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:

1. O Word of God above. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, July, 1837, vol. xii, p. 33, and again in his Hymn, tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839. This tr. is rarely found in its original form. In 1852 it was given, much altered, in Murray's Hymnal as No. 89. This was the received tr. until 1861, when the Compilers of H. A. & M. produced another text, which superseded both it and the original. This text is thus composed: st. i., Williams; ii. Murray, altered by the Compilers; iii., iv., Compilers; v., vi., Murray; vili., Murray and the Compilers. This tr. is the most frequent form of the text, but the wording of st. ii. has undergone several changes.

2. Jesu, most loving God. This rendering is in the Hymnary, 1872, and is attributed in the Index to "I. Williams." Of I. Williams' tr. three lines only are found in the hymn, and these are in the doxology. The rest of the tr. is the text of I. Williams rewritten.

To translators the cross of this hymn has been st. ii., which reads:

"Hic sancti fontis latcis ab ortu Indita purgant maculam restas;
Hic et inflamna nova membra Christo Christia corpora."
This is changed in H. A. & M. to:
"Here from the Font is poured Grace on each sinful child;
The best Anointing of the Lord
Brightens the once defiled."

The rendering in the Hymnary is:
"Here in the Font are streams
To cleanse the sin-defiled:
Here God the Spirit with His strength
Endows the new-born child."

In addition to this stanza Williams's tr. of st. v. and vi. have been either subjected to great changes, or superseded altogether. They have not however the same doctrinal importance as st. iv. [J. J.]

Patris Sapiencia, veritas [bonitas] divina. [Passiontide.] This is the best and most popular of the metrical Hours of the Passion of our Lord, which were commonly used in mediaeval times. It is probably of the 14th cent., and consists of 8 stanzas, viz. one each for Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers, and Compline, with the concluding stanza--

"Has horae canonicas cum devotione Tibi Jesu recito psa ractione.
Ut sicut tu passus es poenas in agone,
Si labores consors sim coronae."

None, No. 82, gives it from a Reichenau ms. of the 14th cent. (where it is ascribed to Pope Benedict XII, who d. 1342); a ms. of the 14th cent. at Coblenz (where it is ascribed to Pope John XXII, who d. 1334); a ms. of the 13th cent. at Lichententhal (where it is ascribed to Angilias, Abp. of Bourges, who d. 1316), and other sources. It is in a ms. of the 15th cent. in the British Museum (Harl. 2951, f. 132), a ms. e. 1400, in the Bodleian (Bodl. 113, f. 40 b, &c.), a ms. of the 14th cent. in the Bodleian (Litury. Misc., 251, f. 151 b), and others. The text will also be found in Daniel, i. No. 483; Wickearnegel, i., No. 267; Nale's Hy. Exe., 1851, p. 137; Bässler, No. 115; Königseggl, ii. p. 318, Tr. ns.:

Circled by His enemies. By J. M. Neale, in his Medieval Hymns, 1851, p. 52 (with a note), and in the People's Hymn. 1867. Of this tr. st. i.-iii. and part of vii. were given in J. D. Chambers's Lawful Songs, 1857, pp. 168-170, the rest of the tr. therein being by Mr. Chambers.

Other trns. are:
1. He that is the great profounde Sapience. Sarum Primer, Paris, 1522.
2. The wisdom of the father, and truth divine by syde. Primer, 1604.
3. The Father's wisdom deepes. Primer, 1610.
5. As night departing brings the day. Primer, 1700.
6. The wisdom of the heavynly Father, Truth divine. D. French, 1830.
7. Was at the solemn Masse'-honr. J. D. Aygward, in O. Shipley's Amens Sanctus, 1804.

This hymn has often been tr. into German, and through the following has passed into English, viz.:

Christus, der uns selig macht. A free tr., by M. Weise, in the Neues geordo Bucklein, Jung Bnlaun, 1531, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 259, and the Cant. L. & C. 1531, No. 90. The tr. of this tr. are:
2. "Christ, who saves us by His cross." In later eds. two stanzas are continued, viz.: st. vi. "When the Lord of Glory died" (1-49 No. 947), and st. vii.: "Grant, O Christ, my God and Lord" (1886, No. 101). (3) "Christ

Peace, Doubting Heart

6. The moon is up: how calm and slow. Evening.
   A poem rather than a hymn, in 6 st. of 4 l. The author is
   C. Wesley. [Household Peace desired.]

7. When brighter suns and milder skies. Spring.
   Appended to his Catechism, 1723, in 6 st. of 4 l.

The full texts of all these hymns are in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, C. S. A., 1875. [F. M. B.]

Peace be on this house bestowed.

C. Wesley. [Household Peace desired.]

This poem, although in a similar manner and on the same subject as the next below, is altogether a different hymn. It was pub. in the Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1742, p. 157, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "The Salutation." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 219.) It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 497, and has since passed into several Methodist collections. [J. J.]

Peace be to this habitation.

C. Wesley. [Household Peace desired.]

This is No. 35 of his "Hymns for Believers," which appeared in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1742, vol. ii., in 6 st. of 8 l., and headed "On entering an House." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 58.) It is not in C. U. in its full form, but as follows:

1. Peace be to this habitation. This, as given in Catterall's H. Bk., 1817, No. 35, was composed of a C. H. from this hymn (st. 1. and v.). It was altered, and st. 1. from J. Newton ("May the grace of Christ our Saviour") again slightly altered to adapt it the better for Public Worship.

2. Peace be to this sacred dwelling. This, in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1853, and others, is Catterall's st. 1. and v., altered in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, again slightly altered to adapt it for Public Worship.

3. Peace be to this congregation. This is No. 2 in the American Unitarian H. Bk., 1853, which is a slightly altered hymn in the first line is found in some of the earliest editions of the Lady Huntingdon Collection. As these forms of the text are in extensive use, and as they differ somewhat widely from Wesley, we append the original:

"Peace be to this habitation! Peace to every soul herein! Peace, the foretaste of salvation, Peace, the seal of cædical bliss, Peace that speaks its heavenly Giver, Peace to earthly minds unknown, Peace Divine, that lasts for ever, Here erect its glorious throne!"

4. Visit, Lord, this habitation. In the Philadelphia Sel. of Hymns, 1841, this is composed of Wesley's st. 1., 2., and v., in its full form.

Peace, doubting heart, I am. C. Wesley. [Peace with God.]

1. For in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 264, and subsequently in other Methodist collections. In addition it is found in some

By J. M. Neale, in the Hymnary, 1854, No. 87, with the omission of st. ii. This is given in the Hymnary, 1872, as "To Thee, O God, we Gentiles pay," and in the Antiphonary and Gradual, 1850, and the Hymnary, 1892 (with a tr. of st. i. as: "From thee, illustrious Teacher, Paul!") [W. A. S.]

Peabody (see below), was b. at Exeter, New Hampshire, July 9, 1799; educated at Harvard College; followed the legal profession for a time; wrote for the press; was Professor of English Literature in Jefferson College, and (1842) finally Unitarian Minister at Burlington, Vermont, where he d. July 5, 1847. [J. J.]

Peabody, William Bourne Oliver, d. b., twin-brother of the above, was b. at Exeter, New Hampshire, July 9, 1799, and educated in his native town and at Harvard College. Leaving Harvard in 1817, he taught for a year at an academy in Exeter, and then proceeded to study theology at the Cambridge Divinity School. He began to preach in 1819, and became the Pastor of the Unitarian Congregation at Springfield, Massachusetts, in October, 1820. This charge he held to his death on May 28, 1847. His Memoir (written by his brother) was pub. with the 2d ed. of his Sermons, 1843; and his Literary Remains followed in 1850. "He was a man of rare accomplishments, and consummate virtue, whose high-mindedness of character impressed many outside his own sect. In 1823 he published a Poetical Catechism for the Young to which were appended some original hymns. He also edited The Springfield Collection of Hymns for Sacred Worship, Springfield, 1833. A few of his hymns also appeared in that collection. His hymns in C. U. are:

1. Behold the western evening light. Death of the Righteous, or Autumn Evening. Pub. in his Catechism, 1823, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in his Springfield Catechism, 1833, No. 40. It is in C. U. in its original form; also as altered in the Leeds H. Bk., 1851; and as altered by George Rawson in the Bp. Ps. & Hym., 1854, where it reads "How softly on the western hills." The alteration of the first line is found in some of the earliest editions of the Lady Huntingdon Collection. As these forms of the text are in extensive use, and as they differ somewhat widely from Wesley, we append the original:

"Peace be to this habitation! Peace to every soul herein! Peace, the foretaste of salvation, Peace, the seal of cædical bliss, Peace that speaks its heavenly Giver, Peace to earthly minds unknown, Peace Divine, that lasts for ever, Here erect its glorious throne!"

2. God of the earth's extended plains. Hymn of Nature. This is in Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, 1851, No. 8. It is supposed by some to be the production of his brother Oliver (see above); but Putnam assigns it to William. It is given abbreviated in a few collections. The hymn "God of the rolling orbs above," in the Boston Unitarian Hymn Book, 1866, and others, begins with st. v.

3. O when the hours of life are past. The Hereafter. This hymn, in 6 st. of 4 l., is given in his Catechism, 1823, as the Answer to "Question xiv. What do you learn of the Free State of Happiness?" It is in use in its original form, and also altered as: "When all the hours of life are past,"
Church of England hymn-books in 5 stanzas, a form given to it in Toplady's Ps. & Hgs., 1776. From it also the following hymns are derived:

1. For ever nigh me, Father, stand. This in Martin's Hymns, 1849, is composed of st. iv., ii., and vi., slightly altered.

2. Still nigh me, 0 my Saviour, stand. This in the Bap. Soc. of Hymns, 1836, No. 331, and the Bap. Ps. & Hgs., 1848, No. 427, is a cento, st. i., being st. iv. of this hymn, while st. ii. is st. xvi. of J. Wesley's tr. from the German "Jesu, Thy boundless love to me."

G. J. Stevenson's note on Wesley's hymn in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 204. is of more than usual interest. [J. J.]

Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Peace.] Written in 1875, and first printed in a small tract of five hymns (all by Bp. Bickersteth), entitled Songs in the House of Pilgrimage (Hampstead, J. Hewetson, n.d.), in 7 st. of 2 l. It is based upon the text, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee," Isaiah xlii. 2. It was given, without alteration, in the H. Comp., 1876; and has been repeated in numerous collections. It is also in the author's From Year to Year, 1883. In 1884 Bp. Bickersteth issued it, together with a companion hymn in the same metre on Prayer, printed on cardboard, as Prayer and Peace (London, Sampson Low). The hymn on Prayer begins "Pray, always pray, the Holy Spirit deigns. This was given in the author's Apostle of Hymns, 1880, No. 1. [J. J.]

Peace that passeth understanding. J. Montgomery. [For Peace.] This hymn is dated on the original ms. ("m. mss.") "Sept. 20, 1807," and is indexed as having been copied and sent to many persons. The earliest printed form with which we have met is in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1833, No. 245, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Invocation to Peace." It is in Kennedy, 1863, and other collections. [J. J.]

Pearce, Samuel, s. of a silversmith at Plymouth, was b. in that town, July 20, 1766. Early in life he joined the Baptist Church in Plymouth, and, showing gifts for the ministry, was invited to preach. After a course of study at the Baptist College, Bristol, he became, in 1790, pastor of the Baptist congregation in Canal Street, Birmingham. There his ministry was remarkably successful; but after a brief and bright course he d. on Oct. 10, 1799. He was strongly disposed to foreign mission work, and was one of the founders of the Baptist Missionary Society, in 1792. His Memoirs, by A. Fuller, was pub. in 1800. Embodied in the Memoirs were eleven poetical pieces. In the 2nd ed., 1801, these pieces were grouped together at the end of the Memoirs. He is known to hynology through the following hymns:

1. Author of life, with grateful heart. Evening, This in the Meth. Free Church S. S. H. Bk., 1860, is the original with the omission of st. iii.; that noted on p. 94, i. is a cento for "Morning." Both are from the Memoirs, 1800.

Court of Exchequer, was b. in Merrion Square, Dublin, Feb. 5, 1818. He resided for a time for educational purposes at Wesleys College, near Bristol, and then at Levans Parsonage, near Kendal, Westmoreland. He entered Trinity College, Dublin, in Feb. 1832, and graduated b.a. in 1840. Taking Holy Orders in 1841, he was curate of S. Mary, Aylesbury, and of S. Mary, Millisle, Co. Down, in the diocese of Kilmore. In July, 1844, he was referred to the Vicarage of Millisle, near Drogheda. In 1848 he removed to England, where he held successively the incumbencies of Trinity Church, Walton, Aylesbury, 1848; of Christ Church, Barnet, 1852; and of St. James, Millisle Park, 1854, and St. John, Buckhurst, 1855. His hymns were written mainly for the Barnet and Millisle "Conferences," and were pub. sometimes as leaflets, and again, as for the Conference of 1872, as Hymns Original and Selected, By W. P. In this pamphlet there are 25 of his compositions. In the latter part of 1878 his Original Hymns and Thoughts in Verse were pub. posthumously. This work contains 71 pieces, but few of which are dated. Of these the following are given in a few hymnbooks:

1. And may I really tread. Divine Worship. 1840.
3. O deign to mark us with Thy name in Christian Communion. From this "O for ten thousand harts," is taken.
7. O God of glorious majesty. For Retreats or Quiet Days. 1846.
11. O Saviour! we adore Thee. Jesus the Faithful One. 1847.

Mr. Perronet's hymns possess much beauty and earliness; and are rich in evangelical sentiment and doctrine; and are much more musical than usual with the hymns of our class. They deserve greater attention than they have hitherto received. [J. J.]

Pentecostarion, Thom. [Greek Hymnary, § xiv.]

People of the living God. J. Montgomery. [On Turning to God.] In Hatfield's Poets of the Church, N.Y., 1881, p. 440, the author says, "At the close of 1814, he [Montgomery] was publicly recognized at Fulneck, as a brother in the Lord, and a member of the [Moravian] Society. It was in all probability on this occasion that he wrote his beautiful and popular hymn beginning with "People of the living God." This uncertainty in Hatfield's work becomes certainty in S. W. Duffield's English Hymn, N.Y., 1886, p. 455, where he says, "This hymn describes Montgomery's feeling at the prospect of being readmitted to the Moravian communion at Fulneck, November 4th, 1814." In Holland's Memoirs of Montgomery, pub. in 1854, the full details of Montgomery's application to the Moravian community at Fulneck, the consent of the authorities there, and his admission in Dec., 1814, are given, but neither there nor elsewhere is it stated that the "Memoir" is any reference made to this hymn. The original ms. is not amongst the m. ms., nor is there anything at our command which can fix the date of its appearance until 1819, when it was included in Cotterill's Sel. as No. 160, in 3 st. of 8 l. and headed, "Choosing the portion of God's heritage." Although, therefore, we cannot say positively, with Duffield, that it was written at the period when Montgomery joined the Moravians at Fulneck, in Dec., 1814, yet we are prepared to admit with Hatfield that it was in all probability written at that time. The text was repeated from Cotterill's Sel. in Montgomery's Christian Pupilmat, 1825, No. 446, and in his Selection of Hymns, 1853, No. 51. The use of this hymn is extensive. [J. J.]

Perpetual Source of Light and Grace. F. Doddridge. [Inconstancy in Religion lamented.] This hymn is No. 74 in the D.m.s., and undated, but is found between other hymns dated respectively, "Jan. 15, 1733," and "Jan. 1, 1739," thus fixing the date as 1738. It was given, without alteration, in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, as No. 151, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the heading "Inconstancy in Religion." It begins, "Eternal Source of Light and Grace." [J. J.]

Perronet, Edward. The Perronets of England, grandfather, father, and son, were French émigrés. David Perronet came to England about 1680. He was son of the refugee pastor Perronet, who had chosen Switzerland as his adopted country, and who ministered to a Protestant congregation at Chatel D'Oex. His son, Vincent Perronet, M.A., was a graduate of Queen's College, Oxford, though his name is not found in either Anthony Wood's Athenae Oxonienses nor his Fasti, nor in Bliss's apparatus of additional notes. He became, in 1728, Vicar of Shorham, Kent. He is imperiously associated with the Evangelical Revival, and with the Wesleys and Whitefield. He cordially cooperated with the movement, and many are the notices of him scattered up and down the biographies and Journals of John Wesley and of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon. He lived to the venerable age of ninety-one; and pathetic and beautiful is the account of John Wesley's later visits to the white-haired saint (b. 1689, d. May 9, 1785).* His son Edward was b. in 1726. He was first educated at home under a tutor, but whether he proceeded to the University (Oxford) is uncertain. Born, *Agnes's Protestant Exiles from France in the Reign of Louis XIV, confounds Vincent the father with Edward his son.
baptized, and brought up in the Church of England, he had originally no other thought than to be one of her clergy. But, though strongly evangelical, he had a keen and searching eye for defects. A characteristic note to The Mitre, in referring to a book called The Dissenting Gentleman’s answer to the Rev. Mr. White, thus runs: — “I was born, and am like to die, in the tottering communion of the Church of England; but I despise her nonsense; and thank God that I have once read a book that no fool can answer, and that no honest man will” (p. 255). The publication of The Mitre is really the first protest against unbelief in his life. A copy is preserved in the British Museum (1793, 21), with title in the author’s holograph, and ms. notes; and on the fly-leaf this: — “Capt. Boisragon, from his oblig’d and most respectful humble servt. The Author. London, March 29th. 1757.” The title is as follows: — The Mitre; a Sacred Poem (1 Samuel ii. 30). London: printed in the year 1757. This strangely overlooked satire is priceless as a reflex of contemporary religious opinion and sentiment. It is pungent, salted with wit, gleeas with humour, hits off vividly the well-known celebrities in Church and State, and is well wrought in picked and packed words. But it is a curious production to have come from a “true son” of the Church of England. It roused John Wesley’s hottest anger. He demanded its instant suppression; and it was suppressed (Atmore’s Method at Memorial, p. 506; and Tyerman, ii. 240-14, 264, 265); and yet it was at this period the author thrummed himself into the Wesleys’ great work. But evidences abound in the letters and journals of John Wesley that he was intermittently rebellious and vehement to even his revered leader’s authority. Earlier, Edward Perronet dared all obloquy as a Methodist. In 1749 Wesley enters in his diary:

“From Rochdale went to Bolton, and soon found that the Rochdale lions were lambs in comparison with those of Bolton. Edward Perronet was thrown down and rolled in mud and mire. Stones were hurled and windows broken” (Tyerman’s Life and Times of the Rev. John Wesley, M.A., 3 vols., 1870; vol. ii. 57).

In 1750 John Wesley writes:

“Charles and you [Edward Perronet] behave as I want you to do; but you cannot, or will not, preach where I desire; others can and will preach where I desire, but they do not behave as I want them to do. I have a fine time between the one and the other. I think Charles and you have in the general a right sense of what it is to serve as sons in the gospel; and if all our preachers had had the same, the work of God would have prospered better both in England and Ireland. I have not one preacher with me, and not six in England, whose wills are broken to serve me” (ibid. ii. 85, and Whitehead’s Life of Wesley, ii. 259).

In 1753 arrangements to meet the emergency created by its own success had to be made for Methodism. As one result, both Edward and Charles Perronet brake loose from John Wesley’s law that none of his preachers or “helpers” were to dispense the Sacraments, but were still with their flocks to attend the parish churches. Edward Perronet asserted his right to administer the Sacraments as a divinely-called preacher (ibid. ii. 209). At that time he was resident at Canterbury, “in a Mansion, the archbishop’s old palace” (ibid. ii. 210). In season and out of season he “evangelized.” Onwards, he became one of the Countess of Huntingdon’s a chapel in Waltham Str. Throughout he was passiostrong-willed; but always his own Master. The substance of the Wesleys will be “taken in passages that ever and anon he bursts in full of flame and ebullient and volatile. In th

Peter Cluniaciensis, or Venerable Peter, was a noble family from Anvergne, in Arvernia. (Trench, pp. 425.)

Beginning of Hugo of Hunenburgh, (Hug. de Hunenbourg, a name now inuse.)

He was Prior of Claricaks, and on the death of his predecessor had but three months to fill the vacancy. Park the Abbot of St. Cluny, a man of the highest order at Cluny, with the military life, as a soldier, be after Benedicteine monk, and on the death of the Abbot of St. Cluny, the man of the next rank, who had been elected the deposed Abbot of St. Cluny, who had not before been selected to used by the resignation of Pontius, Peter was elected to the vacant abbacy, and consecrated the followings in the new foundation of the temporary abbey of Cluny, in Italy, whence he resided in the old house of his order at Cluny, and drove out the friends of Pontius and his followers, and the villages and estates of the Abbey were encompassed in favour of Peter, excommunicated him for months, and imprisoned him in a dungeon, where he died.

When the question was settled, another dispute arose concerning the monastic of Citeaux. Abbot of Citeaux accused Abbot Robert, a cousin of St. Bernard, of shocking conduct at Citeaux. But, finding the rule there too gallant, Abbot Robert directed him to remain at Citeaux, much to the surprise of Abbot Clervaux, who, as the Cistercian head of the Benedictine of Cluny, took the side of Abbot Clervaux, who was sent back by Peter to Clervaux, in the name of St. Thibert, his sharp Several of her hymns were contributed to the Plymouth Brethren’s Ps., Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, London, D. Walther, 1842. These with others, 58 in all, were pub. by Niaber & Co., London, 1847, as Hymns intended to help the Communion of Saints. Dr. Walker introduced several from these collections into his Cheltenham Ps. & Hymns, 1855. Many of these have been repeated in Sweeps’ Songs of G. & G., 1872, and other Church of England hymnals. These include, besides those annotated under their respective first lines:

i From Psalms, Hymns, & S. S., 1842:—
  1. Blessed Lord, our hearts are panting. Burial. Given in later collections as “Blessed Lord, our souls are longing.”
  2. How can there be one holy thought! Holiness through Christ.
  3. Jesus, how much Thy Name unfolds. The Name of Jesus.
  4. Lord, we see the day approaching. Second Advent.
  5. O Lord, we know it matters not. Taught by the Spirit.
  6. The murmurs of the wilderness. Praise to Jesus.
  7. The saints whilst dispersed abroad. God within us.
  8. Unworthy is thanksgiving. Jesus the Mediator.
  9. Whom have we, Lord, but Thee. Christ All in All.
 10. With thankful hearts we meet, O Lord. Public Worship.

ii. From her Hymns, &c., 1847:—
  11. Earth’s brightest tides will perish. Burial.
  12. Give me, my soul, inquire. Second Advent.
  13. Halieutia, we are hastening. Journeying Heavenlyward.
  14. Holy Father, we address Thee. Holy Trinity.
  15. Jesus, of Thee we never would tire. Holy Communion.
  17. Lord, through the desert drear and wide. Prayer for Perseverance.
  19. O Lord, whilst we confess the worth. Dead in Christ. Sometimes it begins with st. 11, “Dead to the world we here know.”
  20. Our God is light, we do not go. Christ the Guide.
  22. Salvation to our God. Passional.

Petersen, Johann Wilhelm, was b. June 1, 1849, at Osnabrück; his father Georg Petersen, Kanzlei-beamster at Lübeck, having gone to reside at Osnabrück as representing Lübeck in the negotiations which ended in the Peace of Westphalia. Petersen matriculated at the University of Giessen, in 1669; went in 1671 to Rostock, and was then for short periods at Leipzig, Wittenberg, and Jena; the degree of M.A. being conferred on him by Giessen in absentia. He returned to Giessen in 1673, and began to lecture on philosophy and rhetoric as a privat dozent. About 1675 he visited Spener, at Frankfurt. This proved an important turning-point in his life. In 1677 he began to lecture at Rostock, as Professor of Poetry (b.d. from Rostock 1686), but in the same year accepted the pastorate of the St. Aegidien church at Hannover. He was then, in May, 1678, appointed by Duke August Friedrich of Holstein, as Court preacher at Eutin, and general superintendent of the diocese of Lübeck. In Advent, 1888, he became pastor and superintendent at made himself obnoxious by refusing to talk on occasions; received into his amunade Juliane von, publicly to teach her id. Kingdom. Apart from his importance Petersen deserves attention as a hymnologist. A considerable number of his songs have been adopted in Sweeps’ Songs of G. & G., 1872, and other Church of England hymnals. These include, besides those annotated under their respective first lines:

Woodford (afterwards Bishop of Ely) of the Parochial Hymn Book, 1853 (1887), and the enlarged ed., 1875 (274 hymns). The first ed. of this collection was one of the first hymn-books which gave Dr. Neale's "trs. of Greek hymns for congregational use. To the 1863 ed. Mr. Phillimore contributed the following hymns, several of which have been repeated in other collections:

1. Christ, though grief and toil we see. Epiphany.
2. Darkly I roam the stormy sky. Good Friday. Evening and Easter Ev.
3. Every morning they are new. (See p. 303, L.)
4. No man in his virgin honor. Ascension of the B. V. M.
6. O God, before the sun's bright beams. Morning.
7. O God, the weary path of life. Public Worship.
8. O Lord of health and life, what tongue can tell.
10. Saul, why such furious hate, such blinded zeal? Connection of St. Paul.
11. Thou art gone up on high, Why gaze they, &c. Ascension.

In addition some of Mr. Phillimore's trs. from the Latin were given in the 1863 ed. of the Parish H. Bk.; and other original hymns which are annotated under their respective first lines. His hymn for Saints Days, "O Lord of glory, King of saints," was included in the 1875 ed. of that collection. Phillimore's Sermons and Hymns were pub. in 1881. [J. J.]

Phi spor ́i anov agias doysis. The author of this hymn, which is found in the Service Book of the Greek Church as a Vesper Hymn, is unknown. It was quoted by St. Basil in the 4th century as of unknown authorship and date (De Sp. Sancto ad Amphilochium, c. 29). Its earliest printed form is in Archbishop Usher's De Symbolis, 1647, his text being taken from two Greek ms., one supposed to be of the 12th, and the second of the 14th century. Kouth also gives it in his Reliqu. Sacr. 359, and Daniel in his Theol. Hymn. iii. p. 5. The form in which the original is printed varies in different works, as in the Lyra Apostolica, 1836, p. 74 (ed. 1879, p. 79); Liddell's Offices, &c., of the Holy Eastern Church, 1863, p. 277, but the text is the same. It is as follows, from Daniel:

Φως ἑλαρόν ἁγίας δόξης.

This hymn was sung in the ancient Church at the Lighting of the Lamps, and hence is known as "The Candelight Hymn." Its modern use as a translated hymn is at Evensong. It may be added that in modern Greek liturgical books it is attributed to Sophronius (see Greek Hymnody, § vi.), thirteenth of whose compositions are given in Daniel iii. pp. 20-16.

Translations in C. U.:

1. Hail! gladdening Light, of His pure glory poured. By J. Keble. This tr. appeared in the British Magazine, 1834; and again, together with the Greek text, in Lyra Apostolica, 1836, in 1 st. of 10 l., and signed γ. In 1868 it was given in the Appendix to H. A. & M, and was repeated in the revised ed., 1875. The sign γ in the Lyra Apostolica is that of the Rev. John Keble (Card. Newman's Apologia 2nd ed., p. 297, and Lyra Apostol., 1879, p. viii.). In some editions of the Lyra Apostolica, the signature is changed to δ (i.e. Card. Newman) in error. This has been corrected in the ed. of 1879. This tr. is very popular, and is in extensive use.

He entered the Presbyterian ministry in 1860, and was pastor successively in Binghampton and in Waterford, New York, and Fort Street, Detroit; his last charge being the Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. (Duffield's English Hymns, 1886, p. 570.) Dr. Pierpont's hymns include:—

3. To Thee, O God (Lord), we raise. Divine Benevolence. 4. With harps and with viols there stand a great throng. The New Song.

Of these hymns, No. 3 is in Hymns and Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, and the Lord's Day, N. Y., 1884; and Nos. 1, 2, 4, are in I. D. Sankey's Sacred S. and Solos. [J. J.]

Pilgrim, burdened with thy sin. G. Crabbe. (The Christian Pilgrim.) In the preface to the 1807 ed. of his work, The Village, Crabbe says concerning Sir Eustace Gray:—

"In the story of Sir Eustace Gray an attempt is made to describe the wanderings of a mind first irritated by the consequences of error and misfortune, and afterwards soothed by a species of errata, and kept up by the desire of being known and esteemed."

The scene of this story is a madhouse, and the persons a visitor, the physician, and the person, Sir Eustace, the patient, gives his history in detail. He was the lord of the manor, had a wife, two children, and a friend; the wife is seduced by the friend; a duel in which the friend is killed; wife pines away; both children die; is himself distracted; plagued by two friends; found peace at last in the Sun of Mercy; and gives a specimen of the preaching through which he was saved.

This specimen is:

"Pilgrim! burdened with thy sin,
Come the way to Zion's gate;
There, till mercy speaks within,
Knock, and weep, and watch, and wait:
Knock—He knows the sinner's cry;
Weep—He loves the mourner's tears;
Watch—for saving grace is nigh;
Wait—till heavenly light appears.
"Hark! it is the Bridegroom's voice;
"Welcome, pilgrim! to thy rest.
Now within the gate rejoice,
Safe, and sealed, and bought, and blest.
Safe—from all the tares of vice;
Sealed—by signs the chosen know;
Bought—by love and life the price;
Blest—the mighty debt to owe.
"Holy pilgrim! what for thee,
In a world like this remains?
From thy guarded breast shall flee
Fear and shame, and doubt, and pain:
Fear—the hope of heaven shall fly;
Shame—from glory's view retire,
Doubt—in certain rapture die;
Pain—in endless bliss expire."

These stanzas, when detached from their melancholy surroundings, form a somewhat spiritualized hymn, and as such are in use in Great Britain and America.

Pirie, Alexander, was for some time a minister in connection with the Antiburgher Synod of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. He was appointed in 1760 a teacher of the Philosophical Class in the Theological Seminary, New York city, but was suspended shortly after and expelled from the body. On joining the Burghers he returned to Scotland and became the minister of a congregation in Abernethy. In 1763 he joined the Independents, and was minister of a congregation at Newburgh, Fife-shire. He d. in 1804. In 1777 he pub. Psalms, or Hymns founded on some important Passages of Scripture. From this work two well-known hymns have come down to modern collections through the Sac. Songs and Hymns on V. Passages of Scripture for the New Relief Church, Campbell St., Glasgow, 1794. These are:

1. Come, let us join in [our] songs of praise, To our ascended Priest. Ascension. 2. With Mary's love without her fear. Easter. [J. J.]

Pistor, Henricus. Little or nothing is known of the life of this author, to whom is attributed the grand hymn on St. John the Baptist, "Præcursoris et Baptizator," which is given by Chisholm (Cathecis. 1516, f. 192 b), and Trench in his Sac. Lat. Poetry, ed. 1874, p. 35, as the work of Daniel and others. Chisholm describes him as a Doctor of Theology in the University of Paris, and a Monk of the Abbey of St. Victor, and states that he took part in the Council of Constance (1414-1418), which would fix the time he lived to the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries. Archbishop Trench says of him "that the writer" (of the poem mentioned above) was an accomplished theologian is plain; and no less so that he was trained in the school, and form Adam of St. Victor. Victor, pub. at Paris it St. Sebastian, beginnin anus," is also ascribed to him.

Written for the Jubilee of Queen Victoria, 1887, and set to music by C. W. Lovett. It was printed, together with the National Anthem adapted for the Jubilee, in Good Words, 1897.

3. Le beau temps est revenu! Harriet. Written in 1871 for use at the Harvest Festival service in St. George’s Church, York, of which the author was then rector, and pub. in the same year in the Hymnary, No. 466.

4. March, march, onward true! Processional at Choral Festivals. Written in 1887 for the tune of Beulah’s March of the Israelites in the Osteria of Bk., at the request of the Rev. Henry White, Dean of the Savoy, and first used in that Chapel. It was subsequently pub. in the Savoy Hymnary, N.D. [1875], in 4 st. of 4 lines each. It is a Processional Choral Festivals Look at Peterborough, and in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871.

5. O Light! Whose beams illumine all! The Way, the Truth, and the Life. Written by Dr. J. P. Tanner, in his Lazarus, and Other Poems, 1884, as one of five Hymns for School and College. It passed into the 1884 Appendices to H. & M., and again into later editions.

6. O Lord of hosts, all heaven possessing! For School College. Written in May, 1884, and pub. in his Lazarus and other Poems, 1884, in 4 st. of 4 lines each. It is a most suitable hymn for Sunday school gatherings.

7. O praise the Lord our God! Processional Thanksgiving Hymn. Written May 1884, and pub. in his Lazarus, and other Poems, 1884, in 4 st. of 4 lines each. It is a Processional Thanksgiving Hymn.

8. Reign, ye pure in heart! Processional at Choral Festivals. Written in May, 1885, for the tune of Peterborough Cathedral Festivals of that year, and first used at Peterborough Cathedral. In the same year it was pub. with special music to No. 7 of his Hymns, in the 1885 ed. of Lazarus, and other Poems, 1885. It was included in the 1885 Appendix to H. & M., with the text altered so that the second line reads: "To Your fatal banner wave on high," instead of: "To Your banner wave on high." It is more widely used than any other of the author’s hymns.

9. Thine arm, O Lord, in days of old! Hospitals. Written in 1884 for use in King’s College Hospital, London, to be praised, and as a printed form, as a Hymn used in the Chapel of King’s College Hospital. It was included in the 2nd ed. of Lazarus, and other Poems, 1885; and in the 1885 Appendixes to H. & M.; in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; Virgins’ 1873, and many others.

10. Thy hand, O God, has guided! Church Defences. Included in the 1889 Supplemental Hymnary to H. & M. The closing line of each stanza, "One Church, one Faith, one Lord," comes in with fine effect.

Dean Plunket’s Life of H. P. Ken, 1888, is an extant accurate and excellent work. The chap- ter on the bishop’s life, pp. 1-1 st., is well written, but should be read with the article on the same subject in this Dictionary, p. 517.

Plunket, William Conyngham, D.D., 4th Baron Plunket, chf. at s. of John, 3rd Baron, was b. in Dublin, 26 Aug., 1818, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1833: and took Holy Orders in 1857. He was Preceptor of St. Patrick’s Cathedral, Dublin, from 1869 to 1876, when he was elected Bishop of Meath. In 1881 he was translated to the Archepiscopate of Dublin. His hymn, "Our Lord Christ hath risen"

(Easter), was first pub. in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, in 4 st. of 74. It was written for that collection in 1873, to suit the tune, "O Triprung des Lebens," by T. Selle. So far as we are aware this is Lord Plunket's only contribution to hymnody. [G. A. C.]

Plymouth Brethren Hymnody. The sect popularly known as the Plymouth Brethren was in its earliest stage called The Brethren, because its members professed to meet solely on the ground that they were brethren in Christ. Eventually, however, the branch of it which met at Plymouth, Devon, chiefly from the position, learning, and labours of its members, acquired so great influence in the society as to give its name to the whole body, and it was thenceforth known as The Plymouth Brethren. In giving an account of the hymns and hymn-books of The Brethren, it is necessary to refer somewhat to the history of the sect. For the purpose of our article it will be convenient to divide thus:—

Period I. From the commencement of the sect to the year 1848. Period II. From the year 1848 to 1889.

Period I.—Between the years 1829-33 a custom arose in Dublin, Bristol, Plymouth, and elsewhere for certain persons, irrespective of creed, to meet together for prayer, the joint study of the Scriptures, and mutual aid in spiritual matters generally. The principle on which they acted is thus put forth by one of their early associates, "the possession of the common life" (in Jesus Christ) and that the disciples should bear as Christ does with many errors of their brethren." At first the assemblies so formed did not in any way interfere with the worship of the members in the various churches and chapels to which they belonged; indeed their meetings were held at an early hour on Sunday morning so that they should not do so. But soon the separatist principle began to make itself manifest. With many separation from religious communities was held to be the only means of promoting unity among Christians, and finally Mr. Darby, an author of some repute, who at once held an Irish curacy, gained so much ascendancy as to bring the desired separation about, and their meetings have ever since been held as distinct from other religious denominations. They were united as a body and known under one name, The Plymouth Brethren, till the year 1848. This period produced many hymn-writers who put forth a great number of hymns, some of which are very beautiful, and all of which, without doubt, helped either to form or to strengthen the Society. The principal hymn-writers during this period were the following:—Chapman, R. C.; Darby, J. N.; Deck, J. G.; Donny, Sir Edward, Bart; Kelly, Thomas (?); Tregelles, S. Prideaux, LL.D. and Wigram, G. V.

The hymn-books put forward and used by the Plymouth Brethren during this period were many. They include:—

(1) Hymns for the use of the Church of Christ, by R. C. Chapman, Minister of the Gospel, Bournemole. A New Edition, to which is added an Appendix selected from various sources by John Chapman. (First edition, 1837.) Reprinted 1852. London. The number of hymns written by R. C. Chapman are in all 86. Those collected number 157, and are, as the title says forth, by various authors, some of whom were Brethren denominations. Amongst the Rev. Donny, and Kelly are found.

(2) A Selection of Hymns by Bart. London and Dublin. 1st contains many hymns by the writer himself. Chapman, Tregelles, Wigram amongst the rest.

(4) Psalms and Hymns of Two Parts. Part I. "Intend worship of the Children of Private Meditation." London is the work of J. G. Deck. From their own body the Part I. has Hymns on the Lord's Supper. Part II. contain most hymn-books. Deck and the Editor are also represent...

This book was compiled by J. N. Darby. Revised 1856. London. 1855. It contained 341 hymns and Poems, and was called "Miscellaneous Hymns," an Appendix. The book was only 66 pages long. Many of the hymns are by Chapman, Deck, Kelly, Tregelles, and others.

Besides the fore going work, there are many hymn-books of the Plymouth Brethren.

Pollock, Thomas Benson, M.A., was born in 1836, and graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, B.A. 1859, M.A. 1863, where he also gained the Vice-Chancellor’s Prize for English Verse in 1855. Taking Holy Orders in 1861, he was Curate of St. Luke’s, Leck, Staffordshire; St. Thomas’s, Stamford Hill, London; and St. Alban’s, Birmingham. Mr. Pollock is a most accomplished writer of metrical Litanies. His Metrical Litanies for Special Services and General Use, Mowbray, Oxford, 1870, and other compositions of the same kind contributed subsequently to various collections, have greatly enriched modern hymn-books. These are specially noticed under Litanies, Metrical, p. 677. I. To the 1889 Supplemental Hys. to H. A. & M. Mr. Pollock contributed two hymns, “We are soldiers of Christ. Who is not now a sinner?” (Shutters’ Hymns), “No, but have not known Thee as we ought” (Seeking God), but they are by no means equal to his Litanies in beauty and finish.

Πολύναιρατε, κύδιμε. Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemais. [To Christ.] A hymn to Christ, being No. ix. of his ten hymns. The full Greek text is found in the Anth. Graecae Carmin. Christ., 1871, p. 22, in 70 lines. From this Mr. Chatfield’s tr., “To Thee, much loved, be honour paid,” was made, and pub. in his Songs and Hymns, &c., 1876, p. 84, in 66 lines. A. Stevenson’s tr. “Thee, desire of all the nations,” was pub. in his Ten Hys. of Synesius, &c., 1865. [Greek Hymnody, v. 5.] J. J.

Pont, Robert, son-in-law of John Knox, was the s. of John Pont, Culross, Firthshire. He was b. at Culross in 1524, entered the University of St. Andrew’s in 1543, became, in 1562, minister of Dunblane; in 1563, Commissioner of Morny; in 1571, Provost of Trinity College, Edinburgh; and, in 1574, Joint Moderator of St. Cuthbert’s, Edinburgh. He was one of the three who publicly protested at the Cross of Edinburgh against the Proclamation, on May 23, 1584, of the Act of the Scottish Parliament against Presbyterianism. For this offence he was forced to flee the kingdom. After his return to St. Cuthbert’s he was offered, in 1587, but refused, the Bishopric of Caithness. He d. In 1691 Pont was requested by the General Assembly to revise the Praise of 1564-65, but never accomplished the work. It is probable he was also one of its original compilers.

the greatest are in st. iii. This reads:

(1) In the Hymns and Lyrics—

"O holy, holy, holy God,
Holy, Almighty, whom we laud,
Hear in mercy as we sing.

(2) In the People's Hymnal—

"O Holy God! O Holy

A prose tr. of the Reapreaches was given in the 1866 Appendix to the H. Noted, p. 157.
In the 1865 and later editions this, p. 151, an antiphon is added beginning with "We venerate Thy Cross." From this text a shortened form is included in the Altar Hymnal, 1884, p. 60. Canon Oakeley has tr. it in metre in his

POTT, Francis, m.a., was b. Dec. 29, 1832, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, 1854; A.M. 1857. Taking Holy Orders in 1856 he was curate of Bissaworth, Gloucetershire, 1856-8; Ardingly, Berks, 1858-61; Ticehurst, Sussex, 1861-60; and Rector of Northill, Ely, 1860. His Hymns, fitted to the Order of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the Use of the Church of England, to which are added Hymns for Certain Local Festivals, was pub. in 1861, and reprinted from time to time with a few additions. Mr. Pott contrib-ted trs. from the Latin and Syriac, and original hymns, including "Angel voices ever singing" (p. 68, ii.) and "Lift up your heads, earthly gates." (Ascension). These original hymns, together with his trs., have been received with much favour and are widely used.
In several instances in the preceding pages of this Dictionary (and elsewhere in other works), several trs. from the Latin, and other hymnological work, are attributed to Archdeacon Alfred Pott. We are authorized to state that this ascription of authorship is an error. [See

POUR OUT THY SPIRIT

J. Montgomery. [For a Meeting of Clergy.] There are two copies of this hymn in the author's handwriting amongst the mss. On one it is stated that it was written on January 23, 1833, for the Rev. J. Birchall, Rector of Newbury, Berks, who pub. a Sel. of Hymns in 1833. It was repeated in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 429, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 306. The most popular form of the hymn is "Lord, pour Thy Spirit on high." This is in very extensive use.

some years, with the result that on the one hand it is attributed to John Kemphorne, and on the other to Bishop Mant, and both in error. The claim for John Kemphorne was made by H. B. Dodgson [H.W.D., and this claim, we find from his own words, was a pure guess on his part. Mr. Kemphorne's son (the Rev. R. Kemphorne, of Eton Rectory) said in the Guardian (Dec. 10, 1879) that it was not written by his father, and he has repeated the same to the writer of this article during the progress of this work. Kemphorne, in the Preface of the 2nd ed. of his Select Portions of Ps. & Hymns, 1813, omits it from his list [see Kemphorne, J.]: It is clear therefore that it was not written by John Kemphorne. The ascription of authorship to Bp. Mant occurred through confounding the hymn "Praise the Lord Whose mighty wonders" (q.v.), which appeared in Mrs. Mant's Parent's Poetical Anthology, 1814, with this hymn. [J. J.]

Praise to God, immortal praise.

Anna L. Barbauld, née Aikin. [Harvest.] This, the most popular and widely used both in Great Britain and America of Mrs. Barbauld's Hymns, first appeared in Dr. W. Enfield's Hymns for Public Worship, &c., Warrington, 1792, No. 36, in 9 st. of 4 L., and entitled "Praise to God in Prosperity and Adversity." In the following year it was repeated in Mrs. Barbauld's (then Miss Aikin) Poems, London, J. Johnson, 1773, p. 115, without title, but with Habakkuk iii. 17, 18, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom," &c., quoted as a note. It is not found in many collections until 1812, when it was included by Dr. Collyer in his Coll., No. 689. From that date it gradually increased in use, sometimes in its complete form, but more frequently with alterations, extending to the omission of various stanzas, until in one or two cases it has been reduced to twelve lines only. The various stanzas, all beginning with the same first line, are too numerous to analyse, save the more important and such as have additions made thereto by others. These are:

1. In S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1832, No. 172, this cento is in 4 st. of 6 L., the first three of which are compiled, with alterations, from the original text, and the last "Praise in prosperity and health," from another source.
2. In Morell's and How's Ps. & Hymns, 1854: the same three stanzas as above, and a new fourth stanza by Bishop How of 4 L. This text is repeated in Church Hymns, 1871, No. 290, with the last stanza by Bishop How reduced to 6 lines.
3. In the New Minute Hymnal, 1875, from the original Minute H. Bk. of 1838, with a doxology.
4. In Thring's Coll., 1892, No. 408, the cento is composed of 4 st. of 6 L., of which stanzas i., ii., are from the P. C. K. Hymns, 1832, altered; st. iii. is the new stanza first given in the S. P. C. K., as above, and st. iv. a doxology.

Other centos may be traced out by consulting the original text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 33, or Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1860 and 1867, pp. 289-290. In addition to these centos, beginning with the original first line, there are also the following in C. U.:

5. Praise to God, unceasing praise. This, in Francis Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861, is the S. P. C. K. Hymns text as above, with an alteration of the opening line.
6. Praise to God, exceeding praise. This, in J. Darlington's Hymns, &c., 1867, is from the original with alterations by Mr. Darlington.
7. Lord, should rising whiteness tear. This, in the Presb. Ps. & Hymns for the Worship of God, Richmond, U.S.A., 1867, No. 471, is composed of st. iii. - vi. slightly altered.

Most of the foregoing a hymn are repeated in other noms, and their use extensive. The text reed R. Bingham, R. D., 1871, and beginning "Lafine," is a cento of 3 st. of the original.

The Prayer Book

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire.

B. Beddome. [Prayer.] This appeared in 1818, at the request of the Rev. E. Bickersteth, for his Treatise on Prayer. It was first printed in 1818, together with three other hymns of Montgomery, on Prayer, in the Monthly Repository, and a third on "How to pray aright," and "What shall we ask of God in prayer?", on a broadsheet, for use in the Sunday Schools of Sheffield (Wincobank Hall Library). In 1819 it was published in Bickersteth's Treatise on Prayer, and it is the 3rd ed., of 1828.

Pfeilswerk was a distinguished preacher. He was one of the editors of the Basel O. B., 1844. His hymns were written at various times, generally to be used at Mission and other meetings in which he was present. Sixteen were included in a collection edited by two of his friends and pub. at Basel, 1841, as the Evangelischer Lieder-Kreis (311 hymns old and new). Nine of his hymns are in Knapp's Er. L. S., ed. 1850. The only one tr. into English is—

Her Life and Letters by her husband appeared some time after. Dr. Prentiss removed from Bedford to New York in 1851, and was appointed Prof.-esor of Pastoral Theology at Union Seminary, New York, 1873. Mrs. Prentiss's works include The Flower of the Family; Stepping Heavensward, 1863; and Religious Poems, 1873. Of her hymns the two following are most widely known:

Presbyterian Hymnody, English.

Presbyterianism in England presents in its history four distinct and sharply defined periods, and in all of these it has been directly associated with English hymnody.

1. It was the form of religion "as by law established" in England from 1647 to 1652, a period of five years. It was originally intended to institute a Synod in each county, and a General Assembly for the whole kingdom. The usurpation of Cromwell, however, and the interference of the army in ecclesiastical as well as in civil affairs, prevented the execution of this design, and it was only in London and Lancashire that Synods were formed. In Lancashire there were nine Presbyteries, and several must have been formed in the neighbouring counties. The Presbyteries of Manchester and Newcastle-on-Tyne were established in 1646 and 1648, under the ordinance of Parliament; and the first meeting of the Synod of Lancashire was held in 1649.

The Metrical Psalms, which were in use in the Presbyterian Churches during this period were those of Francis Rous (q.v.), Speaker of the House of Commons, and one of the lay deputies to the Westminster Assembly. [See Psalms, English, § 11.]

2. The overthrow of Presbyterianism was followed by a general decline. Having ceased to meet in Presbytery, many of the ministers, in the face of the Calvinism of the Westminster standards, became tinged with Arminianism, which ultimately developed into Socinianism. A considerable number of congregations in various parts of the country, adhered to the documents; others were influenced by the course of 150 years of orthodoxy Church became.

During this period, the Union in 1650 was in use among Presbyterians throughout England.

iii. In 1836 a new creation of ministers and old Presbyterians, and when they agreed into a Synod, in accordance with the Synod of the General Church of Scotland, at "The Presbyterian Church forty years its progress vacillating. The Home Missions succeeded in establishing many of the leading towns in Liverpool, Newca. London, which became an activity was also shown work, especially in China.

For a few years the rec. of the Psalter of 1650 as a committee was appointed book for its use, which was & Hymns, 9c., 1857. In 1857 Hamilton, of Regent Squ. laid upon the table of the Hymns for Divine Worship, of 521 hymns and versio paraphrases of Scott. fully edited, and set to the lettering was accomplished by its scope and design, and nation of its contents. took a foremost position especially adopted by the body in England, and adoptions of Presbyterians in Australia, the Can., etc.

iv. In 1876 a great Presbyterianism in En. which then took place in the Presbyterian Church in Eng. congregations belonging to the Church of Scotland, and many of the from the last century, now known as the "P. England."

At the Union in 1876 the Scottish section continues which had been recent. Mother Church in Scott. Presbyterian Church Hymnals. (See Scottish Presbyterian Church Hymnals. for the Ps. Divine Worship of 1867 arose that the time was halcyon, enriched with hymns, should a committee was accordingly a of 1880, without the materials for the sanctuary, but to bring.
the Church, as far as possible, into union in the matter.

Rev. W. Rigby Murray, in 1821, produced a present hymnal of the Presbyterian Church of England, "Church Prayers, (London, Nisbet & Co.). It contains 333 hymns and 19 doxologues, arranged in 13 sections, as follows: "The Holy Scriptures, "The Holy Spirit," "The Gospel," &c. In the text of the hymns the usual forms have been followed in every instance where a divergence seemed to exist in doctrine from that of the Presbyterian Church. The section for the young forms a prominent feature, 63 hymns being supplied for the purpose of adapting the collection for Sunday Schools and Children's Services. The music has been revised by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, and is of a high order. The expression marks throughout the collection are by the Rev. W. Rigby Murray.

The greatest progress has been made in Psalmody in the Presbyterian Church of England within the past twenty years. The use of hymns in public worship has also spread rapidly. Sir Herbert Oakes's "Bible Psalter" is in use in a considerable number of congregations; and the Rev. W. Rigby Murray and the Editor of "Church Prayers, and School Psalter," have been publishing the Revised Version of the Holy Scriptures to vi. The only hymn-writer of note belonging to the Presbyterian Church of England is the Haunstephan, who died in 1864. [See Burns, M.A., sometime minister at the Haunstephan.] [W. R. M.]

Pricard, Vicar of the Parish of Carmarthenshire, the well-known poet who was b. at Llanymddyfri, about 1579. His father was the property of the neighbouring town of Abergavenny, and his mother was the daughter of a previous owner of the town, John Colchester. In the same year he was called to the Vicarage of Llandovery. He was the first of his day, and the popularity that followed him was not long in establishing his residence at St. David's, where he was a Presbyter. He was a moveable pulpit, which was placed in the Cathedral being congregations. Perceiving his ignorance, and also that he turned the substance verse which he gave to thus originated most people having great an instance of his sermons and discourse on his views on the things of heaven and earth, and the change of the poetically fashioned, and are thus well worth attentive study with a view to securing the best representation of the Latin hymns for purposes of worship. They seem, except in a few cases, in which an echo remains in the tr. of this century, to have passed almost into oblivion, even among Roman Catholics.

3. Finally, The 17th cent. (1609-1706) produced a series not in the Sarum but in the Roman Breviary, for the use of English Roman Catholics.

4. For the purposes of this Dictionary, these groups, with their numerous members, can only be considered with reference to the tr. of the Latin hymns, which they exhibit. As they extend over a lengthened period, they present a variety of renderings, changing with the change of poetically fashioned, and are thus well worth attentive study with a view to securing the best representation of the Latin hymns for purposes of worship. They seem, except in a few cases, of which an echo remains in the tr. of this century, to have passed almost into oblivion, even among Roman Catholics.

5. Sarum Primers.—1. The 1st of the Sarum Primers (c. 1400), printed in Mr. Maskell's Monumenta Ritualia (vol. iii.), has prose renderings of the hymns. A ms. at Cambridge (c. 1430) has the memories of the hours in metre. In the Sarum Primers, 1538-44, and 1555-8, not only the hymns for the hours and the offices, but portions of the Dirige (the Office for the Dead), are versified in a rude fashion; more, apparently, as an indication of metre in the original than for singing. Such a verse as this could never have been sung to the tune of "Veni Creator":

"Come holy Ghost to Creator eternall,
In our minutes to make visitacion:
And fulfiil Thou with grace supernall
Our harte that bee of thy creation."

iii. Unauthorised Primers of the Reformation.—Of the early and illicit primers of the Reformation, the primer known as Marshall’s, 1535 (reprinted in Three Primers set forth in the reign of Henry VIII., Clarendon Press), is a good type. The hymns for the hours are versified. In metre they are more regular than those of the Sarum series, and more conformed to Latin types. The Latin originals of the Sarum series are rejected; and all hymns to the B. V. M. are omitted. The "Veni Creator" is translated in part, and probably many of the hymns have some Latin source of inspiration, but the feeling and the doctrinal cast is that of Coverdale’s Goosty Psalms and the Gospellers. Bp. Hilsey’s Primer (1539), which was drawn up at Thos. Cromwell’s command, is based far more on the Sarum series, is similar to it in irregularity of metre, and retains with little modification the addresses to the B. V. M.

iv. Authorised Primers, 1545-1559.—1. The Primer of Henry VIII. (1545), which was reprinted frequently, with increasing modification of the worship of the B. V. M. up to 1553, and then revised under Elizabeth, in 1559, chooses from the Sarum Breviary an entirely new set of hymns, “Jam lucis”; “Ades dies munitionis”; “Consors paterni lucis”; “Record Creator”; “Aeternae coeli gloria”; “Salva-"vator mundi"; and in two cases, apparently, joins cantos from two Latin hymns so as to form a new piece. They are chosen partly for allusions to the hours for which they are fixed, and partly as expressions of sober piety. The tras. are evidently intended to reproduce Latin measures, and are either trochaic or l.m. (The sacred use of l.m. for our hymns springs from the Reformation Primer, as a representative of the Jacobean Latin.) The versification is a great advance on the Sarum Primers, and the tras. contain some good verses. The following may serve as a specimen of the sort of verse which might be still enshrined in the Prayer Book if the Latin hymns had then been made part of Matins and Evensong.

"Quench the flames of our debate;
Foul and wholesome heat abate;
Grant unto our body health,
To our hearts true peace and wealth."

In the sanction if not the production of this book, Cranmer must have had a hand, and a letter of his (Oct. 7, 1544, Works, p. 412, Parker Society) shows that he had it in his mind to translate the Latin hymns. But the Prayer Book of 1549 has no hymns, except the "Veni Creator" (c.m.), in the Ordinal; nor has that of 1552. And as if the omission in both cases was the result of some change of view, perhaps connected with Calvin’s restriction of praise to the Metrical Psalter, the Primer of 1553, which has very little of the distinctive features of the other primers, and is based on the Book of Common Prayer, has no hymns whatever.

2. In connexion with the Primer of Elizabeth, or more accurately with the Ordinarium (1569), should be mentioned The Hours of Prayer &c. 16 and John Anthony’s Way of Offices. 1668 (Aust framed on the model of the some Latin translations, pieces are original English Hymnody, Early, § ill. 10). V. Roman Primers, 1599-1658.

So far as the general contents concerned, it must suffice to say, the Offices of the mass and the general books the Hours of the Cross, Holy Ghost. The Antwerp general arrangement; but the other places the Rosary “as said is at St. James,” and the Litany of The Rosary a different book, and as well the new reprints of the Antwerp editions. The London (Chapel and Brit. Museum) is of 1599 published, by the printer Excellent Majesty for his House the zenith of James’s power. In of the Antwerp books, the Vesper days, the Ordinary of The Mass devotions. The 1706 edition is a arrangement to the Antwerp, 1682.

2. The hymns in this attracted well-deserved attention as a feature of these primers the "Hymns throughout the original; chosen for translatable in all the ed. speaking are, until 1706, Vesper by whole of the Breviary hymn In the case of the Vesper that are incorporated in there are consequently four from the original, chosen from the Elizabethan fresh Drydenesque rhetoric of 1 is the more gradual from some exceptions, the metres remain the same, the reprint of 1604 its said are so turned into English may be sooned unto the tune these metres, with the ex- plications, approved themselves. P. good selection from the by side in pairs, for comparison Shipley’s Annae Sanctae, 11 of these hymns easy of a hymn of 1604 should have beautiful translation of “tus” (“Come unto us, Holy Mr. Shipley has published 1685. earlier source. The new tr. of "Stabat Mater" ("Under the world's redeeming roof") is notable as occurring again in the succeeding Primers of 1706, and later Office Books.

5. The Primer of 1706 demands somewhat closer examination. Its place among subsequent Primers is not stated. In arrangement and contents it recalls the Antwerp series, not the London Primer of 1687. The number of translations it contains is a great advance on preceding Primers. Not the Vesper hymns only but those for Matins and Lauds are translated in the series of hymns for the year; the Breviary hymns are translated out of the Old and New Testaments, and "Dies Irae," and "Jesu dulce memoria;" all 120 pieces. Of these, the tr. of "Stabat Mater" is from 1687. The "Dies Irae" ("The day of wrath, that dreadful day") was first published in a text that varies from this, in Tate's Miscellanea Sacra (1686), 2nd edition, 1688, and was there written by Lord Roscommon.

6. In the "Veni Creator Spiritus," by whose aid it is Dryden's masterpiece. So also is the tr. of "Ut quætan laxia" ("O sylvan Prophet"), the hymn for even-song on St. John Baptist's Day; and the tr. of the "Te Deum" ("Thee, Sovereign God, our grateful accents praise;" both of which were printed by Scott in his Life of Dryden, 1808).

These last two translations are in metre that had not occurred in previous Primers. The tr. of "O sylvan Prophet," is one of the last, chiefly representing the Saphic original, which preceding Primers had always dealt with awkwardly, from an attempt to produce some syllabic equivalent of the English.

The tr. of the "Te Deum" is one of a series of 6 pieces in heroic metre. A third new metre (C.M.) occurs in the tr. of "Ave maris Stella," and "Jesu dulce memoria," which is not found in any known Primer previously, though there are two c.m. trs. in Speed's Piae Pictet, which are probably due to some lost edition. A very full selection from this Primer is given in Mr. Orby Shipley's Anima Sanctius, 1884; and it demands closer analysis than the rest, because both Mr. W. T. Brooke and Mr. Shipley claim a very large proportion of these translations as the work of Dryden. The special question of Dryden's authorship is dealt with under Dryden, John, but one or two general remarks may be best given here.

The claim of Dryden will in great measure depend on the evidence of unity of hand. The natural presumption in the several successive editions of the Primers is that each new set of translations is brought, and in the case of the edition of 1618 this is positively asserted in the Preface. But it is not always safe to assume it. Thus the pieces in this Primer of "Pietà" assumed to be Dryden's, if found in 1659, is revised with them in 1687. The "Veni Sancte Spiritus" tr. of "Te Deum," (London), Appendix, p. 33, "Come Holy Ghost" (Martyrs' Tract. 1679) and several hymns of St. Thomas à Kempis and of St. Teresa are added. The throughout the Breviary of 1632, and in this Primer the new restoration poetry makes its appearance. The trs. are some few, but there are also several pieces of great nervousness and excellence by the trs. in the English version. The tr. of "Coelestis Domini" (ed. 1687) is that of the English version. The tr. of "Dies Irae" ("Day of Wrath") appears in the Great Sacrifce in 1688, by James Dryden, probably only quoted by him, in the Breviary, and by one or two general remarks may be best given here.
have an identical Gloria: and this identity is faithfully reproduced in the English Glorias. The Latin Glorias have affinities with each other, and these affinities are constantly maintained in English by reproductions of the same phrases. The English Glorias have also affinities with their own, not found in the Latin. In style they are very like one another; they are quite in keeping in their grandiloquent phrases with the hymns they chose; and certain manœuvres recur (e.g. the use of "consolatam"). The repetition of common lines, the slight variations of phrase accompanying large repetition, and other economies, are such as a man would naturally put in the use of his own material, and point very strongly to a common author. The number of pieces, which the Gloriai that bear clear family likeness touch, comprises the great bulk of the book; and links, of varying strength, connect most of the remainder with them.

The style of the Primer of 1706 is by no means always superior to that of 1685. It is often less nervous, too rhetorical and too florid. The translations of 1685-7 have consequently remained in at least equal circulation with those during the 17th cent. But as pieces of devotional poetry, the translations of 1706 are often of great merit; and the bold handling, the brilliance of single lines, and the frequent beauty of cadence, look far more like the work of a poet coming fresh to the task, than of a routine translator.

vi. Manual of Prayers, and The Garden of the Soul. Two other devotional books for the layman, which passed through many editions, contain translations of the Latin hymns, viz.: The Manual of Prayers, and The Garden of the Soul; but perhaps in no instance are they independent trs., but transcripts from the Primers or English Offices current at the time of publication. An edition of The Manual, circa 1596, has no hymns; perhaps the Primer of 1599 was the first to introduce translations of the Latin hymns. An edition of 1599 reprints 29 of the translations of the Primer of 1599. Another of 1688 by Henry Hills reprints from the Primer of 1687. Another of 1699 reprints, sometimes revising, from Primers of 1685-7. That of 1733 retains the Latin originals (28) as 1599, but adopts the translations of the 1706 Primer. The same thing occurs in the ed. of 1750 (Shipley).

The hymns in the various editions of the Garden of the Soul apparently follow the same law, taking their Latin translations from the current edition of the Primer, or in the latter part of the 18th cent. from the editions of Vespers or the Divine Office. This fact is important in its bearing on the question of Dryden's authorship of the 1706 Primer. Under the improvement Bp. Challoner (who improved both the Manual and The Garden of the Soul) selected hymns by Dryden for the editions of 1737 (Garden) and 1750 (Manual). Mr. Shipley has adduced these editions as proofs of Dryden's authorship. But all that Bp. Challoner did, supposing there are editions which he superintended, was to substitute the newest trs. for the previous ones. This, in the case of the Manual, had been done as early as 1733. Dryden's authorship did not determine the choice, and is not attested by it.

Conclusion. The needs of the liturgy, which were supplied in the 17th cent. by the Primers and The Manual, produced in the 18th translations of the Vesper Office, of the entire Breviary, and of the Missal. But they do not supply many fresh translations of the Latin hymns. The eds. of the Primers of 1685, 1687, and 1706, are drawn on in equal proportions. Sometimes the 1706 in one edition of the Evening Office will make translations in the next. From 1706 are mixed with (Fxx. will be found in the Evening Office of 1710 in the Sometimes lines and phrases in re-manufactured trs. (Office of 1706); pro substituted for metre; and revised. A few new trs. (e.g. in the Evening Of the Divine Office, 4 vols. requires translations of the Missal do not support the Latin hymns are solemn in the original (e.g. in No. 1809).

It is found unaltered in a few collections, and also altered as: (1) "Now, my soul, thy voice upraising, Sing the Cross," &c, in 8.7.8.7.4.7, in Murray's Hymnal, 1852. This was repeated in other collections. In the Sarum, 1808, it was altered to 5 st. of 4, in 8.7 metre. (2) "Sing we now, our voice upraising," in Kennedy, 1863, is the same text as Sarum with slight variations.

Prose. A synonym for Sequence (q.v.), referring to the character of the composition, while 'sequence' refers to the position in the service. A Prose was originally in prose of a rhythmical character, but not in strict metre, while the word Sequence was used when the Prose assumed the form of a metrical Hymn. But a single quotation from a mediaeval writer will suffice to show that the two words were used indifferently, and at the same time tells us on what festival days Proses or Sequences were appointed to be sung in the Missal of the Cluniac Order.

The Sequences or Hymns sung in procession before High Mass and at other times were usually termed Proses in the mediaeval Office Books of the English Church. (Sacram Processional, ed. by Dr. W. G. Pro煽ius, Aurelius Clemens, with the occasional prefix of Marcus of Migne, vol. lix. p. 593, and Dresel, p. ii. n.), is the name of the most prominent and most prolific author of sacred Latin poetry in its earliest days. Of the writer himself we know nothing, or next to nothing, beyond what he has himself told us in a short introduction in verse to his works. From that source we learn that he was a Spaniard, of good family evidently, and that he was b. a.d. 348 somewhere in the north of Spain, either at Saragossa, Tarragona, or Calahorra, but at which is left uncertain, by his applying the same expression to all, which if applied only to one would have fixed his place of birth. After reception befitting his social status for some years to private in the local courts of lay promotion to a judgehip cessorially:

Archlup. Trench considered it "a high military act and such the poet's own to describe; but it is whether a civilian and eligible for such employ we may adopt the solution offered in the Prolegomena works (Migne, vol. lix. p. 375).

"Erectus inde est ad supernum militiam, pax animae, pacificum, castrensis, sat, celeri timoria; quum in somnis praeidum, rectorem, qui sub poesum in col. crebri, militare ascenderis diebus.

It was after this length comparatively early age and power that Prudentius, on account of the follies had marked his youth, determined to throw up employments, and devote life to advancing the Church by the power of that of his purse and precedingly we find that year into poverty and is that remarkable success upon which his fame no have no reason however another St. Augustine, "wretchedness of most this flight from the tempting care of official life is of a wholly devotional bally rather learnt from emptiness and vanity to the surroundings of even this world. PRUDENTIUS, AURELIUS C.

(5) Psychomachia, or "The Spiritual Combat," an allegorical work.

(6) Libri adversus Symmachum. A controversial work against the restoration of the old Latin laws in the Senate House at Rome. The Latin laws had been restored to their place in 394, but the influence of St. Ambrose had prevailed against their restoration. In 399, a law was passed by Theodosius in 394. After the death of the latter the attempt to restore the old laws was renewed by Prudentius and Honorius, and it was at this time that Prudentius wrote his first book. The second (for there are two) was written in 400. Paget considers that the first was written in 395.

(7) The Deuterocanon. = the double food or double Testament, a wordy collection of 49 sets of verses each, as Old and New Testament scenes.

Of these different works the most important are the first two. The Liturgical hymns has been chiefly compiled from Prudentius's writings. It is not easy to estimate, and to judge by the wholesale condemnation he obtains from some of his critics, and the equally unspared censure of others, his judgment has often been found it and it. In venturing upon any opinion upon which the period at which he was born in 417 was the exact point of departure. His works are not contained in the hands of the poet, nor in all its exact beauty of form has long been known, which was burst forth into new life and beauty in the hands of the MECHALAVY HYMNATISTS. They thought it was to be given by any of these quantities it was to the vain to look for very finished work from him. But the midnights of his life, his name is great and his name is wonderful. To the ideas which were imbibed or clumsy rhetoric, which varied the metre he pronounced 17—there are many. They may well be found, not unfrequently, of noble expression, which with the more musical date. He writes as a master, and we may gather concerning the points he deemed the most important. Living at a time when mankind were still the universal church, he preached and corrected the idea of his influence was successfully challenged. If, therefore, we can now, as far as our author's influence has given to lavish commendation, he describes him as "Poeta laureatus," etc., from the first, and we find that he was also a presbyter and a deacon, the same poet, who calls himself "Praetorius a Prudentius." And all this while we are hearing of his name and ideas. At last, however, the author evidently cannot forget that he is a poet, that he makes the greatness of the Latin language, which it transmutes in helping the transformation of the Latin needed to undergo, now that it should be the vehicle of truths which were altogether novel to it." (See Lat. Poetry, 1874, p. 121.)

The reader will find so exhaustive an account of the various writings of Prudentius in the account given of him and them in Smith and Wace's Dict. of Christian Biography, and Smith's Dict. of Greek and Roman Biography, that it is only necessary in this work to refer very briefly to them as above. The poems have been constantly reprinted and re-edited, till it is not easy to say that his is the sixty-third.

The use made of Prudentius's poems in the ancient Breviaries and Hymnaries was very extensive. In the form of notes and lines were compiled and used as hymns; and it is mainly from these centes, and not from the original poems, that the translations into English were made. Daniel, i., Nos. 103-115, gives 13 genuine hymns as having been in use for "Morning," "Christmas," "Easter," and "Easter," from the Latin. Trans. from the p. 661, i., will show that almost as many more which were in use in matter have been translated into English. When these are added the hymns which are annotated in this Dictionary under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Subjects) and those which have not been translated into English, we realise the position and power of Prudentius in the hymnody of the Church.*

Psalters, American. [American Hymnody.]

Psalters, English. I. Introduction. A glance at the long list appended to this article will apprize many for the first time of the enormous number of efforts made to versify the Psalms. Among the authors will be found Queen Elizabeth, Lord Bacon, Fairfax, and many of our poets and theologians. The Psalter has been subjected to a great variety of experiments. Literal translation, paraphrase, evangelical expansion, the development of portions as themes, have been successively attempted. The change of metrical and poetical expression is reflected in the history. In the Puritan period the versification of the Psalms even touches the history of the nation. But notwithstanding all this, partly from extreme reverence for the letter of Holy Writ, partly from the fact that the bulk of the translators were hampered by the secondary object of turning the Psalter into a hymnal, and most of all from the impossibility of representing Hebrew parallelism in English metres, no version approaches in merit such translations as Lord Derby's Homer or Conington's Virgil. With but few exceptions the succeeding pages are a comparison of mediocrities.

II. Curious examples.

Some experiments are very eccentric, such as Abraham Fraunce's hexameters (1581), Pike's lyrics without rhyme (1731), Wheatland and Sylvester's heroics (1754), Bowdoin's blank verse (1808). The strangest is Psalterium Americanum by Cotton Mather (1718), printed like prose, but in reality simply the Authorized Version thrown into unmetered c.m. for singing.

III. Pre-Reformation Psalters.

Metrical Psalters existed in England at a very early date. Bp. Aldhelm of Sherborne (died A.D. 709) is said to have composed one (Bede): and Archdeacon Churton (see Preface to the Cleveland Psalter) ascribes to him the Anglo-Saxon Version edited by Thorpe (1835). Thorpe himself, however, assigns it to a later date. A Latin Psalter, with interlinear Anglo-Saxon gloss, and a translation into Middle English has been published by the Surtet Society. T. Brampton's Seven Penitential Psalms (1411) have been printed by the Percy Society; and Holland (Psalms of Britain, 1842) mentions a translation of St. Jerome's Gallican Psalter into English of the date of Henry II. or Richard I.

IV. Importance of Psalm-singing at the Reformation.

The practice of versifying the Psalms assumed a larger significance among the Reformers. The Psalm Versions of Luther and Justus Jonas, combined with their translations of the Latin Hymns and their original compositions, stirred the heart of Germany: the Psalms of Marot became the badge of the French camp; and, completed the solo hymnal of Geneva, Scotland, following the metrical Psalms actively used in public worship. The long tradition of that form, set at first to bal laborious music of their own, in Reformation, the Psalms of the people, not merely to Massianic import, and the expression of human emotions, living trust in God as a friend and even by their terror enemies. They seemed, by a new-found Bible, ordained vehicle of hymnical form was at the very heart of that day's concern. Hebrew poetry, was representative of the origin.

V. German influence.

The introduction of psalm-singing into England probably sprang from the Gospellers with whom, and their familiar. Three of these father, Wisdom, Becon, and C. Psalm versions bearing: Those of Wisdom and II in Sternehold and Hop and may possibly be the book, though not cisions. The Goostly Psalme ishante contains fifty and paraphrases, or. VI. Ballad Metres of the Book of Psalms, the

In the Act, which Prayer Book of Edward a proviso: "That it be lawful... oratories or other places to prayer taken out of the Bible thereby the service or any the said book."

It has been generally met and others, that the legality of Psalm-sing Psalms and godly prae, and some have thought, the king for Sternehold, (see Version, § 3.) at least certain that several versification of the F period, among which...
Thos. Wyatt’s Select Psalms (1559). The whole Psalter was also versified by sometime Vicar of St. Giles’s, Robert Crowley, in 1559, and set to a harmonized Cripplegate strain (1559). The German influence is now irregular metres of Wisdom which are akin to some in the early English Psalter, give way to the ballad form, as represented in the Old Version of Sternhold and Hopkins, and to each Psalm: John Smyth, London, 1579. This is probably sung to the “amorous and obscene songs” (Wind) of the court and people; and his psalms to well-known ballad tunes. A discussion of the nature and character of his work, as represented in the Old Version of Sternhold and Hopkins, is here elaborated for this section of our work. It is fully treated elsewhere. [Old Version, § III.]

VII. German Influence on the Marius Exiles.

The psalm-singing of psalms ceased of course under Mary. But the movement gained new force and new ideas among the exiles, and even itself by versifying the entire Psalter (Absolvtur. Psalterium verum metrica lingua Graeco et Lat., Parker’s Diary, 1537). At Geneva, as at Paris, the author and psalmist of the period that the metres, the tunes, the structural features of the Genevan Psalter began to affect England, and more largely Scotland. (For details see Old Version, § III.)

VIII. Psalms-singing at the accession of Elizabeth.

On the accession of Elizabeth nothing so much of the people as the practice of singing Psalms at St. Paul’s Cross after the sermons of six thousand people occasion. Psalms were introduced into London and other churches as present of the fashion, and encouragement for the execution of the Tyburn Oxford. The attitude of women at Exeter being prohibited by the law, it is said that “The Queen’s Injunctions, favoured it, shown by a curious set of complaints. Certain divines had sung psalms in the a.m. in the presence of the people, and no godly prayers as an encouragement to Psalms publicly in worship. The 49th inch. (June 1559), which is defined as the provision for the care of the Morning Prayer, from interference, time. So that the conclusion was to be as delight in music, in the beginning of the Morning or Evening Psalms, or in their setting. In music and melody, and in melody and music, that no doubt that the sentence of the King was perceived.”

IX. Renderings by Abp. Parker, Sir Philip Sidney, the Devotions, and Spencer.

Partial translations of Psalms at this period are very numerous. The two most notable complete versions are dealt with elsewhere. (See Old Version and Scottish Hymnary.) A third entitled The whole Psalter, translated into English metre, with an argument to each Psalm: John Smyth, London, 1579. It is only to be found in the great libraries (there is a perfect copy also at Lincoln Cathedral). It is the work of Abp. Parker, alluded to above, written in exile: but the marked similarity of the book, in its introductions, extracts from the Fathers, and appended Canticles, to the work of Sternhold and Hopkins, makes it probable that these, and perhaps the metrical arguments at the head of each psalm and the appended collects were added after 1582. It is composed with scholarly care, and, not only as a metrical version, but for the value of adds, should be reprinted. Besides the three usual metres (C.M., L.M., S.M.) the maker’s use of stanzas of 8 lines, and two or four curious measures; and he supplies a doxology in each metre. The metrical Introduction, “Ad Lectorem,” is a quaint apology for offering a new version. There are eight tunes to it by Tallis; one being Tallis’s “Canon.” His c.m. has often a double rhyme in the third line; and, even when this is not the case, the rhythm and strains of the measure are entirely distinct from that of Sternhold, and the feet strictly regular, so as to facilitate singing. An example of his unrhymed c.m. may be seen in his tr. of “Veni Creator” (q.v.), which is apparently simply the text of the Psalter Book of Edw. vth, 1540, regnated into uniform feet. The authorship of this book is given in Bp. Barlow’s copy to John Keeper of the Cathedral of Wells. But Parker’s authorship is established by external and internal evidence. In Bp. Kennet’s copy it is said that the Archbishop permitted Margaret, his wife, to present his Psalter to sovereigns as a gift with the copy at the same time, “To the vertuous and honourable Lady the Countess of Shrewsbury from your lovable friende, Margaret Parker.” Apart from the assumption raised by this coincidence in favour of Parker, it makes Keeper’s authorship unlikely, as he would only have been twenty-four at Mrs. Parker’s death (1570) (Dibdin’s Anecdotes). But the conclusive evidence in the prose of the Psalter “Matthias Parkers” by which the metrical argument to Ps. 119 is formed.

Of a different order from these is the Verse commenced by Sir Philip Sidney (Ps. 1:1-43) and completed by his sister, the Countess of Pembroke (pub. 1629). The metres are said to be “more rare and excellent for method and variety.” — the fantastic and capricious measures of the lighter Elizabethan style — not intended probably for congregational use. They have frequent freshness and spirit; and now that a higher music no longer chains us wholly to routine metres, a composer fond of the Elizabethan poetry would find them the 9th, 92nd, and the more regular 96th full of grace and charm. The same description may be given of Various Psalms in verse, of a different composition from those used in the church: the work of Francis and Christopher Davison and others, found in a Harleian ms. of the British Museum. Full selections from both these versions may be seen in Farr's Select Poetry (Parker Society). To these may be added a lost version of the Seven Penitential Psalms by Edmund Spencer.

X. Partial translations, Bacon, Herbert, &c. Versions by Iod, Withers, Sandy.

Among the versifiers of "Selected Psalms" are found the eminent names of Donne, Dean of St. Paul's (1633), Thines Fletcher (1633), George Herbert (1632), and R. Crashaw (1648). The first ten Psalms were rendered clearly and naturally by Bishop Hall (1607), and a few by Lord Bacon (1625), (see Fuller Worthies Library by Grosart), dedicated to George Herbert. The complete version of Henry Iod (1603-20) is utterly valueless, and according to Withers was burnt by the hangman; the preface however shows the early dissatisfaction felt by Sternhold and Hopkins, and there is appended to it a ludicrous versification, intended apparently to be sung, of the Act of Parliament passed after the Gunpowder Plot! The so-called Version of King James (1631) is described elsewhere. (See Scottish Hymnody, I. § 8.) The version by George Withers (1619-32) was a far more serious rival of the Old Version. He obtained a privilege from the King, which ordered it to be bound up with every copy of the Bible, and authorized Withers to seize every Bible in which it was not found. But it met with the same fate as a similar privilege of Withers for his Hymns and Spiritual Songs of the Church. (See English Hymnody, Early, § viii.) The resistance to the privilege on the part of the Stationers' Company, who owned the Old Version, ended in the withdrawal of this monopoly by the Privy Council (1633). (See Preface to Withers's Hymns and Spiritual Songs, by E. Farr in Library of Old Authors.) The metres of this book are more varied than those of the Old Version, and yet more regular and even than those of Sidney, and times are set to them by Orlando Gibbons. The author of Anthologia Davidea, a compilation of Psalms from many sources (1646), considers this the best version he knew for fidelity, harmony, and simplicity of expression. Judged, however, by his copious extracts (the book itself is rare) there is a want of force and spirit. The 137th, "As nigh Babel's streams we sat," is gracefully rendered; the best is the 150th, "Come praise the Lord, come praise His name" (S. P. C. K. Ps. and Hys., Ps. cl.). The version by George Sandy (1636), son of the Abp. of York, is of far greater literary merit. Though set to music by Henry Lawes, it was intended only for private devotion, and perhaps never used otherwise. Baxter laments that Sandy's "seraphic strain" was useless to the vulgar because not composed in the ordinary metre; but its poetical grace exercised a considerable influence on translators. The longer Psalms are often in L. m. couplets; some of his most graceful pieces are in couplets of 7s. as Ps. 150, "Praise the Lord enthroned on high" (S. P. C. K. Ps. and Hys., Ps. cl.), and Ps. 148 "You who dwell above the skies" (Wen. II. Bk. 639). by an enology by his friend Nehemiah Conder, and Holland, it was never used. The first ed. (1641) of Psalm Provost of Elton under an attempt to satisfy by amendment of the changes were made in 1652, which was ordered to be printed on the House of Commons' the Directory (1645), in that can read "was" a "psalm-book," made at Rokesby's by the third edition (1646) be printed on the Assembly of Divines' year this Version "an ordered by the House sung in all churches at kingdom." This was at this time on both sides a great advance on a version which of uniformity in religion was tracted by two causes. Inclined to a rival version minister of St. Martin's 1644; 2nd, 1645), and 3rd ed. (1646) to the who, however, declined Rokeby's version came up, they referred it to a clearly sanctioned it discontented with Rokeby's of heterodox, as an adUum introduced considerab from other versions, i Psalter (1650). churchmen's standpoint, at the failure of one of our "pretended Reformers" (probably Rous).

Lord Ferriby, Justice of the Peace for Cotton's Editions of the Bible; he quotes the 137th Psalm in stanzas of four lines. It was never published.

XII. Baxter, Miles Smyth, Denham, Patrick.

From Sternhold to Rous the prevailing principle of translation was literal exactness; but the dreaminess of all these efforts, and in some measure the grace of Sandy's, now produced a demand for some literary excellence.
In the preface to his version (written probably about this time, though not published till 1692), Richard Baxter says, after reviewing preceding versions, "The ear desires greater beauty, and the Restoration version, though and in the stately at this time, though only published in 1715).

But the difficulty lay in the decay of music, of metres

XIII. The New Version.

The first instalment of Tate and Brady is a sheet and a half, and is as follows (1698) the

as the 34th, "Through all the changing scenes of its hold on our hymn-books. There is nothing to show certainly how the work was divided between Tate and Brady: both were poets; it is plausible to attribute the work, in which some have even suggested an additional aid from his patron Brady, to Tate. Another theory makes Brady the poetical workman throughout.

Beveridge's epitaph suggests the general impression of the work. The artificial style of that period is applied to the Psalms; and in the hands of men of genius—far less in those of mere versifiers—some a form could not have succeeded. Tate's "poet's page" (Pope) has been abused as roundly as Tate's or Brady's.

in order to legalise its adoption, was of great value. Under the sanction of the sovereign, and recommended by the Abp. of Canterbury, Compton, Bishop of London, The New Version was presented itself as a settlement of the long dissatisfaction with Sternhold and Hopkins.
Its success was not but universal. Bever-Ridge (1710) wrote a vigorous protest against it, and in favour of the Old Version. He calls it a "New Version in deed," "fine modish," "furnished with wit and fancy,"
"gay and fashionable," He dilates on the great inconvenience of two versions: calls it a breach of uniformity; "in time we might have one secondum usum London, another second-another secondum usum Sarum." He records the attempts of congregations: one version was cast out, after its introduction by the clergyman. It was then only used in a few churches in London.

(4.) Authors.—The New Version was the work of two Irishmen. Nahum Tate was the son of Faithful Tate, an Irish clergyman, author of some religious verses. He was b. in Dublin (1652), and educated at Trinity College.
He wrote, under Dryden's superintendence, the second part of Abaloom and Achitophel with the exception of about two hundred lines.
He succeeded Shadwell as Poet Laureate.
Among his works are Characters of Virtue and Vice (1691), Miscellanea Sacra, a selection from various writers (1696-8), and Poemae, A Poem on Ten. He is said to have been a man of intemperate and improvident life. He wrote a reply to Beveridge, defending the style of the version on literary grounds. (Essay on Psalmody, 1710.) He d. in London in 1715.
Nicholas Brady was born at Bandon (1659).
He was educated at Westminster, and went afterwards to Christ Church, Oxford, and to Trinity College, Dublin. From the latter he received the degree of B.D. for services to the Protestant cause. He was a Prebendary of Cork. In the Irish war he was an active ad herent of William; and three times saved his native town from burning. Coming from Bandon with a petition to William, he re mained in London, and was appointed Chap lain to the King; and afterwards (1702-5) Incumbent of Stratford-on-Avon. He had previously been minister of St Catherine's, and Lecturer of St. Michael's, Wood Street; probably holding some or all of these appointments in plurality. Notwithstanding the income derived from his appointments, his extravagance obliged him to keep a school, while incumbent of Richmond (1710). He died in 1726. Besides several volumes of ser mons, he published a tragedy called The Rape, or the Innocent Impostors, and a poetical translation of the Aeneid of Virgil in four daes.

XIV. J. Addison.

In the Spectator of 1712, were published the well-known paraphrases of the 19th Ps.
"The spacious firmament on high," and the 23rd Ps., "The Lord my pasture shall prepare." They have been attributed to Marvell, but (see Addison, J., p. 16, 8.) are Addison's. They are found in many collec tions, and have been admired by good judges.
The style is more florid than the New Version.
The fault in both is, that the sense of God's Presence, which is so vivid in the original, is subordinated to the somewhat unreal descrip tion of landscape.

XV. Watts's Version.

The versification of the Psalms engaged the attention of Isaac Watts in his eyearly days; a translation of Ps. 137, not included in his complete Psalter, is found in Reliquiae Juveniles. Paraphrases on Ps.
148 were published in the Horae Lyricae (1705); and at least half of the Psalms had been versified at the date of the publication of his Hymns (1707-9). Ps. 114 was published in The Spectator (1712); and the complete version (so far as his theory of completeness extended) in 1719; entitled, The Psalms of Good Shepherd

“The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want...” Ps. 23:1

Charles Wesley adopts a new system of interpretation. Christopher Smart published a new version (1782), in which the introduction of Psalms is a characteristic of the Psalter. This book is also a great variety of new Psalms and amongst the rest of Cowper’s poems, Alexander Selkirk, found in Charles Wesley, and in Shenstone. James Mackenzie published a Psalter (1758) which attracted attention from the learned world. It bears many of the characteristics of the Psalter and was also approved by Seeker. It is written in continuous lines, but was divided into stanzas, called “ctions” (1797), who added a prose paraphrase. It is written in full and full of metaphors. Montgomery’s translations are laudable verbiage. Basil Wood published a few Psalms in 1734; of which the final one (1782) contained his translations. The American theologian, published a version of Watts (1800). A version of William Mason appeared in 1787. The same year, a partial version by Richard Cumberland, may be mentioned for the sake of the book.

XVII. Montgomery, Mant, Harriet Auber, Lyte.

James Montgomery’s Song of Zion (1828) contains nearly half of the Psalter. The psalmist’s prayer for God is given in Ps. 51. Montgomery’s Song of Zion concludes with a prayer for the whole Psalter. The psalmist’s prayer for God is given in Ps. 51. Montgomery’s Song of Zion concludes with a prayer for the whole Psalter.

XVIII. John Keble.

The Psalter or Psalms of David in English verse, by a member of the University of Oxford (1839) is the work of the reverend John Keble. That he should have produced such a thing worth doing, is in some sort, a measure of the smallness of the last forty years in the matter of church music. There was “small hope,” he thought, that the custom of chanting the psalms would be carried on; and therefore, despite his conviction that the Hebrew was intended for chanting, not that the success was “impossible,” because the form and tone of English metre and Hebrew parallelism were reconcilable, he set himself to improve the Metrical Version, “adhering reverently to the meaning of the original.” He submitted the work to Dr. Pusey. The adverse criticism which has been given in the book is in no way anticipated by Keble himself. The close adherence to the terseness and the images of the Hebrew has produced some constraint and obscurity. But in the judgment of the present writer no other version has such reverence of the psalm, sustained merit, lyric force, and all the flashes of imaginative energy. There are occasional oddities the influence of the Psalms is not always noticeable.

XIX. Churton, Sir R. Grant, Cotter, Hookham Freer, Trevor, &c.

The Cleveland Psalter, by Archdeacon Churton (1848), is one of the best versions. It is written in firm, equal, and melodious verse, and though inferior to Kellie in spirit and intensity of expression, it avoids his abruptness and compression by a slightly looser metre, and greater liberty of translation. Though thoroughly original work, it adopts ideas and lines from the ancient Anglo-Saxon Version which Churton attributes to Aldhelm (see § 111), from Watts, Sidney, Hebb, Miles Smith and Keble. Portions of Ps. 8, “I will praise the Lord above;” Ps. 19, “Know that the Lord is God;” Ps. 40, “I will give thanks to the Lord;” Ps. 84, “I will praise the Lord, my heart is with the lowly,” are like Herbert.
The best is Ps. 96, "Raise the psalm; let earth adoring" in Kennedy, 1863, and the Wes. H. Bk. (604), 1875. A smooth, fairly sustained Version, but deficient in spirit, had been published (1831) by Bp. Trosee (revised in 1875). Sir Robert Grant had published some renderings early in the century, among which is the blue ornamented works so famous in the 1848th, "Oh worship the King." J. Conder's Ps. 113, "Hallelujah, raise oh raise," is a lively of great brightness and jubilation. A Selection of Psalms by Hookham Frere was privately printed, see his Poetical Works (1872). The Symmetrical Psalter by W. Vernon Harcourt appeared in 1856, and The Cambridge Psalter by Dr. Kennedy in 1869 (revised 1876).

XX. Recent Versions.

The reader of this sketch will have observed that in one aspect it is the history of the long tenacious struggle of the Metrical Psalter against the growing power of original hymns as the material of praise. This conflict has been now long ended, and the task of versifying the Psalms greatly simplified by emendation from the routine metres. But fresh efforts are still made under these freer conditions. A version of considerable freshness, freedom, and spirit appeared in 1863, with an irregular structure of verse, by Mr. A. Malet. The Companion Psalter, by Rev. T. R. Birks (1874), is a valuable compilation of the choicest pieces of preceding versions, and contains several of his own developments of the meditative psalms. His lyric measures are often soft and melodic; he introduces freely Evangelical ideas; but they are not always the legitimate unfolding of the psalm, and sometimes the groundwork is scarcely perceptible. Ps. 19, "The heavens declare Thy glory"; Ps. 20, "O Christ, whose intercession"; Ps. 40, "Oh King of Mercy"; and Ps. 80, "O comfort of the weary"; are good specimens. The Marquess of Lorne published alternate renderings of the Scottish Version (1877). The late Dr. Irons promised a complete version, written with special attention to Hebrew parallelisms; an instalment of it appeared in 1875. The latest versions are by Digby Seymour (1882), and Digby S. Wrencham (1885).

Among the efforts to make the Psalter compete with original hymns may be noted Matthew Henry's Family Hymns (really selected Psalms, 1665); Dorrington's Devotions in Psalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs, arranged as a hymnbook for Sundays, &c.; Select Psalms and Hymns for the use of St. James's Westminster (1867). The most interesting is an arrangement by Romaine (1775), to which is prefixed an essay in defence of the Old Version, a strenuous protest against the growing power of Wesley's hymns.

XXI. Conclusion.

The quotations in the foregoing sketch show that metrical psalms still contribute largely to our hymnals. The least successful renderings have been those of the Messianic psalms. Nor have the penitential psalms yielded much for Lenten use. In one or two instances the dauntless trust of the Psalmists has been nobly reproduced. And for the worship of the masses certain psalms are unequaled.

Influence of the long tutelage must not be lost sight of. Earlier hymns a severity objective tone, and a wide natural religion. Nowhere is this more evident than in the Psalms, and the presentation is grounded on of the works in thematic single and perhaps sentence works. Nowhere is the idea unheeded by the chil- thought—true and need is inadequacy of majestic. These character deeply on Watts; and the value, as a counterpoise to the efficiency, self-consciousness of motives, which make us so sickly. The influence English hymns is by nowIt may take new forms, more freely from the ideas, that the Psalms can ease the deepest, tenderest, most in future hymns.

5. In the library at Stuttgart there is an unique copy of Calvin's first Liturgy pub. at Gergeva, epitiled

"La forme des prières et chants ecleciastiques avec la maniérie d'administer les sacrements, et consacrer le mariage, selon la coutume de l'Eglise Ancienne," 1642.

There is no name of place or printer; but the device of an olive branch, ending in an ornamental "G," is know to be the mark of Jean Gérard or Girard, a Genevan printer. The liturgical contents of this volume are of great interest; but the only portion of them that concerns our subject is the preface, which exhibits Calvin's sentiments on the use of music in public worship.

The Psalms are a reprint of those in the last-mentioned ed., known as the Pseudo-Roman, with the omission of the prologues, and the 4 by various authors (43, 129, 130, 142). The other pieces of the Pseudo-Roman are also reprinted, with the exception of the Commandments, the Articles of the Faith (the Creed); the Lord's Prayer; the Angelic Salutation; and two prayers, one before, one after meals. The Epistle to the king is very brief. It contains an allusion to the fact that Francis had commanded him to continue the work of translation. The Epistle to the Ladies of France is in the courtier vein. He bids them quit their love-songs to Cupid to sing him, Who is love himself, a noble, amorous, charming woman, to delight him to his heart's content. The new psalms are Nos. 18, 20, 23, 25, 33, 36, 38, 43, 45, 48, 50, 72, 79, 86, 91, 101, 102, 116, 118, 126, 139. There is no music to this ed. A few months later however an ed. (now lost) of these Fifty Psalms, with music, was pub. together with the Liturgy and Catechism by Calvin. The 5 psalms, generally assigned to Calvin, which had hitherto come down from the Strasbourg ed. (1539) were in this ed. replaced by Marot's.

6. In 1542, Marot himself pub. his 30 Psalms. The title of the book is:

"Trente Psautiers de Davoud, mis en françois par

Clement Marot, sieul de chambre du Roy, avec privilege, Imprime a Paris, s. s. p. (An unique copy is in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris.)"

It contains the privilege from the King, dated Nov. 30th, 1541; an epistle dedicated to Francis I., not without evidence of real religious feeling, in which Marot contrasts the true inspiration of David with the fabled muse of Greece and Rome; and the 30 Ps of the other editions (1–15, 19, 22, 24, 32, 37, 38, 51, 103, 104, 113, 114, 115, 130, 137, 143). At the head of some of the Psalms are short indications of the nature of the metre, but no suggestions of melodies, and no music. This text of this ed. varies, as has been said, greatly from that in the editions worked on in the last section. Whether both texts are by Marot himself, or whether the editions of 1539 and 1541 represent a text revised by other hands than his, it is difficult to decide.

M. Denon has printed the principal variations in the first 13 Psalms, and pronounces that the Paris text is infinitely superior in elegance and rhyme; that in only 4 places (of these 13 Psalms) are the variations in the other editions more literal than in Marot's and that these are Marot himself adopted 3 in his ed. of 1543. On the ground of its superiority, and of the phrases on the Antwerp title-page ("reconnaissent ecrire"), which indicates a revision in that ed., he decides that the Paris ed. for the first time prints Marot's genuine text, and that the other ed. is a text that has been altered by Pierre Alexandre and the Theologians. To this verdict bowever the 13 Ps which the Strasbourg ed. (1539) which are identical in text with those of Pierre Alexandre's book (1541) are a considerable objection. The imprimatur of Pierre Alexandre also in the Antwerp ed. does not seem necessary to indicate extensive alteration, for he says, "ne crin ipso repetit quod possit plus aures offendere," and the other 14 psalms by various authors would share the revision with the 30 of Marot.

7. The publication of the 30 Psalms drove Marot from France to Geneva. Though the privilege for it had been signed by three doctors of theology, the book was condemned by the Sorbonne, and Marot was only saved from arrest by flight. In August, 1543, he pub., evidently at Geneva,

"Cinquante Psautiers en françois par Clement Marot. Nouve Epître par M. de la Noue, envoyée aux dames de France."

The contents of this book are:

- An Epître to the Ladies of France; an Epître to the King; the 30 psalms already pub., revised and corrected;
- 20 fresh psalms (the Song of Simeon counting as one);
- the Commandments, the Articles of the Faith (the Creed); the Lord's Prayer; the Angelic Salutation; and two prayers, one before, one after meals. The Epistle to the king is very brief. It contains an allusion to the fact that Francis had commanded him to continue the work of translation. The Epistle to the Ladies of France is in the courtier vein. He bids them quit their love-songs to Cupid to sing him, Who is love himself, a noble, amorous, charming woman, to delight him to his heart's content. The new psalms are Nos. 18, 20, 23, 25, 33, 36, 38, 43, 45, 48, 50, 72, 79, 86, 91, 101, 102, 116, 118, 126, 139. There is no music to this ed. A few months later however an ed. (now lost) of these Fifty Psalms, with music, was pub. together with the Liturgy and Catechism by Calvin. The 5 psalms, generally assigned to Calvin, which had hitherto come down from the Strasbourg ed. (1539) were in this ed. replaced by Marot's.

8. Marot's death (1544) arrested the progress of the Genevan Psalter. But his psalms were utilised in other quarters. Editions of them appeared in Paris, Lyons, Strasbourg, and Geneva. 16 of which are extant. The Strasbourg ed. of 1543, printed 10 of the new psalms, together with the psalms and pieces of Marot and others in the Pseudo-Roman ed., the Commandments by Marot, and a hymn, "Salutation a Jesus-Christ," begins thus: "Te saluer, non caeret Redemptor," (p. 87.) Louis Bourgeois pub. a harmonised ed. of the Cinquante Psautiers in 1547. A compilation of Marot's psalms, 29 by Gilles d'Aurigny, 42 by Robert Brincel, 31 by "C. R." and "C. B." forming an entire Psalter, was pub. in Paris (1550), and Poitiers' 100 psalms (Poetsiers 1550) were bound up, in later editions, with Marot's 50 as a complete Psalter.

ii. Completion of the Psalter by Bens.

1. The Genevan Psalter was completed by Théodore de Beze, at the request of Calvin, who had found on his table a tr. of Ps. 16. The first installment of them was principally written at Lausanne. On March 24, 1551, he requested from the Council of Geneva permission to print "the rest (le reste) of the Psalms of David," which he "has had set to music," and asked for a privilege of exclusive sale. They were however very far from being completed at that date; and on June 24 Calvin wrote to Viret asking Beza to send what psalms he had, without waiting for the verification of their companions. Accordingly before the year closed there appeared:
This volume contains a dedicatory epistle, "À l'Église de nostre Seigneur," and the new psalms by Beza.

The Psalms are: 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 47, 73, 90, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134. The dedicatory epistle is justly emolished by MM. Dousen and Boret. It illustrates the difference of standpoint and temper between the two poets. In place of the lighter grace, the classical and mythological allusions, and the courtly vein of Marot's addresses to the King and the Ladies of France, we have the strong firm tone, the contempt of worldly poetry, the sense of endurance, haughtiness, even scorn, left by persecution, which marks the Huguenot theologian. The Church to which he dedicates his work is the "petit troupeau," which, despite its smallness is the treasure of the earth, the kings of honours are not Francis the king of flatterers, but the champions of the Reformation in Germany and Edward VI. of England. There is however a high eulogium of Marot, "La France est mort sans amour annoncé Que le seul tiers de l'humanité commence, Et qui pis est, n'ayant laissé au monde, Dexe poète hommage, qui se seconde Volla, pour quoi quand la mort le retint, Ancques toy se tent aussi Daniel."

2. In 1554, 6 new psalms (52, 57, 63, 64, 65, 11), 4 of them without melodies, the other 2 set to previous tunes, were added as an appendix to the combined ed. of Marot and Beza which had been pub. under the title of Psalms Octanta trios in 1552. In an ed. without date, Ps. 67, the Song of Moses, the Song of Simeon, and the Ten Commandments are added.

3. The various volumes extant show no further increase of pieces until 1562, when the complete Psalter appeared, entitled

Les Psaumes mis en rime francoise par Clement Marot et Theodore de Bese.

The privilege for this ed., obtained from Charles IX. (1), is dated Dec. 26, 1561. It was printed for Antoine Vincent at Geneva, Paris, Lyons, Cen, and other places, in 24 editions at least of that year. There are 60 new psalms, and 40 new melodies: the total of melodies is raised to 125. The Pater Noster and the Creed are no longer included; the Song of Simeon and the Ten Commandments are alone appended.

4. The music of the Psalter is beyond our scope. It is treated fully in M. Douen's work, in a series of articles in The Musical Times (1881), and in several articles of The Dictionary of Music. The melodies in the Strasburg ed. (1539) are of German descent. The editor of the Genevan psalters (1542-5 probably, 1545-57 certainly) was Louis Bourgeois. Only 11 of the Strasburg melodies are retained in the complete Psalter, most of them in a modified form; 74, the finest in the Psalter, are by Bourgeois; the 40 of 1562 are by an unknown hand. Side by side with the work of Bourgeois, Guillaume Franc, cantor at Lausanne, wrote in 1551 melodies for the psalms then recently translated by Beza, and obtained a licence to print them at Geneva, together with the original melodies to Marot's psalms. Nothing further however, as far as is known, was done until 1565, when a psalter was printed at Geneva for use at Lausanne. The bulk of the tunes in this psalter were derived from that of Geneva, 4 melodies by Bourgeois, and 15 by the unknown editor of 1562. The new tunes introduced by Franc were 46 in number, of which 26 were by himself, one from the first Genev.

omitted, was printed and published among the works of Pierre Cerignon at Paris. A second edition with elaboration mostly in the music, spread no further increase of pieces until 1562, when the complete Psalter appeared, entitled

The privilege for this ed., obtained from Charles IX. (1), is dated Dec. 26, 1561. England a volume entitled All the French Psalms Tuned with English Words (1652) is in the British Museum, Lambeth and Lincoln Cathedral libraries. At the end of a French tr. of the Liturgy of the Church of England, dedicated to George L. (1719, London), perhaps for the Savoy Church, the psalms of Marot and Beza are printed. In English Psalms Hallelujah, by John Vicars (1651), are Divers des Psalms de David according to the French forms and metre. The influence of the French on the O. V. of England and Scotland is only perceptible in a few French tunes and metres: 9 of the Scottish, and a smaller number of the English melodies are French. Ps. 50, 101, 102, 121, 124, 125, 129, in the English, and Ps. 102, 107, 110, 118 in the Scottish version are identical in melody with the corresponding French Psalms.

6. The general verdict of critics from the time of Voltaire to that of Sainte-Beuve has been severe. M.M. Bovet and Douen are more kindly. Yet the former speaks strongly of the inaccuracies, the diffusion of inaccuracy, the obscurity, and vulgarity, even gross, expressions in the work of Beza, and the profaneness, inversion and coarseness in the far better verse of Marot. The judgment of the 16th and 17th cents., when the antiquated language was current, and the coarseness less perceptible, may have been the result of the wide variety of subject matter, emotions and poetical style which the Psalms exhibit, the simplicity, plaintiveness, lyric grace, and subjective meditation are those best reproduced in Marot’s most familiar pieces, descending through him into the body of French hymns. The striking originality of metre evidently impressed Kethe and Whittemham, and an imitation of it was imperfectly attempted by them, as a relief to the humdrum monotony of the English and Scottish versions. The solidity, the breadth, the celebration of God in nature, on the other hand, which passed from our Old Version into the work of Watts, has no counterpart in the French Psalter, or the hymns that succeeded. The contrast is due doubtless to deeper differences in the genius of the nations. The merit of fidelity has been generally conceded. The work of Marot was based on the direct translation from the Hebrew by Vatable, and perhaps other Hebrew studies. Beza was a deep student of the Psalms, as well as a theologian.

iii. The Revised Psalms of the Reformed Church and Independent Versions.

1. The version of Marot and Beza was the Psalm-book of the Reformed Church. The French Lutheran Church, which from the first used hymns in worship, felt less the necessity of a complete Psalter. The Frankfurt Psalmen, Hymnen, und Cantiqes (1612) contains 35 psalms by Matthieu Barthol. M. Douen also mentions in his bibliography Les Psalms de Davi avec les hymnes de D. M. Luther et autres docteurs de l’Eglise mis en vers françois selon la rime et composition allemande. Montbeliard, 1618. More than 50 versions were pub. in the interval that preceded the revision of Marot and Beza. Two—a poor one by the Abbe Philippe Des Portes (1591), and that by Godart, bishop of Grasse (1614), to which Louis XIII. contributed four tunes, and which was interdicted, because the Huguenots, forbidden the time for their own psalms, adopted it—were efforts within the Roman Church. Those of Bata (1587), J. B. Chasiguel (1615), Racin (1631), Memin de Saint-Sorlin (1808), were not intended for use by the Huguenots. Louis des Mazerets (1637), Cardinal du Perron (1589), Malherbe (1639), Corneille, Racine, and his son Louis, have left partial translations. In the Reformed Church Charles de Marnieres, of the suite of the Prince of Orange, pub. (1580) a version, as an improvement in versification on Marot and Beza. Diohdt’s Psalms (1646) testifies to the growing unpopularity (“attédeissans et desgoutemens”) of the French old version, but was not designed for public use.

2. The great change in the French language towards the close of the 16th cent. made the old version grotesque and antiquated. “People feared,” says M. Bovet, “that the passage of time would gradually make the Psalms unintelligible, and that the representations written in a dead language would be as true of them as of the Latin.” The general decision of the synods was for a revision, preserving the metres, and departing as little as possible from the old version. The author of it was Valentine Conrart, the eminent founder of the French Academy. The first ed. is entitled

It contained only 51 psalms, which are admitted to be the work of Conrart alone. The complete version—was to some extent perfected by La Bastide, to whom Conrart had entrusted his task. Gilbert’s Psalter asserts in the preface that La Bastide had made such large changes in Conrart’s text that the 59 new psalms are only nominally his. But M. Bovet’s examination of the evidence decides—on the ground of the expressions in the preface to the ed. of 1677, and the universal ascription of the version to Conrart alone, without mention of La Bastide, in letters and acts of synods of the time—that La Bastide’s alterations were probably trifling. Conrart’s Psalter, though called a revision, and preserving here and there some phrases, and throughout the metres of the old version, is in reality The French New Version. When allowance is made for the difficult conditions of publication, M. Bovet pronounces it, though unequal and sometimes deficient in spirit, a remarkable work; recalling in parts the naive simplicity and lyric movement of Marot, in others the noble solemnity of the classic language of the 17th cent.

3. The distressed condition of the French Huguenots under Louis XIV. prevented the authorization of this book in France, the French exiles at Zurich appealed to the Church of Geneva as the chief of the French Reformed Churches to take up the matter. In reply the Venerable Company of Pastors appointed three of their body, Benedict Pictet, De la Rive, and Calandrini to review the version, adding as a special instruction, that they should remove all phrases that savoured of Jewish imprecations against their enemies. The work was principally done by Pictet. Saurin, an avocat of Nîmes, also assisted the editors. Completed in 1633, pub. in 1635, the title of this edition seems to have been:

Les Psautres de David miz en vers français, Revêt de nouveau sur les précédentes editions, et approuvée par les Pasteurs et Professeurs de L'Église et de l'Académie de Geneve. (Title of 3rd ed. 1701. The 1st ed. ia lat.)

The text of Conrart is for the most part retained, with occasional reversions to the language of the Old Version, and occasional exclusion of phrases of it, which Conrart had spared. First used in public worship at Geneva in 1698, it was sent (1699) by the Venerable Company to the other Reformed Churches, and generally adopted by the French refugees in Switzerland, and the national Churches of Erguel and Neuchâtel. The Church of Berlin reserved to itself the right to make a few alterations, which were carried out by Beaumouth, whom Frederick the Great called "the best pen in Berlin," and his subsequent colleague in the translation of the New Testament, Lenfant. The title of this version is Les Psautres de David miz en vers français et reçus par ordre du Synode Walon des Provinces-Unies.

1720.

It was authorized by the States General in 1727.

4. The era of Conrart and Pictet marks the beginning of decline. The new versions never attained the popularity of the old. The un-suitability for singing, not only of the imprecations, but of other portions more plainly showed itself. They ceased to be sung as a whole; and the selection in actual use continually narrowed.
Voltaire expended his ridicule on them. Even the music began to give way to new melodies.
(The earliest substitution is by De Camus (1769), who abridged the old music roundly.)
Hymns pushed out the Psalms more and more at the close of the 18th century. The collections of St. Gall (1771) and Berlin (1791) have only from 50 to 60 Psalms. The Walloon Collection retained the whole Psalter, with a Supplement of hymns (1802). The ed. of Bourrit, resulting from several commissions of the Churches of France and Geneva (1825), contained the whole Psalter in an abbreviated form, with several new melodies and alterations of the old ones. That of Gallot of Neu-châtel (1830) was made on the same principle.
Wilhem (1810) pub. a complete Psalter, with changes in the music, alteration of antiquated expressions and softening of the imprecations.
The Recueil des Psalmes et Cantiques, Paris, 1859, has only 70 psalms: some of these fragments.
ment, and rarely connected with this use of Latin hymns. Taking the hymn-books in chronologica order, the Schools represented are:

i. Rugby.—The earliest of our modern Public School Hymn-Books is Psalms and Hymns for the Use of Rugby School Chapel. It was in use in 1837. There were perhaps two editions during Arnold's lifetime; the text in this book of the hymn by J. H. Gurney, "We saw Thee not when Thou didst tread" (q.v.), is said to be a revision of Gurney's original by Buckoll. The earliest accessible edition (1850) of this book contains a hymn, which was not inserted in any edition until after Arnold's death. Small as it is (18 Ps. 68 Hymns), and merely providing hymns for such Christian seasons as occur during the school period, this little book contained very few pieces that are devoid of merit. The Psalms are the best specimens of the Old and New Versions, with some from Watts, Montgomery, and Heber, and the hymns are the most part standard hymns at the present day, drawn from the Latin and German, from the Welsya, Ken, Keble, Heber, and others. The hymns that are peculiar to it are those, partly original, partly tr. from German and Latin, by Rev. H. J. Buckoll, who is believed to have edited this book. Two hymns of his—"for the first Sunday of half year" ("Lord, behold us with Thy blessing"), and "for the last Sunday of half year" ("Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing")—are found in every Public School hymnal. Shortly after Dr. Gough's entrance on the Headmastership, he issued (1837), with Mr. Buckoll's assistance, the Psalms and Hymns for the Use of the Congregation of Rugby School Chapel. All the pieces of the original book, except 4, are retained; 10 new Psalm versions—from Milton, Keble, Trower and others; 33 hymns—from Isaac Williams, Neale, Caswall, Trench, and others; and an Appendix, containing a Latin Version of Ps. 117, "O omnes gentes unique" (taken from the Liber Pseudepigraphus, Ch. Ch., Oxford, 1726), with a tr. "O all ye nations, praise the Lord," and a Selection of Psalms (Latin titles only) for chanting between the Litany and the Communion Service (really the Introits from the 1st Prayer Book of Edw. VI.) are added: the object being to increase the hymns for the Festivals and give a more decided Church tone to the hymnal.

In 1876, Hymns for the Use of Rugby School were published, edited by Dr. Jex-Blake, the Head Master, assisted by a Committee of Masters. The division of the book into Psalms and Hymns was discarded, 14 pieces from the previous edition were omitted, and the total of psalms and hymns together raised to 339. The names of the authors were given in the index of first lines. The new pieces are chiefly from modern sources, and most of them the accepted hymns of our general collections. Some of the pieces are more of the class of devotional poetry than of hymns; two or three of the Latin hymns are given in the original. The tone of the book is pure and high: the hymns of praise full; but there is a dejection in some of those on Prayer, Faith, and Hope, which seems more adapted to older stages of Christian experience than that of the boy.

ii. Harrow.—The next Public School to compile a Hymn-book for its own use was Harrow. Hymns for the Chapel of Harrow School were 1st pub. in 1835, edited by Dr. Vaughan (then Head Master). It is a far larger collection than either of the two prior Rugby hymn-books (240 hymns). The sources from which it is drawn are chiefly Watts and Doddridge, Cowper and Newton, the Welsya, Heber and Milman, Ken, Keble, and the Metrical Psalms. It belongs to the older type of Church hymn-books; full of simple piety, with no great effort at quaint with the Prayer Book; often losing its directness of address to God in reflection. The number of hymns on death seems out of proportion in a school collection. A few hymns (e.g. Buckoll's hymns for the opening and ending of the Half-year) are apparently taken from the Rugby Collection. The 3rd ed. of this book (1866), edited by Dr. Butler (then Head Master), retained all the hymns of Dr. Vaughan's book, and raised the number to 351. Several of the new pieces are common to the newer series of hymnals, of which H. A. & M. is the type; others are from less obvious sources. The book in its present edition might be considerably reduced without the loss of really good hymns: a pure ideal, an ardent thirst for holiness, and a vivid faith in the Unseen God are its leading ideas. Some of the pieces are too reflective to be suitable for automatic worship, though useful for private meditation.

iii. Marlborough.—The Marlborough Series of hymn-books commenced in 1856, with Psalms and Hymns for Use in the Chapel of Marlborough College. About half of its 100 hymns are from the Rugby prior editions: of the other hymns three demand special notice, as having rightly been included in most subsequent Public School Collections; a hymn of Bp. Cotton's (apparently, from the description of scenery, written at Marlborough College, deep in the woods), deeply imbued with the sense of the beauty of creation, "We thank Thee, Lord, for this fair earth"; a beautiful hymn by Dr. Jex-Blake (then Assistant Master at Marlborough), on the gladness, fulness, buoyancy of human life, which is so vivid to the boy, "Lord, we thank Thee for the treasure that our happy lifetime gives"; and one for the Anniversary of the Conscription of The Chapel (St. Michael and All Angels) by Archdeacon Ferrar, "Father, before Thy throne of light, the guardian angels bend." These three hymns are an excellent illustration of a principle that runs through the numerous editions that followed under the successive Head Masters of Marlborough (see below)—the production of a book, not only good in itself, and reproducing the hymns endured by the associations of home, but specially meeting the needs and aspirations of a Public School community. On the side of boyhood, this aim reaches its fullest achievement in the edition of 1889: it may be traced in the simplicity and clear reality, with which the Christian ideas of faith, penitence, frailty, dependence, and the sinlessness of heaven are presented, in the absence of morbid longings for death, in hymns of fortitude and endeavour, in jubilation and thanksgiving, and in celebration of God's glory in nature. The edition of 1869, and still more that of 1878 (which adds several rarer pieces, especially from the German, and has greatly enhanced the effect of the general hymns by massing them more broadly, under the headings of Praise, Prayer, Faith, and Hope), recognize the further fact, that the atmosphere of culture at a Public School permits and demands a higher literary and poetical standard, careful editing, and such full indication of sources and authors, as may encourage and suggest study of the history of hymns. Among the more choice pieces are some by Dean Stanley and F. T. Palgrave. The names of authors are given at the foot of each hymn, as well as in an index. The edition of 1869 has in an Appendix some beautiful selections of devotional poetry, from the Christian Year and other sources. Very little use is made of translations from the Latin.

v. Repton.—The Repton Series of hymn-books began in 1839. The 103 hymns of the 1st ed. were reprinted in the 2nd ed., 1864 (141 pieces), and in the 3rd ed., 1869 (154 pieces). These three editions were compiled in Dr. Pearse's Headmastership. The 4th ed., 1874 (211 pieces), and the 5th ed., 1881 (246 pieces), were compiled under Dr. Hockin's Headmastership. All but 20 from the original editions are retained in that of 1881; several of them are of no particular merit, and might well be omitted in any new edition; and the alphabetical arrangement, nowhere so ineffectual as in a Church hymn-book, should be abandoned. This series shows no special connection with other Public School hymn-books, and has no very salient features.

vi. Wellington.—The 1st ed. of The Hymn-book for the Use of Wellington College, appeared in 1860. The three editions published during Dr. Benson's Headmastership only add about 20 pieces to those of the 1st edition (162 pieces), which is always substantially retained. In the psalm versions by Montgomery and Keble, and other pieces, and in the reproduction of the Psalms (quoted by their Latin headings only) from the 1st Prayer Book of 1861, the book has affinities with the Rugby edition of 1856. But the sources from which the hymns are drawn are far wider. The hymns and trs. from the Latin, by I. Williams, Chandler, Caswall, and others, which reproduce the spirit of the Breviary, are largely used. Pieces by our older poets, by the Wesleys, Cowper and Newton, Heber and Milman, Keble and Newman, Professor Bright and Bp. Wordsworth, are combined with the familiar hymns of our general books. The principal pieces that are peculiar to the volume are the hymns and trs. from the Latin by Archbishop Benson himself. The special characteristic of the book is however by no means indicated by the range and judiciousness of selection. The order in which the hymns are to be used is fixed beforehand with elaborate care; so that morning and, night, each day of the week, each season of the year, each Festival, each Holy Day, is enforced by its own never varied cycle of hymns.
encouraged by an appendix of devotional poetry, containing some poems of singular beauty. The whole book is set to music, and contains music for the Canticles and Responsories. Some of the tunes are by Mr. P. David. In 1888 the Head Master of Sherborne, the Rev. E. M. Young, pub. Hymns for the Use of Sherborne School. It is a choice selection, well edited, and has been brought down to the latest for date.

ix. Rossall.—Hymns for Use in the Chapel of Rossall School, 1880, is one of the best Public School hymn-books. It is mainly founded on the Marlborough edition of 1878, and draws largely from the same sources—Watts and Doddridge, the Wesleys, Montgomerie, Heber, Kehle, Mrs. Alexander, Dr. Bonar, and Miss Winkworth. Among the rarer pieces are some by Professor Bright, Bp. Walsham How, Mr. F. T. Palgrave, Dean Stanley, Dean Piimptre, Miss Procter, the Rev. John Elliot, and the Rev. H. A. Martin. The book is designed to express "the hopes and fears, the difficulties, trials and triumphs of life," and it largely achieves its object by the full and buoyant praise, the sense of the gladness of life, and the glory of nature, and the bright Christianity it presents. Some of the pieces are more of the order of devotional poetry than hymns; but good pieces of this kind have more justification in a school hymn-book than elsewhere. Hymns with which the burden is the weariness of earth and the longing for death," have been specially excluded. The book is carefully edited, as regards text, indices, and indication of the authors at the foot of each hymn.

x. New Hymn-Books.—New hymnals are in course of preparation at Westminster and Merchant Taylors Schools. The first, following the lead of the Abbey hymnal, will enshrine hymns of old Westminster as one of its distinctive characters. The latter will pay some attention to Latin hymns.

xi. Appendices.—It may be noted that an analogy exists between the various Appendices in these books for private use, and the often forgotten catechisms for private devotion, of which the Sarum and Reformation Principles exhibit curious examples, and the Primers of the 17th cent. Besides these there are Ken's great hymns for the use of the Winchester scholars; a book dedicated to Etonians by Bannard; in Giplin, Liturgya sacra curra Thebaitico...opopio spiritualia...etiam puero degradua 1657; and the Latin hymns attached to the edition of Herbert's Church of Christ with Notes, by Canon Lowe, and others. (Yarens, 1867.)

xii. Conclusions.—Some of the sins and difficulties of the task of compiling a School hymn-book can be easily gathered from this review of the books. It should have some relation to childhood, so far as the child's devotion remains true and touching to the boy and even the man. It should express as fully as possible those spiritual moods—such as, on the one hand, the sense of dependence and frailty, your sorrow and penitence for falls, purity and the high vision of heaven, and on the other, stalwartness, resolve, the facing of evils, the warrior and chivalrous aspect of the cross, the thrilling memory of prophet and apostle, saint, hero and martyr—which vibrate in the boy's soul and conscience. It should be rich in praise and jubilation, penetrated with the majesty of God's creation, and the God-given beauty of human life. Its two greatest dangers are puerility and unreality. To the first, boys, especially in the higher forms, are intensely opposed; the second, by placing in their mouths expressions that are untrue to their nature (such as a longing for death), turns worship into something little removed from acting. As designed for a community, drawn from the higher ranks, and through its masters and older boys, full of culture, it should not only be thoroughly edited, in the matter of purity of text, exact indication of the source and authorship of each piece, effective grouping of the general hymn under declared headings and full indices, but it should aim at a higher mark of imagination and poetical form; and in schools of the Church of England, the hymn-book should be in the fullest sense the hand-maid of the Prayer Book, enhancing, not crossing her utterance of doctrine, illuminating her festivals, and through the Latin hymns sometimes even in the original) attesting her deep root in the Catholic past.

xiii. Bibliography. The following is a full list of the hymn-books of the English Public Schools:

1. Cheltenham. 1st ed. x. d. 212 Hys. 6 Dox. 2nd ed. x. d. 230 Hys. 6 Dox. This book is no longer in use. (See Various.)

3. Harrow. 1st ed., Hymns, 1855, 240 Hys. and a Dox. 2nd ed., 1867, a reprint; 3rd ed., 1868, 261 Hys., 3 Dox. (Eds. 1, 2 by Dr. Vaughan, ed. 3 by Dr. Butler.)

4. Marlborough. 1st ed. Psalms and Hymns, 1866, 300 pieces (Ps. and Hys. intermixed) alphabetically arranged. 2nd ed. Ps. and Hys., 1862. 24 Ps. 143 Hys., and an Anthem. 3rd ed. Ps. and Hys. 23 Ps. 175 Hys., and an Anthem. 4th ed. Ps. and Hys., 1866. 23 Ps. 183 Hys., and an Anthem. 5th ed. Ps. and Hys., 1862, 244 Hys. and an Anthem, and Appendix for private devotion (19 Hys.), ed. 1878, 300 Hys. 31 Anthems, and Introits. (The 1st ed. belongs to H. Cotton's Headmastership, eds. 2-5, to Dr. Bradley's ed. 6 to Dr. Bell's. The bulk of the 1st ed. is retained throughout.)

9. Uppingham and Sherborne. Hymn-Book for the Use of Uppingham and Sherborne Schools, 1874, 254 Ps. and Appendix of devotional poetry, 28 Ps. 22 Hys. Selected by the Head Masters, Rev. E. Thomas, and Rev. Dr. Harper. The music by Dr. F. David and Mr. J. Sterne. The version of the hymns, extends to the Psalms and Canticles as well as the Hymns. A new selection was pub. in 1888 by the Rev. E. M. Young as Hymns for the Use of Sherborne School.
At Charter House: City of London; Dulwich; Eton; Shrewsbury; St. Paul’s; and others, there are no special hymn-books, H. A. & M. being that commonly in use.

Puchta, Christian Rudolph Heinrich, s. of W. H. Puchta, then residing at Justizrat at Koldodzue, near Nürnberg, was b. at Koldodzue, Aug. 19, 1808. He matriculated at the University of Erlangen, in 1826, and completed his theological course at Berlin. In 1832 he was appointed Stadtvicar (general assistant preacher) at Munich, where he became acquainted with many men of light and leading; and in 1837 became rector in theology at Erlangen. In 1839 he was appointed professor of Philosophy and Religion in the newly organised Lyceum at Speyer (Spire), but his nervous system broke down in 1841, and he had to be confined in the lunatic asylum of Winnenthal, Württemberg. After a year he was able to take charge of the parish of Eyb, near Ansbach, and then became, in 1852, second pastor, and in 1856, first pastor of St. James’s Church, in Augsburg. He d. at Augsburg, Sept. 12, 1858 (Koch, vii. 277; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxxvi. 687, &c.).

Puchta had a genuine poetic faculty, and a mastery of style. His early poems were secular; his later were mostly hymns. His hymns were mainly meant for private use, and appeared principally in his Morgen- und Abend Andachten am Christlichen Hausaltar in Gesängen, Erlangen, 1843 (2nd ed. 1857, 3rd 1866). Besides these, 35—including 11 tra. from the Latin—were given in Knapp’s Christertorp, 1837–1852. A few others, with a selection of his poems, edited by Knapp, appeared in his posthumous Gedichte, Stuttgart, 1860. Knapp in his Ev. L. S., 1850, included 30 hymns by Puchta, and in his edition of 1865 no less than 42. Puchta was also one of the editors of the Bavarian G. B., 1854. Those of his hymns which have passed into English (all from his Hausaltar, 1843) are:

Puer natus in Bethlehem. [Christmas.] A beautiful and simple Christmas carol on the adoration of the Child by the ox and ass, and the visit to Him by the Magi—so equally appropriate for the Epiphany. It became a great favourite in Germany, and is found in many varying forms. The oldest text known is given by G. M. Dreves, in his

PUGNATE, CHRISTI MILITES

The text used by Miss Huppus is that in the St. Gall Katholices G. B., 1863. The tr. from the German is (1) "A Child is born in Bethlehem, There’s joy in all Jerusalem." By Dr. H. Harbaugh in the German Reformed Guardian, Dec. 1866, p. 310. (2) "A Child is born in Bethlehem, Therefore is glad Jerusalem." By Miss Huppus, as No. 304 in E. Paxton Hood’s Children’s Choir, 1870. [J. M.]

Pugnate, Christi milites. [All Saints.]

This hymn, in common with "Coelastis O Jerusalem" (p. 340, i.), is usually given as being in the Paris Breviary of 1736. This is however not the case. It is found in the Brev. of Chalons-sur-Marne, 1736 (Himalis, p. 148), appointed for Saturday; in the Amiens Brev. of 1741; the Paris Brev. of 1822, and other French Brevs. Also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. Soldiers who to Christ belong. By J. Williams, in his Hymn. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 236, in 5 st. of unequal lines. This was rewritten for the Hymnary, 1872, and repeated from the Hymnary in Thring’s Col., 1892.

2. Soldiers who are Christ’s below. By J. H. Clark, written at Marston, Montgomery, on Palm Sunday, 1865, and pub. in the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M. Also in the revised edition, 1875.

Another tr. is:—

Soldiers of Christ, fight manfully. A. J. B. Hope. 1844. [J. J.]

Pullan, John. [Old Version. § IX. 4.]

Pulsum supernis sedibus. Jean Baptiste de Sainteul. [Annunciation of B. V. M.]

Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1866, p. 940; in Sartre's Hymnæi Sacri et Nori, 1867, p. 8 (ed. 1868, p. 88), and in the Paris Breviary, 1736, where it is appointed for the Feast of the Annunciation at Lauds. The text is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1857; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, and H. M. Macgill's Songs of the Christian in Creed & Life, 1876. Tr. as:—

Long time the fallen human race. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1857, p. 100. This is given in several collections, and sometimes with alterations. In the Hymnary, 1872, it begins "Far from our home, our fallen race." The alterations in this case are somewhat numerous.

Other trs. are:—

1. Driven from their home, their pathway lost. J. Williams. 1829.
3. Poor wanderers, banished from their home. R. Campbell, 1850.
4. Cast out from Eden's happy home. In the Scottish Episcopal Coll. of Hymns, ed. 1853, p. 35; also in the poems of glory driven. H. M. Macgill. 1876. [J. J.]

Punshon, William Morley, LL.D.

This greatly and justly honnoured name of recent Wesleyan Methodism finds a tiny niche in this work from a thin poetic vein, which gave him much enjoyment, if its working out must be confessed to have yielded nothing of permanent value for hymnody, or at all comparable with his splendid service to the Christian Church as preacher and lecturer. His contributions to J. Lyth's Wild Flowers, or, a Selection of Original Poetry (1843) [see Lyth, J., p. 707 (1) and 707 (2)] though reprinted in 1846, speedily withered as "flowers" in a horrid siccus. His Loves of Hope (1832) was no advance on the Wild Flowers. His Sabbath Chimes, or, Meditations in Verse for the Sundays of a Year (1867) suggested irrevocable comparisons with Keble's classic of the Christian Year. Throughout, the thinking is bewilderingly meagre, the sentiment commonplace, the workmanship clumsy and poor. Ease and inspiration are absent. His life has been amply and lovingly written by F. W. Macdonald and A. H. Reyner (1867); and it is a noble and beautiful story. He was b. at Donesaster on 29th May, 1821, only child of John Punshon and Elizabeth Morley. The latter was of a good family. He lost his parents in boyhood. Through marital relationships, young Punshon was introduced to commercial life in Yorkshire, Hull, &c. He marked 29th November, 1858, as the day of his spiritual birth. In 1842 he began to be heard of locally as a preacher, being still in business. In 1844 he proceeded to the Methodist Theological Institute at Richmond; but remained there only a few months. He preferred evangelizing to stated preaching. He leapt into popularity at a bound, probably not to his gain, either intellectually or morally, though his diary breathes an admirable humility. In 1854 he made his advent as a lecturer by his Prophet of Horeb. The impression made by it was amazing. Then followed others, with ever deepening and widening impression. Contemporaneous with his abundant, ever-abundant preaching and platform speaking, was such quantity and quality of effective work and service in raising large sums of money for Christian and other missionary and educational work as astounds a reader of his life. He was five times President of the Canadian Methodist Conference (1868-72), and once of the English Conference (1875). His degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the Victoria University, Cobourg, Canada, in 1873. Throughout, in private and public, he was a large-souled, whole-hearted, true man of God. "Weakened by the way" on the continent, he slowly worked his way home, and after a brief final illness, fell gently and softly asleep on April 14, 1881. His hymns in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and the Mth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, are:—

1. Listen! the Master beseareth. Go work in the Vineyard.
2. Sweet is the sunlight after rain. Sunday Morning.
3. We woke to-day with anthems sweet. Sunday Evening.

No. 1 is in the Mth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879; and 2 and 3 are from the Sabbath Chimes, 1867. [A. B. G.]

Pure spirit, O where art thou now? Anna L. Barbourd, wii Akin. [Death and Burial.]

Pub. in The Works of Anna Laritta Barbourd, with a Memoir, 1825, vol. i. p. 224, in 2 vols. 8vo. St. 8. 4. 1. and headed. "Dirge for Miss Anna Laritta Barbourd. Written November 1808." From the Memoir we gather (p. xiv.) that the occasion was the death of her husband, "whose latter days were oppressed by a morbid affection of his spirits, in a great degree hereditary, which came gradually upon him, and closed the scene of his earthly usefulness” (p. xlix.). The “Dirge” was repeated in Martineau’s Hymns, 1840, No. 623. In the same Hymns, 1840, No. 404, is arranged from this poem, and begins with st. ii., altered to “Not for the ploutous dead we weep,” sometimes given elsewhere as “Not for the dead in Christ we weep.” The original poem only is repeated in Martineau’s Hymns, &c., 1873. [J. J.]

Pusey, Edward Bouvier, D.D., s. of Mr. Philip Pusey, was b. Aug. 22, 1800, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated in first-class honours in 1822. Subsequently he became a Fellow of Oriel, a Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. He d. Sept. 16, 1882. Dr. Pusey’s prose writings and trs. are very numerous. Amongst the latter was his tr. of a part of Horat’s Paradisus Litterarius, pub. in 1847 as The Paradise of the Christian Soul. In this work there are severalmetrical trs. of hymns which in the early pages of this Dictionary we have attributed to Dr. Pusey. We have Dr. Liddon’s authority for stating that the hymns were not translated by Dr. Pusey. Some were tr. by W. J. Copeland, and others probably by J. Keble. [J. J.]

Pusey, Philip, eldest s. of Mr. Philip Pusey, and brother of Dr. Pusey, was b. June 25, 1799, and d. July 9, 1855. His father, a son of the first Viscount Folkestone, had assumed the name of Pusey instead of that of Bouvier. [G. A. C.]

Pye, Henry John, m.a., s. of H. J. Pye, of Clifton Hall, Staffordshire, was b. 1796, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. (B.A. 1818, M.A. 1822.) Taking Holy Orders in 1820, he was presented by his father in 1851 to the Rectory of Clifton-Campville, Staffordshire. In 1868 he, together with his wife (only daughter of Bishop S. Wilberforce), joined the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Pye pub. Two Lectures on the Church, 1852; Short Ecclesiastical History, 1854; and various Sermons. He also compiled a book of Hymns for use at Clifton-Campville in 1851. To that collection he contributed a few hymns, including:—

1. In His temple now behold Him. Purification of B. V. M. This hymn was repeated, in a slightly altered form and an additional stanza (iv.), by Canon W. Cooke in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853; the Salisbury H. Bk., 1851; and many later collections. It is sometimes given with the fourth stanza as in the Hymnary, 1858; Steeley’s Songs of G. & G., 1872, &c. The full Pye-Cooke text of 1851 is in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1871; Thring’s Coll., 1882 (slightly altered); and others. This hymn is sometimes given as a tr. from Angulus Sileius (Scheffer), but in error.

2. To praise ye the Lord. Ye nations rejoice. Annunciation. This hymn was also repeated in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 109. [Wm. C.]

Quae dixit, egit, pertulit. [St. John the Evangelist.] Included in the Cluniac Breviary, Paris, 1686, p. 187, in 5 st. and a doxology, as the hymn at Matins on the Festival of St. John the Evangelist; in the Quando noctis medium. [Sunday.] A poem of 65 lines given by Mose, No. 29, from a Stuttgart ms. of the 14th cent. and entitled "On the Life of Christ." Tr. as —:

Quarles, Francis. The life of this "fine old English gentleman" and charming essayist and quaint singer, will be found in full in the present writer's collective and complete edition of his works in verse and prose (3 vols. 4to, 1880-81, Cheyney Worthies Library). He was born in Essex, and his father was James Quarles, of Stowards, Essex, and his mother Jean Dalton. He was their 3rd son and child. In the registers of Romford, Essex, is this entry: "1592, May 8. Dose quam fili Franciscus filius magistri Jacobii Quarlitius. He lost his father in 1599. His first school was Romford and his first tutor William Tichbourne, chaplain of Romford. He lost his mother in 1600. He proceeded to Christ's College, Cambridge, and later was of Exeter College, Oxford. It is to be regretted that the College registers furnish no exact data. He passed from the University to Lincoln's Inn, where his widow-biographer tells us —

"He studied the laws of England; not so much out of desire to benefit himself thereby, as his friends and neighbours (showing therein his continual inclination to peace) by comp. sing suit. and differences amongst them."

Some years advance us from 1608 (at Lincoln's Inn) to probably 1612-13, or his 21st year. His widow continues,

"After he came to maturity he was not desirous to put himself into the world, otherwise he might have had greater preferments than he had. He was neither so unfit for court preferment, or so ill-beloved, but that he might have raised his fortunes the more if he had had any inclination that way. But his mind was chiefly set upon his devotion and study; yet not altogether so much lest that he faithfully discharged the place of captain of the Queen of Bohemia. (p. 2)

How long Quarles continued with the Queen is unknown. He accompanied Frederick and Elizabeth to Germany. He married Ursely (= Uralia) Woodgate, of St. Andrew's, Holborn, on May 28, 1618. In 1619 he published the first and most characteristic of his poems, entitled, after the odd phrase of the period, A Feast for Worms. In the epistle he says, "Wounder not at the title, for it is a Song of Mercy: what greater Feast than Mercy? and what are men but worms" (vol. ii. p. 5). Kindred with the Feast followed Hadassa, or the History of Queen Esther. In 1621 he was in Dublin. He dated his Argulas and Parthenis, "Dublin, 4th March, 1621." He filled the office of Secretary to the illustrious Ussher, on whose death John Quarles composed a memorable elegy. Ussher wrote to Vossius highly laudatory of our Quarles. His successive books are practicable by the infallible landmarks of his remaining years. (The reader is referred to our Life and the Works, at supra.) The Emblems appeared in 1634-35, and his Hieroglyphica in 1637. In 1639 he was appointed "Chronologer" of the City of London, an office which he held till his death. From 1629 his various prose books were written, and became as popular as his poems. They are all in fine English. He was an out and out loyalist, and was with the king at Oxford. He had a numerous family. He died Sept. 8, 1644, and was buried in St. Olave's, Silver Street, London, "11 Sep. 1644." His title to a place in this work rests mainly on his versified Psalms. These appear in the famous Bay Psalm Book. [See Bay Psalm Book, p. 109.] Quarles's are Psalms xvi, xxv, li, lxxix, cxiii, cxxxvii. They were reprinted by us for Quarles on the authority of John Joselyn's Account of Two Voyages to New England (1674). In the year 1638 he says, on his arrival in Massachusetts Bay,

"Having refreshed myself for a day or two at Noddle Island, I crossed the bay in a small boat to Boston, which then was rather a village than a town, there not being above twenty or thirty houses; and presented myself to Mr. Wintorbothe, the Governor, and to Mr. Conlen, the teacher of Boston Church, to whom I delivered from Mr. Francis Quarles, the poet, the translations of Nos. 18, 26, 31, 84, 113 and 127 Psalms into English metre for his approbation." 4c.

These: "Psalms" are more curious than successful. But besides them the poetry of Francis Quarles is a virgin field for the capable hymnologist. It is a mystery and a sorrow that few only have been adapted and adopted. There are many of his verse-Emblems that fittedly memorial to music would be whims and searching, and nobly displace accepted pious inanities. No xii. of Book iii. of Emblems (vol. iii. pp. 75, 76), "Oh that Thou wouldst hide me in the grave," deserves a supreme effort of highest genius to make it worthy. In delightful contrast in its vividness and sweetness is his "Like to the damask rose you see" (vol. iii. p. 285). Equally noticeable are his "Backsliding" (ibid. p. 96, xiv.), "Vain Physicians" (ibid. p. 199, iv.), "Waste not Life" (ibid. p. 194, xi.), and "A Little While" (ibid. p. 196, xiv.). See Critical Essay in Works as above.) [A. B. G.]

Quarles, John, s. of the above, was b. in Essex in 1624, and was educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He bore arms within the garrison at Oxford on behalf of Charles I. and subsequently (it is said) he was raised to the rank of captain in the King's service. On the downfall of the King, Quarles retired to London, and devoted himself to literature for a livelihood. He d. there during the great Plague, 1665. He pub. several works including (1) Jeremiah's Lamentations Paraphrased, with Divine Meditations, 1648; and (2) Divine Meditations upon Various Subjects whereunto is annexed God's Love to Man's Unworthiness, with several Divine Ejaculations. Lond. 1655 (Wood's Athenae Oxon.). From the Ejaculations, Mr. Darling adapted two hymns for his Hys. for the Church of England. In the 1889 ed. these are:—"O King of kings, before whose Throne" (Holy Trinity); and "O Thou Who sittest in heaven and seeest" (Visitation of Sick). [J. J.]

Leo in his ed. of Fortunatus's Opera Poetica, Berlin, 1881, p. 385, but among the hymns falsely attributed to him. It is found in four ms. of the 11th cent., in the British Museum (Jul. A. vi. f. 38 b; Vesp. D. xii. f. 61 b; Harl. 2961 f. 231; Add. 30848 f. 55 b); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1851, p. 74, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 22). It is also in the St. Gall ms., No. 387, of the 11th cent. Monc. No. 419, cites it as in a ms. of the 9th cent. at Admont. The second portion, "O gloriosa semper, Excelsa super sidera," is often given as a separate hymn, sometimes beginning "O gloriosa Domina," as in a 12th cent. ms. in the British Museum (Harl. 2968 f. 120 b); in Monc. No. 420, and in G. M. Drewes's Hymnarius Moeniacensis, 1888, p. 38, from a 10th cent. ms. In the Roman Breviary, 1632, the first part begins Quem terra, pontus, sidera, and the second part O gloriosa virginal. The original, and the Roman Breviary, Daniel, l. Prudentius. [Epiphany.] This is the 12th and last poem in his Cathemerinon, and in its full form consists of 328 lines. It is found in a ms. of the 5th cent. in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris (8048, f. 39 b), and is included in all eds. of his Opera: e.g. Halle, 1703, p. 75; and Aurelii Prudentii Clementis V. C. Opera Omnia. (Dolphin and Variorum Classics), London, 1824, vol. i. pp. 150-163. Though one of the finest poems of Prudentius, it was comparatively little used in the services of the Church until the revision of the Roman Breviary after the Council of Trent. In the ed. of that Breviary pub. at Rome, 1570, there are the following centos:

i. Quicumque Christum quaeatis. Transfiguration.

ii. O sola magnarium urbiun. Epiphany.

These centos are repeated in later eds. of the Roman Breviary, and also in Daniel, l., Nos. 107, 108, 112, and iv. p. 121. The earliest and most beautiful cento is the Salve toto martyrum, which is found in the St. Gall ms., No. 413, of the 11th cent., in a 12th cent. ms. in the British Museum (Add. 18301, f. 113), &c. [J. M.]

These centos have been translated into English as follows:

i. Quicumque Christum quaeatis. The Transfiguration. This begins with the first line of the poem. The Roman Brev. text is in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865.

Tr. as:

1. All ye who seek in hope and love. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 167; and again in his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 90. This is repeated in several collections, and is usually given in an unaltered form. In J. A. Johnston's English Hym., 1852, it begins, "Ye who for Christ are seeking, raise."

2. O ye, who Christ are seeking, raise. In J. A. Johnston's English Hym., 1856, based upon Caswall.

RAFFLES, THOMAS

Dr. Raffles contributed, in 1812, 8 hymns to the "T. B." of the College. At that time he was the Bishop of China, and some of his other hymns were included in the College's supplement.

In 1813, Dr. Raffles was on his way to China, and his friend, Dr. Collyer, was on a mission to the sick in Singapore. Dr. Raffles was appointed to the College, and Dr. Collyer was appointed to the presidency of the College.

The "Raffles's Hymns," from which we have quoted these hymns, was kindly lent by Mrs. T. S. Raffles, B.A., Stipendiary Magistrate, Liverpool. Mr. Raffles is the author of his father's Memoirs, 1864, and of hymn 25 in his father's Supplement. Dr. Raffles's original hymns were published in 1868, with a Preface by R. Baldwin Brown.

Raising the elements of the Earth, adoring E. Charton. [Ps. cxv. 1.] 1st pub. in his Clerical Remains, 1856, in 13 st. of 4 l., with the refrain, "Halilujah, Amen." In 1863 Dr. Kennedy embodied it in his Hymns, Christ. etc., i, ii, viii-.xii., as a hymn, of 2 st. of 16 l., each st. ending with "Halilujah, Amen." This arrangement was repeated in the Ws. II. Bk., 1875, No. 694, but divided into 4 st. of 8 l., and with the omission of the refrain. This rendering is one of the author's best and most widely used versions of the Psalms, and is worthy of more extended use than it has been accorded. [Ps. cxv. 1.] [J. J.]

Raise thee, my soul, fly up and run! I. Watts. [Heavenly Joys.] Appeared in his Hymns and Sacred Songs, 1707 (ed. 1709), Bk. ii., No. 74, in 6 st. of 4 l., as the second of two hymns on "Christ's Commission. John iii. 16, 17." It was extensively adopted by the older compilers, including T. Whitefield, M. Madan, A. M. Toplady, and others.

Rehoboth (1830), Elliott (1835), the Leeds H. Bk. (1835), etc., followed; and modern editors in G. Britain and America have, in many instances, also included it in their collections.

Now attendant this popularity it does not rank with the best of Watts's hymns. [J. J.]

Rambach, August Jakob, a. Johann Jakob Rambach (then pastor of St. Nicholas's Church, at Quedlinburg, and, after 1780, chief pastor of the Michael's Church, at Hamburg), was b. at Quedlinburg, May 28, 1777. He entered the University of Halle in 1796, passed his theological examination in Nov. 1799, and was appointed doctor of St. James's Church at Hamburg, in May 1802, and on March 16, 1819, preached his first sermon as chief pastor of St. Michael's, in succession to his father. He received the degree of M.D. from the University of Marburg, on the occasion of his tercentenary, Nov. 12, 1827; and became senior of the Hamburg clergy in 1831.

After the sudden death of his son, he resigned his public offices one after another. He finally resigned his pastorate in the beginning of 1851, and retired to Osten, near Hamburg, on Oct. 27, 1851. [Die Firma.] father's workshop, but, in the autumn of 1707, he dislocated his ankle. During his illness he turned again to his schoolbooks;

the desire for learning reawoke; and on his recovery, early in 1708, he entered the Latin school of the Orphanage at Halle (Glancha).
On Oct. 27, 1712, he matriculated at the University of Halle as a student of medicine, but soon turned his attention to theology.
He became specially interested in the
In May 1715 he became one of Michaelis's assistants in preparing his ed. of the Hebrew Bible, for which he wrote the commentary on Ruth, Esther, Nehemiah, &c. His health began to suffer in the spring of 1719, and he gladly accepted the invitation of Count von Henkel to stay at Pötziz, near Rennenburg, where he spent several months. By August he had quite recovered, and went to pay a visit to Jena, where a number of the students asked him to lecture to them. For this purpose he settled at Jena in Oct., 1719, and lived in the house of Professor Buddeus
(J. F. Bude). He graduated m. a. in March 1729. In 1728 he was appointed adjunct of the Theological Faculty at Halle, as also inspector of the Orphanage; in 1726 extraordinary professor of theology; and in 1727, after A. H. Francke's death, ordinary professor as well as preacher at the Schulkirche.
Here he was very popular, both as preacher and professor, but the jealousy of his colleagues induced him to accept an offer from the Landgrave Ernst Ludwig of Hesse, who, in 1731, invited him to Gießen as superintendent and first professor of theology (before leaving Halle he graduated m. a., June 28, 1731), and in Aug., 1732, appointed him also director of the Pædagogium at Gießen. In 1734 he was, for various reasons, greatly inclined to accept the offer of the first professorship of theology in the newly-founded University of Göttingen, but eventually, at the earnest request of the Landgrave, remained in Gießen, where he d. of fever, April 19, 1735.

[F. M. B.]

Rawson, George, was b. June 5, 1807, at Leeds, in which town he practised for many years as a solicitor. In 1833 he assisted the Congregational ministers of Leeds in the compilation of Psalms, Hymns, and Passages of Scripture for Christian Worship, a vol. commonly known as the Leeds Hymns. Dr. Rawson was a member of the Congregational body. In 1858 he also assisted Rev. Dr. Green and other Baptist ministers in the preparation of Psalms and Hymns for the use of the Baptist Denomination. A number of Mr. Rawson’s own compositions first appeared in this and in the Leeds H. Bk. In 1876 he pub. his Hymns, Verses and Chants (Hodder and Stoughton, Lon. Lon.), including his previously published hymns, and containing (exclusive of chants) 80 original pieces. In 1885 most of these, with several additional hymns, were pub. by the R. T. S. under the title Songs of Spiritual Thought.  Mr. Rawson d. March 25, 1889. His hymns are distinguished by refinement of thought, and delicacy and propriety of language; and if they do not attain the first rank among the songs of the Christian Church, many are of great excellence. The most widely known are, " By Christ redeemed, in Christ restored;" " Come to our poor nature’s night;" " Father in high heaven dwelling;" " In the dark and cloudy day;" and " Reapers, behold the fields are white." In the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, and the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1858, there are also several recasts of and additions to the hymns of other writers. These are noted in this Dictionary, and may be gathered from the Index of Authors and Translators. In addition to Mr. Rawson’s hymns which are annotated under their respective first lines, the following are also in C. U.:

i. From the Leeds H. Bk., 1833.
1. Captain and Saviour of the host. Burial.
2. Give dust to dust: and here we leave. Burial.
3. God the Lord is King—before him. P. 586.
4. In the dark and cloudy day. Consolation.
5. Soul, thy week of toil is ended. Saturday Evening.
6. Though the night be very long. Resignation.
ii. From the Baptist Psalms & Hymns, 1858.
8. Blessed are those who have not seen. Psalters.
9. Blessed is the faithful heart. Psalters.
10. Christ to be sinned against again. Ascension.
11. God the Father, be Thou near. Evening.
14. Lord, we bless Thee, Who hast given. Holy Communion.
15. My Father God, with filial awe. Abiding in God.
16. Our eyes we lift up to the hills. The Lord the Pastor’s Keeper.
17. Reapers, behold the fields are ripe. Missions.
iii. From the Leeds Sunday S. H. Bk., 1838.
20. And will [How shall] the mighty God. The Holy Ghost.
21. Jesus, the Lord, our Righteousness. Jesus, the children’s Friend.

Raymond, William S. b. in 1832, and educated at King’s College, Cambridge, b.a. 1854, and M.A. 1857, was for some time Curate at Delamere, Herefordshire, and became a Fellow of St. John’s College, Cambridge, and a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. He d. in 1884 for Easter Eve, " Weeping and Wailing Way," was pub. in I. G. Smith’s Sermons on the Church, &c., in several collections.

Rebus creatis nil erga se [Septuagesima.] Pub. in the 1786; and again in Coffin’s Book of Psalms and Hymns, 1838 and 1858.
1. Our God, in His celestial seat, in His Hymn of the Prim. Church, and again in His Hymn of the Church, 1841, No. 34. It was reprinted 1867, and others. There are many more which are (1) "Blest is the thing," in Johnston’s English Hymnal, and (2) "O Lord, who art the King," in the Hymnary, 1872.
2. Thou dost not need creation, in his Hymn of the Church, and again, in a few collections.
3. Of creation naught Thou aught, in his Church Hymn, and Rice’s Sermon, from the same.
4. O Christ, in Thine all-blessed Chambers, in his Loquendo Solum, 1 was rewritten by the Compilers of the Book of 1861, as "O Lord, in perfect beauty, and in the Rev. F. Pott’s Postscript: Thou, Who art All in All above..."
5. O God, the joy of heaven’s inhabitants of H. A. & M. in their 1889.
His degree was conferred by Yale College, America, He d. Feb. 25, 1862. As the founder of "The London Orphan Asylum," "The Asylum for Fatherless Children," "The Asylum for Idiots," "The Infant Orphan Asylum," and "The Hospital for Incurables," Dr. Reed is more fully known, and will be long remembered than by his literary publications. His Hymn Book was the growth of years. The preparation began in 1817, when he pub. a Supplement to Watts, in which were a few originals. This was enlarged in 1825; and entirely superseded by his collection The Hymn Book, prepared from Dr. Watts's Ps. & Hys. and Other Authors, with some Originals, in 1812 (Preface). His hymns, mostly of a plain and practical character, number 21, were contributed to these various editions, and were republished with those of his wife (see below) in the Wycliffe Supplement, 1872. The best known are "Ah Jesus, let me hear Thy voice," and "Spirit Divine, attend our prayer." All Dr. and Mrs. Reed's hymns are anonymous in The Hymn Book, 1842, but are given with their names in the Wycliffe Suppl., 1872. His hymns now in the C. U. include, in addition to those annotated under their respective first lines:—

1. Come, let us strike our harps a-fresh. Praise.
5. Hark, hark, the notes of joy. Missions.
7. Listen, sinner, mercy calls you. Invitation. Generally given as "Hear, O Sinner, mercy calls you."
8. Rich are the joys of solitude. Retirement. Sometimes given as "How deep and tranquil is the joy."
9. There (comes) is an hour when I must part. Death anticipated.

Reed, Eliza, née Holmes, was b. in London, March 4, 1794; married to the Rev. Andrew Reed (see above) in 1816; d. July 4, 1867. Mrs. Reed entered fully and earnestly into her husband's extensive charitable works. Her publications include Original Tales for Children; and The Mother's Manual for the Training of her Children, 1865. Her hymns, 20 in all, were contributed to her husband's collection, and were republished with his in the Wycliffe Chapel Supplement, 1872. They are only of average merit, and have not attained to a marked position. They include:—

2. I would be Thine, O take my heart. Indication of Self to Christ.
3. O do not let the word depart. The Accepted Time.
4. O that I could for ever dwell. Communion with God Desired. [J. J.]

Regina coeli laetare. [B. F. M.] Anselm Schubiger, in his Musikalische Speiselegien, Berlin, 1876, p. 57, cites it as in a ms. of 1372, now at Engelberg in Switzerland. It is given as an Easter antiphon in the Roman Brev., Modena, 1480, f. 512. Repeated in later eds. of the Roman Brev., and also in Daniel, ii p. 319. Tr. as:—

Adam, was b. in 1790, at Minden, in Germany, and thence became a private secretary to George von Humboldt, who died Aug. 20, 1828, and securing the campaign in Italy, he was appointed by Napoleon Emperor of Germany, and spent some time in Switzerland, where he became a friend of Caspar Schwenkfeld.

He was living at Frankfurt-am-Main when the first stanza was found in some manuscript books of old and new, including the Rhine Patel's Psalms and Hymns, 1860. It is in this stanza, and II. 5, of each of the others being from this hymn, whilst the rest are by John Taylor in Enfield, and the Norwegian Sel. of Hymns, 1789. (See Taylor, John, in R. 1. Creator of mankind. By J. Chandler, in his Hymn, of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 30. It is in this form in a few collections; and also as, "O Saviour of mankind." in Kennedy, 1865.
2. Maker of all things, aid our hands. By J.}
Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisin in Breviary, 1839, p. 39. Given in a few collections without alterations; and, in others, including the Sarum, 1868, and the Hymnary, 1872, as, "Creator of the world, do Thou."

Other tr. are:
1. O Thou by Whom the worlds were made. J. D. Chambers, 1857.

Rerum Creator optime. St. Gregory the Great [Wednesday Morning.] None, No. 275, gives this as probably by St. Gregory (it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors), and at i. p. 372, cites it as in an 8th cent. ms. at Trier. Daniel gives the text at i., No. 44; and at iv. p. 37, cites it as in a Rheims ms. of the 10th cent., and ranks it as a hymn of the 7th or 8th cent. Among the British Museum ms., it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 17 b; Jul. It is in an 11th cent. ms. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 231); in three mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 413, 414; and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surtees Soc.), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 7). It is included in the Roman (Vinci, 1478, and the revision of 1832), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, and other Breviaries; uniformly for Wednesday at Nocturns or Matins. The text is also in Wackenagel, i. No. 92; Hymnarium Sarisc, 1851, p. 49; Konigsfeldt, i. p. 10; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1858 and 1895; and G. M. Drexel's Hymnæus Monasticus, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms. Tr. as:

2. O God, Whose power did all create. Primer, 1706.
7. Creator of all worlds, look down. J. D. Chambers, 1852. In 1857 it reads: "Creator of the world, look down."

Rerum Deus tenax vigor. St. Ambrose [The Ninth Hour.] This hymn is given by Biraghi as one of the Inni sincerë e Carmine de Sant' Ambrogio, 1802; but it is not one of the twelve received as genuine by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose. Daniel gives the text at i., No. 42, and at iv. p. 45, cites it as in a Rheims ms. of the 10th cent., and ranks it as a hymn of the 7th or 8th cent. Mozarabic ms. at Trier, cites it as in mss. of the 8th cent. at Darmstadt and Trier; and Thomassius, ii. 418, as in a Vatican ms. of the 8th cent. It is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church now in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 7; Jul. Reusner, Adam. [Reusner, A.]

Reusner, Christoph, was a bookseller and bookbinder in Stockholm, and was probably born there, but date of birth is unknown. In 1675 he printed, and seems also to have edited, a collection of hymns for the German church, e.g., in the Laufbuch, 1674, at Grätz, Haus- und Kirchen-Ausstattung, zu Diensten, Z. 1, the title of the Teutschen Kirche in Stockholm. This work contains a number of hymns signed “R,” which have been ascribed to Reusner. By others this “R” has been taken to mean Reusner, the librarian, i.e., the Queen of Sweden (Utri).

Reusner, in his Notes to his H. Comp. this: “The heart is not in the Original Hymn, but it has been added.”

Revive Thy work, O Lord, Thy mighty arm make bare. A. Miedlmann. [Home Missions. 1st pub. in the British Messenger, Oct. 1858, again in the Evangelical H. Bk., 1860, and again in a large number of hymnals in G. Britain and America. The original hymn, in the Magnificat, is given with the change of st. 2, “Give peace to the weary, and send refreshings,” &c., as in the H. Comp., No. 150. It is one of the most popular of Mr. Miedlmann’s hymns. [J. J.]

Rex aeterni Domine. [Eastertide.]

This hymn is certainly ancient, being mentioned in the Rule of Aurelianus of Arles (d. 553), and by the Venerable Bede (d. 735) in his De arte metrica. It is found in a ms. c. 700, in the British Museum (Vesp. A. A. 133); in a c. 890, in the Bodleian Library (Jun. 25. 116 b); in the 11th cen. Magderabie Breviary, in the British Museum (Add. 30848 f. 131 b); in a ms. of the 8th cen. at St. Gall, No. 2; and in the Lat. Hymns of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Sutjes Society), 1851.

is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 9 b).

The original text has 16 stanzas and a doxology. This form is in Daniel, i. No. 90 (for metrical reasons but without any authority Daniel reads, Q Rex septrnem; Wackernagel, i. No. 64; the Hymnarium Sarb., 1851, p. 90; and in G. M. Drexel's Hymnarius Moisiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms. In the older Roman Breviary (e.g. Venice, 1748), st. i.-vii. were given as a hymn for Matins on Low Sunday. At the revision of 1568 it was altered to Rex septemterne Domine, and at the revision of 1633 to Rex septemterne coelestium. The text of 1823 (appointed for Sunday Matins, "Tempore Paschali," i.e. during Eastertide), is in recent eds. of the revised Roman Brevi. in Daniel, i. No. 90; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1845. [J. M.]

This hymn has been tr. as follows:—

i. Rex septrnem Domine. Of the full text there is one tr., that by J. D. Chambers in his Psalter, &c., 1852, p. 90, "O king Eternal, Lord of grace," and in his Lauda Sion, 1857, altered to, "Eternal Monarch, Lord of all."

ii. Rex septemterne coelestium. This Roman Breviary text in 6 st. has been tr. thus:—

1. O Thou, the heaven's eternal King. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 96, and his Hymn and Poem, 1873, p. 54. In a full or in an abbreviated form it has passed into several hymnals.

2. O Christ, the heaven's eternal King. By the Compilers of H. A. & M., 1861, "based on former translations." It was repeated in Kennedy, 1863.

3. Eternal King of heaven, Whose word. By G. Monlitre, in his Hymn and Lyrics, 1867, p. 125; and thence into the People's H., 1867.

Translations not in O. U.:—

1. Eternal King, whose equal Reign. Primer, 1704.

4. Eternal King of all the spheres. J. Wallace, 1874.

5. Qui pastor aternus gregem. This, beginning with st. v. of the Roman Brevi. text, is tr. by W. J. Blow, in his Church H. and Tune Bk., 1852-3, as "Shepherd of Life, Who dost Thy flock." [J. J.]

Rex angelerum praepotens. [Passiontide.] This is found in a ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Harl. 2961 f. 239). Daniel, i. No. 224, gives st. i. only as a hymn "on the Invention or Exaltation of the Cross." Tr. as:—

O King of Angels! Lord of power. By J. D. Chambers, in his Psalter, &c., 1852, p. 85, and altered to "O King, by angel-hosts obeyed," in his Lauda Sion, 1857, p. 147, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875, and in Chope's Hymnal, 1864, it is given, with alterations and the omission of st. ii., as, "O King of angels, Lord of grace." [J. M.]

Rex Christe, factor omnium. St. Gregory the Great. [Passiontide.] This is one of the eight hymns accepted in the Benedictine ed. of Gregory's Opera (Paris, 1705, vol. iii. col. 879), as his genuine productions. It is found in a ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Harl. 2961 f. 240); in a ms. of the 12th cent. in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc. 297 f. 309); in three ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall (Nos. 387, 313, 314), and others. In mediæval times it was often used at the Telemache service on Good Friday, but does not seem to have been received into the more important Breviaries. It long survived in its original form in the Lutheran Church, Rhodes, Benjamin, b. at Methow, 1743, was brought under the influence of George Whitfield of a school of a good education many years before his professional life began. He was sent forth to Margate Oct. 13, 1768, and his Hymns and his Works, succeeding Charles Wesley, adorn the volume with hymns. Very They include: (Duty) Join our God shall nestle an Stealing.) His heart and voice I Christ. It appears Messiah, 1787. Each part is in use as a separate hymn.

Rhys, Morgan, writer of the several collections of titles. Gogeben of the View of the Mr. Nebo, or Christian Warfare. Grandfather Grohmann of the Welsh, and was buried in the marshes.

Richards, George, Rhode Island, circa 1755. For some years he was in the United States school in Boston. In Universalist preacher, New Haven, 1803 in Philadelphia, and given way under trouble. In 1816, with S. Lane, he published the Universalist Hymn Book. This was one that body, it contains the hymns. In 1801 he published the Universalist Hymn Book, containing 1500 additional hymns by himself, and in 1816, another 26 hymns are in C. U. at the present time.

Long as the darkening cloud abode. Easter. This hymn was composed, as the Songs of the Sanctuary, 1865, No. 687, is composed thus: st. 1 and ii., II. 1-4, are from Richards, and the rest of the hymn, 3 st. of 81 in all, is anonymous.

Additional hymns by Richards, from both the Boston and the Dover collections, are in modern Universalist hymn-books. [F. M. B.]

Richards, James, a. of the Hon. James Richardson, of Dedham, Massachusetts, was in that town May 23, 1817, and graduated at Harvard College, 1837. After being engaged, first as a clerk of the county court, and then in teaching, he entered the Divinity School at Cambridge, where he graduated in theology in 1845. Subsequently he was Unitarian Pastor at Southington, Connecticut, and then of the Unitarian Society in Haverhill, Massachusetts. Ill-health compelled him to retire from his pastoral work to Dedham. During the war he joined himself to the hospital at Washington, where he d. Nov. 10, 1863. Mr. Richardson was well known as an Essayist, Poet, and Preacher. Two of his hymns, from Longfellow and Johnson's Book of Hymns, 1848, are still in C. U.: "From Zion's holy hill there rose" (One in Christ), and "How glad the tone when with God's own name." (Summer). We are indebted to Putnam's Singers and Songster of the Liberal Faith, Boston, U. S. A., 1875, for these details.

Richter, Anna, née Rigby, was the third daughter of the Rev. Robert Rigby, Vicar of St. Mary's, Beverley, Yorkshire, from 1791 to 1823, and married the Rev. W. H. Richter, sometime Chaplain of the County Gaol at Kirtom Lindsey, Lincolnshire, and then Rector of St. Paul's, Lincoln. Mrs. Richter d. at 23 Minster Yard, Lincoln, in 1854. She contributed to various magazines, and pub. The Nun and Other Poems, Hull, 1841. Her intimate literary acquaintances included Mrs. Hemans. Mrs. Richter was descended from the celebrated John Bradshaw, whose name is the first in the list of the signatures on the death warrant of Charles I. Her hymn, "We have not seen Thy footsteps," is "as we saw Thee not when Thou didst come," is widely used in Great Britain and America.

Richter, Christian, of Sigismund Richter, Rath and Chancellor to Count von Prommitz at Sora, in Brandenburg, was born at Sorau, Oct. 5, 1676. At the University of Halle he was first a student of medicine and then of theology. In 1698, A. H. Francke appointed him Inspector of the Paedagogium, and then made him, in 1699, physician in general to all his Institutions. In company with his younger brother, Dr. Christian Sigismund Richter, he made many chemical experiments, for which he prepared himself by special prayer; and invented many compounds which came into extensive use.
under the name of the "Halle Medicines," the most famous being the *Essenitia, which was a preparation of gold. He d. at Halle, Oct. 5, 1711 (Koch, iv. 354. &c.).

Richter was one of the most important hymn-writers among the Pietists of the earlier Halle school; and his hymns possess the defects as well as the excellences of his school. They are emotional, and develop the idea of the spiritual union with Christ as the Bridegroom of the soul, with a minuteness that is hardly reverent (e.g.
No. xl. below). They are also frequently not clearly thought out, and consequently somewhat obscure.
Various of them are in unusual metres, and were wedded to tunes not very devotional in character. Apart from these defects there are various of his hymns worthy of note for their genuine, fervent, childlike spirit of love to God, and the depth of Christian experience embodied in them. They appeared principally in the various Pietistic hymn-books of the period, especially in Freylinghausen's *G. B., 1704 and 1714, and were collected and append- ed (as his Geistliche Lieder) to an essay edited by his brother (named above) and pubd. at Halle, in 1718, *Erbarliche Betrachtungen von Ur-sprung und Adel der Seden.

Two of Richter's hymns are noted separately

5. Surely at the appointed time. By H. L. Hastings, made in 1878, and included as No. 722 in his Songs of Pilgrimage, 1886. It condenses iii. iv. as iii.

6. The time draws near with quickening pace. By Miss Fry, in her Hymns of the Reformation, 1845, p. 56.

A hymn which has been frequently but erroneously called a fr. from Ringwald's text, is noted as "Great God, what do I see and hear" (p. 644. I.).

Hymns not in English C. U.

ii. Allein auf Gott setzen dein Vertrauen. The Christian Life. In many of the older German hymn-books this is ascribed to Ringwald, but it is not found in any of his works now extant. Wackernagel, iv. p. 98, gives it as anonymous from the Grafswalde G. B., 1627, where it is entitled "The golden A. B. C. wherein is very ingeniously comprised what a man needs to know in order to lead an honourable and godly life." It is in 24 st. of 4 l., each stanza beginning with successive letters of the alphabet. Also in Pors's ii. B., ed. 1636. No. 784. Raumberg, ii. p. 274, cites it as in the 8th. collection of a number called Catherine Tirs, written in 1788, in the registry of Niesing, Münster. There is it in Low German, and begins "Allein auf Gott setzen dein Vertrauen. Raumberg thinks Ringwald may possibly be the person who made the High German version. Tr. as (1) "Alone in God put thy trust." By J. C. Jacob, 1735, p. 29 (1732, p. 119).

iii. Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt, Halt mich in seiner Weise. Ps. xiii. Wackernagel, iv. p. 94, prints it from Ringwald's Evangelia, n. p., 1582 as above, in 7 st. of 8 l. The first 4 lines of the st. are taken from the older version, "Der Herr ist mein treuer Hirt." In the Münster Rosenberg G. B., 1854, No. 512. Tr. as (1) "The Lord is my Shepherd kind." By Miss Manning, 1863, p. 29.

iv. Herr Jesu Christ, du höchstes Gut, Du Brunnquell der Gnadeinst. Lont. One of the finest of German penitential hymns. Wackernagel, iv. p. 102, gives it, in 8 st. of 7 L., from Ringwald's Christliche Warnung, 1608, where it is entitled "A fine hymn of supplication for the forgiveness of sins." In Burg's G. B., Breisgau, 1746, No. 1574. The fr. are (1) "Lord Saviour Christ, my sovereign good." In the Supplement to the German Psalter, ed. 1755, p. 39. Rewritten as (2) "Lord Jesus Christ, my sovereign good," as No. 226 in the Moravian H. B., 1769. In the ed. of 1796, No. 276, it begins "Jesus, thou source of every good." (3) "O Christ, thou chasteest good, thou springing." By Dr. G. Walker, 1849, p. 74. (4) "Lord Jesus Christ, thou highest good." By W. Young, in the Poetical Treasury, 1877, p. 653. [J.M.] Rinkart, Martin, s. of Georg Rinkart or Rinckart, cooper at Eilenburg on the Mulde, Saxony, was b. at Eilenburg, April 23, 1586.* After passing through the Latin school at Eilenburg, he became, in Nov. 1601, a foundation scholar and chorister of the St. Thomas's School at Leipzig. This scholarship also allowed him to proceed to the University of Leipzig, where he matriculated for the summer session of 1602, as a student of Theology; and after the completion of his course he remained for some time in Leipzig (he did not take his M.A. till 1616). In March 1610 he offered himself as a candidate for the post of diaconus at Eilenburg, and was presented by the Town Council, but the Superintendent re fused to sanction this act on the ground that Rinkart, a musician than theologian he was unwilling to have a native of Eilenburg, a man with his own will of his own, to contest the matters. Rinkart entered on his duties the month of June, 1610, as sixteenth man of the St. Nicholas Church this appointment for a few diocesan of St. Anne's's a stall of Eisleben, and on May 28, 1611; and the Eislebarn and Lyttich near Eisleben, entering on Dec. 5, 1613. Finally in the Town Council of Eilenburg diocesan there, and in residence at Eilenburg.

Dr. Lincke, 1886, as above, gives a list of the first lines of all the hymns in the works of Rinkart which have come under his notice, and prints a selection from them, including 66 in all. The best of them are characterised by a true patriotism, a childlike devotion to God, and a firm belief in Predestination, mercy, and His promised help and grace. A few passed into the German hymn-books. Those which have been tr. into English are:—

1. Alleluja. Lob, Preis und Ehr. This hymn, noted at p. 482, seems to be based on two hymns, beginning with the same first line, and both found in Rinkart's Brust Messse, 1642. Dr. Lincke does not print the full text. (See Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 91.)

2. Nun danket alle Gott. Thanksgiving. The oldest text now accessible is in J. Crüger's Privtis, 1648, No. 183, in 3 st. of 8 l.; also in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 187. It is also in Rinkart's Jesu Hertz-Büchlein, 1659, where the text slightly varies, and is entitled "Grace" ("Tisch-Gebetlein," i.e. a short prayer at table). There does not seem any good reason for supposing that it did not appear in the 1st ed., 1636, of the Hertz-Büchlein, and in any case it has no connection with the Peace of Westphalia. (A good specimen of the way in which stories of hymns not manufactured in the Sunday in Homoe Aug., 1888, p. 539, where a full and particular account is given of its legendary origin in Nov. 1648.) It is founded on ecclesiastical l. 22-24; and st. i., ii. are indeed little more than a paraphrase of those verses, st. iii. being a version of the Gloria Patri. The fact that the regimental chaplains, when holding the special service of thanksgiving for the conclusion of the Peace, were commanded to preach from this passage, may have suggested the theory that Rinkart's hymn was written for the same occasion. It gradually came into general use, especially in the period of Rationalism, and is now to be found in every German hymn-book, e.g. in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1683, No. 1022. It must be called the German Te Deum, and as such is used at all national festivals or special occasions of thanksgiving. It was first used at the festival of the completion of Cologne Cathedral, on Aug. 14, 1880, at the laying of the foundation stone of the new Reichstags building in Berlin, by the Emperor William, June 9, 1884, &c.

The fine melody (set to the hymn in H. A. & M.) and most recent English collections appears in the Privtis, 1848 (Crüger's Kirchenmelodien, 1649, No. 94), and in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1653, is marked with Crüger's initials. It has been described as adapted from a melody by Lucio Marconcini (choirmaster at Rome, who d. 1598), or as adapted from a motet by Rinkart; but to prove either statement, very little evidence is forthcoming.

The tr. of the hymn into English are:—

1. Let all men praise the Lord. This is a tr. of st. i., ii., iii., by Alfred Novello, as part of his version of the Word-book to Mendelssohn's Lobgeden, or Hymn of Praise, 1843, p. 49. This form has passed into a number of hymnals, including the N. C. G., 1859; Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1874, and others. In the Baptist Hym., 1879, a tr. of st. ii. is added, of which ll. 1-4 are from Miss Winkworth's tr.

2. Now praise the Lord on high. In full as No. 53 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848. This appears to be the version which Kübler, in his Hist. Notes to the Lyra Germanica, 1865, p. 247, says was made by Baron C. K. von Bunsen, for the opening of the German Hospital at Dalston, on Oct. 15, 1845.

4. O let us praise the Lord. From hearts by true love guided. This is No. 240 in the Winchester Ch. H. Bk., 1857, and seems to be intended as a paraphrase of the German.

5. Now thank we all our God. A full and very good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Ghosts, 2nd ed., 1858, p. 145, repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 11, and her Christian Singers, 1868, p. 181. It has been included in many recent English and American hymnals, e.g. H. A. & M., 1861; People's Hymn., 1877; Cong. Hym., 1887, &c., and in America in the Epis. Hym., 1871; Pred. Hym., 1874, and many others, generally in full and unaltered.

6. Now all give thanks to God. In full as No. 264 in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868 (1871, No. 507), marked as a versification by R. C. Singleton. Repeated in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876.

7. Now all men thank ye God. In full by T. E. Brown, as No. 37 in the Clifton College H. Bk., 1872.

The trs. are:—

(1) "Now let us praise the Lord." In full by J. T. Jacobs, 1722, p. 85 (1752, p. 144), repeated, altered, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754 to 1842. (2) "Now all, to God give thanks." By Dr. H. Mills, in the Krung Gesangbuch, Gettysburg, 1841, p. 503, and his Horae Ger., 1846, p. 14. (3) "Lift heart, and hands, and voice." By Miss Ox., 1844, p. 239. (4) "Now all give thanks to God." By J. B. Hurn, 1849, p. 252. (5) "All hearts give thanks to tongues and hands." By N. L. Proskrims, 1870, p. 212.

iii. So fahr ich bin mit Freuden. For the Dying. In his Meusische Threnen-Saal, 1637, No. 24, p. 19, in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled "Even the same, and her soul-rejoicing Farewell hymn. On May 8th." St. i. is:

So fahr ich bin mit Freuden
Aus diesem Jammerthalt,
Aus Angst, Gefahr und Leiden
In Himnale-Freuden Saal,
Da wir und alle Frommen
Durch Gott es Wundermacht Zusammen wiederkommen
In des zuer Nacht.

The title refers to the preceding hymn, which is in 19 st., the initials of the sts. forming the acrostic Christin Rinckard. Dr. Lincke abridges it and misprints the title, which is:—

From this it is clear that both hymns are in memory of his wife, that she died on May 8, 1637, and that her funeral sermon was preached by her husband on May 10, 1637. The form tr. into English is the greatly altered, or rather practically new text which is noted under Sturm, Leonard (q.v.).

A version of the "Jesu dulcis memoria," made by Rinkart, is noted at p. 595, i. [J. M.]

Rippon, John, D.D., was h. at Tiverton, Devon, April 29, 1751, and was educated for the ministry at the Baptist College, Bristol. In 1773 he became Pastor of the Baptist church in Carter Lane, Tooley Street (afterwards removed to New Park Street), London, and over this church he continued to preside until his death, on Dec. 17, 1836. The degree of D.D. was conferred on him in 1782 by the Baptist College, Providence, Rhode Island. Dr. Rippon was one of the most popular and influential Dissenting ministers of his time. From 1790 to 1802 he issued the Baptist Annual Register, a periodical containing an account of the most important events in the history of the Baptist Denomination in Great Britain and America during that period, and very valuable now as a book of reference. But his most famous work is his Selection of Hymns for public worship, which appeared in 1787. The full title of the 1st ed. is A selection of Hymns from the best authors, intended as an Appendix to Dr. Watts’s Psalms and Hymns. In 1791 he pub. a Selection of Psalms and Hymn Tunes from the Best Authors, adapted to Dr. Watts’s Psalms and Hymns, and to his own Selection, and from that time the names of tunes were prefixed to the hymns in the successive editions of his hymn-book. In 1800 he pub. the 10th ed. of his Sel., containing more than sixty additional hymns. In 1827 it was still further enlarged, and in 1844, after his death, appeared The Comprehensive Edition, commonly known as The Comprehensive Rippon, containing most of the additional hymns, with about 400 then first added, making in all upwards of 1170, in 100 metres. A rival to the Comprehensive was also afterwards published under the old title, somewhat enlarged. In the preparation of the original book, and its subsequent improvement, Dr. Rippon performed an important service to Baptist Hymnody, and also, it is said, gained for himself “an estate” through its immense sale. In the preface to the 10th ed. he claims for himself the authorship of some of the hymns, but as he refrained from affixing his name to any of the hymns it is impossible now to say with certainty which ought to be ascribed to him. There can, however, be no reasonable doubt that hymn 535, 3rd part, “The day has dawned, Jehovah comes” (q.v.), is one of his compositions. Other hymns, probably by him, are, “Amid the splendours of Thy state” (Lore of God), 1800, and “There is joy in heaven, and joy on earth” (Joy over the Repenting Sinner), 1787. He also altered the texts of and made additions to several of the older hymns. Some of these altered texts (see Index of Authors and Translators) are still in C. U. In 1830 the additions given in the 27th ed., 1827, of Rippon’s Sel. were reprinted, with notes by Dr. Slater, as:

Hymns Original and Selected; interspersed in the Twenty-seventh edition of the Selection, with Numerous improvements, in the Usual, the Peculiar, and in the less common metres. By John Rippon, D.D.

A 2nd ed. of this pamphlet of 82 hymns and doxologies appeared in 1832. [W. R. S.]

RIST, JOHANN

Years War almost emptied the University, and Rist himself also lay there for weeks ill of the pestilence. After his recovery he seems to have spent some time at Hamburg, and then, about Michaelmas, 1588, became tutor in the house of the lawyer (Laudschreiber) Heinrich Sager, at Hvide, in Holstein. There he betrothed himself to Elizabeth, sister of the Judge Franz Staffel, whose influence seems to have had a good deal to do with Rist's appointment as pastor at Weilburg. In the spring of 1585 he married and settled at Weilburg on the Elbe, a few miles below Hamburg), where, spite of various offers of preference, he remained till his death, on Aug. 31, 1607. (Johann Rist und seine Zeit, by Dr. T. Hansen, Hallo, 1872; K. Goedcke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 79; Koch, iii., 212; Bode, p. 138, &c. The statements of the various authorities regarding the period 1624-1635 vary greatly and irreconcilably.)

During the Thirty Years War Rist had much to endure from famine, plunder, and pestilence. Otherwise he led a patriarchal and happy life at Weilburg, close to the congenial society of Hamburg, and as years went on he more and more esteemed and honoured by his contemporaries. He married in 1587, crowned with the same in 1644, and in 1653 raised him to the nobility, while nearer home Duke Christian of Mecklenburg appointed Rist in 1625 to take the presidency of the German States Assembly, and in 1645 to be a member of the German literary society. Among other literary honours he was received in 1645 as a member of the Pneumatics in Augsburg, 1653, as a member of the University of Göttingen, 1663, and in 1665 he himself became the founder and head of the Elbian Swedish Order, which however did not survive his death.

Rist was an earnest pastor and a true patriot. He of course took the side of the Protestants, but he longed for the union of the scattered elements of the body politic in Germany. He was a voluminous and many-sided writer (see the full bibliographies in Hansen and Goedcke as above). His secular works are of great interest to the student of the history of the times, and his occasional poems on marriage, &c., to the genealogist and local historian. Perhaps the most interesting to the general reader are the Friderischische Tractien, 1447, and the Friderischische Tracht und Deutschen, 1643, two plays in which are vivid pictures of the times, especially of the condition of the lower classes during the Thirty Years War. These plays, with selections from his other secular poems and from his hymns, are included in his Deutsche Dichtungen, Leipzig, 1853, ed. by Goedcke and E. Goethe. Hansen gives analyses of the secular works, with a few extracts from them; and in his second part gives a full selection from the hymns, often however greatly abridged.

As a hymn-writer Rist takes high rank. He wrote some 680 hymns, intended to cover the whole ground of theology, and to be used by all ranks and classes, and on all the occasions of life. Naturally enough, they are not of equal merit, and many are poor and bombastic. Rist meant them rather for private use than for public worship, and during his lifetime they never were used in the church at Weilburg. But they were eagerly caught up, set to melodies by the best musicians of the day, and speedily passed into congregational use all over Germany, while even the Roman Catholics read them with delight. Count 283 may be said to have been in C. U. in Germany, and a larger number still hold their place. Unfortunately many are very long. But speaking of Rist's better productions, we may say that their noble and classical style, their objective Chris- tina's faith, their scripturality, their power to console, to encourage, and strengthen in trust upon God's Fatherly love, and their fervent love to the Saviour (especially seen in the best of his hymns for Advent, and for the Holy Communion), sufficiently justify the esteem in which they were, and are, held in Germany. The best known of Rist's hymns appeared in the following collections:

1. Hymnische Lieder. This contains 50 hymns. The parte Zehn is dated Lüneburg, 1644, the 2-5 Zehen are dated 1642 (Royal Library, Berlin). In the latter part Rist made various alterations, and also expanded the titles of the hymns, these changes being almost all for the worse. (2) Neue Evangelische Lieder anderworts mit einem Boch, Lüneburg, 1652 (Wernigerode Library). 50 hymns.

Seven of Rist's hymns are separately noted under their German first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators). The others which have passed into English are:

1. De Lesenbrud. Herr Jesu Christ. Holy Communion. In his Hausmusik, 1654, No. 7, p. 32, in 8 st. of 8 l., entitled "A devotional hymn, which may be sung when the people are about to take their place at the Holy Communion of the Lord." Founded on Ps. xxiii. Included as No. 473 in the Berlin C. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:

Lord Jesu Christ, the living bread. A good tr. of st. i., ii., iii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 159 in his Ps. of Hymns, 1851.

2. Ehr und Dank sei dir gesungen. On the Angel. In his Fest-Andachten, 1655, No. 46, p. 304, in 9 st. of 10 l., entitled "Another hymn of Praise and Thanksgiving on the same Gospel [S. Matt. xviii.] for St. Michael's Day. In which the great God who created the Angels, and appointed them for our service, is from the heart adored and praised." Included in Burg's G. R., Breslah, 1746, No. 219, and in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 233. The tr. in the C. U. are:

3. Glory, praise, to thee be sung. A tr. of st. i. as No. 1224 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1884.

3. Ermutz dieich, mein schwacher Geist. Christmas. Founded on Isaiah ix. 2-7. 1st pub. in the Ersten Zehen of his Hymnische Lieder, 1641, No. 1, p. 1, in 12 st. of 8 l., entitled "A hymn of praise on the joyful Birth and Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Included in Cruger's Praxis, 1656, No. 87, and recently, omitting st. vii., as No. 32 in the C. L. S., 1851. The tr. in the C. U. are:

1. Be cheerful, thou my spirit faint. A tr. of st. i. by J. Gambold, as No. 138 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754; repeated as st. i. of No. 437, altered to "Arise my spirit, leap with joy," and with his tr. of st. ii., iv., vi. added. In the ed. of 1789, No. 48 (1860, No. 41), it begins, "Arise, my spirit, bless the day."

2. O Jesu! welcome, gracious Name! This is a tr. of st. i., vi., xii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 55 in his Ps. of Hymns, 1851.

Another tr. is "My languid spirit, upward spring." By N. L. Frothingham, 1756, p. 179.

iv. Gott sei gebetet, der allein. Joy in God. In his Neue Hymnische Lieder, 1651, p. 126, No. 9, in 13 st. of 7 l., entitled "A joyful hymn of Thanksgiving to God, that He permits us to enjoy our daily bread in health, peace and prosperity, with a humble prayer that He would graciously preserve us in the same." Included in Olearius's Singe-Kunst, 1671, No. 322, and recently in Knapp's Er. L. S., 1856, No. 1086 (1855, No. 1766). The tr. in C. U. is:—

v. Jeu, der du meine Seele. Lent. In the Erstes Zehn of his Hindische Lieder, 1641, p. 35, No. 7, in 12 st. of 8 l., entitled "A heartfelt hymn of penitence to his most beloved Lord Jesus, for the forgiveness of his many manifold sins," Founded on prayer viii. in Class iii. of J. Arndt's Paradiesgärten, 1612. In the Uran. L. S., 1851, No. 382. The tr. in C. U. are:—
1. Thou hast cancelled my transgression. A tr. of st. vi., vii., No. 1022, in the Suppl. of 1808 to the Morning H. Bk., 1801 (1886, No. 107).
2. Jeu! Who is sorrowing. A free tr. of st. i., iii., ii. 1-4, v. ii. 5-8, xii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 78 in his Ps. of Hymns, 1851.

vi. O Jeu, meine Wonne. Holy Communion. This beautiful hymn appears in Rist's Hausmusik, 1854, No. 9, p. 42, in 14 st. of 4 l., entitled "The heartfelt Thanksgiving of a pious Christian when he has partaken of the Holy Communion." In the Uran. L. S., 1851, No. 285. The tr. in C. U. is:— O Sun of my salvation. A good tr. of st. i., iii., vi., vii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 160 in his Ps. of Hymns, 1851.

Another tr. is:—"O Christ, my joy, my soul's delight." By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 65.

vii. Werde leucht, du Stadt der Heiden. Epiphany. In his Fest-Andachten, 1655, p. 82, No. 13, in 15 st. of 6 l., entitled "Another festival hymn of the day of the Manifestation of Christ, in which the glorious, godlike, and eternal Light, which has graciously arisen on us poor heathen in thick darkness, is devotedly contemplated," in the Uran. L. S., 1851, No. 82. Tr. as:—
1. All ye Gentile lands awake. A good tr. of st. i., iv., vii., viii., ix., xii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 30. Repeated, abridged, in Schaaf's Christ in Song, 1869 and 1870, and in Flett's Col., Paisley, 1871.

O Living Bread from Heaven. A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 103; repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 94, omitting the trs. of iii., vi., vii. Her trs. of st. i.-ili., ix. were included, slightly altered, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868.

The following have also been tr. into English:—

Ritter, Jakob, s. of a senator of the Court of Augsburg, became a Magdeburg administrator, and died in the city, 1597. His works are:—
Jesu, der du meine Seele. Lent. Founded on Ps. xxix., 1851, p. 132 (No. 104). This form is in Burg's G. B., in his Hausmusik, 1654, p. 3 to 6 st. of 12 l., and of this he says: "Man lebt dich in der Stille." In many hymn-books, as the No. 1018. The tr. from this prayer ascended. In the Uran. L. S., 1851, No. 285, repeated in Reid's New Psalter.

Ritter's hymns appeared in Daniel Sennert's (b. at Breslau, 1609, d. at Halle, May 22, 1651) collection of his university days, which was appointed secretan for the administration, and was printed near Weissenfels. H. d. 1663. (Koch, iii. 352; Böhr 1886, p. 2. In the latter see below, is spoken of the hitherto inspected by present J. C. L. Klopstock, dated Halle, 1666. The text of each of which Ritter added these hymns are worthy of note, conciseness and by living faith use in Germany, and one has viz.:—

1. Die ihr euch von Christenheit. In 1654, as above, p. 150, which is entitled, "On the call Christian." The hymn is in 6 st. and concise delineation of true Christianity. Included in the Berlin G. L. B., ed. 1883, No. 0, your Saviour's name will be full tr. by Miss Cox, in her Col. 1841, p. 121. Her st. i.-ili., Alford's Ps. of Hymns, 1844, 8vo and others. The same cento, also ye who bear your Saviour's name. Another tr. is: "O ye who have not the name." By Lady E. Porteous, 1852.

Roberts, Frederick
London in March 1835; s. of Rev. James Roberts, educated at Edinburgh, and commenced 1859 in Liverpool, who of the Richmond Baptist Church, and in 1883 of the Hillside Church, Glasgow, a position he has held Roberts has written some of the most which have appeared in the genus for School and Home lines and respective dates at:
1. In the name of Jesus, Sain Jesus. (1877.)
2. O Bless the Lord, and praise God's goodness. (1881.)
3. O Lord, our Strength and Saviour. (1886.)

Robbins, Chandler
Lynn, Massachusetts, Feb. 1844, and entered at Harvard College Cambridge Divinity School he became Pastor of the Second [Unitarian] Church, Boston, succeeding Dr. H. Ware, jun., and Ralph Waldo Emerson. He received his B.D. degree from Harvard in 1853, and d. at Westport, Mass., 22d of December, 1862. Dr. Robbins was a long, several prose works. He also noticed the "Social Hymn Book in 1843, and "Hymns for Christian Worship," 1854. His two hymns, "I. O. the day of rest destined" (Evening), and "While thus [now] Thy throne of grace we seek" (The Voice of God), appeared in Dr. Cox's Hymns for the Sanctuary, 1845. L. B. Barnes's tune, "Bed- ford Street," was written for the former.

[F. M. B.]

Robbins, Samuel Dowse, M.A., brother of Dr. Chandller Robbins, was b. in Lynn, Massachusetts, March 7, 1812, and was educated for the ministry at the Cambridge Divinity School. In 1835 he became Pastor of the church of the Unitarian congregation in his native town, and subsequently held pastorates at Chelsea (1840), Farningham (1859), and Wayland (1867), and retired from the last in 1873. Four of his hymns are given in the Boston Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Book, 1868:

1. Thou to the cloud to-day, "Sanctus, Saviour, when Thy bread is break. Holy Communion.

3. Then art my morning, God of Light. Daily Hymn.

4. Thou art our Master, Thou of God the Son: Christ the Master.

These, together with other hymns and poetical pieces, are in Putnam's Singers and Songs, &c., 1875, and the text of No. 3 is revised therein. We are indebted to Putnam for these details.

Robert the Second, King of France, surnamed "Le Page" and "Le Dévot," b. circa 1770, was the s. of Hugh Capet, the first of the line of kings that succeeded the Carolingian monarchy on the French throne. After having been associated with his father in the government of the kingdom, in 1898 he became king in his own right. The story of his life, rather than of his reign, is a sad one; troubles both in his family and without so multiplying upon him that it needed all the consolation that he sought and found in religion to enable him to bear up against them. Having in 1835 or 1836 espoused Bertha, the widow of Eudes, Count of Chartres, and daughter of Conrad the Pacific, his cousin in the fourth degree (a marriage at that time strictly forbidden by the Roman Catholic Church), he was commanded by a decree of Pope Gregory V. to put her away. He was tenderly attached to her, and refused, whereupon he was excommunicated. This sentence caused the unhappiest to be abandoned by all their courtiers, and even their servants, with the exception of two of the latter. After living together for a while in a state of secrecy, nay, almost of absolute seclusion, Bertha was delivered of a still-born infant, which was represented to Robert to have been a monster with "a head and neck like a goose." On hearing this (for the fond husband was but a weak and credulous man), Robert repudiated his wife, who thereupon retired into a nunner.

Subsequently, probably about 1802, he married Constance, a daughter of the Count of Arles, by whom he had four sons and two daughters. Much of the misery of his later life resulted from this marriage; for in addition to the antagonism which existed in their tastes and pursuits, Constance endeavored to secure the kingdom for her youngest son Robert, to the exclusion of the third son Henry (Hugh, the eldest, having died, and Eudes, the second, being an idiot), and this led to constant domestic broils which embittered the gentle king's existence. In 1824 he refused (and wisely) the Imperial Crown of the House of Saxon, when the French offered it to him on the death of Henry II., the last of the Saxon Emperors. Robert spent much of his time in the society of monks, assisting in the services of the Church, and engaging on pious pilgrimages. It was upon his return from one of the latter to some of the principal sanctuaries of France that he was attacked by a fever, to which he succumbed at Thion in 1031, in the 60th year of his age and the 34th of his reign—more deeply lamented by his people, to whom he had attached himself by the sweetness and simplicity of his character, than by any other king, probably, who ever reigned in France. Robert had a great love for, and skill in, church music, and it is not improbable that compositions of his are even at this day in use in the services of his Church. (D. S. W.)

It has been the custom to speak of King Robert as a hymn-writer. But when the different authorities come to specify the pieces which he is said to have composed, their statements are hopelessly at variance. For the purposes of this article we shall take tour ancient authorities:

(a) and (b) In the Revue des Historiens des Gaules et de la France, vol. 2, Paris, 1764, pp. 297-300, there are extracts ex chronicis Nitidens (a); and also "ex chronico Alberic ad annum 997." (b)

(c) In the Ludus Regiae, 121, in the *Bodeleian there is a list of authors of sequences, written about 1300. This list is given in the article Sequences (q.v.).

(d) William Turandus (d. 1296) in his Rationalia, Bk. iv., has a section "in pro se secundum." This occurs in two mas. of the 14th cent. in the British Museum [Add. 13904, f. 20 b.; Reg. 7 E., v., f. 53.] An earlier and finer ms. than either (Add. 31072) has unfortunately lost the leaf containing this section.

By these four authorities the following hymns and sequences are ascribed to King Robert:

1. Chorus mater Jerusalem.

2. Regem omnipotentem die bodeaer.

3. Sancti Spiritus adit nobis gratia.

4. Veni Sancte Spiritus.

5. Victima Pascalli.

But of these 5 only ascribes to him No. 3, and does not mention Nos. 1, 2, 4 or 5, while ascribes to him Nos. 2 and 3, and does not mention Nos. 1, 4 or 5. On the other hand b ascribes to him No. 5, while No. 3 it ascribes to Hermannus Contractus, and Nos. 1, 2, 4 it does not mention at all. Lastly d ascribes to him Nos. 1 and 4, but ascribes to Nos. 2 and 3 to Hermannus Contractus, and does not mention No. 5. Taking these in detail, we find No. 1 is only ascribed to King Robert by a, and seems more probably to be by Fulbert of Chartres (see p. 234, i). No. 3, seems without doubt to be by Notker Balbulus (see note on "Sancti Spiritus adit"). For No. 5 see note on "Vitamue Pascalli." No. 2 is noted at

Robinson, Charles Seymour, D.D., was b. at Bennington, Vermont, March 31, 1829, and educated at William College, 1849, and in theology, at Union Seminary, New York (1852-53), and Princeton (1853-55). He became Presbyterian Pastor at Troy, 1855; at Hoboken, 1860: of the American chapel in Paris (France), 1868; and of the Memorial Presbyterian Church, New York. 1870. During 1876-77 he was editor of the Illustrated Christian Weekly. As an editor of hymn-books he has been most successful. His Songs of the Church, 1865; Spiritual Songs, 1875; and Laudis Domini, A Selection of Spiritual Songs, Ancient and Modern, 1881. His Songs for the Sanctuary has probably had a wider sale than any other unofficial American collection of any denomination, and the Laudes Domini is a book of great excellence. Dr. Robinson has contributed a few hymns, including, "Saviour, I follow on," in his Songs of the Church, 1862, and "Isles of the South, your redemption is nearing" (Missions), in his Songs for the Sanctuary, 1885. The latter is given in Dr. Hatfield's Church Bk., 1872, as "Lands long builded." [F. M. B.]

Robinson, George Wade, b. at Cork in 1838, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and New College, St. John's Wood, London. He entered the Congregational Ministry, and was co-pastor at York Street Chapel, Dublin, with Dr. Urwick; then pastor at St. John's Wood, and at Union Street, Brighton. He d. at Southampton, Jan. 28, 1877. He pub. two vols. of poems, (1) Songs in God's World; (2) Loveland. His hymn, "Strangers and pilgrims here below" (Jesus Only), from his Songs in God's World, is in Horatii. Cong. Hye., 1884, in an abridged form; and "Weary with my head of sin" (Contrition), is in the 1874 Suppl. to the New Cong. [W. G. H.]

Robinson, Richard Hayes, was b. in 1842, and educated at King's College, London. He became a member of St. Paul's, Penzance. He subsequently held various charges, including the Octagon Chapel, Bath. He became Incumbent of St. Germans, Blackheath, in 1884. His prose works include Sermons on Faith and Duty, 2nd ed., 1873, and The Creed and the Age, 1884. His hymn "Holy Father, cheer our way" (Evening), was contributed to the P. C. C. Church Hymns, 1871. It was written in 1869 for the congregation of St. Paul's, Upper Norwood, and was designed to be sung after the 3rd Collect at Evening Prayer. It has passed into several collections (sometimes in an altered form), including H. A. & M., 1875, and Thring's Col., 1882. See the latter for the authorized text. [J. J.]

Robinson, Robert, the author of "Come, Thou fount of every blessing," and "Mighty God, while angels bless thee," was b. at Swaffham, in Norfolk, on Sept. 27, 1735 (usually misgiven, spite of his own authority, as Jan. 8), of lowly parentage. Whilst in his eighth year the family migrated to Scarning, in the same county. He lost his father a few years after this removal. His widowed mother was left in sore straits. The universal testimony is that she was a godly woman, and far above her circumstances. Her ambition was to see her son a clergyman of the Church of England, but poverty forlorn, and the boy (in his 15th year) was indentured in 1749 to a barber and hairdresser in London. It was an uncongenial position for a bookish and thoughtful lad. His master found him more given to reading than to his profession. Still he appears to have nearly completed his apprenticeship when he was released from his indentures. In 1752 came an epoch-making event. Out on a frolic one Sunday with like-minded companions, he joined with them in sportively rendering a fortune-telling old woman drunk and incapable, that they might hear and laugh at her predicitions concerning them. The poor creature told Robinson that he would live to see his children and grandchildren. This set him a-thinking, and he resolved more than ever to "give himself to reading." Consequently he went to hear George Whitefield. The text was St. Matthew iii. 7, and the great evangelist's searching sermon on "the wrath to come" haunted him blessedly. He wrote to the preacher six years later penitently and pathetically. For well nigh three years he walked in darkness and fear, but in his 20th year found "peace by believing." Hidden away on a blank leaf of one of his books is the following record of his spiritual experience, the Latin doubting having been used to hold it modestly private:

"Robertus, Michaelis Marisca Robinson filius, natus Swaffham, comitat. Norfolciae, Svorii die sept. 27, 1735. Renatus Sabbati die, MIII. 1752, per predications potestatem Georgii Whitefieldi. Ei gestis doloribus renovationis duo as两家 septem absolutionem plenam gratiamque, per sanguinem precorum Jesu Christi, invint (Tuesday, December 18, 1752) cum honor et gloria in secula seculorum. Amen."

Robinson remained in London until 1758, attending assiduously on the ministry of Gill, Wesley, and other evangelical preachers. Early in this year he was invited as a Calvinistic Methodist to the oversight of a chapel at Mildenhall, Norfolk. Then he removed within the year to Norwich, where he was settled over an Independent Congregation. In 1759, having been invited by a Baptist Church at Cambridge (afterwards made historically famous by Robert Hull, John Foster, and others) he accepted the call, and preached his first sermon there on Jan. 8, 1759, having been previously baptized by immersion. The "call" was simply "to supply the pulpit," but he soon won such regard and popularity that the congregation again and again requested him to accept the full pastoral charge. This he acceded to in 1761, after persuading the people to "open communion." In 1770 he commenced his abundant authorship by publishing a translation from Saurin's sermons, afterwards completed. In 1774 appeared his masculine and unanswerable Arcana, or the Principles of the Late Petitioners to Parliament for Relief in the matter of Subscription. In 1776 was published A Plea for the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ in a Pastoral Letter to a Congregation of Protestant Dissenters at Cambridge.
Dignitaries and divines of the Church of England united with Nonconformists in lauding this exceptionally able, scholarly, and pu-gently written book. In 1777 followed his History and Mystery of Good Friday. The former work brought him urgent invitations to enter the ministry of the Church of England, but he never faltered in his Nonconformity. In 1781 he was asked by the Baptists of London to prepare a history of their branch of the Christian Church. This was resulted, in 1790, in his History of Baptism and Baptist, in and, in 1792, in his Ecclesiastical Researches.
Other theological works are included in the several collective editions of his writings.
He was prematurely worn out. He retired in 1790 to Birmingham, where he was somehow brought into contact with Dr. Priestley, and Unitarians have made much of this, on excessively slender grounds. He died June 9, 1790.
His Life has been fully written by Dyer and by William Robinson respectively, both witt-a bias against orthodoxy. His three changes of ecclesiastical relationship show that he was somewhat unstable and impulsive. His hymns are terse yet melodious, evangelical but not sentimental, and on the whole well wrought.
His prose has all, more or less of the σφοτος ναί [σφοτος ναί], that vehement and enthusiastic glow of passion that belongs to the orator. (Cf. Dyer and Robinson as above, and

Robinson, Robert, was b. in London in 1814, and educated for the Congregational ministry at Highbury College, London. He was pastor successively at Chatteris, Luton, and York Road Chapel, Lambeth, London.
From 1865 to 1884 he was a Secretary of the London Missionary Society. He d. at New Cross, Jan. 10, 1887. His hymns were numerically composed Sunday School Anniversaries at Luton, and York Road Chapel.
They include the following, which have passed into C. U.—:

1. Boisterous scene on earth appear. Written for the Sunday School Anniversary at Luton, in 1860.
2. Hear, gracious God, and from thy throne.
Written for the S. A., Luton, 1853.
3. I love thy house, my Lord, my King. Written for the S. A., Luton, 1853.
4. I’ve been in chase of pleasure. Written for the
S. A., York Road Chapel, 1861.
5. Now while my heart rejoices. Written in 1869.
Major’s Book of Prayers, 1871.
6. Once more with joyous greeting. Written in 1869. In Major’s Hk. of Prayers, 1871.
7. The cheerful chime of Sabbath bells. Written for the S. A., Luton, 1849.
8. Thus in holy convocation. Written in 1869. In Major’s Hk. of Prayers, 1871.
9. While we on earth are raising. Written in 1869.
In Major’s Hk. of Prayers, 1871.
10. Years are rolling, life is wasting. Written for the S. A. at Luton, 1846.

All these hymns are for children, and are specialized adapted to anniversary services.
Most of them are in Major’s Hk. of Prayers for Home and School, 1871; and Sunday Scholar’s Companion.

A. "We can only admire and bless the Father, for electing us to Christ, and for laying on him the iniquities of us all:—the Son, for taking our nature and our debts upon Himself, and for that complete righteousness and sacrifice, whereby he redempted his mystical Israel from all their sins:—and the Holy Ghost, for teaching us (in conversation) to feel our need of Christ, for inspiring us with faith to embrace him, for visiting us with his sweet consolations by shedding his love in our hearts, for sealing us to the day of Christ, and for making us to walk in the path of his commandments:

A frequent and dying prayer for the Holiday Believer in the World.

1. "Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
   Let me hide myself in Thee!
   Let the water and the blood,
   From Thy wounded side which flow'd,
   Be of sin the double cure,
   Cleanse me from its guilt and power.

2. "Not the labors of my hands
   Can fulfill the Law's demands:
   Could my zeal no respite know,
   Com'nd my tears forever flow,
   All for sin could not atone;
   Thou must save, and Thou alone!

3. "Nothing in my hand I bring,
   Simply to Thy Cross I cling;
   Naked, come to Thee for grace;
   Helpless, look to Thee for grace;
   Foul, I to the fountain fly;
   Wash me, Saviour, or I die!

   Whilst I draw this fleeting breath—
   When my e're-strings break in death—
   When sharp the thorns I smart in death—
   When I wound others unknown—
   See Thee on Thy judgment throne—
   Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
   Let me hide myself in Thee!—A. T."

3. In his Ps. & Hymns, 1776, No. 337, this text was repeated as "A Prayer, living and dying," with the changes given in italics in st. iv.

   "While I draw this fleeting breath,
   When my e're-strings break in death,
   When I wound others unknown,
   See Thee on Thy judgment throne,
   Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
   Let me hide myself in Thee!"

In tracing out the subsequent history of this hymn we shall deal with its Text, its Use, its Translations, and its Merits and Usefulness.

4. The Text. In the above quotations we have Toplady's original, and his revised text. Of these we must take the latter as that which he regarded as authorised, and indicate subsequent changes by that standard alone.

These changes include:

(1) The change of st. iii. 1. 2 from "Simply to Thy Cross, &c." to "Simple to Thy Cross, &c." first appeared in Walter Row's ed. of Toplady's Ps. and Hymns, 1787.

(2) "Rock of ages shelter me." This was given in Rippon's Bap. Selection, 1787, and others.

(3) In the 1810 ed. of Rowland Hill's Coll. of Ps. and Hymns, No. 111, st. i.–iii. are given as "Smitten on thy accursed tree."

(4) The most important rearrangement of the 4th st., and that which has gained as great if not a greater hold upon the public mind than the original, is that made by T. Cotterill, and included in his Sel. of Ps. & Hymns, 1815. This reads (the italics indicate the alterations made by Cotterill):

1. "Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
   Let me hide myself in Thee,
   Let the water and the blood
   From Thy wounded side which flow'd,
   Be of sin the double cure,
   Save from wrath, and make me pure.

2. "Should my tears for ever flow,
   Should my soul no language know;
   This for sin could not atone;
   Thou must save, and Thou alone;
   In my hand no price I bring,
   Simply to Thy Cross I cling.

3. "While I draw this fleeting breath,
   When mine e're-strings close in death,
   When I wound others unknown,
   See Thee on Thy judgment throne—
   Rock of ages' cleft for me—
   Let me hide myself in Thee."

(5) In the 8th ed. of his Sel. of Ps. & Hymns, 1819, Cotterill repeated this text with the change in st. i. 1. 4 from "From Thy wounded side which flow'd," to "From Thy side, a healing flood." This text was repeated in J. Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, and is found in a large number of hymn-books both old and new.

(6) The next important change was that made in the 1830 Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. This text is:

   St. 1. Cotterill's of 1815, as above.
   St. iii. Cotterill's, 1815, with I. 2. "When my eyes shall close in death." This is the recognised Methodist version of the hymn in most English-speaking countries.

(7) In 1836 another version was given by W. J. Hall in the Mitre H. Bk., No. 99, as follows:

   St. i. Cotterill, of 1815.
   St. ii. "When mine e're-strings break in death—
   Only to Thy Cross I cling;
   Should my tears for ever flow,
   Should my zeal no language know,
   All for sin could not atone;
   Thou must save, and Thou alone.”

(8) The crucial line of the original, "When my e're-strings break in death," has been altered as:

   1. "When mine e're-strings close in death." Cotterill, 1815, as above.
   2. "When my e're-strings break in death.” Wes. H. Bk., 1820, as above.
   4. "When my e're-strings close in death." J. Kempthorne's Ps. & Hymns, 1810.

(9) Other changes in the text of the hymn might be indicated; but being of minor importance nothing will be gained by their enumeration.

5. Its Use. From 1776 to 1810 this hymn is found in a very limited number of hymn-books. After that date the interest therein grew rapidly until at the present time it is omitted from no hymn-book of merit in the English language. Until Sir R. Palmer's (Lord Selborne) vigorous protest at the Church Congress at York in 1866, most of the altered texts as given above were in common use. Since then in most new hymn-books Toplady's authorised text from his Ps. & Hymns, 1776, has been adopted.

6. Translations. In translating this hymn into other languages (and these translations are very numerous and in many languages), the text used has varied with the materials in the hands of the translator, some taking the text direct from Toplady, some from Cotterill, and others from the Wes. H. Bk., or other
7. Merits and Usefulness. The merits of this hymn are of a very high order whether regarded as a sacred lyric, or as a metrical epitome of certain well-known passages of Holy Scripture. The influence which it has had upon the minds of men, especially amongst the more learned, has been very considerable. The fact that it was quoted by and gave great consolidation to the late Prince Consort in his last illness is well known. This is one, however, of numerous instances of more than ordinary importance, where it has been a stay and comfort in days of peril, and in the hour of death. No other English hymn can be named which has had so broad and firm a grasp upon the English-speaking world.

[J. J.]

Rodigast, Samuel, a. of Johann Rodigast, pastor at Groben near Jena, was b. at Groben Oct. 19, 1849. He entered the University of Jena in 1868 (M. A. 1871), and was in 1870 appointed adjunct of the philosophical faculty. In 1880 he became rector of the Greiffen Gymnasium at Berlin. While in this position he refused the offices of a professorship at Jena and the Rectorships of the Schools at Stralsund.

Finally, in 1898, he became rector of the Greiffen Gymnasium, and held this post till his death. His tombstone in the Kloster-Kirche in Berlin says he d. "die xxix. Mart. a. Mcucl ... actatis anno lx." (Koch, iii. 429; Goedecke's Grundriss, iii. 1877, p. 291; ms. from Dr. Nohl of the Greiffen Gymnasium, &c.). Two hymns have been ascribed to him, one of which has passed into English, viz.:

Was Gott das hat wohlgeltan, Es bleibt geracht sein Wille. Cross and Consolation. This hymn is one of the first rank. It is founded on Deut. xxxii. 4, and has reminiscences of an older hymn by Altenburg (p. 54, l) beginning with the same first line. Wetzel, ii. 396, says it was written in 1675, while Rodigast was at Jena, for his sick friend Severus Gasiorus, precentor (cantor) there, and set to music by Gastorius. It appears in the Hannoverische G. B., Göttingen, 1676, as No. 13 in the Appendix, and is in 6 st. of 8 l. Included in the Schlesischen G. B., 1681, and most recent collections, e.g. as No. 902 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. It was, says Koch, vii. 494, the favorite hymn of Friedrich Wilhelm III. of Prussia, and by his command was performed at his funeral on June 11, 1840.

The beautiful melody, given in the C. B. for England, appears in the Nürnberg G. B., 1690 (not in the ed. of 1678), No. 1290. C. von Winter gezangen, II. p. 347 considered that it by Gastorius, but was by Johann who was in 1675 organist at Erfurt, in Tl set it in metrest form about 1680.

The transit. in C. U. are:—
1. The will of God is on Russell, omitting st. iv. Ps. & Hys., 1851.

2. Whate'er my God ordains is everlast. A good and full worth in her Lynn Ger., 2nd Repeated in full in By. Ryb E. T. Prust's Coll., 1859.

4. What God does, that is by Miss Borthwick, of st. i. in Dr. Paget'scher's Coll., 1st.

5. Whate'er God does in good but free tr. by E. Massie 1866, p. 127. Repeated, omitting st. iv. in J. L. Porter's Coll.

6. Whate'er God does in good tr. omitting st. iii., iv., as in Hymnal, 1871.

8. Whate'er God doth in good in full by H. L. Hastings, Songs of Pilgrimage, 1886.

The passionate and melodious hymns of Richard Crashaw (q.v.) are hardly fitted for congregational use. He translated, amid a variety of other pieces, the "Lauda Sion" of St. Thomas Aquinas; and imitated, with some success, the mellifluous versification of the original. Austin's hymns [see English Hymnody, Early, § x.] were published in his Devotions, in 1698, and in 1702, 1684, and two editions in 1688. Although these hymns are of some merit, they are used chiefly outside of Austin's own communion, and in the form handed down by Dorrington and Hicks.

4. John Dryden, who in common with Crashaw and Austin, was originally a member of the Church of England, was the most noted of a group of translators who in the Prayers of the seventeenth century made translations of the Latin hymns from the Reformed Roman Brewhouse form of 1532. Some of these translations are still found in a few Roman Catholic manuals and hymnals. Dryden's translation of the "Veni Creator Spiritus":

"Creator Spiritus, by Whose aid
The world's foundations first were laid" published as early as 1693, is the best known element. Two other translations by him are given in Scott's Dryden, and repeated in the recent editions of Dryden's Poems. There is strong internal evidence and some traditional grounds for believing that these are but specimens of his efforts in this direction [see Dryden]. The 1685 ed. of the Primer is of this class, although Dryden can scarcely be said to have had any share in the production of the work. A Roman Primer of 1687 contains these translations of the 1685 Primer, and a few which were new.

5. During the eighteenth century very little was done. Alexander Pope held fast to his religion in the midst of much of the false philosophy of his day. He composed in the spirit of a true Christian the exquisite Ode which was suggested by the Emperor Adrian's:

"Animula vagula, blandula, Hospes comœsus corporis."

It is the well-known "Vital spark of heavening flame." His Messiah and his Universal Prayer have given several centos to modern hymn-books. [See Pope, A.] Amongst translations not generally known is one by "T. P.," published about 1740, of St. Thomas Aquinas's "Lauda Sion." Although departing from the original metre, it is fairly meritorious. The last stanza reads:

"Gracious Jesus, Food divine,
Preserve us, feed us, lest we stray:
And through the lonely Vale of Time
Conduct us to the Realms of Day.
Source of uncreated Light!
Matchless goodness! boundless Might!
Fed by Thy Care, thy Bounty blest, Hereafter give thy Flock a place
Amidst thy Guests, a chosen Race,
The Heirs of everlasting Rest."

In 1753 a complete translation of the Roman Brewhouse was pub. in 4 vols., with new translations of the hymns; but it was late in the century before anything approaching to the style and manner of the modern hymn-book appeared, with the exception of a popular "Adoro Te Devote," in the collection of Bishop John Goe practical purposes, and may be supplemented by those of the Rev. E. Caswall; of Cardinal Newman; and The Roman Breviary in English, by the Marquess of Bute, 1878. In this last case given versions of the hymns, antiphons, &c., by various hands.

8. The leading translators are Cardinal Newman, and the Rev. E. Caswall. Others might be named, but their productions are either limited in number, or inferior in quality. The art of translation is very rare and difficult. Many compositions which might pass if accepted as originals, would fail altogether if presented to critical eyes as versions of old and approved hymns of the Church. It is the brightness and delicacy of touch which distinguish the work of a master in translation from the failures of an apprentice. The Veres on Various Occasions, 1888, by Cardinal Newman, contain a priceless collection of hymns for Matins, Lauds, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, and Vespers, on the different days of the week respectively; for Compline, Matins and Lauds of Advent, and the Transfiguration, for a Martyr, and for a Confessor Bishop. These are full of music in every line, and light, which spring from nothing but genius and long practice in the art. Cardinal Newman is one of the great restorers of Roman Catholic Hymnody, not, indeed, through publishing a complete hymn-book; but by being, one might almost say, in himself a type of rhetorical utterance, and the author of several hymns and translations of supreme excellence. The Rev. E. Caswall (q.v.), more than any other, has enriched English Roman Catholic hymnody with a large number of beautiful translations from the Latin. So, for example, his version of the hymn of Prudentius, "Bethlehem of noblest streams," has preserved in both the language and rhythm. How excellently, also, he has translated that sweetest of mediaeval hymns, the hymn of St. Bernard, "Je ne dulcis memoria" ("Je, the very thought of Thee"), noted above.

9. Amongst the original hymn-writers Dr. Faber takes the highest rank. His hymns, audible in the Oratory, are universally remarkable for true poetry. Among those may be mentioned "Jesus is Risen," "The Immaculate Conception," "To our Blessed Lady," "The Will of God," and the "Evening Hymn." Faber has done more than any other Englishman to promote congregational singing amongst the Roman Catholics in Great Britain. The congregation to which he was attached entered into his hymns fervently, and from them they spread to others. He certainly perceived and appreciated as a scholar, and from his standpoint as a Roman Catholic, the double advantage possessed by a Church which sings both in an ancient and modern tongue, making two-fold melody sweetly unto God. He did not prize the less the magnificent hymns of Christian antiquity in Latin, because he taught congregations to sing in the English of to-day. His indebtedness to the Olden Hymns, and to the Wesleys, he freely acknowledged in his Preface to Jesus and Mary, 1849. To these the hymnists—Cardinal Newman, Caswall, and Faber—the Roman Catholic Hymnody in England principally owes its revival.

10. Other names of less importance from a hymnological point of view remain to be noted. If Thomas Moore could be regarded as a Roman Catholic, as he is reckoned by his friend and biographer, Lord John Russell, we should not be able to pass over some Sacred Melodies of his which are well-known, and of extreme beauty. But the work published under the title of Sacred Songs, in 1816, has become so popular, and they are so constantly claimed as the productions of those who attended habitually the Anglican services, that we are unwilling to advance a disputable pretension. Besides, exquisite as they are, they have nothing in them that stamps them with any certain mark of the religion in which Moore was brought up in childhood. "Thou art, O God, the Life and Light." "O Thou Who dry'st the mourner's tears." "The turf shall be my fragrant shrine." "Sound the loud timbrel," and many others, are all of them steeped in that tenderness which touches deeply our human nature, when under the influence of Divine grace. Miss Adelaide Anne Procter had passed a considerable portion of her life before she entered the Roman Catholic Church. She was born in 1835, but did not join the Roman communion until 1851. Sometimes she is truly lyrical, and her verses, Confido et Conquiedo, would be suitable for congregational singing. The same may be said of Our Daily Bread. She does not write in the same manner of pious verse. Hymn to Heaven is lovely of its kind. She is a thinker, but her poetry is more adapted to reading than to practical psalmody. Religion had taken deep root in her mind, and her days were passed in acts of self-denying charity. Other translators and original writers include the Rev. T. J. Potter, who has republished nearly all the Vesper hymns in the Catholic Psalma, 1858; Aylward, Porter, Rawes, Wallace, Coffin, Russell; H. N. Oxenham, a writer of known ability in ecclesiastical subjects in the Saturday Review; Canon F. Oakeley, a scholar of classical taste; Aubrey de Vere, a true poet, author of Antir and Zara, and many others. Charles Kent, and Robert Campbell. Matthew Bridges has also struck nobly many a note of adoration in his Hymns for the Heart for the Use of Catholics, 1848, of which, "Rise, glorious Conqueror, arise," and The Seraph's Song, "Crown Him with many crowns," may be taken as examples.

11. In addition to the Oratory Hymns of the Rev. F. W. Faber, a cheap and popular Roman Catholic hymn-book, pub. by Burns and Oates, has come into very extensive use. It is entitled, Hymns for the Year, a complete Collection for Schools, Missions, and General Use, 1867. It contains 288 of the best-known and most frequently used Roman Catholic hymns; and is found, together with the Oratory Hymns of Dr. Faber, to be an invaluable treasure to Roman Catholics. Some of the "Sacred Songs" touching the Communion of Saints are peculiar to Roman Catholic worship. Nothing, however, can exceed the fervour and depth of devotion and adoration to be found in the hymns addressed to the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit:
the sacred Trinity, and our Lord in his Human and Divine nature. Such, to cause a few only, as My soul, how wonderful Thy art!":
"It is my sweetest comfort, Lord":
"O brightness of Eternal Light":
"I met the Good Shepherd":
"and Lead me to Thy peaceful manner.

12. The latest addition to Roman Catholic Hymnology, is the Anima Sacrae, 1884, of Mr. O'Grady. It is a work of great value, and the Appendix, containing earlier versions of Latin hymns, is the result of much diligent research on Mr. O'Grady's part. In this Appendix will be found the heads of families of versions of Vesper hymns taken from the Primers of 1664, 1615, 1688, and 1708. These versions of some of the best-known Latin hymns have a religious, poetic, and historic, and an ecclesiastical value. They will be a real boon to literature in a branch that has been little cultivated, and to say the truth, undeservedly neglected.

13. The following list contains most of the works associated with English Roman Catholic Hymnody (except the Primers, p. 909), which are noticed above:

9. Lyra Catholic; containing all the Breviary and Missal Hymns, with others from various sources. Translated by Edward Callow, M.A. London, 1844.
15. Saint Wenceslaus's Hymn Book; A Collection of Sacred Hymns for Church Festivals, Retreats, &c. London, w.d. (1840.)
21. Hymns and Poems; Original and Translated, by E. Calvall (being Lyra Catholic, the Mass of Mary, and other poems and hymns in a collected form). London, 1853.
24. Hymns arranged according to the Ecclesiastical Year for use in Catholic Churches. Glasgow, 1876.
Rooke, Thomas, M.A. was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, B.A. 1848, M.A. 1851. Taking holy orders in 1848, he held several curacies and chaplaincies in Ireland till 1881, when he was preferred to the Vicarage of Heckington, with the living of Rollesby, in the diocese of Norwich. Three of his hymns appeared in A. J. Soden's "Universal History," 1885:-

1. Come to Thy Church, O Lord our God, Concentration of a Church!
3. O God, the Holy Ghost, from Father and from Son, For use in Hospitals. [J. J.]

Rooker, Elizabeth. [Parson, E.]

Rorison, Gilbert, LL.D., s. of John Rorison, a merchant of Glasgow, was b. in Renfield Street, Glasgow, Feb. 7, 1821. He was educated at Glasgow University, and at that time he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church. Subsequently he joined the Scottish Episcopal Church, and, after studying for the ministry at Edinburgh under Bishops Terrot and Russell, was ordained by the latter in 1843. He was for some time curate of St. James's, Leith, and of the Episcopal Church, Helsengraven, and then incumbent of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Peterhead. He died at Bridge of Allan, Oct. 11, 1869. In 1851 he edited "Hymns and Anthems for use in the Church Services throughout the Christian Year," Lond., Hope & Co. (Revised, 1860; Appx. 1869. See Scottish Hymnody, § vii. 2). This contains several of his translations, from the Latin. He is widely known through his "Three in One, and One in Three." [J. J.]

Rooke Family. In English Unitarian hymnody William Rooke and three of his children hold honourable positions and are widely known. Taking the father and the children in chronological order we have:-

Rooke, William, the father, was b. March 8, 1753, in Liverpool, of humble origin. After many years of teaching, and three years of work in his father's market garden, he was articled to an attorney, and subsequently practised in Liverpool till 1796, when he withdrew from the profession. From the first literature was his chief delight, and throughout his long career of public usefulness he united its pursuit with the efforts of enlightened patriotism and the advocacy of higher education and reform. Liverpool was a centre of the slave trade, and Rooke was one of the first to raise his voice against the iniquity. At the age of 20 he had already uttered a protest in his descriptive poem "Mount Pleasant," and in 1787 he pub. a longer poem, "The Wrongs of Africa" (Pt. ii. 1788), devoted to the subject. During his brief parliamentary experience as member for Liverpool, in 1807, he had further opportunity of advocating the cause of liberty and humanity. His first great historical work, the "Life of Lorenzo de Medici," was pub. in 1796, and the "Life and Pontificate of Leo the Tenth," in 1805. After withdrawing from his legal practice, Rooke had hoped to be able to devote himself entirely to letters, but the circumstances of his bankrupt, obliged him in 1800 to enter into a banking business, which involved him in commercial troubles, ending in 1820 in his bankruptcy. His library had to be sold, but part of it was bought by friends, and presented to the Liverpool Athenæum, which in 1789 Rooke had been instrumental in founding. In 1822 he pub. "Illustrations of the Life of Lorenzo de Medici," defending the views adopted in his former history, and two years later edited a new edition of Pope's Works, with a life of the poet. He died June 30, 1830. (Cf. The Life of William Rooke, by his son, Henry Rooke, in 2 vols., London, T. Cadell, 1833.) As a member of the congregation of Unitarians meeting in Remembrance Street Chapel, Liverpool, Rooke took part in preparing a "Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Worship," printed for their use in 1818. He contributed eight hymns and the concluding anthem. Of these hymns the following are in C. U. at the present time:-

1. Let our loud song of praise arise. Do se.
2. Go, suffering inhabitant of earth. Life, a Warfare.
4. Thus said Jesus, Go and do. Love to our Neighbour.
5. What is the first and great command? The Commandments.

These hymns are in several Unitarian collections, including Martineau's "Hymns," 1840. No. 3 was written in 1788, as a "secular hymn" of ten stanzas, to be sung at the Benn's Garden Chapel on the Centenary of the Revolution.

Rooke, William Stanley, the son, was b. in 1782, and d. in 1843. He was educated by Dr. Gardiner, of Gateacre, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He was in his father's bank till the failure in 1820, after which he held an office in the Liverpool Court of Passage. His "Poems were pub. in 1843. His hymn "Almighty God, in prayer to Thee" (Death anticipated) appeared in the Liverpool Remembrance Street Col., 1818. It is also in Martineau's "Hymns," &c., 1840, and later collections.

Rooke, Mary Ann, a daughter, was b. in 1795, married to Thomas Jevons, 1825, and d. in 1845. She edited "Poems for Youth, by a Family Circle," Lond., 1820, to which her brothers and sisters contributed. From 1831 she also edited The Sacred Offering, an Annual of original and selected poetry (Liverpool, D. Marple & Co.). Her 7 hymns were pub. in her "Songlets and other Poems, chiefly Devotional," 1845. Of her hymns two are still in C. U.:-

1. [Now I] let your mingling voices rise. Christmas.
2. Thou must go forth alone, my soul. Death Anticipated.

Of these No. 3 was first pub. in her "Poems for Youth," &c., 1820.

Rooke, Jane, a second daughter, was b. in 1797, married to Francis Hornblower in 1836, and d. in 1858. Her "Poems by some of the Authors of Poems for Youth by a Family Circle," were pub. in 1820, and her "Poems in 1843. Her hymns in C. U. are:-

1. How rich the blessings, O my God. Gratitude.
4. Thy will be done, I will not fear. Resignation.

[Rev. W. D. D.] 3 R
Rossetti, Christina Georgina, daughter of Gabriel, and sister of Dante Gabriel and William Michael Rossetti, was b. in London, Dec. 5, 1830, and received her education at home. Her published works include:

1. (1) Golden Market, and Other Poems, 1867; (2) The Prince’s Progress, and Other Poems, 1866; (3) Poems, mainly a reprint of Nos. 1 and 2, 1875; (4) A Pageant, and Other Poems, 1861, &c.

In addition, Miss Rossetti has published several prose works, as:—Annus Domini (a book of prayers for every day in the year), 1874; Letter and Spirit of the Decalogue, 1883, and others. She has written very few hymns avowedly for church worship, but several centos have been compiled from her poems, and have passed into several hymn-books. These include:

1. Dead is thy daughter, trouble not the Master. The Rising of Jairus’s daughter. From her Golden Market, &c., 1882, into Lyra Mystica, 1865.
2. God the Father, give us grace. Invocation of the Holy Trinity. From Lyra Mystica into the Sanny Hymnary, for use in the Chapel Royal, Savoy (see No. 9 below).
3. I bore with thee long weary days and nights. The Love of Christ. From her Golden Market, &c., 1862, into Lyra Messianica, 1864.
4. I would have gone. God bade me stay. Resignation. From her Poems, 1875, into Horder’s Cong. Hymns, 1894, &c.
5. Once I thought to sit so high. A Body cast Thou prepared Me, or Passionable. Contributed to Lyra Becharistica, 1883.
7. The flowers that bloom in sun and shade. The Eternity of God. In Mrs. C. Brock’s Children’s H. Rk., 1884.
8. What are these that glow from afar! Martyrs. Part of the p.-em. “We meet in joy though we part in sorrow,” which appeared in Lyra Mystica, 1865, and then in Miss Rossetti’s Prince’s Progress, &c., 1866. It is the most widely used of her hymns. No. 2 above is also from the same poem.

Miss Rossetti’s verses are profoundly suggestive and lyrical, and deserve a larger place than they occupy in the hymnody of the church. Her sonnets are amongst the finest in the English language.

[W. G. H.]

Rotha, Johann Andreas, s. of Aegidius Rotha, pastor at Lissa, near Görlitz, in Silesia, was b. at Lissa, May 12, 1688. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1708, as a student of Theology, graduated M.A., and was then, in 1712, licensed at Görlitz as a general preacher. In 1718 he became tutor in the family of Herr von Schweinitz at Leube, a few miles south of Görlitz, and while there frequently preached in neighbouring churches. During 1722 Count N. L. von Zinzendorf, happening to hear him preach at Gross-Hennersdorf, was greatly pleased with him, and when the pastorate at Berthelsdorf became vacant shortly thereafter, gave him the presentation. He entered on his duties at Berthelsdorf Aug. 30, 1722. There he took a great interest in the Moravian community at Hernivitz, which formed part of his parish. But when, in 1737, he had to report to the higher ecclesiastical authorities regarding the doctrinal views of the Moravians, Zinzendorf showed his resentment in various ways, so that Rotha was glad to accept a call to Herbstdorf, near Görlitz. Finally, in 1739, Count von Promnitz appointed him assistant pastor at Thonmendorf, near Dunau, where he became chief pastor in 1742, and d. there July 6, 1758. (Koch, v. 240; Winkel’s A. H., ii. 756, &c.)

Rotha was a man of considerable gift, integrity, a good theologian, and an imperious preacher. His hymns, though they can hardly be said to be yet often characterized by good feeling, and by depth of Christian sentiment, are somewhat akin to Zinzendorf’s but the resemblance may arise from which Zinzendorf seems to have best known of them first appeared in books, and were for a time looked upon as Zinzendorf’s. His hymns were at first all written in English as:

1. Ich habe nun den Gruss Beliebing. First pub. in Z. Catholisch. Sinne- und Bel-B. and in the 2nd ed. (N.S.), end of 1727 or beginning of 1728, in No. 1, Beider G. B., 177 first the Lutheran version, it was by Zinzendorf, but it was by Rotha, soon powerful and beautiful by recent German collections (S., ed. 1863, No. 78), and has found a very wide an comfortable and blessing to suggested by Heb. vi. 19.

In the Historische Nachr. 1705, ed. 1832, p. 176, it is said that Zinzendorf’s birthday, May 12, was a misprint for 1725, and that the hymn was printed in 1727. Rotha’s version is also from the same poem.

Miss Rossetti’s verses are profoundly suggestive and lyrical, and deserve a larger place than they occupy in the hymnody of the church. Her sonnets are amongst the finest in the English language.

Round the Sacred City gather. S. J. Stone. [Church Defence.] Written in 1874 for the Church Defence Institution, and issued as a leaflet with music for use at Church Defence Meetings. Several hundreds of thousands have been used in this form. It was given in the author's Knight of Intercession, 3rd ed., 1874, in 7 st. of 8 l., with the heading "Battle Hymn of Church Defence," and "Dedicated to the 'Church Society' of St. Paul's Haggerston." In 1884 it was enlarged to 12 st. of 8 l., for processional use at a grand Choral Festival in Salisbury Cathedral, and began "Sacred city by the river." In its original form it is in several hymnals. Mr. Stone also adapted it for use in the 1889 Suppl. Hymns to H. A. & M. [J. J.]

Roux, Francis (Rouae), was b. at Halton, Cornwall, in 1579, and educated at Oxford. He adopted the legal profession, and was M.P. for Truro during the reigns of James and of Charles I. He also represented Truro in the Long Parliament, and took part against the King and the Bishops. He was appointed a member of the Westminster Assembly; of the High Commission; and of the Triers for examining and licensing candidates for the ministry. He also held other appointments under Cromwell, including that of Provost of Eton College. He d. at Acton, Jan. 7, 1659, and was buried in the Chapel of Eton College. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienses, gives a list of his numerous works. The history of his version of the Psalms is given under Psaulea, English, § xi., respecting its treatment in England, and under Scottish Hymnody, § xli., with regard to its reception and use in Scotland. [J. J.]

Row, Thomas, b. in 1786, was for many years a Baptist minister at Hadleigh, in Suffolk, and Little Gransden, Cambs., and was well known to most of the Calvinistic congregations in the Eastern Counties. He was very singular and methodical in his habits, and for 30 years was a frequent contributor of hymns and other compositions to the Gospel Herald. He d. Jan. 3, 1868. Mr. Row pub. two vols. of hymns. The first was entitled, Concise Spiritual Poems, or Evangelical Hymns on Various Subjects, for the private use of Christians, and also adapted for Public Worship, London, 1817. This was called Book I., and comprised 529 hymns. Book II., including 543 hymns, was pub. in 1822, as Original and Evangelical Hymns on a great variety of subjects, for Private and Public Worship, by Thomas Row, Minister of the Gospel, Hadleigh, Suffolk. Many of these hymns are to be found in Parrott's Spl. From a Calvinistic point of view they are sound in sentiment, but possess little poetic merit. [W. R. S.]

From his Concise Spiritual Poems, 1817, the following hymns have passed into Snep's Songs of Grace and Glory, 1872:

5. How can a mortal tongue express. Holy Trinity.
8. Jehovah's will is found. The Will of God.
The Inside.
11. Supremey sweet is sovereign love. The Love of God.
15. Thou dear and great mysterious Three. Holy Trinity.
17. To God, the Holy Ghost. Personality of the Holy Ghost.
18. You have not chosen me. Election. [J. J.]

Rowe, George Stringer, was b. at March in 1839, and educated for the Wesleyan Ministry at Didsbury College. He entered the Wesleyan Ministry in 1853, and has since held important appointments at Ipswich, RUBE, JOHANN C.

Hull, Southport, Leeds, Edinburgh, London, &c. In 1888 he was appointed to the chair of Pastoral Theology in Heidelberg College, Leeds. He is the author of "Life of John Hunt, &c."; "At His Feet"; "On His Day"; "The Psalms in Private Devotion"; and "Crude Hymns." His hymns include:

1. Behold Thy youthful army.
2. Come, children all and praise.
3. Cradled in a manner masterly.
4. When they bringest little children.

These hymns were written for Sunday School Anniversaries, and were included in the "Methodist School H. Bk., 1879." [J. J.]

Rube, Johann Christoph, was b. Nov. 20, 1685, his father being then pastor at Hohen- und Thal-Eben, near Sondershausen. After completing his studies in law, and becoming a licentiate, he was appointed judge (Amtmann) at Burgum near Masfeld, and then, about 1704, at Battenberg (both in Hesse-Darmstadt). He d. at Battenberg, May 30, 1746. (Bode, p. 137; F. W. Strieder's "Hessische Gelehrten- und Schriftsteller Geschichte," vol. xvi. p. 456. The latter dates his birth Nov. 19. On writing to Elora, Pastor Weise has kindly informed me that no 17th cent. registers are extant either for Hohen-Eben, or for Thal-Eben.)

Rube was a most prolific writer of hymns. In the "Universal G. B. pub. at Hamburgh in 6 vol. 1738-44, there are, according to the markings by Count Christian Ernst of Wernigerode in his private copy, no less than 756 by Rube. The earliest appeared in Luppens's "Antichrist Singender Christen-Mund," Wesel, 1682, and in the "Gesellschaft G. B., Darmstadt, 1698." In 1712 he published a number (without place of pub.) as "Frühlings-Blumen aus der gotischen Erde" (Hamburg Library); and Lambach in his "Anthologie," v. p. 21, says his versification led to another collection in 1737 as "Poetisch-christliche Kinde-Gedanken" (evidently meant for Lieder-gedanken) aus den Main und Regens-Evangelien. Freylinghausen in his "Neue geistliche G. B., 1714, included 7, most of which passed into other books. Many of his hymns are excellent, thoughtful, good in style, and warm in feeling. Of Rube's hymns those which have passed into English are:

i. Der am Kreuz ist was ich meine. Und sonst nichts in aller Welt. Passiontide. In his "Frühlings-Blumen," 1712, p. 63, in 5 st. of 8 l. When repeated in the "Amuthiger Blumen-Kratz," 1712, No. 92, it was altered to "Der am Kreuz ist meine Liebe," and this form was included in the "Wurttemberg G. B., 1741, No. 51 (1842, No. 152), and other collections, and is a great favourite in South Germany. It is sometimes erroneously ascribed to J. E. Greising (b. 1676, d. 1748). The older hymn beginning "Der am Kreuz ist meine Liebe, Meine Lieb ist Jesus Christ" is first found in Ahasverus Fritsch's "Jesus-Lieder," 1698, No. 21, and is probably by Fritsch. It is quite different from Rube's hymn and has not been tr. into English. The trs. from Rube are (1) "Him on yonder cross I love," by Miss Winchest, 1838, p. 33, repeated in Schaff's "Christ in Song," 1809, p. 189. (2) "More than all the world beside," by R. Massie in his "Lyra Domestica," 1804, p. 122, and thence in Reid's "Praise Bk., 1872.

The Lord shall come in dead of night. This is a level of purity of thought and expression; and displays a wonderful mastery of form and power of handling the German language. He was of deeply religious spirit, and wrote various epic poems on Biblical history, etc., incl. "Paradisus;" compiled "Paradise," 1824, vol. 1, p. 114, entitled "Paradise." The two, are (1) "Paradise must be more fair," by Apl. Trench, in his Poems to European Sources, 1824, p. 199, (2) "Oh, Paradise must fairer be," [given, without name of translator, in Dr. H. Böner's New Jerusalem, 1832, p. 54, and in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1849, p. 457.

Of Rückert's pieces we need here only note four, namely:

i. Das Paradies muss schöner sein. Eternal Life. 1st pub. as one of his Neue östliche Lieder in the Aegle for 1822. Included in his Gesammelte Gedichte, 1831, vol. 1, p. 85, in 5 st. of 6 l. (As certain, did not appear along with No. 3 in 1824), and entitled "Advent Hymn." It is based on St. Matt. xxv, 10. La., the Gospel for the 1st S. in Advent. Included in the Berlin G. L., ed. 1831, No. 1545, and in various other recent (German) hymn-books. The two are (1) "In Bethlehem He first arose," by N. L. Frohlingh- ham, 1855, p. 160, (2) "In Bethlehem the Lord was born," by Miss Winckworth, 1849, p. 339. (3) "In Bethlehem, the Lord of glory," by T. C. Porter for Hours at Home, N. Y., March, 1869.

ii. Der Mitternacht, hat ich gewacht. Midnight, 1st pub. as No. 3 of a series of "Hymns for Festivals by Friedrich Rückert." In the Trachtenbuch griessung des neuen Jahres 1824, Leipzig, 1824, p. 276, in 10 st. of 4 l. One of the poems written at Neuses in the autumn of 1833. Repeated by Rückert, No. 66. The two are (1) "At still midnight I raise my sight," by N. L. Frohlingham, 1855, p. 176, (2) "At dead of night Sleep took her flight," by Miss Winckworth, in Lyra Mystica, 1849, p. 266, and repeated in her Christian Singer, 1849, p. 337. [J. M.]

Rulers of Sodom! hear the voice. W. Cameron. [True Penitence.] Was the 17th in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1831, as a version of Isaiah i. 10-19, in 7 st. of 4 l. Then, with st. vii. 1. 1 altered, in the public worship of the Church of Scotland, and still in use. In the book of the elder daughter of W. Cameron (q. v.), it is ascribed to Cameron. Included in the Relief H. bk., 1833, and again in others. [J. M.]

Russell, Arthur Tozer, M.A. He was the son of the Rev. Thomas Clout, who had given him his name for Russell (Gent. Mag., 1845, p. 299; Georg. Ry., 1861, p. 46), an independent or Congregational minister who won for himself a good reputation by editing the works of Tyndale, Frith, Barnes, and Dr. John Owen, &c. He was b. at Northampton, March 20, 1806; educated at St. Saviour's School, Southwark, and at the Merchant Taylers' School, London (cf. Robinson's Register M. T. S., ii, 27). In 1822-24 he was at Manchester College, York (see Roll of the M. C. students). In 1825 he entered St. John's College, Cambridge, as a sizar, and in his freshman year gained the Hulsean Prize, its subject being, "In what respect is the Law a Schoolmaster to bring men to Christ?" In 1829 he was ordained by the Bishop of Lincoln (Kay), and licensed to the cure of Great Gransden, Hunts, and in 1830 was preferred to the Vicarage of Catxon, which he held till 1832. During his ministry he published the following works: The Church of England upon the Affections of the People (1832); Sermons for Festivals; A Critique upon Keble's Sermon on Tradition, in opposition. About 1840 appeared his Apology of the Church of England and an Epistle to Signor Sopra concerning the Council of Trent, translated from the original Latin of H. J. Cowell. About the same time appeared Hymn Tunes, Original and Selected, from Rutsenocraft and other old Musicians. In 1841 was published a Manual of Daily Prayer. In 1844 Memorials of the Works and Life of Dr. Thomas Fuller. This Life has not been superseded by Bailey's later and over-bulky Life. It is fine on the whole. It is severe on Trent XC. In 1818 various of his own hymns, original and from the German, appeared in Hymns for Public Worship, &c., Dalston Hospital, London. His first appearance as a hymn-writer was in the 3rd edition of the hymn book published by his father (1st ed. 1813), and known amongst Congregationalists as Rutsenocraft or Apology (see Cong. Hymnody, p. 298, i § 67). In 1847 followed The Christian Life. In 1851 Psalms and Hymns, partly original, partly selected, for the use of the Church of England. This most useful collection has not received the recognition that it indisputably merits. His original hymns and translations have found their way into many hymnals, e.g., Dr. Peter Maurer's Choral H. Bk. 1861, where several appeared for the first time; Dr. Maurer's Choral Harmony, 1864, contains two of his tunes; Dr. B. H. Kennedy's Hymnologia Christiana, 1865; Lord Selborne's Church of Oxford, &c. (1862). In 1852 he was invited to the Vicarage of Whaddon, Cambridgeshire. This, in 1866, he exchanged for St. Thomas's, Toxteth Park, Liverpool. While at Whaddon he published Advent and other Sermons. In 1853 appeared his best prose book, Memorials of the Life and Works of Bishop Andrews. With every dedication it is a living biography. In Liverpool he republished his Hymns in 1868. In 1865 he addressed a "weighty and powerful" Letter to the Bishop of Oxford on Dr. Stanley—virtually a trenchant review of the once notorious Essays and Inquiries. In 1867 he removed to Wrockwardine Wood, Shropshire, where he remained until 1871, when he was presented to the Rectory of Scrivelsley, near Brighten, Herefordshire, after a long and distressing illness, on the 18th of November, 1874. In his earlier years he was an extreme High Churchman, but by the study of St. Augustine his views were changed and he became, and continued to the end, a more moderate Calvinist. His original hymns are gracious and tender, devout and devout. His translations on the whole are vigorous and strong, but somewhat ultra-faithful to the original metres, &c. He left behind him a History of the Bishops of England and Wales in ms., sufficient to form three or four goodly orations, and numerous ms. Notes on the Text of the Greek Testament; and also a large number of original chants and hymn-tunes in ms. Surely the last ought to be utilized; and the former deposited in his College of St. John's.

[A. B. G.]

Of Russell's hymns a large number are included in Kennedy, 1863, and several also are in a few of the lesser known collections. The E's are noted elsewhere in this Dictionary, and may be found through the Index of Authors and Translators. Of his original hymns, about 140 in all, including those in Dr. Maurice's Choral H. Bk., 1861, the following are found in a few collections:

1. Christ is risen! O'er His foes He reigneth.
2. Give praise to God our King. Praise.
3. Great is the Lord; O let us praise. Ps. cxliii.
8. Hosanna, bless the Saviour's Name. Advent.
9. In the tomb, behold He lies. Easter Eve. Sometimes "In the night of death, He lives."
12. Jesus, when I think on Thee. In Affliction.
15. Lift thine eyes far hence to heaven. Looking Forward. Sometimes "Lift the longing eyes to heaven."
17. Lord, be Thou our Strength in weakness. In Affliction.
21. My God, to Thee I fly. In Affliction. Sometimes "Great God, to Thee we fly."
23. now be thanks and praise ascending. Praise.
27. In the Dublin Hymns for Pub. Worship, &c., 1848. From this "O Father, uncreated Lord," in L. W. Baron's Church Bk., N. Y., 1863, is taken.
28. O Head and Lord of all creation. Passiontide.
29. O Jesus, blest is he. Consolation.
30. O Jesus! we adore Thee. Good Friday.
32. O Thou Who over all dost reign. Church Defence.
33. Praise and blessing, Lord, be given. Praise to Jesus.
34. Praise the Lord; praise our King. Advent.
35. The Lord onto my Lord signs said. Ps. cx.
37. The night of darkness fast declining. Misere.
39. Then Who hast to heaven ascended. Ascension.
40. To Him Who for our sins was slain. Praise to Jesus, the Saviour. Written Friday, Jan. 24, 1851.
41. We praise, we bless Thee. Holy Trinity.
42. What, my spirit, shall oppress thee? In Affliction.
44. Whom shall I, my [we our] refuge making. Lent.
45. (Who saith) in most belief. The Resurrection.

and His Death. 1717. These 36 hymns were never reprinted.

Several appeared in the Gospel Magazine from 1771 to 1782, and the Protestant Magazine, 1782-93; others in Rippon's Bapt. Selection, 1787; 2 in the Collection for the Monthly Prayer Meeting at Bristol, 1797; and in i. Fuller's Memoirs, 1831; and 25 in the Pastoral Memorials, 1825. His Hymns and Verses on Sacred Subjects, to the number of 95, were reprinted from his ms. by D. Sedgwick, and were pub., with a Memoir, in 1882. The hymns are dated therein from the ms.

W. R. S.

Those of Dr. Ryland's hymns are now in C. U. include —

1. For Zion's sake I'll not restrain. Missions. Dated 1790, and printed by D. Sedgwick from Ryland's ms., 1862.

Ps. cxix. From his Sermons Essays, 1771. It is No. 124 in Spurgeon's O. O. Bk., 1856. Not in Sedgwick's reprint.

4. Look down, my soul, on hell's domain. Gratitute for escape. This is No. 451 in Spurgeon's O. O. Bk., 1856, and dated 1771. We cannot trace it in any of Ryland's works or amongst his hymns.

5. Lord, teach a little child to pray. A Child's Prayer. Dated 1796. The note to this hymn by Dr. Ryland's son, in Sedgwick's reprint 1862, p. 15, is: — 'This and the following hymn ["God is very good to me"] was composed at the request of Mrs. Fuller, wife of the Rev. Andrew Fuller, of Sington, for the use of Miss Sarah Fuller, who died May 30th, 1799, aged six years and six months.' It was pub. in Andrew Fuller's Memoirs, 1831, p. 442, and in Sedgwick's reprint 1862.

7. O Lord, I would delight in Thee. Christ. Dated Dec. 2, 1797. Dr. Ryland added this note to the ms., as: — 'I recollect deeper feelings of mind in composing this hymn, than perhaps I ever felt in making any other.' It was pub. in Rippon's Selection, 1798, No. 244; in "The Pastoral Memorials, 1825; and in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862, in 1st, of 41. It is in extensive use in its original, or an abbreviated form as o, as: "O Lord, we would delight in Thee." In the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849; and their Hymnal, 1878, st. i., vi., vii. are rewritten in e. m., as: "Lord, I delight in Thee."

9. Rejoice, the Saviour reigns. Missions. Dated "Jan. 15, 1792." In the 10th ed. of the Pulpit's Sec., 1803, 422 (2nd pt.) it is given in 6 st. of 6 l., as in the Ryland ms., and then after the word "Praise" two stanzas are added on, which are not in the ms. The stanzas were repeated in the Pastoral Memorials, 1825, and in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862, and in Spurgeon's "C. H. Bk.," (abbreviated), and other modern hymnals.

10. Sovereign Ruler of the skies. Gladness, Peace, and Security in God. Dated "Aug. 1, 1777." Included in Rippon's Sel., No. 548; the Pastoral Memorials, 1825; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1862, in 9 st. of 4 l., and (Preface) if c.

11. Thou Son of God, and Son of Man. Praise to Thee, the Son. This is undated. It was given in the Pastoral Memorials, 1825; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1862.

12. When Abraham a servant to procure. Highest, Heart's Reward. Dr. Ryland's son, under the date of Nov. 4, 1881, informed Dr. Sedgwick that this hymn was written with a slate pencil on a ruse from blower by moonlight, past twelve o'clock, Dec. 30, 1773," and he gives these words as a quotation from his father's ms. It is almost needless to add that this account does not agree with the generally received history of the hymn, as set forth in Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 312. In the May number of the Gospel Magazine, 1773, p. 235, the hymn was given in 9 st. of 4 l., with the heading "Hinder me not--Gen. xxiv. 47," and signed "Elizahenst. It was repeated in Rippon's Sel., No. 447; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1862. In Rippon a note is added, "This hymn may begin with 6th verse." This direction has been followed in some modern collections, the result being the hymn commonly known as "in all my Lord's appointed ways."

Dr. Ryland's hymns are plain and simple, but they lack poetry and passion, and are not likely to be largely drawn upon for future hymnals.

In no instance is it used in its full and complete form. The fullest text is that in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 50, in 6 st., but usually it is given in a more abbreviated form, one of the shortest being the S. P. C. K. Church Hymnals, 1871, No. 60. One of the most popular forms of the hymn is a cento which is usually appropriated to "Easter Eve." It opens: "Resting from His work to-day." One of the earliest, if not the earliest, collection in which it appeared was Dr. Hook's Church Sunday School H. Bk., 1830, Appendix, No. 232. This is composed of st. iii, iv, vii, of the original. This cento was repeated, with alterations, in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, and has been adopted by various collections, including, with very slight alterations, H. A. & M., 1861, Sarum, 1868, and others. In Bigge's Annotated H. A. & M. (Preface), the editor has omitted st. v. and viii, from what he has given.

Sacer, Gottfried W. signs Sacer, senior burger in Saxony, was b. at Naun. He entered the University and remained there for two years. He was the secretary to Geheimrat synonyms, and then tutor in the Swedish regierungsaristocrat to the son of the maun von Binau. In 1668 he undertook a tour in H. with some young nobles. In 1670 he settled at Worms, and, as chaplain and, by the next year, removed to Wolfenbüttel, Amis-advocate, receiving Consulent in 1690. E. Sept. 8 (18), 1699. (iii. 328, iv. 562, &c.)

Sacer began early to write. In 1669, as one of his and in his Nützliche Riemen in den Poesen, Altenstein, 1676, already described himself as having been crowned at Austria. His hymns are immediately succeeding in considerable measure of poetic dramatic force, and are of a high order. His earliest hymns seem to be in the period. They were in-law as his Gotische, li. of the period.

G., and entitled "Hymn for Seafarers." Recently in Knapp's Fl. L., 1877, and 1866. Trans. as, "Thou wast the brightest star in the sky." In L. Bölden's Das Heihren, 1866, p. 34.

iv. Lasse mich nicht in thrumh fallen. Christ for all. Included, 1714, as above, p. 53, in No. s. s. l., founded on Ps. 13, and repeated, 1714, p. 75, in No. s, entitled "Hymn for Seafarers." Recently in Knapp's Fl. L., 1877, and 1866. Trans. as, "Lord, forbide that e'er such event should fall." In D. J. Gänzke, 1866, p. 117.

v. O dass ich könne Thatsen gung vergessen. Passionate. Included in 1665 as above, pt. ii. p. 66, in No. s. s. l., and repeated, 1714, p. 53, in No. s, entitled "Confession of the pious deeds of Jesus Christ." In the Berlin G. B., 1829, st. xiv.-xvi. altered and beginning, "Mein Herr und Heiland, laß mir gesah zur Herzen," are included as No. 189. This form is tr. as, "Lord, touch my heart with that greatConsummation," by J. L. Fröhlich, 1876, p. 143.

vi. So hab' ich abgesessen. Funeral of a Child. Included in 1665 as above, pt. ii. p. 66, in No. s. s. l., st. i-xii, being given as spoken by the child in Paradise, and xiii, as the answer of the bereaved parents. Repeated in 1714, p. 91, entitled "Comfort from the dead who deceased." In the 12th st. being entitled "Parting of the sorrowing ones." Recently as No. 855 in the Ums. L., 1841. Trans. as (1) "Lo! now the victor's gain's united." By M. M. in 1877. In her f. of 1867, p. 87, it is altered and begins, "My race is now completed." (2) "Then have I conquered; then at last," by Miss Weekes, 1856, p. 243. (3) "My course is run; in glory," by J. D. Guthrie, 1860, p. 200. [J. M.]

Sachse, Christian Friedrich Heinrich, b.p. was b. July 2, 1785, at Eisenberg, Sachse-Altenburg, where his father was cantor, and also master in the town school. In the years 1804-1807 he was a student at the University of Jena (b.p. from Jena 1844), and was, after the war, for some time, a private tutor at Kleinbuchstedt, near Merseburg. In 1812 he became inculcator at Meisselwitz, near Altenburg. He was appointed, in 1823, Court preacher at Altenburg; and also in 1831, Consistorialrat. After 1849 he had many trials to endure for seven children and his wife predeceased him, leaving only one daughter; while his bodily infirmities compelled him, in 1859, to give up his duties in the consistory, and, in Feb. 1860, to resign even his work as Court preacher. He d. at Altenburg, Oct. 9, 1860 (Koch, vii. 22; O. Kraus, ed. 1879, p. 418, &c.).

By his earlier hymns, pub. in 1817, in connection with the Teutonic Renewal of the Reformation, Sachse had a share in the reawakening of Churchy life among the Lutherans. The more important of his other hymns appeared in his Gesammtliche Gesänge zum Gebrauch bei Weihnachtsgangen und bei der Friedenfeier, Altenburg, 1822 [Hamburg Library]; and were written, to be used at funerals, during his residence at Meisselwitz; or for use at the special services introduced there in 1819, and held in memory of the departed, on the evening of the last day of the year. A number of his later hymns, together with selections from his secular poems, were pub. posthumously, as his Gedichte, Altenburg, 1841. A considerable number of his hymns passed into the Hamburg G. B., 1842, Leipzig G. B., 1844, and other German hymn-books, prior to 1870.

Those of Sachse's hymns which have been tr. into English are:

i. Wohlauf! die Erde wartet dein. Burial. 1st publ. in the above, No. 2, p. 5, in No. s. s. l., entitled, "At the Grave." Included in Knapp's Fl. L., 1887, No. 3375 (1865, No. 2947), altered, and beginning, "Lebwohl! die Erde wartet dein." The tr. in C. U. is:

Beloved and honoured, fare thee well! This is a full and good tr., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L., L., 3rd Ser., 1858, p. 56 (1844, p. 176). It was repeated, in full, in Prunt's Suppl. Hgs., 1869, and the 1869 App. to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hgs.; and, omitting st. vi., in Holy Song, 1869, and J. L. Porter's Cdl., 1876.

ii. Wohlauf, wohlauf zum letzten Gang. Burial. 1st publ., 1828, as above, No. i., p. 3, in 17 st. of 5 l., entitled "Hymn during the funeral procession." Stanzas 1-7 seem to have been sent to be sung at the house of mourning; st. vi-v., on the way to the churchyard; and st. xvi, at the entrance to the "place of peace." It was sung at his own funeral in 1860. It was, included, omitting st. iii., as No. 341, in En. L. S., 1837 (1865, No. 2937), with the altered first line (as in Claus Harms's Geledegarte, 1828, Nos. 288-290), "Wohlauf, wohlauf zum letzten Gang!" and the same form is in the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 617. Of this hymn, the late Dr. James Hamilton, in an article in the Family Treasury, 1860, p. l., p. 110, wrote thus:

"On both sides of England, we sometimes envied the brighter hope—the book of Easter Morning—which seems to linger still in Luther's land. With its emblems, suggestive of resurrection and heaven, its cheerful hours, &c., is not a pagan burial ground, but the place where believers sleep—a true cemetery, to which friendship can find it pleasant to repair and meditate. At the obsequies of Christian brethren, it is not a funeral knell which strikes slowly and sternly; but from the village street there sheds a soft and solemn cheerful requiem; and though there may be many wet eyes in the procession, there are not many of the artificial insignia of woe, as the whole parish converys the departed to his 'bed of peaceful rest.' Once, in the Black Forest, we accompanied to the 'place of peace,' an old man's funeral; and there stood solemn, on our ear the quaint and kindly melody which the parsoners sang along the road; and we have sometimes wished that we could bear the like in our own land [Scotland], with its sombre and silent obsequies."

The translation in C. U. is:

Come forth! come on, with solemn song. A good tr. of st. i-iii., vi., xv., xvi., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 2nd Ser., 1855, p. 68 (1844, p. 126). This version was included, in full, in J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865, No. 309, set to the melody to which it is sung in South Germany [Choral musikduse, Stuttgart, 1844, No. 103]. In Dr. W. F. Stevenson's Hgs. for Ch. & Home, 1873, the tr. of st. v. was omitted. A greatly altered form, beginning, "Come, tread once more the path with song," appeared in R. Brown-Borthwick's Select Hgs., 1871, No. 71; and in the S. P. C. K. Church Hgs., 1871, No. 242. Instead of adapting the melody of 1844, or the tune "Ich hab mein Sach' gut geheim/" (p. 471, L), for which Sachse wrote this hymn: the editors reduced the hymn song at st. vi, altered it, and omitted the tr. of st. iii., ii. 3-5, xvi. 3-5, xvi. This cento was repeated, omitting the tr. of st. xvi., in Dr. Martineau's Hgs. of Praise & Prayer, 1873.

Other trs. are:

(1) "Happy the man who seeks the prize!" by J. H. Willis, 1843 (1856, p. 236). (2) "Neighbour, accept our parting song." by Dr. James Hamilton, in the Family Treasury, p. 116; as above; and sung at his own funeral, 1867. [See his Life, p. 297.] (3) "O corpse, thy dwelling's now without." by J. B. Walker, 1869, p. 110. (4) "Come forth, move on, with solemn song." in the Christian Examiner, Boston, U.S. Nov. 1869, p. 414.

Another hymn, partly by Sachse, is:

SACRIS SOLEMNIIS

Christian Ludwig Neuffer (b. at Stuttgart, Jan. 29, 1749; pastor of the Cathedral Church, Ulm; d. at Ulm, July 29, 1819), in his Christliche Erbauung, Leipzig, 1790, p. 220, where it is No. 10 of the "Hymns for the dying under special circumstances," and is in 11 st. of 4 persons. Sachev's translation is in as "The respite now is waiting." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845, p. 261. [J. M.]

Salvation, O the Joyful

Saluati 1552, p. 3: Daniel, ii. p. 185, and Keehein, No. 1. All the verses end in a. Tr. as:

Salvation! O the Joyful sound. [Praise for Salvation.] The hymn which passes under this first line is found in so many forms that it was necessary to indicate not only the sources from whence its varying stanzas have been taken, but also to give the original text itself.

1. The original hymn appears in Watts's Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. ii., No. 88, in 3 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Salvation":-
   1. "Salvation! O the joyful sound,
      To pleasure to our ears,
      A Savoy balm for every wound,
      A cordial for our thirsts.
   2. "Bury'd in sorrow and in sin,
      At hell's dark door we lay;
      But we arise by grace divine
      To see a happy day.
   3. "Salvation! let the echo fly
      The spacious earth around,
      While all the armies of the sky
      Come to raise the sound."

Amongst the collections which are in common use at the present day the following contain this text: the S. P. C. K. Ps. and Hymns: Bk. of Praise Hymnal: Bapt. Ps. & Hymns: New Comp.; Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk.; Stevenson's Hymns for Ch. and Home; and others, which can be readily ascertained by reference to the text as above. It is also found in numerous American collections.

II. About the year 1772 a centre appeared in the Counties of Huntingdon's Coll. as follows:
   St. I. Watts's st. 1. as above, with "What" for "This."
   St. II. Watts's st. III. as above.
   St. III. "Salvation! O Thou bleeding Lamb,
      To Thee the praise be given,
      Salvation shall inspire our hearts,
      And dwell upon our tongues."

To these were added the following st.:
   Blessing, honour, praise and power
      Be unto the Lamb for ever:
      Jesus Christ is our Redeemer, Hallelujah! Praise the Lord."

This arrangement is probably due to the Hon. Walter Shrub, who revised the Lady Huntingdon Coll. about 1774. It was exceedingly popular with the older compilers, and is found in many of their collections. In modern hymn-books it is found, amongst others, both in Great Britain and America, in: the Wes. H. Bk.; Meth. N. Con. H. Bk.; Meth. S. & H. Bk., &c., with the "Blessing" of the stanzas changed to "Glory."

In addition, the following stanzas are in common use:

This arrangement is found in Mercer, Harland's Psalter, and others; and, without the chorus, in Windle's Coll. and Smellie's Ps. & Hymns, &c.
Salvator mundi Domine. [Advent. Evening.] This is found in a ms. of the 12th cent. in the British Museum (Harl. 2928 f. 110 b); in a Sarum Hymnary, circa 1300 (Laud. Lat. 85, f. 134 b); and a York Hymnary of the 13th cent. (Laud. Lat. 5, f. 165), both now in the Bodleian; in the Sarum, York, Hereford and Aberdeen Breviaries, &c. Also in Daniel, p. 269, Mone, No. 32, and Card. Newman's H. Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865.

Mone thinks it is of the 6th or 7th cent. It was appointed as a hymn at compline; but the seasons during which it was used vary considerably in the various Breviaries, ranging from Saturdays in Advent to the First S. in Lent; and again from Trinity to Christmas. The original was used at Eton, at the 8 r. m. daily service, until about 1830. [J. M.]

Salve mi Angelice, spiritus beate

Konrad von Gansing. [Angels.] A hymn of 64 lines, given by Moser, No. 312, from a Munich ms. of the 15th cent., and entitled "A prayer concerning one's own (i.e. guardian) angel." Tr. by J. D. Chambers, in his Luda Sgon, pt. ii., 1866, p. 101, as "Hail, mine angel, pure and bright," and included in the People's H., 1867.

Salve mundi Domina. [B. V. M.] This is found in the Parnassus Marianus, Douai, a Spanish book of Hours ("ex horis quateram ecclesiarum" in Hispania). The text is in a Strassburg, in a Strassburg Processional there, circa 1290 (Harl. 2924); in Daniel, ii., p. 184; and in Kehelein, vi., p. 156. The trs. are:

Salve munda salutare. St. Bernard of Clairvaux. [Patron of a city.] The text of this sweet and beautiful poem, which has been mainly used by translators into English and German, is that found in St. Bernard's Opera Omnia, Paris, 1669, cols. 1855-56. Here it is entitled "A hymnical prayer to save one [num quoddum] of the members of Christ, suffering and hanging on the Cross," and is divided into seven parts, viz.:

1. Salve mundi salutare. To the Pref.
5. Salve salus meas Deus. Revisit.
7. Salve capit cruentatum. Peace.

Going a little further back, a somewhat similar text is in St. Bernard's Opuscula, Venice, 1405, where it is entitled "A divine and most devout prayer of the Abbot St. Bernard, which he made when an image of the Saviour, with outstretched arms, embraced him from the Cross." Here the last section is entitled "To the whole body," and begins, "Salve Jesu reverendum." In a Ms. of H., now in the Town Library at Nürnberg, there is a tr. into German entitled "St. Bernard's Lamentation," and beginning "Der welt heilant, nit min gruzech," which is from the same text as that in the Opuscula; and here, after the third last stanza, is the note, "As now St. Bernard had spoken these words with great earnestness of desire, the image [Materbild] on the cross bowed itself, and embraced him with its wounded arms, as a sure token that to it this prayer was most pleasing." The same German tr. is also in a 15th cent. Ms. at Domacrin, with the title "The noble prayer of the devout doctor St. Bernard." &c. (see Wackernagel, ii., No. 254, and p. 1193.)

Clearly, then, there is tradition at least as far back as 1450 (the tradition indeed seems to have come from Clairvaux), that the poem was, in Some way, the author, and that this was St. Bernard. St. Bernard was, however, in 1153, and no ms. of the poem have yet been found of earlier date than the 14th cent. The ms., moreover, present the greatest varieties of text and arrangement, so that it is exceedingly difficult to say whether any part of the poem is really by St. Bernard, or to discriminate what is his and what is not. Indeed, the remark which Archbishop Travers made regarding other poems ascribed to St. Bernard, is true of this poem, viz. that the internal evidence is in favour of him as its author; and that if he did not write it, it is not easy to guess who could have written it. But in the present state of the evidence we cannot say much more. The conclusions of Mene and Daniel may be thus summed up:

Mene, Nos. 123-126, gives parts 1-4, from ms. of the 14th and 15th cent. Into the variety of texts and forms shown in his notes we have not here space to enter. In these notes he gives a mass of various readings, and mentions that at least two of the 15th cent. Ms. which he used had also parts 5-7. He also says, that in a 15th cent. Ms. at Amorbach, the complete poem is entitled "Prayer of Bonaventura, on saluting the Five Wounds of Christ." In his judgment, the bewildering variety of forms and texts makes it impossible to come to any definite conclusions.
as to authorship; but he thinks that the original poem was probably by a French writer.

Daniel, i., No. 297; ii., p. 359; and iv., pp. 224–231, gives the text of all the parts. In his notes in vol. iv. he expresses the opinion that only two of the parts, those to the Feat and to the Kneel (1 and 2), are by St. Bernard. His principal reason for so thinking is, because the Lichenthal MS. of the 14th. cent., quoted by Mone, has only these two, with the title “Lamentation on the Passion of the Lord.” As Lichenthal was a Cistercian foundation, he holds that the Brethren there would be most likely to give the complete and correct text of a poem by the founder of their Order. He adds:—

“Whoever reads the first part attentively cannot help seeing that it refers to the whole frame of the suffering Christ; and that special mention is made of the Feet only for this reason,—that the poet places himself prostrate on his knees, at the foot of the cross, and embraces the Saviour’s Feet. And as far as regards the Kneel, they are only touched upon once in the second part, and that Incidentally: the poem, as a whole, is clearly concerned with the Passion as a whole. Such a poem was composed by St. Bernard; the titles of the members are the work of a later age.”

Daniel holds that the address to the Hands is later than St. Bernard; that next was added, probably in the 14th cent., the address to the Side; and that those to the Bread, to the Heart, and to the Feet, were first added in the 15th cent.

Mone and Daniel thus agree in thinking that parts 5–7 are not by St. Bernard, but are of much later date, probably of the 15th cent. And, apparently, they would have agreed in thinking that these additions were made in Germany. If their conclusions be correct, then the finest part of all, the “Salve caput crucisatum,” must be by some one other than St. Bernard.

Other texts may be briefly noted. (1) The poem is found in five nos. of the 15th. cent., at St. Gall (Nos. 472, 482, 488, 519, 521). (2) F. W. K. Roth, in his Lat. Hymnen, 1887, No. 141, gives the skeleton of a form in 7 parts (beginning, “Salve nume salutare”), the parts being respectively assigned to Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vesper, and Compline. He cites it as in a 16th cent. ms. masal of devotions, now at Darmstadt. (3) G. Milchbach, in his Hymni et Sequentiae, 1886, No. 110, gives a curious form of parts 5–7, from a 15th cent. broadsheet in the Wolfenbüttel Library. (4) Winderup, I., Nos. 186–192, gives the text, in 7 parts, from Mone, and the Paris ed., 1719, of St. Bernard’s Opera. (5) Archbishop Trench, in his Sacred Latin Poetry, gives parts 1 and 7 from the Opera, 1719. (6) F. A. C. March gives in his Lat. Hymn., 1–75, parts 1, 6, and 7. (7) The texts in Königseifeld, ii., p. 192; (8) Hombach, i., p. 275; and (9) Neale’s Hymni Recenseri, 1841, p. 122, are centos.

In J. M. Horat’s Paradisus animae Christianae, 1644, the text is given in 7 parts, but very greatly altered, thus:—

1. Jesu summe Rex virtutis.
2. Christe Jesu fons honorum.
3. Christe Jesu Pastor bone.
4. O Salvator summe bonus.
5. O Rex Mundi Christe Deus.
6. O divinum Orb aetos.
7. Unum spemit coronatum.

It may be added that the use of this noble poem seems to have been almost entirely confined to books of private devotion, and collections of sacred poetry. No parts or centos appear to have passed into Mediaeval Breviaries, Missals, Graduals, or Processions; and the only portion we have been able to trace in similar modern books, is the greatly mutilated cento, “Jesu dulcis amor meus.”

Perm. 1855, p. 364, i., included in Roman Breviary.

The whole poem has German, and various also been made from a known set of trs. into German, with all the seven parts, 1609, thus:—

1. Sei mir lassen.
2. Gegrüsset maßt.
3. Sei wohl gegeven.

This is the hymn at Lauds in the office of the Most precious Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ (see “Ira justa Conditoria”). It is found in the Roman Breviary. Bologna, 1827, Verona, Appendix, p. 239; and is repeated in later eds of the Roman Breviary, and in Daniel, ii. p. 355. [J. M.]

The Editor has ventured to modify his (Neale's) first line, "draw near and take the Body of the Lord," which contains no thought answering to Sancti, by introducing the word "by faith," and while thus altering more closely to the original Latin, he has expressed the teaching of our Church, "The Body and Blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper. "And again, "The means whereby the Body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is faith (Article 35.)."

In addition to this alteration Bp. Bickersteth has several others, all of which, with one exception, deal more with the rhythm of the lines than with doctrine. The exception is st. vi., which reads in the Latin:

"Alpha et Omega ipsum Christum dominam, Venit venusm Judicarum homines." In Neale:—

"Alpha and Omega, to whom shall bow All nations at the boom, is with us now." (H. Comp.:—

Sanctorum meritis incolita gaudia. [Common of Martyrs.] This hymn is frequently referred to by Hencmar in his "De vita et moribus Deitarum," 857; but he distinctly says he could not discover its author. It is found in four mss. of the 10th cent. in the British Museum (Jul. A. vi. f. 63 b; Vesp. D. xii. f. 101; H. r. 2961 f. 247 b; Add. 30, 581 f. 152 b); and in the Latin Hymn of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 39). Also in a ms. of the 10th cent. at Bern, No. 455; in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (No. 391, p. 272); in the St. Gall mss. 413 and 414, of the 11th cent. It is in the Roman, Sarum, York, Aberdonc, Paris of 1448, and other Breviaries—the Sarum the being at 1st Vesperas and at Matins in the common of many martyrs. The printed text is also in Daniel, i. No. 170, and iv. p. 139, giving also the text of the Roman Breviary, 1632, Wackenroder i. No. 125; G. M. Drevv's Hymnarius Monasticus, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms.; and Carol Newman's Hymn Eccles. 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

The variations in the Roman Brev. text from the older forms are very slight. The *tr. by Neele, Blew, Chambers, and Hewett, are from the older form; the rest follow the Roman Brev. form. There is an anonymous imitation rather than a tr. of the Latin text in Fallow's *Hys. for Pub. and Private Worship, 1847; and in his pamphlet of the same title, 1850, beginning “Blest Lord, the crown of great reward.” [J. Sands, George, a. of Dr. Edwin Sands, Archbishop of York, was b. at Bishopthorpe Palace, York, in 1577, and educated at St. Mary Hall and Corpus Christi College, Oxford. For some years he devoted himself to travelling in Europe and Asia, and in 1615 a curious account of his experiences. After visiting America, where he was for a time the Treasurer of the British Colony of Virginia, he became, on his return, a Gentleman of the Privy Chamber of Charles I. He d. at Bexley Abbey, Kent, March 1616. His publications included his Traveller's Thanksgiving; the first work on his travels, A Relation of a Journey begun in 1610, &c., 1615; a tr. of the Metamorphoses of Ovid, and Grotius's tragedy of Christ's Passion. His productions which most nearly concern hymnology were:

(1) A Paraphrase upon the Psalms of David, and upon the Hymns dispersed throughout the Old and New Testaments. London: at the Bell in St. Paul's Churchyard. M.D.C.XXVII.

(2) A Paraphrase upon the Divine Poems by George Sands, London: at the Bell in St. Paul's Churchyard, M.D.C.XXVIII. This volume contained the Paraphr. of the Psalms, paraphrases upon Job, Ecclesiastes, the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and the Songs collected out of the Old and New Testaments.

(3) His paraphrase of The Song of Solomon was pub. in 1642. The most available form of these works is the Rev. R. Hooper's reprint of Sands's Poems, in Smith's Library of Old Authors.

A few only of Sands's versions of the Psalms are found in modern hymn-books, although they were set to music by Henry Lawes. His influence, however, upon later paraphrasers was considerable. [See POETRA, English, § 1.] The following, together with a few others annotated under their respective first lines, are in C. U.:

1. How are the Gentiles all on fire. Ps. ii.
2. Lord, for Thee I daily cry. Ps. lexxi.
3. My soul, Thy suppliant hear. Ps. lexxi.
4. Praise the Lord as throne on high. Ps. ci.
5. Sing the Great Jehovah's praise. Ps. lexi.
6. Thou, Lord, my witness art. Ps. cxxxv.
8. You, who dwell above the skies. Ps. cxliii.

These paraphrases as in C. U. are in the form of centos. [J. J.]

Sankey, Ira David, was b. in Edinburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1840, of Methodist parents. About 1836 he removed with his parents to New Castle, Pennsylvania, where he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. About 1836 he became the Superintendent of the Oxford Sunday School in which he commenced his career of singing sacred songs and solos. Mr. Moody met with him and heard him sing at the International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association, at Indianapolis, and

KELLY. [For a blessing on the Word.] Appeared in the 2nd ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1806, in 8 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1853, No. 434). It is in C. U. in this form. In the American Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1833, it is altered in “Father, bless Thy word in all.” This text is repeated in a few collections, sometimes, as in the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, with C. Wesley’s stanza, “Sing we to our God above, as a doxology.” [J. J.]

SAVIOR, BLESSED SAVIOUR. O. Thring. [Pressing Onwards.] Written in 1862, and Ist pub. in his Hymns, Congregational and Others, 1866, p. 36, in 8 st. of 8 l. In 1868 it was repeated in the Appendix to H. A. & M., with alterations by the author and the compilers of H. A. & M., in st. v., vi., and viii. When included in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, Prebendary Thring has added the stanza “Farther, ever farther.” This full form of the text was repeated in his Hys. and Sac. Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882. It has been specially set to music by Sir H. S. Oakeley, the Rev. J. K. Farmer, and others. In several American hymn-books it is broken up as:—

1. Brighter still, and brighter. In the Presbyterian Hymnal, Philadelphia, 1874, and others.

Through these various forms the use of this hymn is extensive. It is well suited for a processional. [J. J.]

SAVIOUR, BREATHE AN EVENING BLESSING. J. Edenton. [Evening.] Appeared in his Sacred Lyrics, 1st sett, 1820, 4 in 2 st. of 8 l., and thus introduced “At night their short evening hymn, ‘Jesus Mahanaro’ = ‘Jesus forgive us,’ stole through the concert.”

Saith’s Travels in Aethiopia.” One of the earliest to adopt it for congregational use was Bickersteth, who included it in his Christian Psalmsody, 1833. It was repeated in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, and others, until it has taken rank with the first Evening Hymns in the English language. It is found in the hymnals of all English-speaking countries, and usually in its correct and complete form. In the H. Comp., revised ed., 1876, Bp. Bickersteth has added a third stanza of 8 l., beginning “Father, to Thy lady keeping,” and in Thring’s Coll., 1882, the editor has re-arranged the hymn, omitted the lines concerning sudden death, and added a fourth stanza in 4 l., beginning “Be Thou nigh, alack death o’er take us,” in which the same thought is contained in a milder form. It has been tr. into several languages. The Latin rendering, by R. Bingham, in his Hymns, Christ. Lat., 1871, is “Vesperibus, Vespertine, spers benedictis, prie pacem.” In Martineau’s Hymn, 1846 and 1873, the opening line is changed to “Holiest, breathe an evening blessing.” Orig. text in the H. Comp., st. i., ii. [J. J.]

SAVIOUR, I lift my trembling eyes.

[Jesus, the Guide and Advocate.] Lord Selborne's note on this cento in his Book of Praise, 1892, No. lvii., is:—

"This hymn as here given [in 3 st. of 4 l.] was introduced into the Marylebone Collection (1831). [Gurney, J. E.] from a poem of some length, published in 1831, in The Iris, a volume edited by the Rev. Thomas Dale [and signed "M. G. T."]. The text (which will be found at page 130 of that volume) is unaltered, except that the first word, 'saviour,' has been brought down from a preceding line, in substitution for the words, 'And then,' so as to give to these stanzas an independent beginning."

These stanzas have passed into several collections, and are worthy of greater notice than they have received. We have seen the signature "M. G. T." written out as "M. G.

Thompson," but we have not authority to say that this is correct. Another cento from the same poem appeared in the 3rd ed. of The Spirit of the Psalms, by H. F. Lyte, 1858, in 3 st. of 4 l., beginning "Saviour, I think upon that hour." This, reduced to 4 st., is in the Baptised Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, and other

American collections. [J. J.]

1860. In some American collections, including the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1895, st. iii., iv.,

as a hymn for Whitsuntide. [J. J.]

SAVIOUR, like a Shepherd, lead us.

[The Good Shepherd.] The authorship of this hymn is a matter of some doubt. The established source to which we have traced it is

Miss D. A. Thrupp's Hymns for the Young,

4th ed. 1830, in 4 st. of 6 l., where it is un signed. We next find it in the Rev. W.

Curwen Wilson's Children's Friend for June,

1838 (p. 144), again in 4 st. of 6 l., and signed "Lyte." In the January number of the same magazine there is a National Hymn in the metre of "God save the Queen" ("Lord, Thy best blessing shed"), which is signed "H.

Lyte," and dated from "Brixham" (see Lyte.

H. F., p. 708. i.). "Saviour, like a Shepherd, lead us" appears again in 1838, in Mrs. Her bert Mayo's Sel. of Hys. and Poetry for the use of Infant and Juvenile Schools, No. 171; and again in the edition of 1846, but without signature. As in that collection several hymns and poems are clear that Mrs. Mayo used Thrupp's poet,

we can say that the lyric is in Thrupp's

hymn. Its use is exte

Wesley was accused, taught that if a person

Saviour, We Who art ready to hear. C. Wesley. [The Divine Presence desired.] Appeared in Hymns. and Soc. Poems, 1740, in 8 st., of 4 l., and headed “On a Journey.” (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 304.) With slight alterations, and the omission of st. l., it was given in the W. H. Bk., 1780, as No. 203, and has passed into numerous collections as “Talk with us. Lord. Thyself reveal,” and in some as “Speak with us, Lord. Thyself reveal.” The stanza which has attained to the greatest repute is:

“With Thee conversing, I forget
All time, and toil, and care.
Labour is rest and pain is sweet,
If Thou, my God, art there.”

Possibly the ideas embodied in these lines had their origin in Milton’s Par. Lost, bk. iv., II. 639, 640:

“With thee conversing, I forget all time,
All seasons and their change; all please alike.”

The hymn, as a whole, is very popular with the various Methodist bodies. See G. J. Stevenson’s Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883. [J. J.

Saxby, Jane Euphemia, née Browne, daughter of William Browne of Tallantour Hall, Cumberland, and sister of Lady Trigge, mouth, was b. Jan. 27, 1811, and married, in 1862, to the Rev. H. Saxby, Vicar of East Clevedon, Somersetshire. Her work, The Dove on the Cross, was pub. in 1849. It has passed into numerous editions, and from it several hymns have come into C. U. This was followed by The Voice of the Bird, in 1875; and Anna’s Gift to the Nursery, 1876. Sometimes Mrs. Saxby’s Dove on the Cross is dated 1819, but in error. The compilation known as Hymns and Thoughts for the Sick and Lonely, by a Lady, Lond., J. Nichols & Co., 1848, although it contains several of her hymns in an altered form, is ascribed to her in error.

Mrs. Saxby’s hymns in C. U. include:

1. Father, into thy loving hands. Extermination.
2. O Jesus Christ, the holy One. Holy Communion.
3. O Holy Ghost, the Comforter. Missionary.
4. Show me the way, O Lord. Guidance desired.
5. Thy love, O Father, God everywhere.
6. Thou (God of love, beneath thy sheltering wings, burial.

Of these hymns, Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 6, appeared in her Dove on the Cross, 1849. No. 2 appeared in the English Presbyterian Ps. & Hymn. for Divine Worship, 1857, No. 340, in 5 st. of 4 L.
It was supplied to Dr. W. F. Stevenson in 1873, in 6 st. for his Hymn for the Church and Home.
The additional stanzas (the 4th) given in his Notes is:

"As Thou hast placed beyond my reach Thy richest means of grace, Teach me without them, Saviour, teach
My soul to see Thy face."

The point and meaning of this stanza is explained by the fact that this hymn "was written for one who by illness was prevented joining in the Communion." The hymn was included in The Voice of the Bird, 1875.
Mrs. Saxby's hymns are very plaintive and tender. This is explained by her thus:

"I wrote most of my published hymns during a very long and distressing illness, which lasted many years. I thought probably that I was then in the 'Border Land,' and wrote accordingly." [J. J.]

Say, grows the rush without the mire. [Fate of the Wicked. Job viii. 11-22.] Although sometimes attributed to Watts, to the present this hymn has not been traced to his works, and the earliest date at which it is found is in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745, No. xxiv.. Therein it is given as a Paraphrase of Job viii. 11-22, in 7 st. of 4 l.
Copies of this draft being very rare, we subjoin the text:

"Say, grows the Rush without the Mire?
The Flag without the Stream?
Green and meek, it quickly fades;
The Wicked's Fate's the same.
"Sight is his Hope, cut off and broke;
or if entire it rise,
Yet, as the Spider's Web, when try'd, it yieldeth, breaks and flies.
"First on his House he leans, his House and all its Props decay;
He holds it fast, but faster still the tooting Frame gives way.
"Tho' in his Garden to the Sun
his Boughs with verdure smile;
And, to the Center struck, his Roots unshaken stand a while:
"Yet, when from Heaven's his Sentence flies,
he's hurried from his Place:
It then denies him for its Lord,
not owns he knew his Face.
"Lo, this the Joy of wicked Men, who Heaven's just Laws despise;
They quickly fall, and in their room
as quickly others rise.
"But God his Pow'r will for the Just with tender Care employ:
He'd fill their Mouns with Songs of Praise, and fill their Hearts with Joy."

The recast of this hymn, beginning:

"The rush may rise where waters flow, and flags beside the stream;"

which was pub. in the authorized Trans. and Paraphrases of 1781, No. vi., in 7 st. of 4 l., is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 200, L) by his eldest daughter, in her list of authors and revisers.

2. In Denmark also, under Frederik I, the Reformation was adopted, after considerable opposition; and Christen, the son of Frederik, completed the task his father had begun. Not being able to persuade the prelates to officiate at his consecration, wishing to avail himself of their services, he was crowned, with a ceremonial, by John Bugenhagen, a preacher from Wittenberg. Bugenhagen, a man of considerable learning, had certainly not a bishop, and his ordination was only by proxy. Two centuries after, the Archbishop of Trondhjem and his followers made some resistance, but the king carried his point, and the Lutheran Church was established in Norway as it had been in Denmark.

3. The year 1537 witnessed the final union of Norway with Denmark, begun in 1523. The Norwegians showed a great readiness to accept the Reformation as offered to them by King Frederik. Christen, however, was not satisfied with their being appointed bishops or "superintendents" to fill the absent Danes. A Diet at Odense, in 1539, finally adopted the principles and practice of the Reformed Church, or, more correctly speaking, the Protestant followers of Luther.

4. In Ireland the work was carried on by Hugh O'Neill, who in 1540 was elevated, at the age of 25, to the see of bishop, or superintendant, of Skelholt. Jon Arsen, Bishop of Holar (or Holm), headed the opposition, and endeavoured to excite a rebellion, but was arrested and put to death in 1550.

II. HYMN-WRITERS AND HYMNS.—Sweden.

The first of the reformers were the two renowned brothers, troubadours of Gustavus af Vasa (or Lars) Petersen, better known by the Latinized names of Olaf and Laurentius Petri.

1. Olaf Petersen was b. in 1497. He was early predisposed in favour of the Reformed doctrines, and in 1517, instead of resorting to study at Wittenberg, where he heart and Luther. Returning in 1520, full of reformation zeal, he received holy orders, and in 1524 was made rector of the church of S. Nicholas in Stockholm. In 1540 he was convicted of a guilty knowledge of a conspiracy against King Gustavus, and condemned to death. He was pardoned, though the king never forgave him; and in 1543 he was appointed to another cure in Stockholm. He died in 1552.

2. Lawrence Petersen was b. in 1490, and studied at Upsala, where he became professor in or about 1524. He was a man of more gentleness and discretion than his impetuous brother Olaf; and this, combined with his high reputation for theological learning, and his own inclination towards a quiet and conservative reformation, induced the clergy to elect him, and the king to appoint him, in 1531, Archbishop of Upsala, and Primate of Sweden. It is not our business to enter into the vexed question of his consecration. That he took a journey to Rome on his appointment seems tolerably clear; but the registers of the period have unhappily been burnt; and whether he really received the laying on of hands there, or, like Bugenhagen, laid hands on others without having received the commission himself, is still a matter of doubt. He is certainly the father of Swedish hymnology. Besides his original compositions he made many translations from Latin and German; and his hymns have been largely borrowed in Denmark. The similarity of the two languages, Danish and Swedish, especially in their older forms, renders transference from one to the other particularly easy. The Archbishop d. universally beloved and regretted, in 1579.

3. The two Andersens, Lawrence (Lawrence) and Peter (Peter) of Upsala, were b. at Upsala, and named in 1523. In 1529, he became Chancellor of the Diocese of Upsala, and shortly afterwards Chancellor, or Chief Secretary, to King Gustavus. It was owing to his influence that the Diet of the kingdom adopted the Reformed doctrines in 1527. In 1526 he brought out a Swedish version of the New Testament, based mainly upon Luther's German translation, and in 1541 a version of the whole Bible. He was accused in 1540 of complicating in the plot in which Olaf Petersen was involved, and, like him, was condemned to death, but pardoned. He retired to Upsala, where he d. in 1552. Peter Andersen, nicknamed Swift (Peters Andromiger), was b. about the end of the 16th cent. He became court chaplain to King Gustavus in 1540, Bishop of Vasteroa in 1556, and d. in 1562, leaving behind him the reputation of an able and high-minded man. We may note also that the ill-fated King Erik (1558-1577) has also left a couple of hymns, both of which seem to echo his unhappy state of mind. One is a paraphrase of the 51st Psalm:—

The two kingdoms were now newly adjusted in 1541, with Sweden, Denmark, retaining Iceland. This arrangement:

Beklaqo a sitt sinne
mas jag min sjalsta nod.
(Rewall with all my mind must I my soul's distress.)

other is not much unlike it:—

O God, hurv skal jag bok den Sorg jag mage draga, si arm och synde full.
(O God, how shall I lament the sorrow I must bear so poor and sinful?)

who followed the first Lawrence at Upsala, reception was short-lived, and the Lutheran reformation was finally established in Sweden under the reign of Sigismund (son of John), but under the auspices of Charles Duke of Soderland, the third son of Gustavus, after whom the title of Charles was adopted by the Church of Sweden.
1000 SCANDINAVIAN HYMNODY

Erik's is, however, not the only royal name that appears in the Swedish hynmody. The poet Gustavus Adolphus (b. 1594, d. 1632), a of Charles IX., is the author of the "Battle Hymn," his "Swan-song" as it was called, written just before, and published shortly after, his death at Lützen, in 1632 (see pp. 54, 44.; 54, 1). It begins thus:

Forbäran ej, du minder, Hop, fond feum dem loim och fåt främst, skall skall låta, through the feet's about and cry
från skall skala. resounds from every side.

4. The succession of hymn-writers, begun by Archbishop Petersen, was kept up in Sweden during the succeeding century. Olaf Martensson (b. 1577, appointed Archbishop of Upsala in 1601, d. 1699) heads the list.
He was followed by Jonas Petersen (b. 1587,
d. 1614), Bishop of Linköping in 1587; Count Lindskjöld (1534-1589), a distinguished professor in the university of Upsala, and chancellor of that of Lund, which was founded in 1666; Count de la Gardie (1622-1686), Swedish Ambassador at the French court, to whom the University of Upsala owes the priceless Codex Argenteus of the Gothic gospels; to whom we may add Peter Braak (d. 1626), son of a rector of St. Clara's in Stockholm, and a collateral descendant of the Bishop Braak who was so stout an antagonist of Gustavus Vasa.

5. In the 18th cent. we find the hynmody enriched by a third Archbishop of Upsala, Dr. Haquin Spiegel (1715-1774). He was a great traveller, having visited Denmark, Germany, Holland, and England; and was bishop of Skara, and afterwards of Linköping, before he was elevated to the Primate. Jacob Arboreus (d. 1725), secretary of and professor in the University of Upsala, was another sacred poet; so was the renowned Olaf Rudbeck (1660-1710), professor of botany at Upsala.
A yet more eminent name is that of Jasper Svedberg. He was b. at Falun, in 1653, and studied at Upsala. After travelling, like Spiegel, and serving as pastor of a parish, he was appointed (1682) professor of divinity at Upsala, and in 1702 became bishop of Skara.
He was held for 33 years. His name is especially interesting to us as being one of the earliest on the list of our Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Later on we find S. L. Ölmann, professor of pastoral theology at Upsala, in 1806; S. J. Hedborn (1783-1849), pastor of Aikeryd; J. Aström (1767-1844), pastor of Tuna; and a lady, Fru Lennagen, wife of the Secretary of the Board of Trade (1754-1817), whose hynmody begins with the sad words:

Satt i döden skall det Ola i som ung Sorsens Tätar, men, döden skall döda i som ung Sorsens Tätar, som ung Sorsens Tätar, som ung Sorsens Tätar, att livet skall döda i som ung Sorsens Tätar.

6. The last and greatest name in the Swedish hynmody, however, is that of Johan Olaf Wallin. He was b. at Stora Tuna, in 1779, and early displayed his poetical powers.
In 1805, and again in 1809, he gained the chief prize for poetry at Upsala. In the latter year he became pastor at Solna; here his ability as a preacher was so striking that he was transferred to Stockholm, in 1815, as "pastor primarius," a title for which we have no exact equivalent. In 1818 he was made Dean of Westerås, and set about the task of editing a revised hynmody-book for the whole of Sweden. This task he completed in 1820, and published it as, Den svenska Psalmboken, of Konungen gillad och stödtfädad ("The Swedish hymn-book, approved and confirmed by the King"). To it he contributed some 150 hynms of his own, besides translations and recastings, and the book remains now in the form in which he brought it out. It is highly prized by the Swedes, and is in use everywhere. Those who desire to know more on the subject of hymnology, and can read Swedish, will find a full and exhaustive review of the book, with a history of and critique on every hymn in it, in J. W. Beckman's Försök till Svensk Pals historia (Stockholm, 1845).

11. The earliest hynmody of Denmark and Norway, and perhaps the earliest complete one of the whole North, was brought out at Malmø in 1526, by Claus Mortensson Tannebrandt (1506-1576), who deserves the distinction of the author of the first evangelical preacher in Malmø, but also of the Father of Danish hymnology.
The book contained a number of translations from the original Latin, from German (Luther's), and from Swedish (Petersen's), as well as some originals. Mortensson subsequently revised it, with the aid of his friends Arvid Petersen and Hans Spendermann; and the book was printed and published at Rostock, by L. Ditz, in 1529; just 10 years before that dit of Olavsen at which Denmark (as has been said before) accepted the principles of the Reformation. The book contains a set of prayers, psalms, hymns, and canticles, and is entitled,

Em ne Hanlplag, med Psalmor om aandelige Lfs-ning, som waref af dem heliga Scribes, som waref Guds Kvarnning ("A new hand-book, with psalms and spiritual songs of praise, derived from Holy Writ, which now are sung in the Christian assemblies to God's praise and men's salvation").

This book was reproduced, with some changes and additions, by Hans Jansen, Bishop of Ribe, in 1544, and in 1569 by Hans Thomassen, rector of Vor Frue (Our Lady) in Copenhagen.

2. This book, or rather these books, continued to be the hynmody of the Danish and Norwegian Lutherans for more than a century.
The poet who had the honour of beginning to re-edit it was Thomas Kingsø. He was b. at Skanderup in 1634, and, after completing his theological studies, became in 1668 pastor of his native place. Here he brought out, in 1674, his Aandelige SIGJEG-chor ("Spiritual Choral-songs"). The book attracted attention:
and in 1677 its author, who had published meanwhile other poetical effusions, was made Bishop of Fyen (Funen). In 1683 he was desired to prepare a new hymn-book, to be authorized for Denmark and Norway. The first part of it appeared in 1689, as Danmark og Norges kirkes opordnede Helse-bok ("The Authorized Hymn-book of the Churches of Denmark and Norway"). and was received with a storm of disapprobation. There were many who admired the work, but an almost equal number exclaimed against it. There

* It has been republished by C. W. Brunau in his collection of Danish hymnaries (1862). part i.
were, they said, too many of his own compositions in it: the hymns were too high and moral, and some of them, above the heads of the common people. The criticism was unfairly severe. No doubt, however, of what the Pietists of the next century professed to find in them, a little ten- dency to what they called Rationalism, and might term undue breadth. But a rationalist could scarcely merit the name given to Kingo.

3. In 1690 a committee was appointed to supercede Kingo, and finish the hymn-book. They worked on Kingo's lines, and put in many of his compositions, and the book finally appeared in 1693 as:

Kongelige æreaadighed, til Brug ved Kirke- og Hojs-Andagt. ("The authorized new Church hymn-book, suitably and carefully enriched with many new hymns, according to his Majesty's most gracious command, by the principal ministers in Copenhagen, for the service of God on Sundays and Holydays, and for the use of Christians in Denmark and Norway, and in like manner according to the royal command prepared for the press by Thomas Kingo, Bishop in the Diocese of Funen.")

Kingo felt keenly the slight put upon him. He survived it, however, some 12 years or more, dying in 1703. Whatever may be said of him as a hymn-writer and compiler, there is no doubt he was a true poet, and superior to all who preceded him.

4. His book, or rather the book of 1699, continued in use throughout Denmark; not, however, without attempts being made to replace the first effort was made by Hans Brons. He was b. in 1634, at Randers, where his father was pastor. He entered the University of Copenhagen in 1712. After finishing his theological course he first acted as his father's assistant, and then (1729) as preacher at Tonder in Slesvig. Here he began to display his powers and tastes by publishing a collection of religious poems entitled Troens Klenade, 1739. ("The Faith's rare Jewels.") His opinions were those of the Pietist school, and he opposed to the dry "orthodoxy" (so-called) of the day, the hymns. Dean of Ribe, and in 1741 King Christiansen's successor, who objected to many phrases of German Lutheran hymns. His Christmas lyrics are most approved; and his Brons, however, was not his poet rather than editor, the hymn-book which he prepared, and which in 1740, under the title Den ny Salmboeg, a relative of Thomas Kingo, who d. in 1825, became Bishop of Birken in 1748, and

d. in 1764, leaving, like his renowned relative, a number of works on natural history and antiquities. Another effort in the direction of a new hymn-book was made by O. H. Guldberg, secretary to Prince Frederick, who, aided by Bishop L. Harboe, Frs Bridgitta Boyle (b. 1742, d. 1842), and others, produced in 1778 a hymn-book under the title:

Salmboeg eller en samling af gamle og ny Salme, til brug ved Kirke- og Huse Andagt. ("A hymn-book, or a collection of old and new hymns, for the honour of God, and the edification of His Church.")

5. Towards the end of the 18th century a further attempt to effect a revision of Kingo's book was made by N. Balke of Seeland; who wished, like Brons, to see more music and less stiffness in Danish psalmody. The book appeared in 1797 as Evangelisk Kristelig Salmboeg, til Brug ved Kirke- og Huse Andagt. ("Evangelical Christian Hymn-book for use in Church and Home Worship.") But the attempt was not successful. Balke's hymn-book, though well-meant, was poor and unpoetical. The book of Kingo remained in use till an impetus was given to the tendency to revision by the great reformer of Danish hymnology and theology, the well known Pastor Grundtvig, an admirer of Balke and of Kingo too. Nicolai Frederik Serner Grundtvig was the greatest of theem, and was b. at Udby, in Seeland, in 1783. He studied in the University of Copenhagen from 1800-1805; and, like some other eminent men, did not greatly distinguish himself; his mind was too active and his imagination too versatile to bear the restraint of the academic course. After leaving the university he took to teaching; first in Langeland, then (1808) in Copenhagen. Here he devoted his attention to poetry, literature, and Northern antiquities. In 1810 he became assistant to his father in a parish in Jutland. The sermon he preached at his ordination, on the subject "What has the Lord's word disappeared from His house," attracted much attention, which is rarely the case with "evolutionaries" sermons. On his father's death, in 1813, he returned to Copenhagen, and for eight years devoted himself mainly to literature. The poetry, both secular and religious, that he produced, drew from a friend the remark that "Kingo's harp had been strung afresh." In 1821 King Frederik VI. appointed him pastor of Præstø, a parish in Seeland, from which he was the next year removed to Copenhagen, and made chaplain of St. Saviour's church in Christianshavn. From the time of his ordination he had been deeply impressed with Evangelical church sentiments, in opposition to the fashionable Rationalism and Erastianism of the day; and adhered to the anti-rationalist teaching of Hauge, whose death at this time (1824) seemed to be a call to Grundtvig to lift up his voice. An opportunity soon presented itself; Professor Clausen brought out a book entitled Kathlismens og Protestantismens Forfatning, Lære, og Ritus ("The condition, teaching, and ritual of the Catholicism and Protestantism"). This book was replete with the Erastian Rationalism which was so especially distasteful to Grundtvig, who forthwith, in his Kirkes Gjennem ("The Church's Reply," 1825), strongly opposed its teaching, and laid down truer principles of Christian belief, and sounder views of the nature of the Church. This caused a sensation: Grundtvig (who had not spared his opponent) was fined 100 rix-dollars, and the songs and hymns which he had written for the coming celebration of the tenth centenary of Northern Christianity were forbidden to be used. On this he resigned his post at St. Saviour’s, or rather was forced to quit it by a sentence of suspension which was promulgated in 1829, under which he was kept for 13 years. He took the opportunity of visiting England in 1829, 30, and 31, and consulting its libraries, mainly with a view to a further insight into Northern antiquities, and to help his studies in the early English tongue. His edition of Cynwulf’s beautiful poem of the Phefniz from the Codex Etonensis,—the Anglo-Saxon (so-called) text, with a preface in Danish, and a frii Forlaadaning (free rendering in Danish), published in 1840,—is a result of this journey and enforced leisure. Tired of his long silence, his numerous friends and admirers proposed to erect a church for him, and form themselves into an independent congregation, but this was not permitted. He was allowed, however, to hold an afternoon service in the German church at Christianshavn. There he preached for eight years, and compiled and wrote his hymn-book, Sang-Værk til den Danske Kirke (“Song-work for the Danish Church”). He still worked on towards his object of raising the Christian body to which he belonged from the condition of a mere state establishment to the dignity of a gospel-teaching national church. In 1839 (the year of the death of King Frederik vi, and the accession of his cousin Christian vii) the suspension was removed, and he was appointed chaplain of the hospital Varton, a position which he held till his death. In 1863 the king (Frederik vii) conferred on him the honorary title of bishop. The good old man died suddenly, in his 89th year, on Sept. 2, 1872, having officiated the day before. As Kingo is the poet of Easter, and Brorson of Christmas, so Grundtvig is spoken of as the poet of Whit星期tide.

With Grundtvig we cannot but join the prose writer and poet Bernhard Severin Hegenmann. He was b., he tells us in his Levelsboeg (an autobiography of his first seventeen years), at the parsonage of Torkildskrup in Falster, in 1789, the youngest of five sons. The death of his father in 1800 compelled the family to leave the parsonage for Slagelse, where he was sent to school. This he left in 1806 to enter at Copenhagen. A second autobiography, Tilbageblik paa mit Liv og min Forsatter-Periode fra 1811-1837 (“A retrospect of my life and my time of authorship from 1811 to 1837”), gives us an acount of twenty-five years more. It was intended as a preface to an edition of his works which was soon forthcoming. It describes a quiet gentle life of continued literary occupation, begun by an interesting tour in 1818-19 through France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. Twenty years have passed, and the good man went to his rest in 1862 by a calm and painless death, amidst the deepest regrets of all who knew him.

7. The impulse given by Grundtvig could not be resisted. In 1833 a clerical synod at Roskilde (the Canterbury of Denmark) drew up and brought out a new Salmeboe, which has been sanctioned for general use. It appears as Salmeboen til Kirke-og Hus-Audagt. (“Hymnbook for Church and House Worship”). The revision was intrusted to Ingemann. It is founded upon the old book of Kingo, but contains many new hymns, chiefly by Brorson, Grundtvig, Ingemann, and C. F. Bøjesen; and has already reached the dignity of an Appendix, to which those authors contribute about four-fifths.

iii. The Norwegians have in the main followed the lead of Denmark in their hymns. Kingo’s book has been the authorized hymnary, or the basis at least of those in use. But they have allowed themselves considerable freedom, and Pontoppidan’s, Guldberg’s, and still later on, Hauge’s revisions of it have been used largely in Norway. To give an instance, one of these popular hymn-books (Christiana, 1844) is Kingo’s, or rather Guldberg’s, book in the main, but the language is modernized. It is called, like Balle’s, Evangelisk-christelig Psalmboe (“Evangelical Christian Hymn-book”), and has bound up with it, as is the case with most of the Swedish and Danish hymn-books, the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, a sermon or two, and a view of the world and the history of the Passion, as given in the official prayer-book, or Alter-Boeg. A note on the title-page declares it to be “aftrykt efter original-Udgave .. og udgivet efter Foran- staltning af det Kongelige Departement for Kirke-og Undervisnings-Væsenet” (“printed according to the original edition... and published according to direction of the royal department for the conduct of the Church and education”).

2. The book now most generally used throughout Norway was authorized in 1839 under the title of Kirke-Salme-Bogen (“The Church Hymn-book”). It was edited, on the basis of existing books, by Magnus B. Landstad, a clergyman b. in 1802 and still surviving. He served in several different parishes, and always had a deep interest in church psalmody. One of the most popular home hymn-books is the pulpit in 1851 by John Nielsen, a clergyman of Christiania (1808-68), and called Christelig Psalmfor Kirke og Hjem (“Christian hymns for domestic worship and the use of Schools”). But there is still a great desire in Norway for a general Salmeboe for Kirke og Hjem (“Hymn-book for Church and Home”).

iv. Iceland followed, but slowly, in the track of Denmark. For a long time the hymn-book consisted of translations of a few of the earlier hymns of Martensson’s collection: it was published under the name of Graduale, which was explained to mean Meis-auanga bök (“The Mass-song book”). The last edition of the Graduale appeared with the name of Bishop Magnussen, in 1773. Since that time the Danish books have been used, in the Icelandic language. One of the last, if not the last, of the attempts to follow the lead of Denmark is the hymn-book of Peter Rundseth (Reykjavik, 1861), entitled Nír til aktaðir við hins evangelíku sálmbók (“New contributions to the evangelical psalm-book”).
Conclusion. The hymnody of the Scandinavian character is decidedly subjective in its hymns, and subjective, certainly, were doctrinal and invocational; but the later are, to a great extent, expositive of religious sentiments, hopes, and fears, and rather than of definite objective faith and worship. That we might borrow with I. C. Tait's Hymns of Denmark, cull flowers for transplantation into our own "spiritual flower-garden." The similarity of the Northern Lutheran and Church constitution to ours—the fact, in short, that so much among Catholic has survived the Reformation among them—makes the religious thought in the lines to run, to some extent, on the same lines as the Lutheran. Lutheranism is a State department, and Luther is the guide rather than primitive Catholicity. Under these circumstances we find, unavoidably, that much of their church songs now line up, and then. But there is much affinity between Swedish and English devotion, as will be seen in Gilbert Tait's Hymns of Denmark, 1808, already mentioned, and his Hymns of Sweden: Rendered into English: three renderings of Swedish hymns by Mrs. Charles, in her Christian Life in Song, 1858; Baring-Gould's "Through the night of doubt and sorrow," and a few others. The following is a specimen, from the Danish poet Brorson, of the style of the hymn which largely prevails in the dorf, near Suhl in Thuringia, was b. at Kühndorf, Jan. 13, 1866. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1865 (where he became a great friend of A. H. Francke), and then went to Wittenberg, where he graduated M.A. in 1867. On his return to Leipzig he began to hold Bible readings for the students. This so raised ill-will against him among the Leipziger bourgeoisie, and when, in 1869, he was invited to become diaconus at Wurzen, near Leipzig, they interfered and prevented his settlement. In 1891 he was invited to become diaconus of St. Nicholas's church, at Berlin (where P. J. Spener had just become pastor, or chief pastor), and entered on his work there on the 2nd S. in Advent. In his later years he raised a storm of feeling against himself by refusing to hear private confessions. The Elector of Brandenburg, in order to end the strife, appointed him, in June 1868, pastor at Derenburg, near Halberstadt. Meantime he was seized with a fever, which ended fatally at Berlin, July 23, 1868 (Roeh, iv, 222, 406; Wetzlar, p. 207).

Scheffer was a most earnest and faithful pastor and preacher, and especially interested himself in the children of his flock. As a hymn-writer he was not particularly prolific, but of his 48 hymns, he invited many into the German hymn-books of the period. His hymns are clear and simple in style, are composed in a considerate variety of metres, and are full of fervent love to the Lord Jesus, and of zeal for a living and practical Christianity; but they are frequently spun out, or are too subjectively. Schaff, Philip, D.D., L.L.D., was b. at Chur, Switzerland, Jan. 1, 1819. He studied at the Universities of Tübingen, Halle, and Berlin. In 1843 he was appointed a Professor in the German Reformed Theological Seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, U.S.A., and in 1870 Professor of Sacred Literature in the Union Seminary, New York. As translator, author, and editor, Dr. Schaff holds high rank, both in Great Britain and America. The various Histories and Encyclopedias which he has edited are standard works. His knowledge of hymnology is extensive, and his hymnological works which he has edited alone, or jointly with others, are:

(1) Deutsches Gesangbuch, 1860; (2) Christ in Song, a most valuable collection of original English and American hymns, and translated hymns, N.Y. 1868, Lond. 1870; (3) Hym. and Songs of Praise for Public and Social Worship, 1874, in which he was assisted by Bower and Ritchie, and Elzadie Eddy; (4) Library of Religious Poetry, 1881, of which A. Gilman was joint editor.

Dr. Schaff has not composed any original hymn. His trs. from the Latin are meritorious, and may be found through the Index of Authors and Translators.

[J. J.]

Schalling, Martin, s. of Martin Schalling, sometime pastor at Strassburg (after 1549, pastor at Weiterswiler, near Saarbrücken), was b. at Strassburg, April 21, 1582. He matriculated, in 1556, at the University of Wittemberg, where he became a favorite pupil of Melancthon, and a great friend of Nicolaus Schnecker (p. 1808, ii). After taking his m.a., he continued, for a short time, at Wittenberg as lecturer; and then became, in 1554, diaconus at Regensburg. The Superintendent at Regensburg, at that time, was Nicolaus Meister, a strong partisans of Matthias Flacius; and Schalling thought it his duty to preach against Eucharism he had to give up his post in 1558; but soon after was appointed diaconus at Amberg, in Bavaria (Oberpfalz). When, in 1568, after the Elector Friedrich III., of the Palatinate, had adopted Calvinistic opinions as to order of service, &c., all the Lutheran clergy who would not conform were expelled, Schalling had to leave Amberg. But as Duke Ludwig, the son of the Elector, continued a Lutheran, he allowed Schalling to minister to the Lutherans at Vilseck, near Amberg. After Ludwig became Regent of the Oberpfalz he recalled Schalling to Amberg, in 1576, as court preacher and superintendent; and when, after his father's death, on Oct. 24, 1570, he became Elector of the Palatinate, he appointed Schalling as General-Superintendent of the Oberpfalz, and also court preacher at Heidelberg. But when the clergy of the Oberpfalz were pressed to sign the Formula of Concord, Schalling hesitated to subscribe, holding that it dealt too harshly with the followers of Melancthon. For this action he was banished from the court at Heidelberg; and after being confined to his house at Amberg, from 1580 to March 1583, he was finally deprived of his offices. Thence he was expelled, and was appointed, 1583, pastor of St. Mary's church in Nürnberg, where he remained until blind ness compelled him to retire. He d. at Nürnberg, Dec. 19 (29), 1608 (Köch, ii. 282, &c.)

Though the above notice might seem to indicate that Schalling was a man of decided opinions, yet this was not so. He was naturally a moderate man, and a man of peace; but during the period of 1550 to 1600, Protestant Germany was rent asunder by all manner of controversies, in which hardly any one with a conscience or an opinion could avoid being involved. Only one hymn by him is known, but that justly ranks among the classic hymns of Germany. It is:

Herrn Lieb Ich ich dich. O Herr. For the Dying. This was, apparently, written about 1597, and was 1st pub. in Kurzze und unterliche Nenw Symbola ettlicher Fürsten, &c. Nürnberg, 1571; and thence in Wackernagel, p. 788, in 3 st. of 12 l. It is also in the Curt. L. &c. 1851, No. 561. Lauxmann, in Köch, vii., p. 268, says of it: "This hymn, a prayer to Christ, the consolation of the soul in life and in death, after Schalling had been expelled from Amberg, was sung before the congregation assembled after the service to the church from the heart of Schalling;" and adds, that it was a favourite hymn of P. J. Spener, who sung it every Sunday evening; of Duke Ernst III. of Sachse-Gotha; of C. F. Gellert, and of many others. The fine melody generally set to it, is from Bonhard Schmidt's Zwei Bücher einer neuen Künstlichen Tonsaule auf Orgel und Instrument, Strassburg, 1577; was embodied by J. S. Bach, in his famous music according to St. John; and is in the C. E. for England, 1893 (see below). The trs. in C. E. are:

1. Thee, Lord, I love with sacred Awe. In full, by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalmus Germanici, pt. ii., 1725, p. 51 (1732, p. 194); repeated in the Moravian H. Bks., 1754, pt. i., No. 312. In the 1801, and later eds. of the Moravian H. Bks. (1886, No. 448), trs. of st. iii., vii., of E. Neumeister's "Herr Jesu Christ, mein's heils'ter Gut," (p. 794, iv.), were substituted for Schalling's ii., iii. The 3rd st. of Jacobir's version, beginning, "Lord, let Thy blest angelic bands," was also given, as a separate hymn, in the 1734 and later Moravian H. Bks. (1886, No. 1249).

2. My heart, O Lord, its love on Thee. A good and full trs., by A. T. Russell, as No. 165, in his Ps. & Hys. 1851.

3. With all my heart I love Thee, Lord. A good and full trs., by H. G. de Blasen, for Mercer's C. P. and H. Bks., ed. 1857, No. 105. In Mercer's Oxford ed., 1894, No. 198, st. i. was omitted; and it thus began, "My body, soul, and all I have."

4. Lord, all my heart is fixed on Thee. A good and full trs., by Miss Winkworth, in her New Gen. 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 164. Altered to the original metre in her C. B. for England, 1883, No. 119.

Other trs. are:

(1) "I love Thee, Lord, with love sincere." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845, p. 86 (1856, p. 112).

(2) "O Lord, from my heart." In Schaff's Christ in Song, 1898, p. 659.

(3) "Lord, Thee I love with all my heart." By R. Masele, in the Day of Rest, 1877. [J. M.]

Scheffler, Johann (Angelus Silioso), was b. in 1624 at Breslau in Silesia. His father, Stanislaus Scheffler, was member of the Jesuits, but had been forced to leave his fatherland on account of his adherence to Lutheranism, and had then settled...
SCHEFFLER, JOHANN

in Breslau. The son was thus educated as a strict Lutheran. After passing through the Elisabeth’s Gymnasium at Breslau, he matriculated at the University of Strassburg, May 4, 1643, as a student of medicine. In the next year he went to Leyden, and in 1647 to Padua, where he graduated Ph. D. and M.D. by Nov. 3, 1649, was appointed physician, at Oels, to Duke Sylvius Namrod of Warmburg-Oels. The Duke, a staunch Lutheran, and his court preacher, Christoph Freitag, administered the ecclesiastical affairs of the district according to the strictest Lutheran churchly orthodoxy. Scheffler, who in Holland had become acquainted with the writings of Jakob Böhme, and had soon found that the spiritual atmosphere of this time were distinctly to Mysticism and Separatism. He was at no pains to conceal his sentiments, and withdrew himself from the public worship, from confessio, and from the Holy Communion. When he wished to publish his poems, and submitted them for this purpose to Freitag, he was refused permission to print them on the ground of their mystical tendencies. He resigned his post in the end of 1652, and went to Breslau. Here he became acquainted with the Jesuit, who was in that place a prominent mystic of the mystic works of Paulus (q.v.), and through them was introduced to the study of the mediaval mysteries of the Roman-Catholic Church. On June 12, 1653, he was formally received into the Roman Catholic communion, and at his confirmation on that day at St. Matthias’s Church in Breslau, he took the name of Adam, only after a Spanish mystic of the 16th cent.named John ab Anglia.* On March 24, 1654, the Emperor Ferdinand III. conferred on him the title of Imperial Court Physician, but this title was purely honorary, and Scheffler remained resident still at Breslau. On Feb. 27, 1661, he entered the order of St. Francis; on May 21, 1661, was ordained priest at Neisse, and in 1664 was appointed Ruth and Hofmarchall to his friend Sebastian von Rostock, the newly created Prince Bishop of Breslau. After the Bishop’s death in 1671 Scheffler retired to the monastery of St. Matthias in Breslau, where he died July 9, 1684, from a wasting sickness, during which he used this characteristic prayer, “Jesus and Christ, God and Man, Bridegroom and Brother, Peace and Joy, sweetness and Pleasure, Refuge and Redemption, Heaven and Earth, Eternity and Time, Love and All, receive my soul.” (Koch, iv. 3: Goedeker’s Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 197: Memoir in Dr. A. Rosenhain’s ed. of Scheffler’s Sämtliche Poetische Werke, 2 vols., Hogensburg, 1862, &c.)

Of Scheffler, as a Convert, as a Controversialist, not much need be said. He certainly became more Roman tractates, shows fitter for the sweetness and repose which some have thought unsuited to the Lutheran Church. In his Ecclesiologia, pub. at Graz in 1617; [Brit. Mus. has the 2nd ed., pub. at Oberammergau and Kempen in 1736], he collected 39 of these treatises, of which e.g. “Sine und Schlussreine, &c., pub. at Vienna in 1657, but better known by the title prefixed in the 2nd ed. pub. at Graz in 1675, viz. the Cherubinische Wandersmann. [Both eds. in the Brit. Mus.]

The 1st ed. contains five books, and a supplement of 10 sonnets; and in the 2nd ed. a sixth book is added, which includes these 10 sonnets. The work consists of Aphorisms, the majority being in two Alexandrine rhyming lines, often of considerable length, and throughout breathing the spirit of Mysticism, and not seldom verging very nearly on Pantheism. A few of those aphorisms have been reprinted by Miss Winckler in her Christian Singers, 1669, pp. 253-255; and by E. Vitalis Scherb, in the Schaf-Gilman Library of Rel. Poets, 2 vols.

Scheffler’s latest poetical work was the Sinnliche Beschreibung der vier letzten Dinge, zu heightened Schranken und Auffmarterung aller Menschen von Druck gegeben. Mit der himmlichen Prozession vermhrt, &c. Schweidnitz, 1675. [Brit. Mus.]

This is a 2nd ed., but no copy of the 1st ed. seems to have survived. It consists mainly in a somewhat coarsely realistic style, on Death (20 st.), Lost Judgment (68 st.), Hell (72 st.), and Heaven (157 st.). Then follows, at the base of the book, a note: „wie die Augen lob ich doch, mit der es erste zu haben been added to the 1668 ed. of the Heilige Seelelust.

Scheffler’s most important hymnological work is his Heilige Seelelust, or geistliche Hirten-Lieder, der in ihren Jesum verleibten Psyche, gesungen von Johann Angelus Silesius, und von Herrn Georgi Josephus mit auszubürtlichen schönen Melodien geteilt, &c.

Of this the 1st ed. appeared at Breslau, apparently in 1673, in three books, with a separate volume containing separately pag ed—book, with 32 hymns, apparently also at Breslau, 1657. In the 2nd ed., pub. at Breslau in 1664, the pagan vocabulary was considerably reduced; and in the 3rd ed., 1668, the 4th book is added, with hymns 166-205. [Both eds. in Royal Library, iv. 3: 2nd ed. in Brit. Mus.]. The first three books form a cycle of hymns, on the judgment, the redemption, and work of Our Lord, arranged according to the Christian Year, from Advent to WhitSunday, and seem nearest to have been written before Scheffler left the Lutheran church. Those of the fourth book were probably written 1653 to 1658, and those of the fifth book between 1658 and 1664. In the first three books he is most clearly under the influence of his predecessors. That is, so far as the style and form are concerned, he was greatly influenced by the Pastors of the Nürnberg Poetisch-Sprech-Heaven, and of Friedrich von Spee (q. v.); and in the substance of his poems—their longing for mystical union with Christ, and their clinging love to the Saviour—he was influenced on the one side by Böhme, and on the other by the earnest inner religious life which he had found in Holland. In his later, the d-fects and excesses of his earlier style have, in great measure, dispersed.

Scheffler’s hymns were widely received by the Lutheran Church as a welcome addition to the store of „Jesus Hymns,” but many long passed current as anonymous: the J.A. for Johann Angelus, being often interpreted as Johann Angelus Silesius, adding this designation—the Silesian theologian, Johann Angelus of Breslau.
cately the worst were selected for imitation, so that Scheffler has the doubtful honour of being the model of the spiritual-fleshy productions which disfigured the Moravian hymn-books between 1746 and 1755.

Jugdng Scheffler's hymns as a whole one must give them a very high place in German hymnody. Only a small proportion of the hymns bear a distinctively Roman Catholic character. Of the rest, after setting on one side those in which Christ is set forth as the Bridegroom of the soul, with an excessive use of the imagery of Canticles; and those disfigured by the mannerisms of the Pastoral School, there remain a large number which are hymns of the first rank. These finer hymns are the work of a true poet, almost perfect in style and in beauty of rhythm, concise and profound; the fruits indeed it may be said of Mysticism, but of Mystician chastened and kept in bounds by deep reverence and by a true and fervent love to the Saviour. Scheffler holds a high place in the first rank of German sacred poets, and is much the finest of the Post-Reformation Roman Catholic hymn-writers. A complete ed. of his poetical works appeared, in two vols., at Regensburg, 1862 (see above).

A number of Scheffler's hymns are noted under their own first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators). Two, which are trs. from the Latin, are noted at p. 70., ii., and p. 882. ii. The rest, which have passed into English, are as follows:

i. An Gott, was hat für Herrlichkeit. God's Majesty. 1st pub. as No. 110 in Bk. iii., 1657, of his Heilige Seelendust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 185), in 6 st. of 8 l., entitled, "She [the soul] rejoices herself on the glory of Jesus."

Thy Majesty, how vast it is. This is a free tr. of st. i.-iv. as part of No. 189 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 225).

ii. Der edle Schäfer, Gottes Sohn. The Good Shepherd. 1st pub. as No. 185 in Bk. v., 1868, of his Heilige Seelendust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 307), in 6 st. of 8 l., entitled, "She tells of His Faithfulness."

In Freylinghausen's G. B., 1703, No. 701, beginning, "Der edle Hirte.

Tr. as: The true good Shepherd, God's own Son. This is a tr. of st. i.-iv., by P. II. Melther, as No. 18 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789. In the 1826 and later eds. (1886, No. 22) it begins, "Christ the good Shepherd."
The version of 1801, slightly altered, is in Montgomery's Ch. Psalmist, 1825.

iii. Grosse König, dem ich diene. Love to God. 1st pub. as No. 161 in Bk. v., 1868, of his Heilige Seelendust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 274), in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled, "She presents to her Beloved her heart in diverse fashion as a morning gift."

Included, greatly altered and beginning, "Grosse König den ich ehre," as No. 737 in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1705, and further altered in Knapp's Ek. L. S., 1837 and 1865. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Make my heart a garden fair. This is a tr. of st. i.-iv., as st. ii. of No. 439 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 589).

Other trs. are: (1) "Lord, I come, Thy grace adoring," be J. G. Stärm. 1849, p. 224. (2) "Almighty King, Eternal Sire," by G. Moultrie, in his Esposuits of S. iroonothen, 1760, p. 69.

iv. Jesus ist der schönste Nam. Love to Christ.

1st pub. as No. 35 in Bk. i., 1657, of his Heilige Seelendust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 72), in 9 st. of 6 l., entitled, "She praises the excellency of the Name of Jesus."

Included as No. 59 in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, and recently as No. 15 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:—

Jesus is the highest name. This is a good tr. of st. i., ii., viii., ix., by A. T. Russell, as No. 98 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851; repeated, altered, as No. 148 in Kennedy, 1863.

Another tr. is: "Jesus is the sweetest Name, Unmortals," by J. C. Earle, in O. Shipley's Annals Sacred, 1844, p. 43.

Included in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 204, and in the Ul. L. S., 1851, No. 733. The trs. in C. U. are:—

1. Earth has nothing sweet as fair. This is a very good tr., omitting st. vi. and st. iv., by Miss Cox in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 195 (Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 144). Varying centus have appeared in numerous American collections, e.g. in Hodge and Huntington's Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, 1853; Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865; Dutch Reformed Hys. of the Church, 1869, &c.

2. Nothing fair on earth I see. This is a somewhat free tr. of st. i.-v. in xii.-xiv., xvi., by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger. 1st Ser., 1855, p. 48; repeated, abridged and altered, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 158.

Other trs. are: (1) "All the beauty we can find," as No. 437, in pt. I. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1734. (2) "Would you view the glorious face," in J. A. Labrote's Ps. & Hys., 1841, No. 437. (3) "Whatever you behold," by Lady K. Porteous, 1843, p. 33. (4) "Earth has nothing bright for me," by Miss Mannington, 1843, p. 168. (5) "The world with broadcast beauties bows," by K. Mauise, 1867, p. 14.

vi. Morgenstern der finsteren Nacht. Love to Christ. 1st pub. as No. 26 in Bk. i., 1857, of his Heilige Seelendust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 63), in 6 st. of 5 l., entitled, "She wishes to have the little Jesus as the true Morning Star in the heaven of her heart."

Included in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1705, No. 752; in Knapp's Ek. L. S., 1837 and 1865, &c. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Morning star, O cheering sight! This is a good tr., omitting st. ii., iv., as No. 28 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886.

Another tr. is: "Morning Star in darksome night," by Miss Winkworth, 1841, p. 230.

vii. Nun nimm mein Herz, und alles was ich heis. Self-surrender to Christ. 1st pub. as No. 102 in Bk. iii., 1657, of his Heilige Seelendust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 168), in 4 st. of 6 l., entitled, "She gives herself to her Bridgegroom."

Included in Freylinghausen's Neues geistreiches G. B., 1714, No. 503, and recently as No. 767 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Take my heart, and whatso'er is mine. This is a tr. of st. i.-iv., by F. W. Foster, as No. 267 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 346).

Another tr. is: "Now take my heart and all that is in me," by Miss Winkworth, 1844, p. 255.

viii. Wohl ihr den Herren finden. Seeking for Christ. 1st pub. in Bk. iv., 1657, of his Heilige Seelendust, p. 31 (ed. 1668, Bk. iv., No. 130; Werke, 1862, i. p. 222), in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled, "She gives notice where Jesus is to be found."

SCHIRMER, MICHAEL.

which is found in almost all recent German hymn-books; and, through tr., in many recent English collections. It is:—

Wer sind die vor Ortige Throne. Eternal Life. This is found in the Neuer termehrtes Gesamtbuchlein, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1719, No. 362, p. 341, in the "Anhang einiger Gegenwart"; and repeated in the Newest-und vollständige Frankfurter G. B., 1729, No. 568, in 20 st. of 6 l. In the Hesse-Darmstadt Kirchen G. B., 1733, No. 497, it is given, with a reference to Schirmer as its author, and entitled, "On Rev. vili. 13-17." It is included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1803, No. 1817, omitting st. viii. It is a beautiful hymn on the Church Triumphant (i.--ixii.), and on the aspirations of the Church Militant to attain the same victorious glory. Tr. as:—

1. Who are these like stars appearing. By Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 89, being a very good tr. of st. i.--vi., ix--xii., xiv--xvii., xx. This has come into extensive use in the cento adopted in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844; and repeated in H. A. & M., 1861; being the tr. of st. i., iii.--v., ix. Other centos are found in Briosi's Hys. & Anthems, 1831, &c. Other forms may also be noted:—

(1) Lo! a multitude appearing. This, in T. Darby's Hys. for C. of England, 1746, is based on Miss Cox's st. i., iv., v., with two additional stanzas.

(2) Who are these in dazzling brightness. Baring the victorious palm. This form, found, as No. 830, in the Baptist Ps. & Hys., 1859, is by George Rawson, with st. i., iii., based on Miss Cox's tr. of st. iii., iv. In Mr. Rawson's Hys. ferris, &cantis, 1878, No. 846, it is rewritten, so as to rank as an original hymn; and there it begins, "Who are these salvation singing!"

In 1864 Miss Cox printed a revised text in her Hys. from the German, p. 91. This is found in a considerable variety of centos, in many English and American hymn-books; some following the text of 1864 throughout, and some partly reverting to the text of 1841. It is included, e.g. in the People's Hyl., 1867, Church Hys., 1871, Hgl. Comp., 1876, Bap. Hyl., 1873, Thring's Cdl., 1880 and 1882; and in America, in the Hys. & Songs of Praise, 1874, Lawes Domini, 1884, and others. In H. L. Hastings's Sons of Pilgrimage, 1886, it begins with st. iii., "Who are these in dazzling brightness. These in God's own truth arrayed."

3. Who are these in light adorning. By A. T. Russell, as No. 145 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851; being a tr. of st. i., iv., xi., xv.

3. Who are those before God's throne. What the crowned host I see. This is a tr. of st. i.-vi., ix., x., xiv., xvii., xx., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Germ., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 267. Repeated, abridged, in Boardman's Sel. Philadelp. 1861; Kennedy, 1863; and the Sons' Hyl., 1869. In her C. B. for England, 1883, No. 77, Miss Winkworth repeated the trs. of st. i., iii., v., ix., x., xiv., xvii., altered, and beginning, "Who are those that, far before me." Other trs. are:—

(1) "Who are those before God's throne, What the crowned host I see." By J. D. Burns, in the Family Treasury, 1859, pt. i., p. 307; and his Memoir & Remains, 1867, p. 267. (2) "Who are those round God's throne standing." By Miss Munroing, 1863, p. 30. (3) "Who is this host that round the throne." By Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 20. [J. M.]

SCHENK, HEINRICH T.

Nov. 19, 1630. (Boede, p. 411; Monatehste für Musikgeschichte, 1871, p. 26, &c.)

Schein was one of the most distinguished musicians of his time both as an original composer, and as a harmoniser of the works of others. As a hymn-writer he was not so prolific, or so noteworthy. Most of his hymns are on the deaths of his children or friends, e.g. on seven of his children, and on his first wife. They appeared mostly in broadsheet form, and were included, along with his original melodies, in his "Unveränderliche Gesang-Buch Angmagrundziicher Confes- leion, Leipzig, 1627; 2nd ed., 1645. [Both in Wernigerode Library.]

Those of Schein's hymns which have passed into English are:—

1. Macht mit mir, Oett, nach deiner Güte. For the Dying. 1st pub., as a broadsheet, at Leipzig, 1628, as a Trott-Liedlein a 5 (i.e. for 5 voices), &c. [Berlin Library.] The words, the melody, and the five-part setting, are all by Schein. It was written for, and first used at, the funeral, on Dec. 15, 1628, of Margarita, wife of Caspar Werner, a builder and town councillor at Leipzig, and a churchwarden of St. Thomas. Its text is in 6 st. of 6 l.; the initial letters of ill. 1, 3, in st. i.-iv., forming the name Margarita; and the W. of St. v. l. 1 standing for Werner. In Schein's Complete, 1645, No. 303 (marked as Trott-Liedlein, Joh. Herm. Schein) a 5, and later hymn-books, as e.g. the Une. L. S., 1851, No. 830, st. vi. was omitted. It is Schein's finest production, and one of the best German hymns for the sick and dying. Tr. as:—

Deal with me, God, in mercy now. This is a good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 191, set to Schein's melody of 1628.

ii. Mein Gott und Herr, ach sei nicht fern. For the Dying. 1st pub., with his name, in his Cessional, 1627, No. 262, in 9 st. of 6 l. The initial letters of the stanzas give the name Margarita, probably one of the daughters who predeceased him. It is included, in st. 5, in the 1648, and later eds., of Grüger's Praxis; and recently, in full, in von Tucher's Schatz des evang. Kirchen- gesanges, 1848, No. 555; and reduced to 6 st. in Hardy's Kern der deutschen Kirchenlieder, 1844, No. 421. The tr. in C. is:—

My Lord and God, go not away. A good tr. of st. i., ii., iv., vii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 254, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851. [J. M.]

Schenk, Heinrich Theobald, s. of Simon Schenk, pastor at Heidelberg, on the Schwalm, near Alsfeld, Hesse, was b. at Heidelberg, April 10, 1656. He entered the Pädagogium at Giessen, in 1670, and then pursued his studies at the University (M.A. 1676). In 1676 he returned to the Pädagogium, as one of the masters; and was, from 1677 to 1689, "praecopter classicus." On Dec. 27, 1689, he was ordained as Town preacher, and "definitor," at the Stadtkirche in Giessen. He d. at Giessen, April 11, and was buried there April 15, 1727. (F. W. Strieder's Hessische Geschichte und Schrifsteller Geschichte, vol. x., Cassel, 1795, p. 10; &c., from Dr. Naumann, pastor primarins, and from Dr. Schiller, Gymnasial-director at Giessen. The registers at Giessen give the date of his burial, but not of his death; but say, that at his death he was aged 71 years less 10 days, which would rather suggest April 21 as the date of his birth.) Only one hymn is known by him, but it is a hymn matriculated at the University of Leipzig, at 1630, 1619, and graduated M.A. in 1630. In 1631 he was appointed subrector, and in 1651 rector of the Gymnasium at Erfurt. During his curateship the rectorship fell vacant several times, and each time he had officiated as prorector during the vacancy of a younger man than he was set over the health (probably on account of Schirmer’s feeble health) until, last of all, in May 1658, the rector was promoted over his head. In the same year Schirmer retired from office. The remainder of his life he spent in Berlin, where he died in the end of 1669, a version of the famous Berlin Klöster Kirche, on May 8, 1673 (M. Michael Schirmer, Ec., by Dr. J. F. Bachmann, Berlin, 1859; K. Giedeke’s Grundriss, vol. iii, 1887, p. 180. Koeh, iii, 333, &c. Koeh speaks of Schirmer as having been rector of the school at Freiberg in Saxony, and then pastor at Striegelnitz on the Mulde, both between 1630 and 1636; and of his having been finally appointed as rector at Freiberg. But for these statements there appears to be no evidence whatever. The Michael Schirmer, who was rector at Freiberg, and on Feb. 7, 1672, was appointed archidianaconus there, but d. at Freiberg on Oct. 25, 1672, was only b. on March 26, 1635. The rectorate at Freiberg was held by Johann Schellenberg from 1672 to 1642; and the pastorate at Striegelnitz was held by Friedrich Hilsner from 1623 to 1636.

SCHEMANN, LEWIS.

Schirmer, who had many domestic and personal afflictions, the early part of his life in Berlin was spent amid the distresses caused by the Thirty Years War, during which Brandenburg, and Berlin itself, suffered greatly from pestilence and poverty. In 1644 a deep melancholy fell upon him, which lasted for five years; and something of the same kind seems to have returned to him for a time, after his wife’s death, in Feb. 1667. Schirmer was mostly an occasional poet in German and Latin. He pub. at Berlin, in 1631, a metrical version of St. Matthew’s Life in German, also at Berlin, in 1650, a natural play, which was acted by the schoolboys at the gymnasium. He also pub. at Berlin, in 1650, versions of the Songs of the Old and New Testament as hymns, also in Ecclesiastische Lieder und Lekturpreise. The only compositions by him which have come into use as hymns, are contributions to J. C. Grimm’s Neues volksetches d. Berlin, 1440; and to Crämer’s Psalmenbuch, Berlin, 1648, &c. (see pp. 271, 272, 277, &c.). These five, in all, passed into many German manuscripts. They were reprinted by Dr. Bachmann, as ab-ve, poetical compositions.

There are practical, clear, objective hymns, from whom indeed Schirmer borrows a few expressions.

The only hymn by Schirmer which has passed into English is:—

O heilge Geist, kehr bei uns ein. Whitearius, entitled, "Another short hymn for Whitmas." Repeated in the Crämer’s Psalmenbuch, vol. L. 8., 1851, No. 179. It is a truthful paraphrase of St. John’s, and still more closely to those of Heermann’s hymns, of which it is a contribution, &c.

Wir wissen nicht, Herr Zeletho. Tr. as:

SCHLEZEL, JOHANN ADOLF

1. O Holy Ghost, descend, we pray. This is a well-known hymn, as a free tr. of st. iii., viii, added, as No. 108, in the Ontario Luth. Hymn., 1880. The Ontario Hym. also gives, as st. ii., a tr. of the recast of st. v., which was interpolated between st. i., ii, when the hymn was included in the Hannevor H. B., 1657. This is a good tr., omitting st. ii., iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her "Stuflauffeih in the Evangelical Lutheran Stift (i.e. Protestant munich) at Cöthen. On applying to Cöthen, however, the present writer was assured that her name did not occur in the books of the Stift; and from the correspondence which she carried on, in 1750-32, with Heinrich Ernst, Count Stolberg, and Count Schirmer (p. 80, &c.), it would rather seem that she was a lady attached to the little ducal court at Cöthen. (Ms. from Dr. Eduard Jacob, Wernigerode, &c.) Further details of her life has been impossible to obtain.

In the complete ed., 1744, of the Schirmaier Lieder (see p. 80, &c.), Nos. 20 and 73 in pt. 1.; and Nos. 20, 24, 33, 43, 56, 84, in pt. II., are by her. In the marked copies, at Wernigerode, of the Neue Stiftnachrichten, and the Lieder, Wernigerode, 1752, the following hymns in that collection are ascribed to her, viz. Nos. 19, 60, 90, 149, 349, 357, 373, 486, 490, 549, 551, 640, 649, 698, 739, 751.

The only one of her hymns which has passed into English is:—

Stille, mein Wele, dein Jesus hilft siegen. Cross and Consolation. A fine hymn on waiting for God. It appeared in 1754, No. 608, in pt. 1. of the Stift, and is included in Knopp’s Ec. L. S., 1837, No. 2429 (1845, No. 2071). The tr. in C. B. is:

Be still, my soul, the Lord is on thy side. This is a good tr., omitting st. iii., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 2nd Series, 1835, p. 31 (1848, p. 106). It has been included in Breitkopf & Hartel’s Neues Psalter, p. 8; and in Preuß. Bk. 1889, Church Praises, 1883, and others.

J. M."

Schirmer, Catharina Amalia Doro-
then von. Little is known of this lady. According to Koeh, iv., p. 490, she was b. Oct. 22, 1637, and was "Stuflauf giin in the Evangelical Lutheran Stift (i.e. Protestant munich) at Cöthen. On applying to Cöthen, however, the present writer was assured that her name did not occur in the books of the Stift; and from the correspondence which she carried on, in 1750-32, with Heinrich Ernst, Count Stolberg, and Count Schirmer (p. 80, &c.), it would rather seem that she was a lady attached to the little ducal court at Cöthen. (Ms. from Dr. Eduard Jacob, Wernigerode, &c.) Further details of her life has been impossible to obtain.

Schirmer, Johann Adolf, d.d., b. of Dr. Johann Friedrich Schirmer, Appellationarist at Meissen, in Saxony, was b. at Meissen, Sept. 17, 1721. After passing through the famous school at Pforz (Schulab Abtei zu Pforz), near Naumburg, he studied, from 1741 to 1746, at the University of Leipzig, where he became acquainted with Cramer, Gellert, and Klop-}

Gymnasium in that town. He removed to Hannover in 1759, as pastor of the Mark Kirche. In 1773 he was removed to the Neuenkirch Church, as chief pastor, and also as Consistorialrath and Superintendent. While retaining his pastorate at Hannover, he was also appointed, in 1782, as General Superintendent of the district of Hoys. In 1787 he exchanged this for the General Superintendentship of the Principality of Kalenberg. The same year he received the degree of B.D. at the Jubilee Festival of the University of Göttingen. He d., of fever, at Hannover, Sept. 16, 1798. (Heermann, i., p. 214; Jördens' Lexikon, iv., p. 521; Koch, ii., p. 217; ms. from Pastor A. Kranold, Hannover.)

Schlegel was a most prolific writer, though to the literary world at large the names of his sons, August Wilhelm and Friedrich von Schlegel, are better known. He was one of the most celebrated preachers of his time, and the author of many volumes of sermons. His hymns suited the taste of the Rationalistic period, and were exceedingly popular in the end of the 18th cent., but have now, in great measure, passed out of use. Many of them were merely polished and weakened versions of, or were founded upon, earlier hymns. In his strictly original hymns, he does not at all equal either Gellert or Klopostock. His hymns appeared in the following collections:—

One of Schlegel's hymns is a tr. of, and is noted under "Veni Creator Spiritus." Another is noted under Gellert, C. F., No. ix. (p. 407, ii.). The others which have passed into English are:—

1. Wie herzlich strahlt der Morgenstern. Love to Christ. 1st pub. in 1764, as p. 112, in 7 st. of 11 l., and entitled, "Longing after union with Jesus, on the model of the old hymn, Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern." It is a recast of Nicolai's hymn (see p. 806, ii.), but thorough as to be almost independent of it. It was included in Zolliker's G. B., Leipzig, 1769, No. 404; in the Hamburg G. B., 1842, No. 450, &c. The trs. in C. U. are:—

1. How brightly beams the Morning Star! This is a good tr., omitting st. iv., v., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1853, No. 38.

2. How brightly shines the Morning Star! What eye desciles it from afar. A good tr., omitting st. vii., contributed by J. M. Sloan to J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865, No. 292, and repeated, omitting st. iii., iv., in Wilson's Songs of Zion, 1878. Mr. Sloan recast the trs. of st. i., ii., v., vi., for the Free Church H. Bk., 1882; and this form is repeated in Church Praise, 1883. In Laudes Domini, N.Y., 1884, the text of 1882 is given with the added st., "Rejoice ye heavens," from Merck's version of Jacobi's tr. from Nicolai (see p. 807, i.),

Hymna not in English C. U.—

1. Es lag die ganze Welt. St. John Baptist's Day. In 1766, as above, p. 25, in 9 st. of 8 l. It is based on a hymn by J. G. Olearius (p. 956, ii.), 1st pub. 1644, in 9 st., as "Es lag die ganze Welt," and in Burg's G. B., Brézéan, 1746, No. 396. The tr. from Schlegel's recast is "The world enslav'd to sin." By Dr. H. Malla, 1841, in his Versuch, P. 193 (1856, p. 202),

11. Jauchzet! es ist eine Ruh vorhanden. Stepping in Jesus. 1st pub. in his Versuch geistliche Gedichte, vol. i., 1787, p. 124, in 2 st. of 10 l., dated 1771, and entitled, "Of the happiness of Heaven." It is based on Kuhn's

"Es ist noch eine Ruh vorhanden (p. 684, ii.)." It is "Rejoice, that rest is not far distant," By Miss Barrett, 1853, p. 59.

iv. Mein Jesu, für den Herrn. Passiontide. 1st pub. in 1764, as above, p. 63, in 1 st. of 6 l. It is "The trying to the heart." By Dr. H. Malla, 1841, in his Versuch, P. 195 (1856, p. 209).

v. Schweigt Stürme! brauset nicht Ihr Meer. Summer. This is an Ode, 1st pub. in the Neuenkirchischen Reden und Bemerkungen, vol. 1., 1744 (ed. 1747, p. 144); as entitled, "Praise of the Godhead. On the model of the 44th Psalm." In C. C. Sturm's Sammlung geistlicher Gesänge über die Werke Gottes in der Wahrheit, Halle, 1767, p. 257, it is recast, and begins, "Rund um mich betet nicht als Freunde;" and this form is in the Hamburg G. B., 1842, No. 162. It is tr. as, "And still—oh, my God," By Miss Fry, 1859, p. 111.

vi. Tag der Erleuchtung uns gebracht. Whitmonde. 1st pub. in 1768, as above, p. 43, in 3 st., and in collections, as in the Kopenhagen G. B., 1754, No. 282, begins "O Tag der uns des Vaters Ruh." This is tr. as "O day! that hast unto our souls set forth." By Miss Fry, 1859, p. 94.

Schlosser, Ludwig Heinrich. [See- meister, K., No. iii., p. 797, ii.]

Schmidt, Johann Evangelius, b. of Johann Jakob Schmidt, pastor at Hohenfel- den, near Erfurt, was b. at Hohenfelden, Dec. 12, 1670. He matriculated at the University of Jena in the autumn of 1688, and in 1691 went to Erfurt to attend lectures by Breit- haupt and Francke. Part of 1692 he spent in travelling in North Germany, and during the years 1693-96 he was mostly employed in pri- vate tuition at Gottingen. On the 12th S. after Trinity, 1697, he began work at Siebeneichen near Gottinga, as substitute (curate in charge) and on the 4th S. in Advent, 1698, as pastor there. He d. at Siebenechen, Dec. 25, 1745, with the character of an "edifying teacher in his parish, a good example to his flock, and a methodical man in his office." (G. G. Brück- ner's Kirchen und Schulenleben, vol. iii. pt iv. p. 59, Gottho, 1761, &c.)

Schmidt's hymns were contributed to Freylingha- gen's Gieistliches G., 1704, and Neues Geistreiches G., 1714. In the latter Freylinghausen prints as a supplement (Zugabe) 17 so-called "Psalms for Festi- vals," being compositions in OdE or Psalm form and unburmed, remarking in his preface that the author of these (i.e. Schmidt), had written similar compositions for all the Sundays in the year. Of his hymns in rhyme (4, 1st pub. 1794; 21, 1st pub. 1795), some have attained considerable popularity, being of moderate length, good in style, thoughtful and interesting.

Of Schmidt's hymns those which have passed into English are:—

1. Es ist vollbrach: vergis ja nicht. Passiontide. This hymn on "It is finished," 1st appeared in 1718 as above, No. 72 in 6 st. of 5 l. Included as No. 96 in the Cen. L.S., 1851. The trs. in C. U. are:—

1. All is fulfilled—my heart, recorded. By A. T. Russell, omitting st. iv., v., as No. 100 in his Ps. Hym., 1851.

2. The finished: G glorious word. A full but able: free tr. by Dr. Kennedy, in his Hymns, Christ., 1863, repeated, omitting st. i., v., in Reid's Praise Bk., 1877.

Erhebe den Herren, der Alles in Allen. Thanksgiv- ing. 1st pub. 1714 as above, No. 560, in 4 st. of 4 l. Included in Knapp's Ev. L.S., 1837 and 1865. Tr. as. The praises of him who is Grace's Dispenser. The tr. is No. 590 in pt. ii. of the Missouri Bk., 1851.

iii. Fahre fort, fahre fort. Faithfulness. Founded on Christ's Message to the Seven Churches in Asia. 1st pub. 1714 as above, No. 667, in 7 st. of 7 l. In the Cen. L.S., 1851, No. 223. The trs. are:—

I. Bekreuziger! mein Herr: sucht. Passiontide. 1st pub. 1714 as above, No. 73, in 6 st. of 6 l. In Burg's G. B., Brézéan, 1746, No. 483. The trs. are:—

(1) "Christ crucify'd: my Soul by Faith Desires," in Schmolck, Benjamin, s. of Martin Schmolck, or Schmolke, Lutheran pastor at Brauchitzdorff, near Liegnitz in Silesia, was born at Brauchitzdorff, Dec. 21, 1762. He entered the Gymnasium at Lauban in 1788, and spent five years there. After his return home he preached for a while, and then, at the age of 25, married the daughter of an influential businessman in Leipzig, and was called to study theology. He matriculated at Leipzig in 1794, where he came under the influence of J. G. Herder, J. B. Carpoz, and others, and throughout his life retained the walls of a liberal Pietism. In the autumn of 1799, after completing his studies at Leipzig (during his last year there he supported himself mainly by the processes of occasional poems written for wealth-young people), he returned to Brauchitzdorff to help his father, and, in 1701, was ordained as his assistant. On Feb. 12, 1702, he married Anna Roßmann, dau. of Christoph Rehwald, merchant in Lauban (see No. xvii. below); and in the end of the same year was appointed deacon in the Friedenskirche at Schweinitz in Silesia. As the result of a Coetz-Refosch, in 1706, the churches in the principality of Silesia, the churches that had been taken from the Lutherans, and for the whole district the Peace of Westphalia (1648) allowed only one church (that only of timber and clay, without tower or roof) in Schweinitz, outside the walls of the town; and the three clergy attached to this church had to minister to a population scattered over some thirty-six villages, and were moreover hampered by many restrictions, e.g.
being unable to communicate a sick person without a priest from the local Roman Catholic priest. Here Schmolck remained till the close of his life, becoming in 1708 archdeacon, in 1712 senior, and in 1714 pastor primarius and ispeculator. Probably as the result of his exhausting labours he had a stroke of paralysis on Lactare (Mid-Lent) Sunday, 1730, which for a time laid him aside altogether, and after which he never recovered the use of his right leg. For five years more he was thus unable to oficialize, preaching for the last time on a Parish Day in 1735. But two more strokes of paralysis followed, and then catarrh came on, relieving his labours for a time by a successful operation, but returning again incurably. For the last months of his life he was confined to bed, till the anniversary of his wedding, Feb. 12, 1737.
Ledderhouse's ed.
Lieder, Halle, 1857, 327, known in his own dis-strict as a popular and gentleman, and a man of wonderful tact and discretion. It was however his devotional books, and the original hymns therein contained, that brought him into wider popularity, and carried his name and fame all over Germany. Long lists of his works and of the various editions through which they were passed are given by Koch, Bode and Goethe.
It is rather difficult to trace the hymns, as they are copied from one book of his into another, &c. The most important books which are the sources of his hymns are the following:—

(1) Heilige Pfaffen der himmlisch-gezeiten Seele, &c.
(ed. by his father a sermon which he delivered on St. Peter's, 1764, with 50 hymns; the 2nd, in 1765, with 3; the 3rd, in 1766, with 146. The earliest we have been able to find is a pirated ed. of 1767, and the 4th, at Görlitz and Lauban, 1769. [Both in Royal Library, Berlin.] This was his most popular book, and passed through 13 eds. in his lifetime. (2) der lustige Sabab, in der Stille zu Zion, mit heiligen Liedern gesetzt, by J. J. Hauer and Schweinitz, 1712 (Berlin Library).
(3) Das in gegebneren Zeiten reizvoller verbundene Andachtige Hertzte, &c. Breslau and Liegnitz, 1714 (Berlin Library).
2nd ed., enlarged, 1715. (4) Eines andächtigen Hertzten SCHOLZ and Ave, 1st ed. Breslau, 1715, 2nd ed.,

Pfiffigen, &c. Schweidnitz and Janer, 1717 (Berlin Library and Pet. X.).

(6) Zweische

1732 (Brit. Mus. and Gottingen Library).
(11) Klage und
Beugen, &c.
Breslau and Liegnitz, 1732,
S. d., 1734
(Berlin Library).
The contents of these, and of his numerous other works, are collected in his S#imische Trakt- und Geistlicbe Schriften, &c. 2 vols.
(Tiibingen, 1780 and 1782. Later editions, dated from 1780 to 1834).
Many of these have been recently ed. by Ludwig Grote (Leipziger, 1855) and by K. F. Ledderhouse, as above.

Schmolck was the most popular hymn-writer of his time, and was hailed as the “Silesian Rast,” as the “second Gerhardt,” &c. It was true that he did not possess the soaring genius of Gerhardt. Nor had he even Gerhardt’s concise, simple style, but instead was too fond of high-sounding expressions, of plays upon words, of far-fetched but often recurring contrasts, and in general of straining after effect, especially in the pieces written in his later years.
In fact he was entirely written, and laterally without proper attention to concentration or to proportion. Besides Cantatas, occasional pieces for weddings, funerals, &c., is the author of some 900 hymns, properly so called. These were written for all sorts of ocasions, and range over the whole field of family, church, and individual life. Naturally all are not of the first order; but those in his first three collections are decidedly the best. A deep and genuine personal religion, and a fervent love to the Saviour, inpire his hymns best; and as they are not simply thought out but felt, they come from the heart to the heart. The best of them are also written in a clear, flowing, forcible, natural style, and abound in sentiments, easily to be remembered. Even of these many are, however, more suited for family use than for public worship. Nevertheless they very soon came into extensive use, not only in Silesia, but all over Germany. Thus, for example, in the Hannover G. B., 1740, and the Augsburg
...
G. B., 1767, there are 73 by Schmolck. In the Andere Theil, 1725, of the Gotha G. B., there are 256, and the Neue Anhang, circa 1732, has 45 more; so that in the complete book, no less than 301, out of 1300, are by him. In the recent German hymn-books many still remain; and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, so often referred to in this Dictionary, has in all 114 of his hymns.

A number of Schmolck's hymns are annotated under their original first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators). The others which have passed into English are:

i. Der beste Freund ist dem Himmel. Love of Jesus. 1st pub. in his Hymne Flamen (ed. 1709, p. 100), in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "The Best Friend." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 788. Tr. in C. U. is:

A faithful friend is waiting yonder. This is a good tr. of st. v., as No. 293, in Kennedy, 1863.

ii. Die We ech geht rum Ende. Saturday Evening. In his Andachtige Hurtle, 1714, p. 116, in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled "Evening Hymn," and appointed for Evening Prayer on Saturday. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1158. Tr. as:

The week draws near its ending. This is a good tr. of st. ii., vi., vi., x., marked as by "A. G.," as No. 81 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

Other trs. are: (1) "Though now the week is ending," by H. J. Buckoll, 1842, p. 167. (2) "The week at length is over," by Miss Manning, 1863, p. 137.

iii. Gott du bist selbst die Liebe. Holy Matriony. In his Schauk und Asche, 1717, p. 289, in 6 st. of 8 l., entitled "Marriage Hymn;" and so in his Wunderstahl, 1717, p. 70. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1407. Tr. as:

O God, Who all providest. This is a good tr., omitting st. iii., by J. M. Sloan, as No. 312 in J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865.

iv. Hallelujah! Jesus lebt. Easter. In his Bochim und Elim, 1731, p. 67, in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "Hallelujah! at the grave of Jesus." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 296. Tr. as:

Another tr. is: "Hallelujah! Jesus lives! Life, Immortality, He gives." This is a full and good tr., by Miss Warner, 1858, p. 486, repeated in the Treasury of Sacred Song, Kirkwall, n.d.

v. Heute mir und Morgen dir. Funeral Hymn. In his Schauk und Asche, 1717, p. 252, in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "Daily Dying;" ii. 1, 6 of each st. being identical. So in his Wunderstahl, 1717, p. 65. In Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, No. 1010. The tr. in C. U. is:

To-day mine, to-morrow thine. This is a good and full tr., by Miss Warner, in her Hys. of the Church Militant, 1858, p. 260; repeated in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860.

vi. Je grüsser Kreuz, je naher Himmel. Cross and Consolation. In his Andachtige Hurtle, 1714, p. 273, in 9 st. of 6 l., entitled "Hymn of Cross and Consolation." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 293. By its sententiousness and its manifold illustrations of the power of the Cross it has been a favourite with many. Tr. as:

1. Greater the Cross, the nearer heaven. This is a good tr., omitting st. ii., iii., in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848. In Sacred Lyrics from the German, Philadelphia, U.S., 1859, p. 133, it is marked as by "J. J. Gurney," but upon what authority we know not.

2. The more the cross, the nearer heaven. By Miss Warner, in her Hys. of the Church Militant, 1858, p. 238, repeated in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860.

Another tr. is: "The heavier the cross, the nearer heaven," by J. D. Burns, in the Hymn Book, 1848, p. 160 (Memor and Remains, 1869, p. 242), repeated in the Schaff-tillman Lib. of Ref. Poetry, ed. 1883, p. 38, altered and beginning, "Heavier the cross.

vii. Jesus soll die Leugn sein. New Year. In his Marx und Monroe, 1725, p. 201, in 9 st. of 6 l., entitled "Jesus' Name for the New Year, 1725." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 199, st. i.-iv. are given, with an added st. as st. iii. The tr. in C. U. is:

Jesus shall the watchword be. This is a good tr. of st. i.-iv., by J. D. Burns, in his Memor and Remains, 1869, p. 292; repeated (reading shall our) in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Another tr. is: "Jesus' name shall be our watchword," by J. Kelly, in the Family Treasury, 1867, p. 66.

viii. Licht vom Licht, erleuchtet mich. Sunday Morning. This fine hymn appeared in his Andachtige Hurtle, 1714, p. 19, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled "Morning Hymn," as one of the hymns for Morning Prayer on Sundays. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1061. Tr. as:

Light of Light, enlighten me. This is a very good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyrics Ger., 2nd Ser., 1869, and elsewhere. Included in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 17. Repeated, in full, in Kennedy, 1863; Bspo. Hyl., 1879, and others, and in America in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868; Dutch Ref. Hys. of the Church, 1869; Presb. Hyl., 1874, &c.; and, abridged, in various collections.

Other trs. are: (1) "Light of Light! illuminate me," by H. J. Buckoll, 1842, p. 6. (2) "O thou blessed Light of Light," by Miss Dunn, 1867, p. 74.

ix. Mein Jesum lasse ich nicht. Ach was zu erheiren haben. Love to Christ. In his Hymne Flamen (ed. 1707, p. 7; ed. 1709, p. 10), in 8 st. of 6 l., entitled "The constant faithfulness of Jesus." The initial letters of the various lines give the name "Maria Helena von Hoberg, gebahrene Freien von Briebrana." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 818. Tr. as:

I'll with Jesus never part. This is a tr. of st. i., ii., iv., as st. iii.-v. of No. 378 in the Montana H. Bk., 1789. In the ed. of 1846, No. 432 (see p. 614, l.), the part from behind "He is mine and I am His" (the tr. of st. ii.).

Another tr. is: "I'll not leave Jesus—never, never," by Miss Warner, 1858, p. 609.

x. Mein Gott, ich weiss wohl dass ich sterbe. For the Dying. This seems to have first appeared in the 9th ed. of 1700, of the Berliner Vollständige Kirchen- und Haus-Music, p. 805. Also in Schmolck's Heigthe Flammen (ed. 1707, p. 74; ed. 1709, p. 199), in 5 st. of 6 l., entitled "Daily Thoughts on Death." Included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1478. Tr. as:

My God! I know that I must die, My mortal. This is a good and full tr. by Mrs. R. Taylor, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 39 (1884, p. 41), repeated in Boardman's Sel., Philadelphia, U. S., 1861; Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868, and Holy Song, 1869.

Other trs. are: (1) "That I shall die full well I know," by Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1866, p. 232). (2) "My God! I know full well that I must die," by Miss Warner, 1858, p. 344. (3) "My God, I know that I must die," by G. Mouttrie, in his Specimens of S. Doctores, 1876.

xi. Mein Jesus lebt! was soll ich sterben. Easter. In his Hymne Flamen (ed. 1707, p. 48,

SCHMOLCK, BENJAMIN

No. 243

Ed. Christ. G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 312. Tr. as :—

Saviour lives; I shall not perish. This is a tr. by A. T. Russell, omitting st. ii., as No. 292, in his Fs. & Hgs., 1851; slightly altered in his in his V. No. 9, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 718. Tr. as :

Oh how joyous, oh how blissed. This is a good tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 292, in his Fs. & Hgs., 1851.

Another tr. is :— "Oh, how bliss beyond our telling." This is in the British Herald, Nov., 1846, p. 363; reprinted in his Richard Praire, Bk. 1872. It is from "O wie michlich seilt," a recast, probably by J. S. Dietrich, as No. 1863, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 372. Tr. as :

Come, deck the feast to-day. By Miss Winkworth, omitting st. iv., as No. 185, in his Kirchen-Gesprüche, 1832, p. 47, in 7 st. of the Spec. Ser., 1870, ed. 1863, No. 1381. Tr. as :

1. Open now the gates of beauty. This is a good tr. omitting st. iii., iv., vii., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 15. Repeated generally in full, in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866; New Cong. H. Bk. Suppl., 1874; Horder's Cong. H. yrs., 1884; and in America in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1869; Evangel. Hyl., N. Y., 1886; and Lawes Domini, 1886.

2. Open wide the gates of heaven. This is a tr. of st. i., ii., iv., viii., vii., by H. L. Hastings, dated 1885, as No. 1076, in his Songs of Pilgrimage, 1886.

Another tr. is :— "Throw the glorious gates wide open," by Miss Mantion, 1863, p. 4.

Welcome Thou victor in the strife. This is a good tr. omitting st. ii.—iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger. 1st Ser., 1855, p. 91 (C. B. for England, 1863, No. 61, omitting the trs. of st. iv., viii., ix.). It was included, in full, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Service of Song, 1871; Bapst. at Gettysburg, and others. The trs. of singings of the three resound (and with three st., not from the German), added, are included as xxxii. Mein Gott, mein Alles über Alles. Pasionbote. In his Heilige Flammam (ed. 1707, p. 38; ed. 1769, p. 69 in 7 st. of 4 l., and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 269. The tr. are (1) "See, what a man is this! How fearful is his glance," by J. Kelly, in The British Vespers, Feb., 1868; repeated in the Family Treasury, 1868, p. 691, (2) "See what a man is this, O glances," by Miss Warner, 1869, p. 32.

No. 243 in the His. of the Spirit, Boston, U. S., 1864, as a "Hymn of Peace."

xi. Was Gott thu dass ist weihgethan? Er gebt und nimmt anch wieder. On the Death of a Child. In his Schmuck und Anche, 1717, p. 269, and his Wrathetab, 1717, p. 82 in 7 st. of 7 l. Also in the Hamburg B. G., 1842, No. 772. The tr. are (1) "What God does is well done," and (2) "Whatever God doth is well done," by W. Graham, in his The Jordan and the Rhine, London, 1854, p. 251, (2) "Whatever God doth is well done," by J. Kelly, in The Family Treasury, 1868, p. 68.

This hymn is perhaps the finest of all German hymns for the Holy Communion. It is an exhortation to the soul to arise and draw near to partake of the Heavenly Feast, now that we may meditate on the wonders of Heavenly Love, ending with a prayer for final reception at the Eternal Feast. It soon attained, and still retains, popularity in Germany. It is a church hymn (though it is still the unvarying hymn at the celebration), was one of the first hymns tr. into Malabar, and passed into English in 1754.

It has been tr. into English as:

1. Come, soul, thyself adorning. A free tr. by E. Jackson of st. i., viii., viii., as No. 199 in Dr. Hook's Church School H. Bk., 1850.

3. Deck thyself, my soul, with gladness. By Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1865, No. 93. This is her Lyra Ger. version rewritten to the original metre. This form is still in the Clifton College H. B. 1872, and the Evangelical Hymn. 1880.

Schneegass, Cyriacus, was b. Oct. 5, 1546, at Bublaken, near Gotha. He studied and graduated M.A. at the University of Jena. In 1570 he became pastor of the St. Blasius Church, at Wurzburg. He was also adjunct to the Superintendent of Weimar, and in this capacity sign on the Formula of Concord in 1579. He d. at Friedrichoda, Oct. 23, 1597 (Koch, ii. 2-52, &c.).

Schneegass was a diligent pastor, a man mighty in the Scriptures, and firm and rejoicing in his faith. He was also an excellent musician and fostered their love of music among his people. His hymn reflects his character, and are good and simple, setting forth in clear and intelligible style the leading ideas of the festivals of the Christian year among his people; and his Psalm versions are also of considerable merit. They appeared principally in his (1) ps. Psalms gravidus, &c., Erfurt, 1895 (Gotcha Library). This contains the Psalms of Degrees (150-154) and the 155, 156, 157, and three hymns. (2) Wentenacht und Neues Jahrwesung, Erfurt, 1895. Koch speaks of this as containing 9 hymns. The present writer has been unable to find a copy of the book. (3) Geistliche Lieder und Psalmen. Fur Einsfellige Herzen versgriechert, Erfurt, 1897 (Berlin Library). This is the complete edition of his psalms and hymns, containing 72 in all.

Of his hymns those which have passed into English are:

1. Das neugeborene Kindlein. Christmas. Probably first pub. in No. 2 above. Included as above, No. i. in 4 st. of 4 l., entitled "A beautiful little Christmas hymn on the dear little Jesus." Repeated in Wackernagel p. 138, and as No. 68 in the C. B. 1851. The tr. in C. U. are:

of Frankfurt-am-Main. He was appointed, sometime before 1524, assistant to Johann Langenhan, pastor of St. Margaret’s church, and became pastor in 1522, to preach the doctrines of the Reformation. Subsequently he became pastor at Friemar, near Gotha; and he is described as a “learned, diligent, pious, godly man.” He died at Friemar, in 1567.

During Schneus’s early years at Friemar, his energy was greatly exerted in combating the Anabaptist Sect in that neighbourhood by Nicolaus Kretz. Of this, he was interested in the children of his flock, who prepared a Catechism, taught them in church, and, as his pupil, hymns and tunes which he had himself composed. He also possessed some skill as a painter.

The only hymn which has been ascribed to Schneus, with any certainty, is—

The earliest hymn-book to which this has yet been traced, is that of the (Low German) Markburg, printed in 1542, where it begins, “Alleyn die dy,” and is entitled, “A Hymn of Penitence.” Wackenroder, iii., pp. 174–177, gives this, and three other forms (the oldest being from an undated broadsheet, circa 1540), and ascribes it to Schneus. It was included by Luther in his 1524 collection of 91, is repeated in many later collections, as in his Versuch, 1833, p. 85, calls it “an immortal hymn of prayer of a confident faith.”

Its rhymes show that it was evidently written earlier than 1542. In the earliest broadsheets, Schneus’s pupil, Marx Wagner (b. at Friemar, 1528), in his Einlöfflicher Bericht, wie durch Nic. Storken, der Auführer in Thüringen seine angefangenen Werken, Erfurt, 1597, distinctly says that he was him in the ms. Kirchenordnung (i.e. Liturgy), which he composed in 1542, for the church of St. Thomas’s church at Strassburg, d. d. Strassburg, April 23, 1577), to whom it was ascribed in the edition of 1839, of the New auserlesen Gesangbüchlein, 1545, where it is marked “N. N.” and not with Hueler’s name.

The melody generally set to it is first found in an undated broadsheet, which Wackenroder, in his Bibliothek deutscher und englischer Lieder, Halle, 1795, distinguished as “No. 468, in the Cabell’s English, 1683 (see below).” It has been also ascribed to Schneus, but this ascription seems decidedly doubtful.

The trs. of Schneus’s hymn are:

1. In Thee alone, O Christ, my Lord. A good tr. of st. i–iii., by J. T. Russell, as No. 194, in his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

2. Lord Jesus Christ, in Thee alone. A good tr. of the full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Ps. & Hym., in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 112.

Other trs. are:

(1) “In Thee, Lord Christ, is my hope.” By J. C. Jacob, 1728, p. 20 (1722, p. 91). (2) “In Thee alone, Lord Jesus Christ.” This is No. 395 in pl. i., of the Moravian H. Bk., 1814, and is entitled, “In Thee, Lord, is all my Hope.” This is based on Jacob’s tr., and is No. 359, in pl. i., of the Moravian H. Bk., 1814, No. 395, included in the Lady Haldon’s Selection. (4) “According to Thy mercy, Lord.” This is a tr. of st. iii., by J. S. Swettner, as st. i., of No. 726, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1819 (1820).

[3 M.] Schneus, Johannes. [Schneus, J.]

Scholfield, James, M.A., of the Rev. Nathaniel Scholfield, Congregational Minister at Henuley-on-Thames, was b. Nov. 15, 1789, and educated at Christ’s Hospital, and at Cambridge, B.A. 1812. Taking Holy Orders, he was Curate to the Rev. Charles Simeon, 1813; Fellow of Trinity, Cambridge, 1815; and Incumbent of St. Michael’s, Cambridge, 1823. He was also Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge, 1825, and Canon of Ely, 1849. He d. at Hastings, April 4, 1853. In addition to various learned works he pub. A Sel. of Psalms and Hymns, 1823 (11th ed., 1853), and Passion Week, a small devotional work including hymns, 1829. His Memoir was pub. by his widow in 1855. His works include, in C. U., all from Passion Week, 1828, are:

1. Draw me, O draw me, gracious Lord. Passiontide.
2. I looked, and to my raptured eyes, Christ in glory. Once did the Ointment’s rich perfume, Anointing the feet of Jesus.

Schön, Johann Gottfried, a. of J. G. Schön, pastor at Rügheim, near Hassfurt, Bavaria, was b. at Rügheim, April 15, 1749. He studied at the universities of Leipzig and Erlangen. In 1772 he became tutor in the family of Herr von Winkler at Nürnberg, by whose influence he was appointed, in Sept. 1773, preacher at St. Margaret’s church, in the Kaisersburg, at Nürnberg. He was then appointed, in 1783, diaconus of St. Mary’s church, and in 1783 diaconus of St. Lawrence’s church, where, in 1809, he became chief pastor (Stadtpfarrer). After 1789 he suffered greatly from many sufferings, and in October 1817, he had to resign his office. He d. at Nürnberg, June 28, 1818. (Koch vi. 399; Heerseelen ii. pp. 32, 262, &c.)

Schön was a popular preacher, and was specially successful with children. He took a great interest in the circulation of the Bible, and founded, or secured, the Nurnberg Bible Society in 1805. His hymns are the fruit of genuine and earnest piety, and attained considerable popularity. A number were printed separately, or in magazines. The more important of the collected editions are (1) Einige Lieder zur Heilung, Nürnberg, 1777 (Berlin Library). (2) Verwissenschaftliche Lieder und Gedichte, Nürnberg, 1790. (3) Vollständige Sammlung der gesellschaftlichen Lieder und Gedichte von Johann Gottfried Schön, Nürnberg, 1810.

These of Schön’s hymns which have passed into English are:

1. Erhebt euch, frohe Lagerungen. Holy Matrimony. Included 1790, as above, p. 51, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled “After a Marriage.” It is one of the best hymns on the subject. It was included, but greatly altered, and in 12 st. (st. iii.–vii., ix., being added), as No. 490 in J. J. Gosner’s Sammlung, 3rd ed. 1825. The same text is repeated in full in Knapp’s Ec. L. S., 1837, No. 2978; and, omitting the added sts., as No. 622 in Bunsen’s Versuch, 1833. The tr. in C. U. is:
SCHÖNTER JERRI HESU

Raise high the notes of exultation. A good tr., from Bunsen, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hvs. from the German, 1841, p. 71. Included in full, but altered in metre, in Mercer’s C. P. & H. Bk., 1857 and 1844, beginning “Now let your notes of praise arise.” Miss Cox recast her tr. for her Hvs. from the German, 1864, p. 79, where it begins “Raise high, ye notes, a glad ovation.” The form in Spenny’s Songs of G. & G., 1872, is mainly from the 1864 text, but begins with the original first line, and omits st. iv. The form in Thring’s Col., 1882, is also mainly from the 1864 text; but it omits st. iii. and begins “Raise high in joyful acclamation.”

Another tr. is: “Lift up yourselves, ye joyous natures.” In the British Mag., Nov. 1837, p. 537.

ii. Himmel an, nur Himmel an. Longing for Heaven. Included 1810, as above, p. 198, in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled “Our Conversation is in Heaven, Phil. iii. 20. A call to all Christians.” It had previously appeared in the Sammlungen für Liebhaber christlicher Wahrheit und Gotteslie- sigkeit, Basel, 1806, p. 222. It has been a special favourite in Württemberg, and is No. 421 in the Württemberg G. B., 1842. The tr. in C. U. is:-

Himmel an, still heavenward. In full, by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horae Ger., 1845, p. 163 (1856, p. 251), included, abridged, in M. W. Stryker’s Christian Chorals, 1885.

Other hymns by Schöneter are:-

SCHÖNTER, JOHANN H.

SCHÖNTER, JOHANN H.

JERRI HESU

[Love to Christ.]

In Heart Melodies, No. 51, Loud, Morgan & Chase, N. Y. this is marked as “Crusader’s Hymn of the 12th cent. This air and hymn used to be sung by the German pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem.” For these statements there does not seem to be the shadow of foundation, for the air referred to has not been traced earlier than 1842, nor the words than 1677. In the Münster G. B., 1677, p. 576, it appears as the first of “Three beautiful selected new Hymns” in 5 st., viz:—

1. Schöneter Herr Jesu; ii. Alle die Schönheit; iii. Schame dich Sonne; iv. Schön seid die Blumen; v. Er ist wahrhaftig.

In the Schlesische Volkslieder, Leipzig, 1842, p. 330, it is given with greatly altered forms of st. i., iii., iv., v. with a second st. (“Schön sind die Wälder”) practically new. The text and melody (the melody that in C. U.) are both marked as taken down from oral recitation in the district (Grafenchaft) of Glaz.

The hymn beginning, "Jesus, help conquer!
my spirit is sinking," by Miss Warner,
in 5 st., in her Hymn. of the Church Militant, N. Y., 1858, p. 161, borrows little more than the first line from the German. It is repeated in Boardman's Selection, Philadelphia, 1861,
No. 468. [J. M.]

SCHUBART, Christian Friedrich Dietzel, s. of Johann Jakob Schubart, schoolmaster and assistant clergyman at Obersentheim near Hall, in Württemberg (after 1740, at Aalen), was b. at Obersent-heim, March 26, 1759, and in 1783 entered the University of Erlangen as a student of theology. Thereafter he was for some time a private tutor at Köigisbronn. In 1764 he was appointed organist and schoolmaster at Geislingen near Ulm. In 1768 he became organist and music-director at Ludwigsburg; but, in 1772, on account of misconduct, he was deprived of his office. After that, he led for some time a wandering life, and then settled down in Ulm, where he edited a political newspaper, entitled the Deutsche Christlich, with success. By his scurrilous attacks on the clergy, especially on the Roman Catholics, and in particular upon the Jesuits, and by a satirical poem on the Duke of Württemberg, he made himself ominous.
Unsuspectingly accepting an invitation to Blautuern, he was handed over to the Duke, unjustly, and, on Jan. 23, 1777, was imprisoned in the castle of No, 365, and in Ludwigsburg, where he remained, without even the shadow of a trial, till May 11, 1787. As a compensate for his long imprisonment, the Duke made him Court and theatre poet at Stuttgart, where lie d. of fever, Oct. 10, 1791 (Koch, vi.
376; K. H. Jordan's Lexicon Dichter und

Schubart was a man of great genius, who might have attained distinction in half a dozen lines of life, had he only stuck to any of them. He was a man who could make himself the most popular, spite of the fact that he possessed hardly any tact. His moral principles were anything but strong; and the Ten Commandments (especially the seventh) seemed to have little restraining influence on him. As a writer of secular poetry, and partly lyrics, he displayed vigour and spirit; but his literary workmanship was often very careless. His hymns, over 130 in all, were written during the two periods when he led an orderly and Christian life, viz., in the years 1764-66, immediately after his marriage, and in the years
1777-87, during his enforced absence from temptation.
His captive state, his reading of the devotional books in the commandant's library, and the visits which he then received from P. M. Hain, pastor at Korrer, awakened in him a repentance, sincere if not altogether lifelong;
one of the principal results being the series of hymns included in his new-writings aus dem Kerker (Zürich, 1788). These were composed at a time when he was deprived of writing materials, and were dictated through a wall to a fellow prisoner in the next cell. They were pub. without his knowledge or supervision.
In self defence he asked the Duke's permission to pub.
an authorised ed. of his poems; and it appeared at Stuttgart, in 3 vols., 1785-6, as his Sammelb. Gedichte (a number of copies, printed beyond the subscription, bear the date 1787, and the name of a Frankfurt publisher, e.g. the copy in the Brit. Mus.:) and this also included most of those in his Todesgesche, originally pub. at Ulm in 1787. Being printed at the local printing office at Stuttgart, the poems were subjected to an official revision. Schubart meant to issue a genuine author's edition, but did not live to do so; and that pub.
by his son, as his father's Gedichte, in two parts, and at Frankfurt, 1802, is really a selection, and contains only about half of his hymns.

The best hymns of Schubart's are those first pub. in 1766, which are more genuine and spiritual than his carrier publications. A considerable number became popular, and passed into the Württemberg G. B., and other collections, up to 1850; and a few still continue in C. U. They are, however, too personal and subjective, and not sufficiently natural in style for general use.

Of Schubart's hymns the following have been tr.
into English, viz.:-

I. Urquell aller Seligkeiten. Supplication for Spiritual Blessings. This fine hymn was written about 1780, and 1st pub. in his Gedichte aus dem Kerker, Zürich, 1785, p. 102; and 18 st. of 4 l., titled, "Supplication." The full text is in Koeh, 2nd ed., vol. iv., p. 740. In the Württemberg G. B., 1791, No. 404, it is reduced to 12 st.; and the same in the ed. of 1842, No. 21.
In Dr. Schaff's Deutsches G. B., Philadelphia, U. S., 1860, No. 274, it has only ten. Tr. as:-

Though by sorrow's tears overthrown,
This can hardly be called a tv., but is rather a hymn, ended by the German, and is in 6 st. of 4 l. It appeared in A. R. Reinagle's Coll. of Ps. and Hy.
Tunes as sung in the Parish Church of St. Peter in
It is one of four hymns [for the others, see pp.
995, 1006, 1011], regarding which the Rev.
Walter Kerr Hamilton (then Archdeacon of St.
Peter's, afterwards bishop of Salisbury), says, in the preface, "Philip Pusey, Esq., has allowed me to add to this collection some hymns which are partly translations and partly original." From Reinagle this hymn passed, with alterations, into the Salisbury H. Bk. 1857, the Sarum Hyl., 1868, and various other collections. In Lord Seirole's Bk. of Praise, 1862, it is put in the "Canticles", as by "Algeron Herbert," who was Pusey's brother-in-law; and in the Sarum Hyl., as "German tr.
by Algeron Herbert." The ascription to Pusey seems the more probable.

Other hymns by Schubart are:-

ii. Alles ist sehr: 0 Worte des ewigen Lebens.
Translation about 1784, and 1st pub. at Zürich, 1785, as above, p. 117, in 9 st. of 5 l. 1:
parts in 1 Cor. ill. 21-23. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 7250. Tr. as "All things are yours! 0 sweet mesgage of mercy divine." By Miss Bortwick, in R. L. L.; 1855, p. 5 (1884, p. 733).
Schwerted, Johann C.

Schweder, Johann Christoph, s. of Anton Schweder, farmer and rural magistrate at Krobesdorf, near Löwenburg, in Silesia, was Union in Heaven. On the sorrow of parting with friends whom one hopes to meet in heaven. 1st pub. at Zürich, 1785, as above, p. 148, in 14 st. of 7 L., entitled, "The meeting again of the righteous." In the Württemberg g. B., 184, No. 6, in 9 st. of 7 L., as, "I die and grieve from those to go to." By Dr. G. Walter, 1860, p. 88.

Sudden death of a Sinner.

1st pub. at Ulm, 1781, as above, in 12 st. of 6 L., entitled, "A sudden death." In the American Ev. Luth. g. B., 1870, No. 95, p. 576. Tr. as, "Now one in health, dead, crushes." By Dr. G. Mills, 1845 (1866, p. 32).

v. Kommt heut ein eurem Stabe.

For the Ageed. On the Presentation in the Temple; and founded on St. Luke ii. 22. 1st pub. at Dáheim, 1767, as above, p. 263, in 12 st. of 6 L., entitled, "Simeon." In the Württemberg g. B., 1871, No. 105. Tr. as, "Ye who with years are sinking." By Dr. G. Mills, 1845 (p. 278). [J. M.]

Schütz, Johann Jakob, was b. Sept. 7, 1640, at Frankfort am Main. After studying at Tübingen (where he became a licentiate in civil and canon law), he began to practise as an advocate in Frankfurt, and in later years with the title of Rath. He seems to have been a man of considerable legal learning as well as of deep piety. He was an intimate friend of P. J. Spener; and it was, in great measure, at his suggestion, that Spener began his famous Collegia Pietatis (see Spener, p. 1677). After Spener left Frankfurt, in 1586, Schütz came under the influence of J. W. Petersen (p. 892, L.); and carrying out Petersen's principles to their logical conclusion, he became a Separatist, and ceased to attend the Lutheran services or to communicate. He d. at Frankfurt, May 22, 1690 (Koch, iv. 220; Blätter für Hymnologie, Feb. 1883). See also Various.

Schütz is known as an author by two tractates; one being his Christliche Lebensregeln, Frankfurt, 1677; the other, that which contains his hymn, Christliches Gedankenbuchlein, zu Beförderung eines anfängenden neuen Lebens, etc., Frankfurt, 1675. [Library of the Predigerministerium at Frankfurt.] This work includes 5 hymns, in a separate section, which is headed, "Hierauf folgen etliche v seize." These hymns are:

1. Die Wollust dieser Welt.
2. Was mich von dieser Welt betrübt.
3. So kamm, geliebte Todes-Stund.
5. Sel Lob und Ehr dem höchsten Gut.

Of these No. v. is undoubtedly by Schütz, and the other four exhibit much the same style of thought as, and frequently parallel to, the prose portions of the work. None of these have been traced earlier than 1675; and until this has been done, it is pretty safe to ascribe them all to Schütz.

Three of these hymns have passed into English; viz.:

1. Sel Lob und Ehr dem höchsten Gut. Praise and Thanksgiving. 1st pub. in 1675, as above, No. v. It is founded on Deut. xxxii 3; entitled, "Hymn of Thanksgiving;" and is in 9 st. of 61., and the refrain, "Gebt unsrern Gott die Ehre."

It passed into the Minden g. B., 1689; Luppia's G. B., 1692, p. 48; the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, pp. 570 and 650; and is now found in almost all German collections, as in the Univ. L., 1851, No. 721.

Koch, iv. 220, speaks of this hymn as "enriching many hundred others;" and a classical hymn, which, from its first appearance, attracted unusual attention. And Schenck finds, in his marten Hymnen, 334-326, related how delighted J. J. Moser was, when, on entering church the first Sunday after his captivity at Hohenwiel, he heard this hymn, and how strongly he joined in it; how it comforted the dying G. C. Rieser, of Stuttgart, on Tuesday, in Easter Week, 1743, and many other incidents.

Translations in C. U. —

1. All Glory to the Sovereign Good. This is a full and good tr., by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalms, Germania, 2nd ed., 1732, p. 151, where it is entitled, "The Malabarian Hymn." In the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 136, it is entitled, "Summary of the Book of Psalms" (1866, No. 646). Montgomery, in his Christian Psalmitiat, 1825, No. 215, adopted tr. i., iv., nearly from the 1754; and from this, the trs. of st. i., ii., iv., were repeated in Gunney's Maryebone Coll., 1851; Windle's Coll., 1873. The first form in the 1873 Appz. to Mercer's C. & H. H. Bk., No. 514, consists of the 1801 Moravian, but partly from Miss Cox. In J. A. Latrobe's Ps. & Hym., 1841, No. 5, st. i., ii., vi., vii., were adapted for use on Trinity Sunday.

2. All glory be to God most high. A good tr., by A. T. Russell, of st. i., iv., viii., for the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848, No. 59.

3. All praise and thanks to God most high. This is a good tr., omitting st. ix., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 146.

Repeated, in varying centers, in Ps. & H. S., Bedford, 1859; Harrow School H. Bk., 1866; Holy Song, 1869; Irish Church Hyl., 1873, and others. In her C. for England, 1863, No. 2, Miss Winkworth altered the metre and omitted stv.; and this form was repeated in full in the Evang. Hyl., N. Y., 1880, and abridged (i.-iv.) in the Hymnary, 1871.

The following are also trs. into English:

1. So komm, geliebte Todes-Stund. Per the Dying. 1st pub. as above, No. iii., in 11 st. of 6 L., entitled, "The thoughts on Death of a Royal Princess, after the usual interpretation of Job xix. 25." This Princess was Sophie Elisabeth, daughter of Duke Philipp Ludwig, of Holstein-Sondern, b. at Hamburg vor der Höhe, May 4, 1653; married, in 1678, to Duke Meritz of Saschau-Zeitz; d. at Schirgisgen, Aug. 19, 1694; who had been a regular attendant at Spener's conferences at Frankfurt, and thus associated with Schütz. This hymn (as also No. iv. in the 1973 work) has often been ascribed to her; and she had already chosen Job xix. 25, as the text of her funeral sermon. But it is u. prob. that both hymns were written for Schütz, or in her honour. The text of No. iii., in 1675, is repeated in Geistreiches Lieber und Psalmen, Frankfurt, 1764, p. 145, in Freylinghausen's g. B., 1764; Porste's G. B., ed. 1848, No. 992, 6c. The trs. are:—(1) "Come, happy hour of death, and close." By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 146. (2) "Come, delightful hour of death." By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 106.

iii. Was mich auf dieser Welt betrübt. Earthly Famishes. This hymn, on Remission of the Debt, first appeared in 1675, as above, No. iii., in 9 st. of 61., and entitled, 334-326, related to God. Repeated in the Geistreiches Lieber und Psalmen, Frankfurt, 1764, p. 145, in Freylinghausen's g. B., 1764; Porste's G. B., ed. 1848, No. 992, 6c. It has sometimes been attributed to Michael Franck (p. 892, L.). It is tr. as "The woes that weigh my body down." By Miss Hanington, 1863, p. 32. [J. M.] Schweinitz, Hans Christoph von, of Friedrichsdorf and Niederleube, s. of Baron Hans Christoph von Schweinitz, of Crann and Hählichen, in Silesia, was b. at Crann, Feb. 1, 1645. After studying at Breslau, Strassburg, Leyden, and Paris, and taking a prolonged tour in Italy and elsewhere, he returned to Silesia in 1668, where he was appointed Landesältester for the district of Górlitz, and afterwards Roth and Kammerherr, by August II., in his capacity of King of Poland and Elector of Saxony. He resigned his post as Landesältester, in 1708, and retired to Lenbe, where he d. Nov. 10, 1727 (F. Otto’s Lexicon. Oberlausitzer Schriftsteller, iii., p. 257, &c.). Only two hymns are known by him. One of these is:

Wird dasn nicht Freude sein! Eternal Life. This beautiful hymn, on the Joys of Heaven, was written on the death of his first wife, Theodora von Schweinitz (nee Pestenber). It was first printed, as a broadsheet, at Lübeck in 1691, with music, in 5 parts, by Christoph Adolph, in Niederweze, who was also the printer of this broadsheet in Dr. J. Zahn’s Psalter und Hymn., 1686, No. 322. The broadsheet, of which there is a copy in the University Library of Utrecht, under the title: Neuesten Liebeschul, &c., and has the note—*The following hymn was composed from the last verse on Schweinitz’s own words, and from a letter which he held, shortly before her happy end, and was sung after the end of the {Funeral} sermon." The hymn was included in J. C. Schweitzer’s Lieder, 1719, No. 278 (marked as "On the death of a little child. Job. Christ. von Schweinitz"). and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1683, No. 1399. It is 3 st. of 8 lines.

Will that not joyful be! This is a full and very good tr., by Mrs. Fieldister. In H. L. L. 1st Sec. 1854, p. 7 (1844, p. 13); repeated, in full, in H. F. C. Parke’s Hymns, &c., and, omitting st. iii., in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858. Stanzas 1-4., altered, and beginning, "Oh, that will joyful be," are in W. W. Brain’s Hymnal.—HBK, &c.

Scott, Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Scott, Independent Minister, at Norwich, and sister of Thomas Scott, noted below, was b. at Norwich about 1708. In 1731 she was married to Eliasha Williams, who had been from 1726 to 1739 Rector of Yale College, U.S.A., and with him she proceeded to Connecticut. On the death of Mr. Williams she was married to the Hon. William Smith, of New York, who also predeceased her. She died at Westerfield, Connecticut, June 13th, 1776. In connection with Miss Scott’s hymns we are acquainted directly and indirectly with four miss., each of which is interesting in itself. These are as follows:

i. The first miss. is in the library of Yale College, New Haven, Connecticut. Mr. Franklin Bowditch Dexter, M.A., Assistant Librarian, has tabulated the hymns in this miss. for this Dictionary. He says (Jan. 29, 1889): "The label on the back of this volume is, ‘Hymns & Poems by Eliza Scott.’ There is no title to the ms. pages. Prefixed to the Hymns and Poems there is, however, a long and very tenderly written dedication (in prose) ‘To my most Rever’d, much Lov’d, Father,’ this signed ‘E. S.’ and dated 1740. Then follows (without numbers) the Hymns with titles and first st. under the title as above.” Mr. Dexter adds on the first lines and titles of 36 hymns.

ii. The second miss. is in our possession. It is headed "Poems on Several Occasions by Miss Scott of Norwich, who married to Mr. Williams of New England, January 1750/1.” I found 26 hymns in full. At the head this is written. ‘These transcribed from Miss Williams’ Manuscript, Feb. 27, 1751, the week before she left Norwich to go to New England.’ The whole of these 26 hymns are in the Yale College ms.

iii. The third miss. we have consulted contains 8 hymns which are prefixed with these words: Transcribed from a book of Mrs. Bury’s, written by her Aunt Miss Elizabeth Scott, afterwards Mrs. Williamson.” Of these hymns 6 are in the Yale College ms. and 2 not therein, viz. (1) ‘Arise and hail the happy {sacred} day’ (p. 78, l.), and (2) ‘Hail, King supreme, all wise and good,” both of which are given separately in the Unitarian New O.d. of Ps. for the Use of a Cong. of Protestant Dissenters in Liverpool, commonly known as The Liverpool Liturgy, pub. in 1782. Concerning the authorship of these two hymns there is great doubt and discussion. In Dr. Dodd’s Christian Magazine for Dec. 1763 we find a writer who signifies himself ‘CL-T.” He had at that time a ms. of Miss Scott’s hymns with a dedication to her father prefixed thereto and signed ‘Eliza Scott.’ From this ms. he says: ‘Why droops my soul with guilt oppressed” (Christ, the Great Physician).’ In connection with the Dec. number of the magazine: ‘Evil and few our mortal days’ (Family of Human Life), to the Feb. number, 1764, and ‘What finite power with chance to soil’ (Praise for Temporal Blessings), to the April number of the same year. At the close of the last hymn he says in a note:—*N.B. ‘As some of your correspondents have sent you some pieces out of the same collection, from which these are transcribed, that I have undertaken to send to you {e.g. that on p. xvi. xvi.} it were to be wished, if they should do the like again, that they would signify whose they are.”
Scott, Jacob Richardson, was b. in Boston, Massachusetts, March 1, 1815, and graduated in Arts at Brown University 1836, and in Theology at Newton Theological College, 1842. He entered the Baptist ministry in 1842, and was successively located at Petersburg, Virginia; Portland, Maine; at Full River, Massachusetts; and Yonkers, New York. He d. Dec. 10, 1861. His hymn "To Thee this temple we devote" (Dedication of a Place of Worship) was contributed to The Psalmist, 1843. It is found in several American hymn-books. [F. M. B.]

Scott, Thomas, s. of Thomas Scott, Independent Minister at Norwich, brother of Elizabeth Scott (see above), and nephew of Dr. Daniel Scott, was b. at Norwich, 1702. A young man he kept a school at Wivertall, and preached once a month at Harleston, Norfolk, then, after a short ministry at Lowestoft, he removed in 1734 to Ipswich as co-pastor with Mr. Baxter of the Presbyterian congregation meeting in St. Nicholas Street Chapel. On the death of his senior in 1740 he became sole pastor. In 1774 he retired to Hapton, and d. there in 1775. He was the author of various poetical works, including:

1. The Table of Cubes; or, the Picture of Human Life, in English Verse, with Notes, 1754; 2. The Book of Job, in English Verse; translated from the original Hebrew, with Remarks, Historical, Critical, and Explanatory, 1711; 2nd ed. 1772; 4. Lyric Poems, Iconoclastic and Moral. By Thomas Scott, Lond., James Buckingham, 1773.

Scottish Hymnody. After the Reformation in Scotland, the revival from the Roman Church and its services led at once to the establishment of services in the vernacular. As on the Continent recourse was naturally had to the Psalter, and, as easiest for popular use and also as reckoned nearer to the Hebrew stan-and, the metrical Psalms instead of the prose Psalms. Indeed, Metrical Psalms was the only part of Divine worship in which the congregations in the Scottish Churches vocally joined till at least 1749, and in the three principal sections of Presbyterianism the singing of hymns, other than the Paraphrases of 1711–81, did not become at all general till after 1852 in the Free Presbyterian Church, after 1870 in the Established Church, and after 1873 in the Free Church. Consequently the use of the Hebrew Psalter has had a mighty influence upon the Scottish mind and heart.

In tracing the history of Scottish Metrical Psalms and Hymnody we find six stages:

I. The Preparatory Stage.

The early congregational psalmody of Scotland found its example, and much of its materials in the work begun on the Continent by Marot, and in England by Sternhold.

1. Clement Marot had begun translating the Psalms about 1533, and seems to have completed his first 30 versions in 1539, but did not publish them till 1542, and 1549, as Trente Psaeumes de David. Mean-while John Calvin, then in exile at Strassburg, had included in his Auleuca Psaeumes et Cantiques, 1539, 12 of the Marot versions, but in the form given to them by Pierre Alexandre, who having obtained ms. copies of Marot's Psalms made considerable alterations in the text, and published the whole 30 along with 15 by various authors as Psalms de David translatées de plusieurs auteurs, &c., Antwerp, 1541. Marot, having fled to Geneva, was induced by Calvin to revise his first 30 versions and add 19, pub. in 1543 as Cinquante Psaeumes (including the Song of Simeon). After Marot's death bequeathed to Beza Calvin required him to continue the work, publishing in 1551 Trente-quatre Psaeumes de David, reissued in 1552 with Marot's, as Psaeumes octante trois de David, to which he added 6 in 1554 and 1 in 1555, finishing the work after his return from Lausanne in 1558, the completed Psalter appearing as Les Psaeumes mis en rime francoise par Clement Marot et Theodore de Beza, Geneva, pour Antoine Vincent, 1562—49 versions being by Marot and the rest by Beza. (See Psalters, French, p. 982, I, and an interesting series of articles on Clement Marot and the Huguenot Psalter, by Major G. A. Crawford in the Musical Times, June to Nov., 1881.)

In regard to the Scottish Psalter the influence is seen in the force of example, in the inclusion of French tunes and in the composition of versions in French metres, rather than in any versions directly translated from those by Marot and Beza. (Psalters, French, § 1.)

2. Meanwhile in England Thomas Sternhold had produced 19 Psalms in an un-dated edition not earlier than 1547, increased to 37 in 1549, and to 44 by the addition of 7 by John Hopkins in 1551. These were carried by the English exiles to Geneva and there included, with 7 versions by William Whittingham, in the One and Fiftie Psalms of David, published in 1558. Along with The forme of prayers, &c., used at Geneva (Advo-cates' Library, Edinburgh). The Rev. William Dunlop, in the Cont. - at to his Collection of Confessions of Faith, &c., vol. ii., Edinburgh, 1722, says that his reprint of The forme of prayers follows the Geneva edition of 1558.

This edition, which is now lost, probably contained the Psalter enlarged by Whittingham and 2 by Pullan contained in the Psalter of 1560, now in Christ Church Library, Oxford. The next Anglo-Genevan edition now extant (St. Paul's Cathedral Library) is the Foire Score and Seven Psalms of David, Geneva, 1561, which adds to the 51 of 1556 the 9 by Whittingham, and 2 by Pullan, mentioned above, with 25 new ones, (to have Pa. c., by Kethe. Of this a revised edition was issued in the same year, probably printed in England (Britwell Library), which formed the basis of the Scottish Psalter of 1564–65. (For full details, see Old Version, p. 857, I, §§ II, 111.)

3. The earliest Psalm versions used in Scotland were those included in the collection sometimes called the Duniie Psalms, better known as the Gude and Godlie Ballates, entit-led, in the edition of 1578, Ane Copieous buik of godlie Psalles and spirituall Sangis. This collection seems, from the notice of David Calderwood, the Church historian, to have been published, at least in a rudimentary form, before 1546, but the earliest edition now extant is represented by a copy in the possession of Mr. Anderson, Esq., Blackness House, Dundee, who has kindly given a collation of it. The copy wants titlepage, and begins with folio 5 at the words "and be con-demnit" in the article of "Our Baptisme," but is otherwise perfect. From the fact of its containing an advertisement titlepage of a Scottish Psalter of 1568, and also a song proh-hibited by the General Assembly of 1568, it may be dated 1568. It does not contain the last 5 ballads of the 1578 ed.; ending instead with the prohibited song, "God's Praise." From the copy in the Britwell Library of the earliest perfect edition, that of 1578, a careful reprint was edited in 1608 by the late Dr. Laing (see Appendix to this article).

The ed. of 1578 is in four parts:—I. The Catechisme. This includes a prologue, versions of the Ten Command-ments, Creed, and Lord's Prayer, with a hymn on Baptism and another on the Lord's Supper, concluding with 6 Graces—in all 12 pieces, 6 of which are from the Ger-man, U. Spiritual Sangis, 16 in number, of which 11 are from the German and 1 from the Latin. III. Psalms, and the Psalms of David and other pleasant Balladium Translated out of Deckrursion Psallorum to be sung. These include 22 Psalm versions—of which 13 are from the German, 3 hymns from the German and 1 from the Latin, 7 adaptations from the Latin ballads, and 36 other pieces, in all 69. The collection as a whole thus includes 117 pieces, of which 34 at least are from the German (some being very close and others very free versions), and 2 from the Latin. Some of the pieces, though rude, have a wonderful pathos, and even beauty. Reading the anti-papal satire, one is not wonder at the rage they excited among the Roman ecclesiastics. Four pieces very closely resemble four of Bishop Cosin's "Gentle Psalms," c. 1610. The author of these probably derived from it. The book as a whole must be regarded as a poetical miscellany. Dr. Laing would assign the translations and Psalm versions to John Wedderburn (written probably 1539–46), and a number of the ballads to his brother Robert (see Wedderburn). If the collection was printed in book form before 1569, we may conjecture that it would not contain more than 200 of the editors of 1571. The "augmented clavis" of 1568 and 1574 seems to have been by various hands.

4. From these beginnings, Scottish, English, and Continental, arose the Psalmsody and subsequently the Psalmody, which have formed the sole part of Divine worship in the Churches of Scotland in which the congregations have joined for more than 300 years.

The first result of importance was the Psalter of 1564-65.

II. The Psalter of 1564-65.

1. The Anglo-Genevan Psalters having been imported into Scotland, the General Assembly of 1561 ordered the completion of the Psalter. The Committee appointed, unlike the editors of the English Psalter of 1562, took the whole of the 87 versions of the Anglo-Genevan of 1561, as these were given in the revised edition printed in England in the same year.

The complete version appeared as:

The Form of Prayers and Ministration of the Sacraments, &c., used in the English Church at Geneva, approved and received by the Church of Scotland, whereinunto beasyl that was in the former books, are also added some other prayers, with the whole Psalms of David in English metre. Printed at Edinburgh by Robert Lepkervik, M.D.XIII.

Of this there is a copy in the Corpus Christi Library, Oxford, and another identical, but dated 1565, in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh. The Advocates' Library, it may also be noted, possesses a copy of the Form of Prayers printed by Lepkervik in 1562, but this does not contain the Psalter.

2. This constituted the first Scottish Psalter properly so called. Regarding it the General Assembly on Dec. 26, 1564, ordained that every minister, reader, and exhorter should have and use a copy. The most important reprints of it are those of 1596, 1611, 1615, 1633, 1634, and 1635.

The Psalms are all intituled with the names of their authors. The numbers are as follows:—To Sternhold are assigned 49 (including the 23rd), to Hopkins 35, to Kethe 26 (including the 45th), to Whittingham 15, to Craig 15, to Norton 8, to Pont 6, to Marckant 2, and to Pullain 2, the 5th being unassigned. But of these Ps. 23 and 46 are by Hopkins, and Ps. 23 by Whittingham, thus leaving Sternhold 39, Hopkins 37, Whittingham 16, and Kethe 25. The versions varying from those in the English Psalter of 1562 are in all 44, but of these Whittingham's 23rd and 50th, and Kethe's 16th, were added as alternative renderings to the 1564, and Craig's 130th, to the 1561 and later editions of the English Psalter. The first lines of the remaining 40 are here given, those of the 1561 Anglo-Genevan from the Britwell Library copy, and those of the 1564-65 Scottish Psalter from the edition of 1568.

General Assembly at Glasgow, 1638. The monopoly of course simultaneously ceased. This version, while possessing felicities, is often harsh and stilted, and the circumstances of its introduction made it altogether unacceptable. We would add that Harper also reports that the 1636 text in 12mo in 1637, and that in the British Museum (Add. MS. xvi.), there are preserved ms.metrical versions in Scotch by King James of 30 Psalms, Ecclesiastes xii., the Lord's Prayer, and the Song of Moses.

III. The Psalter of 1650.
1. The desire for Uniformity of Worship between England and Scotland having led to the calling of the Westminster Assembly in 1643, one part of the work recommended to it by Parliament was that of a Psalter for use in both kingdoms. The Lords recommended the 3rd ed. of 1646, of the version of William Barton, published in 1644 as The Book of Psalms in Metre, and finally revised in 1654; and the Commons the version of Francis Rous, originally published in 1641 and recently revised,洞察 The Psalms in English Meter set forth by Francis Rous. The latter being preferred by the Assembly was revised by it and published by authority of the House of Commons as The Psalms of David in English Meter, London, printed by Miles Flesher, for the Company of Stationers, 1650.

2. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, not being satisfied with the Westminster revision, in 1647 appointed 4 persons to further revise it, viz., John Adamson to revise Ps. I–40; Thomas Craufurd, 41–80; John Row, 81–120; and John Neve, 121–150. In revising they were enjoined to use the versions of Zachary Boyd and Sir William Mure of Rowallan, as well as the Psalter of 1564–65. In 1648 their amended version was sent to Presbyteries to examine and report, and in 1649 a final Committee was appointed, consisting of James Hamilton, John Smith, Hugh MacKail, Robert Traill, George Hutchinson, and Robert Lowrie to examine those reports and the corrections sent in, and to report to the Commission, which was authorised "to conclude and establish the Paraphrase, and to publish and emit the same for public use." The Commission accordingly thereafter issued:

1650. The Psalms of David in Metre. Newly translated and sufficiently compared with the Original Text and former Translations: More plain, smooth, and agreeable to the Text than any heretofore. Allowed by the Authority of the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, and appointed to be sung in Congregations and Families, Edinburgh. Printed by Evan Tyler, Printer to the Kings Excellent Majesty, 1650. Authorising it as the only version to be used after May 1, 1650. And, it may be added, it has survived all proposals to modernise it, save in orthography, and remains to this day the only version of the Psalms used by Presbyterian Scotland.

3. Though based on Rous not much remais as first versioned by him. Even of the edition of 1646 hardly a version is retained without considerable alteration. In several instances the compilers adopted recasts from the 1564, while in many cases they have incorporated stanzas and couplets from Zachary Boyd's version, and occasionally have taken lines and phrases from Sir William Mure and from the Earl of Stirling. William Barton's complaint that much of the version was stolen from him seems quite groundless.

As issued in 1650 the version may be called rude, but its associations have endeared it to the Scottish heart, and its faithfulness, vigour and terseness cannot but be disturbing. The Butler's readings become manifest when it is compared with other versions which, when faithful, have been failures, and when successful have been so expanded and adapted as to have ceased to be faithful. Under "The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want," will be found a note on a typical version.

4. Although the Gaelic Psalms have a limited interest, a few details are necessary to the completeness of our work:

The first complete version of the Psalms in Gaelic was that by the Rev. Robert Kirk, of Dalquhadder, pub. in 1664. In 1669 the first 50 Psalms had been published by ministers appointed by the Synod of Argyle, and in 1690 those appointed to prepare a complete version of the Psalms in Gaelic were instructed to have their version revised by that Synod and forthwith printed. In 1694 the General Assembly recommended that in Gaelic speaking congregations of David; Barton, printed in 1694, should be used as being in the vernacular, and not the Psalter of 1650. In 1753 the version of 1694 was revised by the Rev. Alexander Macfarlane of Melforth, and published at Glasgow, along with the Gaelic version of the 45 Paraphrases of 1781, by authority of the Synod of Argyle. His revision was slightly altered by the Rev. Thomas Ross, and reissued in 1647. The Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Campbelton, rewrote Macfarlane's version, and published it at Edinburgh in 1787, adding to it versions of the 67 Paraphrases of 1781. He also published a new version in 1801. From these versions a revised edition was prepared by the Committee of the General Assembly, and published in 1826 at Edinburgh—including the 67 Paraphrases of 1781—as the only version to be used in public worship.

IV. Scripture Songs, 1584–1708.

1. The Scottish Psalter of 1564–65 did not contain any Spiritual Songs, but in 1575 3 were given, 10 in 1595, and 14 in 1634. They do not seem to have received direct ecclesiastical sanction, and none of them were transferred to the Psalter of 1650 or to the Translations and Paraphrases, 1741–81.

2. By the same Act of General Assembly, 1647, which appointed John Adamson and others to revise Rous's version of the Psalms, it was recommended "that Mr. Zachary Boyd be at the pains to translate the other Scriptural Songs in meter, and to report his travels also to the Commission of the Assembly, that, after their examination therof, they may send the same to Presbyteries, to be there considered till the next General Assembly."

Again, in 1648, the General Assembly recommended—

"to Master John Adamson and Mr. Thomas Craufurd, to revise the labours of Mr. Zachary Boyd upon the other Scriptural Songs, and to prepare a report therof, to be given in to the Commission, and by them to be examined and transmitted to the Assembly of 1649. But on account probably of the troublesome times nothing further was then done.

3. The question, however, came up again in 1666, when the General Assembly enjoined their Commission to revise the Scriptural Songs of Patrick Sinsin (p. 1558. ii.). Accordingly, after revision, the Commission recommended them for private use. In 1704 the Assembly renewed this recommendation, and in 1705 enjoined the Commission to revise them for public use. The Commission accordingly appointed two Committees, at Edinburgh and Glasgow, who united in advising—

"That only such of the said printed copy as are purely Scriptural Songs should be recommended for public use."

The Glasgow Committee (of which Simson was a member) proposed the addition of some of his ms. versions, and suggested that in all there should be given complete versions of Canticles and Lamentations, with 15 Old Testament and 10 New Testament Songs. In 1706 the Assembly recommended—

"to the several Presbyteries of the Church to endeavour to promote the use of these Songs in private families," and recommended Presbyteries to buy copies of the edition of 1686 to compare with the amendments to be sent to them by the Committee of revision appointed by the Commission. In 1707 the Assembly sent the Songs again to the Committee for further revision, and enjoined Presbyteries which had not yet reported to report to the General Assembly of 1708. The Assembly of 1708 accordingly appointed

"their Commission, maturely to consider the printed version of the Scripture Songs, with the remarks of the Presbyteries thereupon," and authorised them

"to publish and emitt it for the publick use of the Church," as in the case of the Psalter of 1650. And further

"seeing there are many copies of the said version lying on the author's hand, it is recommended to ministers and others to buy the same for public use in the meantime."

By the time that the stock of the 1686 edition was exhausted all idea of issuing the selection authorised for public worship seems to have been abandoned, and no trace of such an issue can be discovered.

V. The Translations and Paraphrases, 1741-1781.

1. These efforts to provide a wider range of subjects in Praise having failed to attain the object sought, the matter was again brought up by an overture to the General Assembly of 1741, which referred it to the Commission. In 1742 the Assembly appointed a Committee to "make a collection of Translations into English Verse or Metre, of passages of the Holy Scriptures, or receive in Performances of that kind from any that shall translate them," and desired the Presbytery of Dundee or Synod of Angus (whence the overture seems to have come) to transmit to this Committee "what Collections they have made or shall make."

This Committee having made no report the Assembly of 1744 renewed their appointment and added some others to their number. They having appealed for help to the Presbyteries of the Church, received materials "partly furnished by ministers of this Church," and embodied these in a Draft entitled Translations and Paraphrases of several Passages of Sacred Scripture, which the Assembly of 1745 ordered to be printed and sent to Presbyteries that they might report. Presbyteries being engaged with the Jacobite movement had to be again enjoined to report by the Assemblies of 1746, 1747, and 1748.

Thus the Metropolitan Presbytery of Edinburgh after revising Nos. 1-9, on March 27 and April 3, 1748, did not resume their revision till 1748, when on Jan. 27, March 30, and April 27 they went over the remainder.

The Assembly of 1749 authorised the Committee to print the Paraphrases as amended and send copies to Presbyteries that they might report. None having done so the Assembly of 1750 transmitted the amended Paraphrases to them. The Assembly of 1751 again transmitted them to Presbyteries which had not reported; adding—

"In the meantime, the Assembly recommends the said Psalmody to be used in private families."

After this Presbyteries were again and again enjoined to report, but no further Act was passed.

2. The collection of 1745, though thus reprinted with verbal alterations, was not enlarged in 1749. It consists of 45 Paraphrases (but no Hymns), all of which were afterwards included in the collection of 1781, 23 being by Isaac Watts, 5 by Philip Doddridge, and 2 by N. Tate; while 3 have been attributed to Hugh Blair, 3 to William Robertson, and 1 to Thomas Randall — leaving 8 unattributed.

3. Though never authorised for use in public worship the 1745-51 collection had been introduced into some congregations, and in 1775 the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr overruled the Assembly to sanction it for public use. Instead of simply granting this, the Assembly appointed a Committee to revise and add to it. The Committee not having made any report the Assembly of 1780 added some new members to their number. At length in 1781 they presented a Draft, the Advertisement to which thus describes their work:

"All the Translations and Paraphrases which had appeared in the former Collection are here, in substance, preserved. But they have been revised with care. Many alterations, and, it is hoped, improvements, are made upon them. A considerable number of new Paraphrases, furnished either by members of the Committee, or Ministers with whom they corresponded, are added. The whole is now arranged according to the order in which the several poems lie in the books of Scripture. A few Hymns are also subjoined, of such a nature as is supposed to be generally acceptable."

On May 26, 1781, the report of the Committee was given in and read to the Assembly. The Committee were then renewed, and some members added and appointed to report their opinion of the printed Draft, at a future diet of Assembly. Accordingly, on June 1, 1781, the Assembly appointed

"these Translations and Paraphrases to be transmitted to the several Presbyteries of this Church, until it shall be ordered that they may report their opinion concerning them to the ensuing General Assembly; and, in the meantime, allows this Collection of sacred poetry to be used in public worship in congregations, where the Minister finds it for edification. The General Assembly renews the appointment of their Committee; with power to judge of any corrections or alterations of these Poems that may be suggested previous to the transmission of the same; and with directions to cause a proper number of copies, with such corrections as they approve, to be printed, for the consideration of Presbyteries, and for public use."

The Assembly further appointed John Dickson, the printer to the Church, to print and publish it, and gave him the sole right of doing so for 5 years; his right being renewed in 1786 for 9 years, and in 1795 for 14 years. The Committee accordingly, after introducing a very considerable number of verbal alterations, published the collection in the same year for public use. After this the Paraphrases were brought before the Assembly in 1786, 1795 and 1803, but only for the purpose of confirming the right of printing.

4. Thus, unlike the Psalters, the Paraphrases of 1781 have never received the formal sanction of the Church. They however still continue to be used in the various senior and junior congregations, as well as in some of the larger ones, and are referred to by them far beyond its limits.

It may be noted that while in England their use in hymnals other than Presbyterian has been comparatively limited (save Nos. 15, 19, 30, 34, and the recent 43), in America they have been extensively used by all denominations, as the five above, with Nos. 4, 11, 16, being special favourites. As they have come into use in many varied forms, they are all annotated throughout this Dictionary.

The estimates taken of these Paraphrases have varied according to the ecclesiastical and spiritual standpoint of their critics. A common opinion has been that the collection of 1745 was too evangelical for the dominant Moderate party in 1781, and that while gaining in smoothness the Paraphrases lost in vigour and spirituality. As a rule, however, the amendments of 1781 have been improvements. Of the Scottish contributions some are exceedingly good, others possess the merit of being faithful to the text, while some are poor both in thought and expression. Upon the whole the collection is hardly what might have been expected from the gifts and graces of the ministers of the Church of Scotland from 1741 to 1781. For details of the authorship of the Paraphrases, the names of the Committees who compiled them, &c., see the article Scottish Translations and Paraphrases.

VI. The Hymnals.

In Sections following, i.-iv., are given the authorised hymnals of the Established, Free, United Presbyterian, and Evangelical Union Churches. In Sections v.-vii. are given the principal collections of Scottish origin used in the Baptist, Congregational and Scottish Episcopal Churches; in the Private Collections used in the first four Churches: the less important Baptist, Congregational and Episcopal Collections; and hymnals outside these seven denominations.

1. The Established Church of Scotland.—After the publication of the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781, nothing further was done till 1807, when the General Assembly being overruled aneant “the improvement of the Psalmody” appointed a Committee to consider “the need of additional Psalm Versions and Paraphrases.” In 1811 they were authorised to print their Draft which contained 17 entire Psalms and 21 Psalm portions and Paraphrases. In 1814 they were authorised to reprint their amended draft, containing 16 entire Psalms and 24 Psalm portions and Paraphrases, for transmission to Presbyteries. In 1820 the Committee were authorised to reprint 19 of the 1814 collection together with 20 or 30 others, and in 1821 Paraphrases and Doxologies. In 1834 they were authorised to reprint their amended draft, containing 32 Psalm versions, 17 Paraphrases and 2 Doxologies. In 1882 a Committee was appointed to examine these reports, but no hymnal was authorised or issued. Again, in 1827, a Committee was appointed “for enlarging the collection of Translations and Paraphrases from Sacred Scripture, and otherwise improving the Psalmody,” but the matter dropped without result. The Assembly having been overruled in 1845, appointed a Committee on Psalmody, and in 1847 a second on Paraphrases. These Committees, with additional members, were united in 1850. In 1852 the Assembly having been overruled aneant “an authorised collection of sacred hymns” referred the matter to the Committee. They presented a draft of 128 hymns in 1854 which was not sanctioned, though 25 of them, with Ep. Ken’s morning and evening hymns, were reissued in 1855. A new Committee was appointed in 1855 (enlarged in 1857), who presented in 1856 a draft of 22, in 1859 of 35, and in 1860 of 83 hymns. A special committee was then appointed to revise it, and the draft in 1861 became 97, but as allowed in 1861 as Hymns for Public Worship selected by the Committee of the General Assembly on Psalmody. It contained 89 hymns, 22 doxologies, 3 thanksgivings, 2 dissensions, Hymnanna, and 4 sanc- tuses. After a revision in 1864, in which 22 hymns were omitted and 33 added, the need of a better selection with less altered texts was made evident, and accordingly what was practically a new Committee was united in 1866. They presented successive drafts to the Assembly in 1868, 1869 and 1870, retaining finally from the 1864 revision only 64 hymns, and these practically restored to their original forms. In 1870 the Committee was authorised “to revise the Hymnal, and thereafter to publish an edition for the use of such congregations as may wish to avail themselves of it.” It was accordingly published in 8 pt. 1870 as The Scottish Hymnal, containing 290 hymns, selected with much judgment and taste. Having come into very general use, it was after a time felt that an enlargement was needed. The Committee accordingly in 1881 proceeded with the preparation of an Appendix, and in May 1883 presented a draft to the Assembly. This after being sent to all the ministers of the Church for revision during 1883 was sanctioned by the Assembly in 1884 with hymns 201-358, and an Appendix of 86 hymns for children. Editions of the Hymnal have also been published with these additional hymns incorporated in their proper places, in all 442.

In 1862 the Assembly's Committee on Psalmody issued a Hymn Tune Book, which was enlarged in 1865 and incorporated in 1868 in The Church of Scotland Psalm and Hymn Tune Book. This was, as the Committee mention, the first authoritative edition of tunes issued since 1850. In 1872 it was reissued, revised and enlarged by the Committee under the musical editorship of William Henry Monk. The Scottish Hymnal has been issued with the tunes as a cut book, and also with fixed tunes, the complete tunes being issued in a cut form to the Psalms, Paraphrases and Scottish Hymnal in one volume. The enlarged Scottish Hymnal of 1884 has also been issued (in 1885) with music ed. by Albert Lister Peace.

ii. The Free Church.—After the formation. of the Free Church by the Disruption of 1843 no steps were taken to provide a hymnal till 1866, when, after considerable discussion, the General Assembly appointed a Committee to consider the subject. In 1869 the Assembly authorised its Committee to select from and add to the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781. In 1870 they presented a Draft to the Assembly which was sent for further revision to Presbyteries in 1871, sanctioned by the Assembly in 1872, and issued in 1873 as Psalm-versions, Paraphrases, and Hymns. It contains 21 psalm-versions and 123 hymns, including 40 selections from the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781. For this a tune book was published by the Psalmody Committee as The Scottish Psalmody in 1873. This collection being found rather meagre, a Committee of enquiry was appointed in 1877 on whose report a Committee was appointed in 1878 to revise and enlarge it. This Committee presented a Draft to the Assembly of 1880 which, after being revised by the Presbyteries of the Church, was sanctioned by the Assembly of 1881 and issued in 1882 as The Free Church Hymnbook. It contains 387 hymns (including 23 selections from the Paraphrases of 1781) and 30 scripture sentences. The indices in the larger edition without music are by the Rev. James Bonar, M.A., of Greenock, and are among the most accurate and useful yet issued. The Committee having been authorised to set tunes to the hymns, engaged Edward John Hopkins as musical editor, and under his revision the complete book appeared in 1882 as The Free Church Hymnbook with Tunes. One of the best recent hymnals, it owes much of its completeness and excellence as to hymns and music to the energy, good taste, and musical knowledge of the Rev. Professor A. B. Bruce of Glasgow, the Convener of the Committee. Under the revision of Mr. Hopkins the Psalmody Committee was sanctioned to prepare a new collection, the Psalter of 1850, the Paraphrases of 1781 and portions of the prose Psalter, and their work was sanctioned by the Assembly of 1883, and published as The Scottish Psalter. Being the Psalms in Metre, with the Paraphrases, and a Selection of the Prose Psalms. With appropriate Tunes and Chants, 1883.

iii. The United Presbyterian Church.—The United Presbyterian Church was formed in 1843 by the union of the United Associate (Succession) and the Relief Churches.

I. As early as 1748 the Associate Synod had requested Ralph Erskine to versify the Songs of Scripture. In 1752 a Committee was appointed to revise his work, but it never met, and his death taking place shortly afterwards the Committee was dissolved in 1753. In May 1811 the session of Well Street Church, London (Dr. Alex. Waugh) asked Hopkins to compile a Primal and Paraphrases of 1781, and appointed a small committee to compile a new collection. No collection was however thereafter issued. Again in 1842 a Committee was appointed to prepare a collection of Paraphrases and Hymns. They presented a Draft in 1844, and the same, further revised, in 1846, but in the prospect of the Union of 1847 nothing more was done. In 1793 the Synod of the Relief Church was overtured to enlarge the Psalmody, and on May 20, 1794, a Committee of eight was appointed which recommended the collection compiled in 1786 by the Rev. James Steuart, of Andersont, Glasgow, with the additional selections made by the Rev. Patrick Hutchison of Paisley, as united by the Rev. James Dun of Glasgow, all members of the Committee. This collection was approved by the Synod on the 22nd, and forthwith published as Sacred Songs and Hymns on various Passages of Scripture approved by the Synod of Relief (Glasgow: J. Monnans, 1794). It contains 231 hymns and parishes, and is Dun's Collection (Dun having taken Nos. 1-180 from Steuart, and 181-231 with the preface from Hutchison) with a new title-page. In 1829 a Committee was appointed to prepare a new collection, who were authorised to print their work in 1831. It was finally sanctioned in 1833, and issued as Hymns adopted for the Worship of God Selected and sanctioned by the Synod of Relief (titles: Blackie & Son, 1833). It was an excellent collection for the time at which it was compiled.

Such was the position of their Hymnody at the Union of 1847.

In 1847 the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church appointed a Hymnal Committee, and in 1848 authorised them to prepare a hymnal on the basis of the Relief Hymnbook of 1833 and the United Associate Draft Hymnbook of 1846. They presented their first draft in 1848. In 1851 their final draft was approved, and they were empowered, after considering suggestions, to publish it in time for the next Synod. The Synod of 1852 therefore decided that the Hymnals of the United Presbyterian Church (Edn.: W. Oliphant & Co.), with 468 hymns and 23 doxologies. As it contained many hymns which never became popular, and had introduced many alterations into the text of the hymns, a Committee was appointed in 1870 to revise it. In 1873 they were authorised to send their Draft to Presbyteries, and in 1874 to Sessions, and in 1875 were empowered to publish their final draft. The Synod of 1876 accordingly sanctioned it as The Presbyterian Hymnal.

In 1874 the Psalmody Committee were authorised to set tunes to the hymns, and in 1875 engaged Henry Smart as musical editor, the completed work, with fixed tunes, being issued in 1877 as The Presbyterian Hymnal with Accompanying Tunes, and containing 366 hymns, 18 doxologies, and 24 scripture sentences. Considering its size it is one of the modern Hymnals, both as regards hymns and tunes, and their union. Under the same editor the Committee then prepared tunes for the Psalter of 1650, and Paraphrases of 1781, and issued their work in 1878 as The Presbyterian Psalter with Accompanying Tunes. In 1887 Notes on the individual hymns, by Mr. James Thin of Edinburgh, were added to the large type ed of the
V. Baptist.

The earliest Baptist Church in Scotland now existing is that of Keiss, founded in 1750. No. 1 was composed for it; Nos. 2 and 3 are the most important of the other Baptist Hymnals.

1. A Collection of Hymns and Spiritual Songs. By Sir William Sinclair, Minister of the Gospel of God, and Servant of Jesus Christ (1751). Compiled by William Sinclair, Bart., of Dunleath, while residing in his castle of Keiss in Caithness, formed a church there, of which he was pastor from 1750 to 1763, at which date he left Keiss and went to Edinburgh. It is still occasionally used in Keiss Baptist Church, and was never altered, unaltered, by Peter Reid, Wick, in 1870.

2. A Collection of Christian Songs and Hymns in Three Books (Glas.: D. Niven, 1786), containing in all 275 hymns. It took its final shape in the second ed., pub. by Niven in 1792 as Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, in Three Books, with 330 hymns and an appendix of 28. To this ed. of 1813 (Edin.: J. Hay & Co.) a supplement of 33 hymns was added. The last form was Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in Three Books, Selected for use in the Scotch Baptist Churches. A new impression, with enlarged Supplement (Glas.: A. Liddell & Co., 1841). This contains the 330 hymns and a supplement of 28 from the ed. of 1792, a supplement, numbered 331–363, from the ed. of 1813, and a second supplement numbered 364–449 from the ed. of 1830; and gives names of authors of hymns.

3. The Christian Hymnal. A Collection of Hymns for Divine Worship. Selected and arranged by Rev. Oliver Plet. 1871. Contains 457 hymns and 9 scripture selections for chanting, with authors' names and dates, dates of publication, &c. The compiler of this excellent collection is minister of Storie Street Baptist Church, Paisley.

VI. Congregationalist.

Congregationalism of the English type was introduced into Scotland in 1798. Its principal collections of Scottish origin are—

2. A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship: Intended primarily for the Church in Albion Street Chapel, Glasgow (Glas.: R. Williamson, 1803). Compiled by Dr. Wardlaw, with 322 hymns. In the third, 1811, and later eds. it was entitled, A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship, by Ralph Wardlaw. A supplement was added in 1817, making the number in all 493 (13th ed. 1860). Of these 11 are by Dr. Wardlaw. The collection seems to have attained its popularity by the influence of its compiler's reputation rather than by its own merits.

3. A Collection of Hymns from the Best Authors, adapted both for Public and Family Worship. Selected and arranged by Greville Ewing and John Payne (Glas.: A. Liddell and M. Ogilv., 1813, 11th ed., 1846). Ewing was minister of West Nile Street Congregational Church, Glasgow, had been originally a minister in the Established Church, and was one of the founders of Congregationalism in Scotland; while Payne was then minister of the Congregational Church meeting in Bernard's Rooms, Edinburgh. It contains 617 hymns and doxologies. It is not a collection of great merit.

4. A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship in Christian Churches. By William Lindsey Alexander, D.D. (Edin.: H. Paton, 1849). This hymn-book (commonly called The Augustinian Hymn Book; from the name of Dr. Alexander's church) as first pub. contains 553 hymns and doxologies. Various changes were made in the 2nd, 1858, and subsequent eds., the 5th ed. of 1872 containing 616 hymns, doxologies, and anthems. Of these 7 are original hymns and 5 translations by Dr. Alexander. While his contributions are excellent and useful, the collection as a whole is disappointing.

This is a book of very different type from any of the preceding, being pronouncedly modern, meant as the exposition in song of a "progressive and Catholic Christianity," and having a closer affinity to the collection of Mr. Page Hippe (viii. Sect. xiv., No. 2) than to any other Scottish collection. A considerable proportion of the pieces are really undogmatic religious verse, often of considerable beauty and significance, and gathered from a wide circle of English and American authors, but even less suited for public worship than the doctrinal hymns in the earlier Congregational books.
VII. Scottish Episcopal.

1. General.—No attempt was made to provide an authorised Hymnal for general use till 1856, when, upon representations from the Diocese of Edinburgh, a committee was appointed by the Episcopal Synod consisting of 2 clergymen and 1 layman from each of the 7 dioceses. Of this committee the late Dean E. B. Ramsay was chairman, and the late Archdeacon Philip Freeman, Professor William Bright, Canon Henry Hume of St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth, and the Hon. G. F. Boyle, afterwards Earl of Glasgow (who kindly lent a copy of the draft), were leading members. By them was prepared and printed, in 1857, a draft Hymnal for the Scottish Church, containing 293 hymns, 69 psalms and paraphrases, 42 doxologies, and words of 29 anthems. As more than 150 were from the Latin, the Episcopal Synod, instead of sanctioning this form, appointed Dr. Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews, to revise it, and his revision was sanctioned by them and published as A Collection of Hymns to be sung in Churches. Approved and sanctioned by the Episcopal Synod of the Church in Scotland, 1858 (Edin.: R. Grant & Son), with 119 psalms and hymns, all taken from the draft of 1857. Being so small a supplement was at once compiled by the Edinburgh clergy, and issued in 1858 as Additional Psalms and Hymns selected by several clergymen for the use of their own congregations (Edin.: R. Grant & Son). This brought the number up to 217, increased in the 4th ed. of 1866 to 236, with 20 doxologies in pt. i. and 16 in pt. ii. Of these Supplemental Hymns, 75 are from the draft of 1857. The book being as a whole meagre, and weak in design, has long since given way to Hymns Ancient and Modern, which though never formally authorised by the Episcopal Synod, is now in almost exclusive use in the Scottish Episcopal Church.

2. Diocesan.

1. A selection of Psalms and Hymns adapted for the use of Protestant Episcopal Congregations (Edin.: R. Grant & Son). This collection, which is of little value, was licensed by its principal compiler, Dr. James Walker, Bishop of Edinburgh, in 1830, and reached its 8th ed. in 1856. It contains 137 psalms and 74 hymns and 12 doxologies.

2. Hymns and Anthems for use in the Holy Services of the Church, within the United Diocese of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane. (Edin.: R. Lendrum). This collection, licensed by Bishop Patrick Torry in 1850, contains 128 hymns, the greater number of which are translations and original hymns by the compiler, Robert Campbell (p. 202 i.), and a selection of prose Anthems. This is the collection called S. Ninian's Hymns [as being used in St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth] in the preface to The Hymnary.

3. Metrical Psalmody, consisting of portions of the several Psalms; and also a collection of Hymns recommended for use in Public Worship in the Diocese of Glasgow and Gallo Bere (Edin.: R. Grant & Son, 1853). Licensed June, 1853, by its compiler, Bishop W. J. Trower, D.D. Contains 272 portions of Psalm-versions, 15 paraphrases of the Psalms, 150 hymns, and 8 doxologies. It is of moderate value.

4. Hymnal for use in the Services of the Church (Aberdeen: D. Wylie & Son). This collection, known as the Aberdeen Hymnal, was compiled by Norval Clynne (p. 233, i. and sanctioned by T. G. Sutherland, Bishop of Aberdeen, in 1857, and reached its 3rd ed. in 1866. It contains 154 hymns and 24 psalm-verses—all, save 8, taken from the draft Hymnal of 1857 (see above).

3. Congregational.

The more important collections, issued mainly for individual congregations, are:

2. Hymns and Anthems adapted to the Church Services throughout the Christian Year. (London: Hope & Co., 1851). Contains 122 hymns, 39 psalm-versions, and words of 18 Anthems. Compiled by Rev. Gilbert Forwood, L.L.D., incumbent of St. Peter's, Ipswich. Contains 24 translations by himself, and his well-known hymn, "Three in One, and One in Three." In 1860 it was entirely revised. In 1869 it was further revised and brought up to 190 hymns and is a good Hymnal for the Church of England.

3. Hymns, Introits and Psalms for the use of St. John the Evangelist's, Aberdeen (Aberdeen: A. Brown & Co.). Contains 105 hymns and was edited in 1851 by the Rev. Patrick Cheyne, the incumbent. Revised 1855, it is a Hymnal for the use of St. John the Evangelist's, Aberdeen, and Introits throughout the Year. The first part there contains 111 hymns—not including the Introits. This is followed by a Appendix of 21 psalms and hymns, enlarged by an Appendix, 1869, to 316. It is upon the whole the best Scottish Episcopal Collection.

4. Hymns, Introits and Psalms for the use of St. John the Evangelist's, Aberdeen (Aberdeen: A. Brown & Co.). Contains 105 hymns and was edited in 1851 by the Rev. Patrick Cheyne, the incumbent. Revised 1855, it is a Hymnal for the use of St. John the Evangelist's, Aberdeen, and Introits throughout the Year. The first part there contains 111 hymns—not including the Introits. This is followed by a Appendix of 21 psalms and hymns, enlarged by an Appendix, 1869, to 316. It is upon the whole the best Scottish Episcopal Collection.

5. These we note in detail, beginning with—

i. Established Church of Scotland.

1. The Psalms of David methodised: being an Attempt to bring together (without the smallest Alteration those Passages in them which relate to Subjects. For the use of Churches and Families. By Robert Walker, F.R.E.S., Senior Minister of Clydeside (Edin.: W. Creech, 1874). Contains 31 subject divisions and 114 pages. The Psalms are from the Psalter of 1650.
ii. Free Church.

2. Hymns for Christian Worship, compiled by several ministers of the Free Church (Glasgow, Collins, Sons & Co.). With 95 hymns, and 2nd ed. of 1866 102 hymns. Not authorised by the F.C. General Assembly; said to be selected for Divine Worship, by the Rev. William Knight, St. Enoch's, Dundee (1871). With 115 hymns and 120 new tunes, compiled by John Agnew, the Established Church, as The Free Church's Hymnal, Dundee (1874), with Hymns 1-301 and prose selections for chanting 338-339; many hymns from Unitarian, Presbyterian, and长老教派 sources. The compiler was then minister in Dundee, and is now (1899) Professor in St. Andrews.

iii. United Presbyterian.

vi. Congregational.

2. A Selection of Hymns, chiefly Watts's, for use in Public Christian Worship, by the Superintendent of the Independent Church, Bath Street, Glasgow. (Glasgow, 1852.) Contains 540 hymns.

vii. French.

2. A Collection of Sacred Songs and Hymns, selected from various Authors, and recommended to the use of Churches and Families (Glasgow, 1811). Contains 210 hymns, mainly from the Relief H. Bk. of 1794.

1030 SCOTTISH HYMNODY

Cochran, 1744), with 38 hymns and anthems. A subsequent edition was also published as a Collection of Hymns and Anthems, with 222 hymns and 218 doxologies. Compiled by the Rev. F. Grange Littlecove.

18. Supplement to the "Hymnal Noted with Appends," with 38 hymns, partly used in the Episcopal Church, New Haven, and Madison (N. Y.). By A. C. (Edin.;: Gordon and Nell,, 1786), with 37 Psalm Versions from Ruth and Hymn, and from Jeremiah and Song of Songs. Compiled for the congregation of St. Mary's Church, then meeting in West Register Street. Afterwards in Charlotte Chapel, Charlotte Square, and now in St. John's, Prince's Street, to which Iwan Ramsay long ministered.

19. The second in size of the Scottish Hymnals compiled by Charles Vincent for St. George's Chapel. Part II. enlarged, appeared as Hymns, Anthems, &c., used in St. George's Church, York Place, Edinburgh (Chalmers: Of Placentia Mercury Office, 1811), with 81 hymns and words of 34 anthems, while the edition of 1817 (Edin.; P. G. Buchanan), contained 84 hymns.

20. A Collection of Hymns and Anthems, for the use of the Episcopal Church, Glasgow (Edin.; K. Chapman, 1805), with 164 hymns and words of 24 anthems. Compiled by Wm. Routledge, incumbent, added to the organist and some of the congregation. The ed. of 1823 (Edin.; R. Griffin & Co.) contains 168 hymns, with 7 doxologies, and a Ps. Hymn on morning and evening hymns. Superseded in 1844 by an English collection, and that again by No. 11.

23. A Collection of Psalms from Modern Translations and Paraphrases supplementary to the Old and New Versions; and Hymns from various authors designed for Public and Social Worship (Glas.; T. Brookman). Compiled and pub. in 1827 for use in St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Glasgow. The 2nd ed. of 1837 contains 141 psalm-versions, 161 hymns and 5 doxologies. The 3rd ed. of 1845 is a reprint of the 2nd.

25. A Collection of Hymns for the use of the congregation of the Episcopal Church, for the Public Worship of St. James's Chapel, Broughton Place, Edinburgh (Edin.; W. Waugh & Innes, 1836), with 219 hymns. Probably compiled by the Rev. Daniel Bajetz, then incumbent.

26. Hymns adapted for Congregational Singing (Glas.; J. Graham, 1830). Edited by Sir Archibald Edmonstone, Bart., of Duntrathie and Colzium, with 120 hymns, mostly from Bp. Hobar's collection, the last 10 being original.

27. Hymns appropriate to the several seasons of the Ecclesiastical Year. For use in Trinity Episcopal Church, Dunfermline (Dunfermline: J. Miller & Son, 1854), with 48 hymns. The 2nd ed., 1859, contained in all 50 hymns. Compiled by the Rev. William Bruce, incumbent, as a supplement to Tate and Brady. Superseded in 1866, by H. A. & M.

30. The Supplementary Hymnal compiled by the Rev. J. Palmer, for use in St. Mary's Church, Aberdeen (Edin.; G. Davidson, N. B., 1866), 81 hymns, mostly recent hymns and translations, supplementary to H. A. & M. Almost all are included in the revised H. A. & M. or the People's Hymnal.

viii. Glassite or Sandemanian.

The Rev. John Glas, Mr., minister of the parish of Tealing, near Dundee, having adopted Independent views, was deposed in 1726. After presiding over congregations of his followers at Dundee and Perth, he died at Dundee, Nov. 2, 1773. In the meetings in public worship of this sect (who have an unpaid ministry and literally observe Acts xiv. 29) sometimes from the Psalter, sometimes from the Psalms—or in other copies of the Bible, a large proportion of English Hymns of the Evangelical school.

5. Hymns (Freemaons' Hall, Edin. 1872), with 69 hymns, of which, according to Mr. Statham's preface, "Many have been written expressly for this collection," only one being taken from No. 4.

xiv. Unitarian.

1. Hymns and Anthems for Private and Public Worship. Edited by Charles Clarke (Glas. printed for the Unitarian Church, Union Street, by W. Rankin, 1870). 269 hymns and anthems with authors' names, based on J. W. Fox's "Hymns and Anthems," 1841. The ed. of 1870 has 320 hymns with an Appendix of 46 "Hymns of the Last Decade," compiled by H. W. Crossley.

2. Hymns for Public Worship edited by John Page Hepps (Glas. : The Unitarian Christian Churches, 1873), 475 hymns with authors' names, etc. The compiler was Headmaster of St. Vincent Street Unitarian Church, Glasgow.

xv. Brethren.

3. A Selection of Hymns and Spiritual Songs, extracted from various Authors, and published for the use of Christians of all denominations (Edin. : James Donaldson, 1785). With 174 hymns and 2 doxologies, many of which taken from R. Conybeare's Collection (p. 332, ii., 1746). A select number of Spiritual Hymns, etc., either for the use of the congregation, family, or the devotional circle, its meditations, etc., by David Mitchell (Edin. : W. Smith, 1871). 70 hymns. It is not likely that either this or Nos. 5-7, 11, were ever used in public worship.

6. Hymns on Natural, Moral and Theological Subjects, for the use of the Theosophical Society (Glas. : 1816) with 132 hymns.

9. Morning and Evening Hymnus for every day of the year, for the Family and Church (Glas. : 7 Argyle Street, 1857). With 722 hymns, edited by John Smith, L.L.D.

A Note.—Two hymnals compiled by the Rev. J. H. Wilson, D.D., of the Barclay Free Church, Edinburgh, though never we believe used in public worship, are cited occasionally throughout this Dictionary and are thus here mentioned. (1) The Service of Praise (Edin. : T. K. Neilson, 1855), with 222 hymns, 23 chants, 19 anthems and sanctuaries, and 74 children's hymns. A number of hymns by Mrs. Conin, Mr. Sloan and others are recorded here. (2) Songs of Zion (Edin. : T. Neilson & Sons, 1876), with 301 hymns, &c., mainly from the 1865, from Songs of Zion, 1882, and from the hymns introduced by Mr. Sankey.

IX. APPENDIX.

1. Scottish Hymn Writers. Scotland has produced a long series of minor poets. It would be both difficult and useless to enumerate even those of them who have attempted to write sacred poetry. Notices will be found in this Dictionary under their respective names of a very large number of these authors, including the following, who by birth or residence are connected with Scotland:—

2. Principal Works on the Scottish Psalms and Paraphrases, and their Authors. In this section we have grouped together those works which are of greatest value in tracing the history of Scottish Hymnody.

1. The Scottish Metrical Psalter of A.D. 1635, reprinted in full from the original work, the additional matter and varied songs found in the editions of 1666, &c., being appended, and the whole arranged with additions, notes, and facsimiles. Edited by the late Neil Livington. Printed from stone, by Macleure and McDonald, lithographers to the Queen, Edinburgh. The most elaborate and careful work on the early Scottish Psalters, and the fruit of much labour and research. It contains a great amount of interesting and curious information, and in fact exhausts the subject.

2. The Letters and Journals of Robert Batilie, A.M. Principal of the University of Glasgow: M. CLXLI. MD-LXXI. Elited from the author's manuscripts by David Laing, Esq. In three volumes. Edinburgh, printed for Robert Ogle, 1841-1842. Edited for the Bannatyne Club. It is an important work, and Laing worked at it with great care and intelligence. It gives the most elaborate and careful work on the early Scottish Psalters, and the fruit of much labour and research. It contains a great amount of interesting and curious information, and in fact exhausts the subject.

4. The Wedderburns and their Work, or the Sacred Poetry of the Scottish Reformation, in its historical relation to that of Germany. By Alex. F. Mitchell, B.D., Professor of Hebrew, at St. Andrews. Edinburgh: Blackwood & Sons, Edinburgh and London, 1867. A very careful and interesting little book, tracing out the German originals of a number of the Scottish Psalms, Paraphrases, and Ballades, and giving all the information accessible as to their authors and their origin.

5. A Compendium of Psalms and Spiritual Songs, commonly known as "The Glad and Gaudy Ballade." Edinburgh, reprinted from the edition of 1575, S. F. But William Paterson, Edinburgh, 1868. A reprint from the earliest perfect edition, now extinct (as stated in § 3 of this article), edited by Dr. David Laing, with a historical preface, a valuable series of notes, a glossary, and copies of the title-pages of the Psalms, Paraphrases, and Ballades, now known, viz. those of Henrik Charteris 1578, Robert Smyth 1600, and Andro Hart 1621.

6. The Free Church Magazine for 1847, volume 4. Edinburgh, John Johnstone. Contains four articles on the Paraphrases—interesting, but needlessly controversial. They raise a discussion on the subject of Robert Burn's connection with the Paraphrases, the writer having in his hands a ms. copy of the Paraphrases—pre Scottish Psalter. [Scottish Hymnody.]

Scottish Translations and Paraphrases. These Translations and Paraphrases were originally prepared by a Committee appointed by the General Assembly of 1742. They were presented in draft in 1745, and in 1751 were authorised for private use. In 1775 a Committee was appointed to revise and enlarge them for public use, by which a draft collection was prepared and printed in 1778, and after various alterations and changes published as Translations and Paraphrases, in Verses, of several Passages of Sacred Scripture. Collected and prepared by a Committee of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, in order to be sung in Churches. Edinburgh: Printed and sold by J. Dickson, Printer to the Church of Scotland mcdclxxxi [see Scottish Hymnody, v. 1-4].

The Paraphrases of 1781 are made up of, taken—some with great alterations—from the collection of 1745; and of 22 added in 1781.

From the 1745 are the following, the numbers being given as in 1781. 23 (Nos, 20, 22, 24, 40, 41, 46, 47, 50 (partly), 51, 54-57, 61, 63-67) by Watts, 3 (Nos, 3, 32, 39, 45, 69) by Dedridge, 2 (No. 26, 42, 72) by Tate, 3 (Nos, 23, 25, 42) ascribed to Robertson, and 1 (No, 49) ascribed to Randall, leaving 8 (Nos, 6, 18, 23, 26, 38, 45, 52, 58) to which no probable authors have been assigned.

Of the 22 added in 1781, 2 (Nos, 5, 15) are by Watts, while 7 (Nos. 11-14, 31, 32, 34) ascribed to Bruce or Logan; 2 (Nos, 27, 29) are said to be joint productions of Logan and Morison; 5 (Nos, 19, 21, 29, 30, 32) are ascribed to Morison; 2 (Nos, 17, 20) to Cameron, 1 (Nos, 19) to Martin, 1 (Nos, 16) to Blacklock, 1 (Nos, 44, really a cento) to Blair, and 1 (Nos, 62) to Ogilvie.

The introduction of Watts, 1 (No. 5) and 2 (Nos, 3) by Bruce or Logan [see Bruce].

The Committee that compiled the Paraphrases were thus made up:

On May 13, 1742, the Assembly appointed the Revs. James Nisbet, William Gasthart, William Robertson, Robert Kirkich, Professor John Gowdie, Frederick Carmichael, William McGeor, Thomas Wishart, William Blair, Principal William Wishart, Robert Hamilton, George Logan, James Banmattye, Professor Patrick Cumming, Alexander Webster, George Watt, Robert Daleyison, James Nasmith, and Matthew Mitchell, ministers; with Messrs. John Wilson, Robert Ballie, and Alexander Nisbet, ruling elders. Of these were added on May 14, 1744, the Revs. Principal Thomas Tulloch, Daniel McQueen, Hugh Blair, George Kay, and Thomas Randall, ministers; with Lord Arisaunt, Lord Drummore, the Solicitor General Robert Dundas, and Mr. Charles Erskine, ruling elders.

On May 29, 1775, the Assembly appointed the Revs. Dr. Patrick Cumming, Dr. Alexander Webster, Principal William Robertson, Dr. Robert Finlay, Dr. Hugh Blair, Dr. Harry Spence, Dr. John Ogilvie, Thomas Linthicum, Andrew Hunter, Dr. Alexander Carlyle, Dr. Joseph McCornick, John Logan, James Brown, Samuel Martin, Robert Walker, James Cameron, my names are not among the list of Hymnals; and to correspondents, of various denominations, too numerous to mention I am indebted for prompt answers embodying the information they had given on the points submitted to them. [J. M.] 60. Father of peace, and God of love!
39. Hark, the glad sound, the Saviour comes
66. How bright these glorious spirits shine!
These glorious minds, how bright they shine
25. How few receive with cordial faith
29. How glorious Zion's courts appear
20. How wretched was our former state!
Lord, we confess our numerous faults
24. Ho! ye that thirst, approach the spring
55. I'm not ashamed to own my Lord
76. Jesus, the Son of God, who once
With joy we meditate the grace 38. Just as we devoutly Simeon liv'd
Now let Thy servant die in peace
13. Keep silence, all ye sons of men Shall Wisdom cry aloud
47. Let Christian faith and hope dispel
Now let our souls ascend above
1. Let heaven arise, let earth appear Seek a spacious world arise
42. Let not your hearts with anxions thoughts
67. Lo! what a glorious sight appears
55. My race is run; my warfare is over Death may dispose my body now
36. My soul and spirit, fit'd with joy
Naked as from the earth we came
3. God of Bethel! by whose hand
51. Soon shall this earthly frame dissolve
6. The rush may rise where waters flow
Six groves the rush without the more 40. The wretched prodigal behold
Behold the wretched, whose lust and wine
49. Though perfect eloquence adorn'd
Though all men's eloquence adorn'd
44. Thus spake the Saviour of the world
With solemn thanksgiving our Lord
41. To blow that lov'd the souls of men
Now to the Lord that makes us know
45. Ungrateful sinners! whence this scorn Vain are the hopes of the sons of men
32. What though no flow's the fig-tree clothe
So from the saints' foundation stands
50. When the last trumpet's awful voice
Is for an overracing faith
37. While humble shepherds watch'd their flocks
While shepherds watch'd their flocks by night
22. Why pour'st thou forth thine anxious plaint
Whence do our mournful thoughts arise
31. Ye heavens send forth your song of praise!
Now shall my inward joys arise
52. Ye who the name of Jesus bear
To whom the name of Jesus bear 43. You now must hear my words no more

ii. Added in 1781.
29. Amidst the mighty, where is he
15. As long as life its term extends Life is the time to serve the Lord
28. Attend, and mark the solemn fact
21. Attend, ye triblets that dwell remote
44. Behold the Saviour on the cross
30. Come, let us to our Lord our God
9. Few are thy days, and full of woe
16. In life's day'sawn, when sprightly youth
10. In streets, and op'nings of the gates
62. Lo! in the last of days behold
11. O happy is the man who hears
17. Rulers of Sodom! hear the voice
53. Take comfort, Christians! when your friends
19. The race that long in darkness pined
5. The trouble springs not from the dust
Not from the dust affliction grows
31. Thus speaks the Heavem; How shall man
27. Thus speaks the High and Lofty One
The High and Holy One hath spoken
26. Thus on that night when doom'd to know
58. Where high the heavenly temple stands
14. While others crowd the house of mirth
Let such as would with Wisdom dwell
9. Who can resist th' Almighty arm 12. Ye indolent and slothful rise

iii. Hymns added in 1781.
4. Blest morning! whose first dawning rays
Blest morning, whose young dawning rays
5. The hour of my departure's come
The spacious firmament on high
1. When all thy mercies, O my God
When rising from the bed of death

The Paraphrases of 1751 had been printed at the end of some editions of the Psalter of 1650 (e.g. by Colin Macfarquhar, Edinburgh, 1771), and though the right of printing the Paraphrases of 1781 was assigned to the Church printer up to 1809, yet before the end of the century the King’s printer had begun to add them to the Psalter, and they were still almost universally so printed.

[J.M.]

Scriver, Christian, s. of Christian Scriver (Schriver, Schreiber), merchant at Rendsburg in Holstein, was b. at Rendsburg.
Jan 3, 1647, and was from his birth destined for the ministry. His father d., of the plague in 1629, but by the help of a rich great-aunt, he was able eventually to matriculate at the University of Rostock in Oct., 1647 (M., 1649).
In 1650 he became tutor to a family at Segeberg, near Lübeck. While visiting a married half-sister at Stendal, he preached there with much acceptance, and was appointed, in 1653, archidiacon of St. James Church.
He then became (1658) pastor of St. James’s Church at Magdeburg, where he was also appointed, in 1674, assessor at the consistory, in 1676 as Scholaire, in 1679 as Senior; and in 1685 had also the parishes and schools of the so-called Heid cirkus placed under his inspection.
At length he found his work too heavy, and, in 1686, accepted an invitation to Quedlinburg as con sistorialcath and chief court preacher at the church of St. Severinus, and also his private chaplain to Anna Dorothy, Duchess of Saxony, and Abbess of the Lutheran Stift at Quedlinburg. After a series of strokes of paralysis, he d., at Quedlinburg, April 5, 1693 (Koch, iv, 78; Herzog's Real-Encyclopä die, xiv. p. 1, &c.).

Scriver was a most popular, useful, and influential preacher; his earnestness being deepened by the memory of his many wonderful escapes from accident and pest ulence. He was also the author of various devotional works, which found much acceptance, e.g. his Gedanken 360 Einführung in Andachten, Magdeburg, 1680 (1701, and later eds., have 400 Andachten: English version, as in hold's Emblems, by R. Menzies, i. v., Edinburgh, 1657; his Seelen-Schatz, in 5 parts 1675-92; and his Gedanken Sich's, Siegs, und Still-Bette, in 2 pts., 1687-94.
It is difficult to say how many hymns Scriver wrote, apparently about ten. He refers to one of them in his Seelen-Schatz and his Andachten, but does not give the full texts. A number are included, as by him, in C.
Weise's abridgment of the Seelen-Schatz, which was pub at Wittenberg, in 1704, as the Seelen-Schatz Kraft und Sitt; and C. W. Weiswein, pastor of St. Ulrich's in Magdeburg, in his Evanglische Leben of Scriver (Magde burg and Leipzig, 1729), gives a list of those he considers genuine.

Those of Scriver's hymns which have passed into English are:

i. Auf, Seel, und danke deinem Herrn. Morning Included, 1704, as above, and in 1729, also marked as by Scriver. But Scriver's son-in-law, Johann Heinrich Hävecker (b. 1640, at Kalbe, near Magdeburg, became diaconus, and; in, 1683, pastor at Kalbe; latterly also, Inspector of the Holzkirche; and, in 1722, in his Dreyfisch schallend nach vollkommend Kirchen-Liedern Leipzig, 1705, p. 3, claims it as his own. It is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1803, No. 1078. Tr.
As, "To God, my Soul, Thank-offerings pay."
By H. J. Busch, 1842, p. 30.

ii. Der liebe Sonne Licht und Frucht. Evening
This is Scriver's best hymn. It seems to be earlier than 1671, as in that year Scriver quotes
The day is done; the weary day of thought and tale is past. Evening. In Sermons and Songs of the Christian Life. E. H. Sears, Boston, 1st ed., 1719,
p. 59, entitled "Vesper Hymn," and dated "October, 1741. This is possibly her finest hymn.
6. Thou grace divine, enshrining such a Divine Grace. Appeared in Dr. E. H. Sears's Pictures of the Olden Time, as shown in the Portraits of a Family of Pilgrims, 1871. It was written in 1742, and published in the Boston Hym. of the Spirit, 1864. It has sometimes been taken as "An Ancient Catholic Hymn" (University's Ps. & Hymns, 1846), but in error.
7. Thou long disowned, reviled, opprest.
The Spirit of Truth. In the Boston Hym. of the Spirit, 1864.
Of these hymns, Nos. 2, 6, and 7 are in
Dr. Martinuse's Hymns, 1873. Some of Miss Scudder's poetical pieces appear in her Scrum's Monthly Religious Magazine. Her Hymns and Sonnets, by E. S., were pub., by Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston, 1880. From this her hymn "Thou hast gone up again" ("Ascension", is taken.

Σέ και νυν εἴληκομεν. Gregory of Nazianzus. [Evening.] This hymn is given in his Works, Paris, 1611, i.; in Daniel iii. 13;
and in the Antho. Greco Carm. Christ., 1871,
p. 29. It is tr. as "And now again at night"
by A. W. Chatfield in his Songs and Hys.
of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, 1870, p. 122, in 8 st. of 4 l. (See Greek Hymnody, § iv.) It dates 324-399, and contains 28 lines. [J. J.]

Σέ μεν ἁρχωμεν, Synopsis, Bp. of Ptolemais. [Morning or Evening.] Hymn iv.
of ten hymns composed by him at various periods of his life, 375-430. The full Greek text is found in the Antho. Greco Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 15 in 299 lines. It is tr. as "To Thee at evening grey," by A. W. Chatfield in his Songs and Hys. of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, 1876, p. 56, in 27 st. of 8 l. (See Greek Hymnody, § v.) It is an Evening Hymn, and contains several passages of great beauty which might be utilized in the form of a cento for congregational use. Another tr.
is "Thee at the break of sacred day," by Alan Stevenson in his Ten Hymns of Synopsis, &c., 1865. [J. J.]

Σέ των άθρωτων μουαρχρον. Gregory of Nazianzus. [Praise to Christ.] This hymn to Christ is given in his Works, Paris, 1611, i.; in Daniel iii. 5; and in the Antho.
Greco Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 23, in 51 lines.
It is tr. as "O Thou the One supreme," by A. W. Chatfield in his Songs and Hys.
of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, 1876, p. 93, in 13 st. of 6 l. It is a fine hymn gracefully translated. (See Greek Hymnody, § iv.)
It dates 324-389. [J. J.]

Seagrave, Robert, M.A., s. of Robert Seagrave, Vicar of Twyford, Leicestershire, was b. at Twyford, Nov. 22, 1693, and educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1714. Taking Holy Orders he entered most earnestly into the movement then being carried forward by the Wesleyans and Whitefield; and between 1731 and 1746 he issued numerous letters and pamphlets, d&c., designed to awaken in the clergy a deeper earnestness in their work. In 1739 he was appointed Sunday Evening Lecturer at Lor-iners' Hall, London, where he continued to preach till 1750. He also occupied Whitefield's Tabernacle from time to time. His hyms, which were better known and more highly appreciated by the older compilers than those in modern days, and will still repay perusal were included in his collection, pub. by him for use at the Loring's Hall, as Hymns for Christian Worship, partly composed, and partly collected from Various Authors, 1712. The 4th ed. was pub. in 1748, and the originals were reprinted by D. Sedgwick as Seagrave's Hymns, in 1860. Two of these hymns are still in C. U.:—

1. Now may the Spirit's holy fire. Opening of a Plate of Worship. These, from Hymns for Christian Worship, &c., 1742, were given by G. Whitefield as the opening hymn of his Hymns for Social Worship, &c., 1753. It was reprinted in The Pulpit and Ps. & Hymns, 1796; and again in later collections to modern hymn-books.

2. Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wings. Pilgrim's Song. Also from his Hymns, &c., 1742, into G. Whitefield's Hymns, &c., 1753; and again in others to modern hymn-books.

Sears, Edmund Hamilton, D.D., S. of Joseph Sears, was b. at Sandisfield, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, April 6, 1810, and educated at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., where he graduated in 1834; and at the Theological School at Cambridge. In 1838 he became pastor of the First Church (Unitarian) at Wayland, Massachusetts; then at Lancaster in the same State, in 1840; again at Wayland, in 1847; and finally at Weston, Massachusetts, in 1865. He d. at Weston, Jan. 14, 1876. He pub.:

(1) Regeneration, 1854;
(2) Pictures of the Olden Time, 1857;
(3) Anatomy, or Forefathers of Immortality, 1845, enlarged ed., 1872;
(4) The Fourth Gospel of the Heart of Christ;
(5) Sermons and Songs of the Christian Life, 1875, in which his hymns are collected. All are in the possession of the Monthly Religious Magazine.

Of his hymns the following are in C. U.:—

1. Calm on the listening ear of night. Christmas. This hymn "was first published in its original form, in the Boston Observer, March 1844; afterwards, in the Christian Register, in 1830; subsequently it was emended by the author, and, as thus emended, was reprinted entire in the Monthly Magazine, vol. xxxix., 1844." (Putnam, 1844, p. 386.) The emended text is given in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, p. 308, in 5 st. of 1. Usually, both in G. Britain and America, the text is abbreviated. Its use is extensive.

2. It came upon the midnight clear. Christmas. The "Rev. Dr. Morrison writes to us. Sears's second Christmas hymn was sent to me as editor of the Christian Register, I think, in December, 1849. I was very much delighted with it, and before it came out in the Register, read it at a Christmas celebration of Dr. Loom's Sunday School in Quincy. I always feel that, however poor my Christmas sermon may be, the reading and singing of this hymn are enough to make up for all deficiencies." (Putnam, 1849, p. 308.) It appeared in the Christian Register, Dec. 1849, in 5 st. of 1, and is now in extensive use in G. Britain and America.

3. Bo, ye that rest beneath the rock. Charitable Writing on behalf of Children. Appeared in Long-fellow and Johnson's Hymns of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, in 2 st. of 1.

Dr. Sears's two Christmas hymns rank with the best on that holy season in the English language. Although a member of the Unitarian body, his views were rather Swedish-borinan than Unitarian. He held always to the absolute Divinity of Christ.

SEDGWICK, DANIEL

Sedwick, Daniel, was b. in Leekenhall Street, London, Nov. 26, 1814, of poor parents. His education was of the scantiest. Although apprenticed to a shoemaker at an early age, the elements of the trade were taught him and through ill health and neglect, at the completion of his apprenticeship, he was unable entirely to earn his own living. During his rambles, he occasionally solved himself with the purchase of old hymn-books, and in the study and comparison of these he began to find his chief delight. He joined himself to the strict Baptist congregation, worshipping in Providence Chapel, Graveman Street, near his old employer's house. In 1839, having previously married a wife of his own humble station and education. At the age of 23 he began to dabble in the second-hand book trade, and gradually worked up a connection. About 1840 he taught himself writing by copying printed letters, and acquired a singularly neat and clear hand. Hymn-books then were a drug in the market, and strictly limited in value and price. About 1852 he began to collect a few of the rarer hymn-writers of the 17th and 18th centuries, and in his Library of Spiritual Songs he published the hymns of William Williams, John Mason, Thomas Shepherd, Robert Seagrave, Joseph Grigg, Anne Steele, John Ryland, John Stocker, James Grant, Thomas Oliver, Bishop Ken, and others. This series brought him into communication with many clergy, and with ministers of all denominations, and the humble bookseller of 21 Sea Street, Bishopsgate, would there receive men of high station and culture and teach them the rudiments of the then infant science of English Hymnology. It was, however, on the publication of Sir Roundell Palmer's, (Lord Selborne's) Book of Praise, in 1862, that Sedwick first took his place as the foremost living English hynologist. With all his dogmatic ignorance and want of power to balance evidence, his industry and perseverance in following up clues in every direction, his patient formation of an invaluable library, and to a unique correspondence. In the purchase, sale, and exportation of duplicates, and in assisting hymn-compliers in tracing dates, authors, and copyrights, he passed, from 1862 till his death in 1879, the happiest years of his life. He was consulted by men of all shades and opinions, and Hymns Ancient and Modern owed, from its earliest days, something to his assistance. He was consulted at every step by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon for his Our Own Hymnbook; and in Josiah Miller's Songs and Songs of the Church every article had the benefit of his knowledge and revision; in fact the practised expert can detect in that work baseless suggestions and erroneous conclusions, which arose out of Mr. Miller's too close adherence to his guide. Sedwick's health began to fail rapidly in 1879, and exhausting and severe spasms of hemorrhage followed to his death. On Sunday, March 9th, he asked in the afternoon for Cennick's "Thou dear Redeemer, dying Lamb," to be sung to him, the last verse:

> "When we appear in yonder cloud
> With all the ransomed throng,
> Then will we sing more sweet, more loud,
> And Christ shall be our song."
being specially dwelt on by him. It was in the very early hours of the following morning that, with the words, "Hallelujah, Praise the Lord," on his lips, he fell asleep; and on the 15th March, 1879, he was buried at Abney Park cemetery. He may well be called the father of English Hymnology; and it is to be especially remembered, to his honour, that, with all drawbacks of education, temperament, and narrow theological propensities, he, by the courage and fearless assertion of hymns and hymnological literature, and by careful annotation, made it possible for others to reap a rich harvest, by bringing their education, critical acumen, wide sympathies, and accurate knowledge of Biblical, classical, ecclesiastical, and historical subjects to bear upon the stores of hymnological wealth which he had accumulated, but which, to a very great extent, he could not use.

SEDWICK, John, D.D., was b. at Wimborne, April 24, 1823, and educated at Christ Church and Magdalen Colleges, Oxford; B.A. 1846, D.D. 1859. He was a Fellow of Magdalen College 1855-63; Bursar, 1859-60; and Vice-President 1860-61. He was also successively Curate of Grainton, Somerset, 1854; Chaplain of High Leigh, Cheshire, 1858; Rector of Great Houghton, Northants, 1860; of Stoke-Climbsland, Cornwall, 1872; and of Birdbrooke, Essex, 1876. He has pub. History of France, 1819; History of Europe, 1850; History of the Establishment of Public Industrial Schools, 1853; and Oremus: Short Prayers in Verses for Sundays and Holy Days, suggested by the Services of the Church of England, 1852. From the last work his Quinquagesima hymn, "Lord of love, Whose words have taught us," in Kennedy, is taken, and many more of equal merit remain. [J. J.

Sedulius, Coelius. The known facts concerning this poet, as contained in his two letters to Macedonius, are, that in early life, he devoted himself to heathen literature; that comparatively late in life he was converted to Christianity; and that amongst his friends were Faustinus and Faustina. Perhaps the period of his birth is generally believed to have been Rome; and the date when he flourished 450. For this date the evidence is, that he referred to the Commentaries of Jerome, who d. 420: is praised by Cassiodorus, who d. 575, and by Gelsius, who was pope from 492 to 496. His works were collected, after his death, by Asterius, who was consul in 494. They are (1) Carmen Paschale, a poem which treats of the whole Gospel story; (2) Opus Paschale, a prose rendering of the former; (4) Elegia, a poem, of 110 lines, on the same subject as the Carmen; (4) Veterus et Novi Testamenti Collation; and (5) the hymn, "A solis ortus calcinae" (p. 4, l. 4). Arsenii (1794) says 16 was of Sedulius's work, ranging in date from the 7th to the 16th cent. The best ed. of his Opera is that by Dr. J. Huener, pub. at Vienna in 1885; and this text is printed in Migne's F.P. Lat. col. xii. This Sedulius must not be confounded with the Irish, or with the Scottish Sedulius, as is sometimes done.

See amid the winter's snow. E. Cowper. [Christmas.] Pub. in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1838, p. 259, in 7 st. of 4 l., and a chorus. It was repeated in his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 280. It is given, in an abridged form, in several hymn-books. It sometimes begins with an altered form of st. ii. as, "See in yonder manger low." [J. J.

See, gracious God, before Thy throne. Anne Steele. [Public Humiliation.] Written for the Public Fast, Feb. 6, 1727, in 6 st. of 4 l., and published in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. pp. 248-9; in the new ed. of same, 1780, vol. i. pp. 248-9; and in D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 115. In its full form it is not in common use. It is, however, the following centos are taken:

1. Almighty God, before Thy throne. This, as given in Hickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 274, and some of the other collections, is the above slightly altered, together with the omission of st. v. The same first line begins a cento in 4 st. usually found in modern hymnals. It is composed of st. i., ii., vi., and vii., also altered, sometimes as in Stevenson's Hymns for Church & Home, No. 6, and again as in Snapp's Songs of G. J. B., No. 166.

2. Almighty Lord, before Thy throne, is the same cento with further alterations; S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns, No. 138; and in a fuller form of 3 st. of 4 l., being st. i., ii., iii. (again altered), and a different stanzas.

3. Behold, O Lord, before Thy throne. This cento in the New Doyn, 1859, No. 994, is composed of st. i., ii., iii., vi., and v., and a concluding stanza, "Heard Thou my prayer," which we have not traced. The second stanza of the original "Tremendous Judgments from thine hand," sometimes given as "dark judgments," &c., and again as "bitter judgments," &c., has, according to a note to the original, a special reference to the Lisbon earthquake of 1755.

4. See, gracious God, before Thy throne. An abbreviated form of the original in a few modern collections.

See how great a flame aspires. C. Wesley. [Praise for the Success of the Gospel.] In Jackson's Memoirs of the Rev. Charles Wesley, small ed., 1848, p. 191. This hymn is referred to under the date of Nov. 1746, as follows:

"The very animated and emphatic hymn beginning—

'See how great a flame aspires,

Kindled by a spark of grace,' was also written by Mr. Charles Wesley on the joyful occasion of his ministerial success, and that of his fellow labourers, in Newcastle and principalities. Perhaps the imagery was suggested by the large fires connected with the collieries, which illuminate the whole of that part of the country in the darkest nights."

The hymn was pub. in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1746, vol. i., No. 4, of 4 hymns, written "After Preaching to the Newcastle Colliers," in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 120). It was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 209, and is found in numerous collections.

See in the vineyard of the Lord. [The barren Fig-tree; or, Close of the Year.] This hymn is given in 6 st. of 4 l. at the close of Sermon xvii. of Short Sermons to Children, to which are added Short Hymns suited to the Subject. By a Lady [Rebecca Wilkinson].
See Israel's Gentle Shepherd.

_P. Doddridge. [The Good Shepherd.]_ 1st pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's _Hymns_, 1755, No. 198, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Christ's condescending Regard to little Children:" and again in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 221. In addition to its use in its original form it is found as follows:

1. _Lett. to Israel's gracious Shepherd stands_. This was given in Rickersteth's _Christian Psalmody_, 1833.
2. _The gentle Saviour calls_. This altered form, in 3 st. of 4 l., was made by Bp. Onderdonk for the American Prayer Bk. Col., 1826, No. 87. It is in several modern collections, and is suitable for Holy Baptism.
3. _The Saviour's gentle voice_. This is in Kennedy, 1852, No. 231. It is the American text rewritten by Dr. Kennedy. In these various forms this hymn has a wide circulation.

See, sinners, in the gospel glass. C. Wesley. [Initation.]_ Pub. in _Hymns on God's Everlasting Love_, 1741, No. 10, in 18 st. of 6 l., and again in the _P. Works_, 1808–72, vol. xii. p. 90. In the _Ws. H. Bk._, 1780, it was broken up thus:

1. See, sinners, in the gospel glass, st. 1–4.
2. Sinners, believe the gospel word, st. vi–ix.
3. Would Jesus have the sinner die? st. xii., xiv., xvii., xvi.

These hymns have been repeated in several collections. The centos, "Behold the Lamb of God, Who bears The sins of all," &c., in _Mercer's Church Psalter & H. Bk._, 1855; and "See where the lave, the balt, the blind," in Dr. Alexander's _Augustine H. Bk._, 1819 and 1863, are also from the original hymn.

See the Conqueror mounts in triumph. Bp. C. Wordsworth, of Lincoln. [Ascension.]_ 1st pub. in his _Holy Year_, 1862, p. 99, in 10 st. of 4 double lines. In the latest editions of the _Holy Year_ it has been divided into two parts, Pt. ii. beginning with st. vi.

"Holy Ghost, Illuminator." Usually these two parts are given as separate hymns for congregational use. In addition a cento, beginning with st. ii., "Who is this that comes in glory?" is given as a hymn. The original is one of Bishop Wordsworth's finest compositions, and is the nearest approach in style and treatment to a Greek ode known to us in the English language. The amount of Holy Scripture compressed into these 40 lines is wonderful. Prophecy, Types, Historical Facts, Doctrinal Teaching, Estatic Praise, all are here; and the result is one grand rush of holy song.

See the [good] kind Shepherd, Jesus, stands._ [The Good Shepherd.]._ This hymn is found in [Rees's Wilkinson's] _Short Sermons to Children_. To which are added _Short Hymns suited to the Subject_[circa 1785]; later ed. pub. at Bath 1798, No. 1, in 4 st. of 4 l. In J. Benson's _Hymns for Children_, selected chiefly from the publications of the Rev. John and Charles Wesley and Dr. Watts, &c., 1814, it was given anonymously as No. 15. From that collection it has passed into a large number of hymn-books for children. In the _Short Sermons_ of 1805, the hymn was composed. It is sometimes given as "See the good Shepherd, Jesus, stands."

_W. T. B._

See where the Lord His glory spreads. T. Kelly. [Ascension.]_ Appeared in his _Hymns, &c._, 2nd ed., 1806, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in later editions of the same (ed. 1853, No. 46). In Hatfield's _Church II. Bk._, 1862, and other American collections, it begins with st. ii., altered to "Around the Saviour's lofty throne." In this form it is a good hymn on "Christ as King."

Seelenbrügung, O du Gotteslamm! N. L. von Zinzendorf. [Follow Christ._ Written in Sept., 1721. 1st pub. as No. 434 in the _Sammlung g. und l. Lieder_, Leipzig & Görlitz, 1725, in 11 st. of 6 l.; repeated in the _Herrnhut G. B._, 1735, and in Knapp's ed. of Zinzendorf's _Geistl. Lieder_, 1845, p. 22. The form which has attained the greatest popularity in German is a cento beginning "Jesus, geh' voran" (p. 588, ii.). The only tr. in C. U. from the full form is:

1. _O Thou to whose all-searching sight. A free tr. by J. Wesley, in the _Wesley Ps. & Hymns_, 1738, and _H. and Sacred Poems_, 1739 (P. Works, 1868–72, vol. i., p. 137), in 6 st. of 4 l. St. i–iii. are based on st. i., ii.; st. v–vi. on x, viii; while st. iv. is from st. xii. of the hymn "Wert wohl wie du," by J. A. Freylinghausen (p. 396, ii.). This tr. was included in the _Ws. H. Bk._, 1789, No. 330 (1875, No. 339), and has since appeared in many collections, e.g. recently in the _Hymnals_, 1871, _Hyf. Camp._ 1876, Allen's _Cong. Psalm_. _Hymn._ 1886, &c.; and in America in the _Episcopal Hymnal_, 1871; _Pres. Hymnal_, 1874; _Evangelical Hymn._, N. Y., 1880, &c. The hymn "As through this wilderness we stray," in the _Maryebone Ps. & Hymns_, 1851, Irish _Church Hymn._ 1869 and 1875, _Universal H. Bk._, 1885, &c., consists of st. ii–vi. of Wesley altered. Wesley's tr. in whole or in part is in extensive use.

Selnecker, Nicolaus, D.D., s. of Georg Selnecker (Selnecker, Scelleenecker, who was protomartarius to the Nürnberg magistracy, but lived at Hersbruck near Nürnberg) was b. at Hersbruck Dec. 3, 1532. In 1536 he was removed to Nürnberg, and became during his school time, when only twelve years old, organist at the chapel in the Kaiserburg there. He went to the university of Wittenberg in 1550 (where he became a favourite pupil of Melanthon), graduated M.A. on July 31, 1554, and subsequently lectured as a private docent, sometimes to 200 students. In the end of 1557 he was appointed second court preacher at Dresden and prior to the heir apparent Prince Alexander, having also to supervise the education of the choirboys of the royal chapel. He was ordained at Wittenberg Jan. 6, 1538. The principal theologians at the time decried the practice of allowing children to follow Melanchthon's lead and to approximate to Calvin's teachings regarding Consubstantiation. When therefore Selnecker thought it his duty openly to declare his adhesion to strict Lutheranism, he found his position almost untenable. When Martin Hoffmann of Sulzbach and his relatives and friends stood and fell against the Elector August's passion for game preserving, Selnecker took Hoffmann's part. His enemies took advantage of this, and managed so that after Hoffmann had been expelled from Dresden, in August, 1561, Selnecker was requested to seek work elsewhere (see No. ii. below). The hint here probably refers to Selnecker's own troubles at this period. He preached his farewell sermon at Dresden on March 15, 1563, and on the 26th he entered on his new office of Professor of Theology at Jena. After the siege of Gotha, Duke Johann Wilhelm of Saxony recalled Wigand and other professors of the University, in 1561, as adherents of Faccius; and Selnecker, not being so extreme a Lutheran as they, had to leave Jena. Therupon the Elector August again received him into favour, appointed him professor of Theology at Leipzig, and also pastor of St. Thomas's church and the University, and, in 1567, gave him leave of absence to go to Wolfenbüttel as court preacher to General von Mansfeld. Here he succeeded in inducing the clergy to receive the so-called Saxon Confession, and persevered in zealous visitations of churches, schools, &c. After 1572 he resided at Gandersheim, took an interest in the Gymnasium there, &c. In 1573 he also visited, and drew up a book on Church Order and Discipline for the district of Oldenburg-Jever. But in Brunswick, where Martin Chemnitz was the Superintendent of Brunswick, who was a High Lutheran, the Duke who wished for peace, and the other General Superintendent at Wolfenbüttel, Selnecker found it a difficult matter to work comfortably, and was himself accused of Crypto-Calvinism. He therefore gladly accepted the Elector August's request to leave Leipzig, and began to lecture there again in Feb. 1574. In 1576 he was once more appointed pastor of St. Thomas's Church, and Superintendent. At Leipzig the sacramental controversy broke out afresh, and Selnecker became deeply interested and involved in the struggle. He was then engaged in drawing up the Formula of Concord (meant to unite the Lutherans, but to exclude the Romanists on one hand, and the Calvinists on the other), which was finally revised on May 29, and pub. on July 22, 1577. The Formula of Concord was so successful that it was largely subscribed to, but at the same time its authors, and specially Selnecker, were subjected to the most violent abuse both from the High Lutherans and from the Calvinists, so much so that he called 1579 his "year of patience and silence." For a few years immediately thereafter his life was a more peaceful one, and he found time to devote to poetry and music. And indeed at this time he assisted greatly in the building up of the famous Motett Choir of St. Thomas's Church, which J. S. Bach afterwards conducted. But on the death of the Elector August in 1586 the real direction of affairs passed into the hands of Dr. Nicolaus Crell, Chancellor to the Electorate, who, under his rule the Lutheran clergy were gradually disposed of by Melanchthonians and Crypto-Calvinists. When the new court preacher Salmuth began to issue a German Bible with notes in which he clearly taught Calvinism, and impugned the Formula of Concord, Selnecker published a pamphlet in opposition, and was in consequence deprived of his offices on May 17, 1589. For a time he stayed on in his own house in Leipzig, and used his pen in controversy. But after having received, on Oct. 22, notice to cease writing, he thought it prudent to leave Leipzig. He had many supporters, and after a short time spent in Halle and Magdeburg, he accepted the appointment of Superintendent at Hildesheim. Here he had many anxious and weighty matters to settle, and was finally called on, in 1591, to arbitrate in matters of dispute at Augsburg. Returning from Augsburg in stormy December weather, and being worn out by his labours, he reached Hildesheim Jaunt dead, and was confined to his room till April. Meantime the Elector Christian I. had suddenly died, and his widow, after deposing the Chancellor Crell, proceeded to recall those whom Crell had banished. Selnecker, spite of his weakness, welcomed the news, went to Leipzig in May, and reached Hildesheim on May 9, and reached Leipzig on May 19; but only to die. He d. at Leipzig, May 24, 1592 (Koch, ii. 1917, v. 656; Herzog's Real-Enzyklopädie, xiv. 76; G. A. Will's Württembergisches Gelehrten Lexicon, pt. iii. 1575, p. 670, and Supplement, pt. viii. 1808, p. 108, &c.). Koch dates his birth 1530, but Will quotes an apparently authentic biographical sketch in which Selnecker gives the date 1532; and the reference which Koch, ii. 191, makes to Selnecker's Paraphrasis Psalmier is full of misprints, for that work was pub. in 1578 (not 1583), and the date after Fe. cl. is "Absolutum Gundesine [i.e. Gundersheim]. Anno 1573, die Maii 29, qui est dies Urbani; Anno setasie 42, pot 45."
the hymn of the Reformation period, and indeed contain many reminiscences of them. Of the rest, many too scanty to mirror the misfortunes and changes and conflicts of his life, and are full of personal matter and careless in style. Still there remain not a few worthy of note, in which a genuine piety, a deep and fervent love to the Saviour, and a zeal for the best interests of His Church on earth, are expressed to clear, flowing and manful style. A large number first appeared as text-interpolations in his pr. works e.g. his exposition of the Psalms (Ps. 1.1., 1st ed. 1563; II.-IV., 1st ed. 1564; cl.-ccl., 1st ed. 1566; complete ed. 1571); and the polished ed. Christl. Psalter mit kurzen Summarien, &c. 1st pub. in 1572, and of which six eds. appeared in his lifetime; in his exposition of the Prophets (pt. I. 1st ed. 1519: pt. II. 1st ed. 1579). Also in his "Stadt-Psalmen, Leipzig, 1564; in the Drey Predigten, Heinrichstätt, 1572 (contains three sermons preached by Selnecker, by Martin Church, and by Christoph Vischer at the baptism of Anna Ursula, Duchess of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Appended to Selnecker's sermon are 6 hymns on Luther's Catechism, &c.). They were collected, together with other pieces by various authors, in his Christl. Psalmen, Lieder und Kirchengesange, &c., Leipzig, 1547, where 15 German hymns are marked with his initials, and where various of the melodies and of the four-part settings seem also to be by him. A selection from his hymns, with a biographical sketch by Heurich Theodor, is given in this set. In 1555. The most complete collection is that in Wackernagel's Deutsche Kirchenlieder, vol. IV. Nos. 303-415, and in the bibliographical notices it is work the particular of the original works in which they are found given at length.

The hymns by Selnecker which have passed into English are:

1. Ach bleib bei uns, Herr Jesu Christ. Peace and Orthodoxy. It has sometimes been said of this hymn that st. i., ii. are by Selnecker, and that the rest are a later addition. The opposite however is the case. The full form appeared in the Geistliche Psalmen, &c., Nürnberg, 1611, p. 597, in 9 st., viz.:

2. In dieser schweren beitrittzeit.
3. Herr Jesu, hoff, dein Kirche erhält.
4. Erhätt uns nun bey deinem Wort.
5. Ach gött es gehe gar einig zu.
8. Dein Wort ist unser Hertzschen Trutz.

This sermon is from st. 1, according to Mützelfeldt, No. 291, first appeared in 1579, on a broadsheet, along with A. Herman's hymn, Danket dem hernn heut und allzeit. It is a tr. of Melanchthon's "Vespera jam venit, momento muertos manent. Exsultabunt lucem nec patare tamen." (Corpus Reformati, vol. x, col. 602, Halle, 1642), and is founded on St. Luke xxiv, 29.

2. Sie, says Mützelfeldt, first appeared in Christliche Gedichte und Psalmen, welche die Kinder in der Jungfrau Schule zu Freyberg zu beten und zu singen gepflegen, Freyberg, 1572. It resembles the hymned rayer given at the end of Ps. xxii., in Selnecker's Der Psalter, 1572.

St. 6 is st. 2 of the hymn "Wir danken dir, Herr Jesu Christ, dass du unser König worden bist," which is the rhymed prayer to Ps. cxxii., in Selnecker's Der Psalter, 1572.

2. 3, 4, 6-9, form the hymn. "Herr Jesu, hoff, dein Kirche erhält," which is the rhymed prayer to Ps. cxxii., in Selnecker's Der Psalter, 1572. See also Wackernagel, iv., p. 286.

The text of 1611 is in H. Thiele's ed. of Selnecker's Geistl. Lieder, 1585, p. 51, and in the Berlin G. L. S. ed. 1863, No. 498. The trs. in C. U. are from this text.

1. Lord Jesus with Thy children stay. This is a tr. of st. 1, 2, 8, 6, 9, 3 by J. Swartner in the Moorean II. Bk. 1799, No. 6 (1866, No. 6).
2. Ah Jesu Christ, with us abide. This is a good tr. of st. 1-5-9, by Dr. Kennedy as No. 41 in his Hymn. Christ. 1863, repeated in Holy Song, 1899.
3. Lord Jesu Christ, with us abide. For round us fall, &c. By Miss Winkworth, of st. 1, 2, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 19, repeated in Bosworth's Bk. of Church Hymns, 1863. It is slightly altered in Miss Winkworth's Christian Singers, 1869, p. 152.

ii. Christus der wahre Gottes Sohn. Holy Baptism. This is No. 4 of the 6 hymns of Selnecker's Catechism, appended to one of Drey Predigten, 1572, and thence in Wackernagel, iv. p. 255, in 8 st. of 4 1. In the Ohio G. B. 1870, No. 239. Trs. as:

Now Christ, the very Son of God. By C. H. Schnette as No. 221 in the Ohio Luth. Hym. 1880, st. i.-iii. are literal, iv.-vi. are based on iv.-viii. of the German.

iii. Helf, Herr, mein Gott, in dieser Ketten Cross and Consolation. In his Christliche Psalmen, 1587, in 15 lines entitled "Anno 1563. God knows why." Thence in Wackernagel, iv. pp. 242-243 (with two other forms), and M. Moller's Manual de praepositiones et motem, Görlitz, 1853, f. 114, in 3 st. of 4 1. Among the hymns "composed by other spiritual persons." This is Wackernagel's second form, and is also in the Unr. L. S. 1851, No. 624. The reason why Moller did not claim it as his own was, most likely, because it was based on Selnecker. The trs. are:

1. My Helper, aid: Thy mercy show. By A. T. Russell, in full, as No. 223 in his Ps. and Hymns, 1851.

iv. Lass mich dein sein und blissen. Close of Service. This is a beautiful st. of B1. 1. which is very frequently used in Germany at the close of Divine service. It was written as his daily prayer and 1st pub. in his Passio, 1572, and thence in Wackernagel, iv. p. 251, and also in Thiele's ed. 1855, p. 59. In the Ohio G. B. 1851, No. 251, with two additional st. which Wettstein, iii. 213, says appeared in the Rudolf Stett. B. 1698. The trs. are:

1. Let me be Thine for ever. My gracious. This is a tr. of st. i.-iii. by D. Mey as No. 259 in the Ohio Luth. Hym. 1880.
2. Make me Thine own and keep me Thine. By Miss Winkworth in her Christian Singers of Germany, 1899, p. 152.

It is also in Thiele's ed. 1855, p. 58, and in the Berlin G. L. S. ed. 1863, Vol. 969. Tr. as:—

O Lord and God, I cry to Thee. This is a good and full tr. by A. T. Russell as No. 253 in his Ps. & Hymns, 1851.

H. C. B., and J. H. M. F. J. H., in The Churchman, 1833, No. 885 (Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 388) there is a version of this hymn entirely re-written, and beginning, O Herr Gott, ich ruf zu dir. The tr. in C. U. from this form is:—

O Lord my God, I cry to Thee. This is a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Grec. 2nd Ser. 1858, p. 212, and her C. B. for England, 1855, No. 192. Repeated in the Irish Church Hyl. 1873, Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk. 1868 and others.

vi. Wir danken dir, Herr Jesu Christ, Dass du Gehem Mimmel gefahren bist. Ascension. A hymn beginning 1thus, and in 4 st. of 4 l. appeared at the end of Ps. lxviii. in Schelner's Der Psalter, 1572. Wackernagel, iv, p. 278, quotes it from the ed. of 1578. It is also in Thiele, 1855, p. 15. Mützelf., No. 277, gives this text, and also a form in 13 st. of 4 l. from the Gegenst. Psalmen, &c., Nürnberg, 1611, where it is ascribed to Schelner. The 13 st. form is also in M. Prätorius's Musae Sioniae, pt. vi 1607, No. 340; and in the Berlin G. L. S. ed. 1863, No. 340. C. U. adv. the tr. as follows:

We thank Thee, Jesus! dearest Friend, that Thou didst. By Dr. M. Loy, in full, from the G. L. S. text, as No. 96 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl. 1880.

Other trs. are:—(1) "Lord Jesus Christ! we thank Thee now." This is No. 234, in pt. 1, of the Missouri Mt. Bk., 1754. (2) "To Thee, Lord, we praise be given." This is a hymn, in 6 st. of 4 l., by J. Sweertener, and in the Missouri Mt. Bk., 1754 (1849, No. 176, beginning, "To Thee, Lord (Christ);" based on this hymn, and on Erms Largil's "Herr Jesu Christ rieh uns dir nuch." Large's hymn is full in Freylinghausen's Neu Bistumbuch 4. B., 1714, No. 117.

vii. Wir danken dir, o treuer Gott. Absolution. This is No. 6 of the 6 hymns by Schelner, on Luther's Catechism, appended to one of Drey Predigten, 1572. It is in 3 st. of 4 l. and a fourth st. of 2 l. and is entitled "How one should comport himself in Holy Ordination."
The complete form in 4 st. of 4 l., and in his Christliche Psalmen, 1587. Both forms are in Wackernagel, iv, p. 257; and in Mützelf., Nos. 285, 286. The second form is also No. 274 in the Ohio Luth. G. B., 1870. Tr. as:—

Faithful God, thanks be to Thee. By C. H. L. Schotte, as No. 246 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880. [J. M.]

Σημέρου συνέχει τάφος ['Αφρατων θαύμα]?

Send out Thy light and truth, O God! J. Montgomery. [Missions.] This well-known hymn was first printed in a religious annual, The Christian Keepsake, in 1836; again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1838, No. 253; and again in Mercer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bk., 1854, No. 381, in 4 st. of 8 l., the only change from the 1836 tr. being st. 1, l. 9, "Then spring" to "Then be now born," &c. From Mercer's Preface it would seem that he was under the impression that it was written specially for his collection. Montgomery says in a note in his Original Hymns, p. 256, that it was written "in the metre and to suit the tune of the hymn said to have been composed and set to music by Luther, and sung by him and his friends as they entered the city of Worms to appear before the Diet there." The German hymn referred to is Ein' feste Burg (p. 322, ii.). Montgomery's hymn, however, has nothing in common with Luther's save the metre. It has attained to somewhat extensive use in Great Britain and America. [J. J.]

Sensus quis horror percutiat. Jean Baptiste de Saintuillé. [Ascension.] In the Chanson Brev., 1856, p. 497, this hymn begins "Quid obstupendum comminu," but in Saintuillé's Hymni Sacri et Nectar. 1689, p. 222, and ed. 1698, p. 105, it is given as above. It is also in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn at Matins on the octave of the Ascension. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Carol. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiast., 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. What is this horror? The sky is rended. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Dec. 1834 (vol. vi. p. 620, together with the Latin), and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839.

2. What terrors shake my trembling soul! By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 85, and again in his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 49. It is No. 120 in the 1863 Appendix to the H. Noted.

3. Awful thought of endless doom. By R. Campbell, in his St. Andrews Hys. and Ant heirs, 1856, p. 78, and, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872. Some portions of this tr. are by Miss Jane Campbell, of Ravensdale, Scotland. It is given in O. Shipley's Annum Sanctum, 1884, as "Fearful thought of endless doom.

Another tr. is:—

Great God, what terror fills the eye. By W. Palmer, in his Short Poems, &c., 1848, p. 56. [J. J.]

SEQUENCES. The origin and structure of Sequences or Proves (p. 914, i.) have been referred to under Latin Hymnody (see pp. 648-660). The Gradual or Antiphon sung between the Epistle and Gospel in the Liturgy ended on festal days with the word Alleluia. The last syllable of this word was prolonged to a number of musical notes (called neumes), which were entitled the Sequentia, as following the Alleluia. In the ninth century the custom began of adapting words to suit these notes; and these words came in their turn to be called Sequences. The first author of this kind of Sequences was Naker Ballolus (p. 812, ii.), a monk of St. Gall, who d. 912. He had many successors, one of the most voluminous and finished writers of Sequences being Adam of St. Victor, who d. 1177.

One of the earliest ms. containing Sequences is an Anglo-Saxon Tropary written in the reign of Ethelred (970-1016), and now in the Bodleian (see e below). In the Leofric Missal, an English service book in use at Exeter half a century later, and now in the Bodleian (Bodl., No. 579. Printed at the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1883) only six Sequences are indicated for use by their catchwords (the full text is not given), these Sequences being "Colclia resinent;" "Mater Sequentiarum," i.e. "Pangamus Creatori;" "Chris vocibus;" "Lyra pulchra;" "Omnibus sancti;" and "Seclam ad coelos." The use of Sequences soon became very general. In most mediaeval
SEQUENCES

Missa1s there are proper Sequences appointed for nearly every Sunday and Holy Day, except from Septuagesima to Easter, when verses of Holy Scripture known as the Tract were substituted for the Alleluia and the Sequence. Sequences were also found in Processions and Breviaries, where they were introduced in lieu of the Versus after the Response attached to one of the Lections, generally the last (York Brev., 1883, ii. 106), or in lieu of the Hymn at Vespers or Compline, or in connection with Processions on certain festivals. In the revised Roman Missal of 1570 all Sequences were abolished save four, viz. (1) ``Victima pacis'' for Easter; (2), "Veni Sancte Spiritus" for Pentecost; (3) "Lauda Sion Salvatorum," for Corpus Christi; (4) "Dies Irae, dies illa," for Masses for the Dead. In comparatively recent times, about 1727, there was added (5) "Stabat Mater dolorosa," for Friday after Passion Sunday.

A large number of Sequences are included in the collections of Mone, Daniel, Morel, Wackernagel, and others. In 1852 Dr. Neale published 125 under the title Sequentiis Monasticis Germaniae, Angliae, Galliae, alicetis, or mediæ ævi collectae. The most complete collection of Sequences is Dr. Joseph Kehrlein's Lateinische Sequenzen des Mittelalters, pub. at Mainz in 1873, with 895, including almost the whole of those previously edited by Mone, Daniel, Morel, Wackernagel and Neale; and, many others, principally from Missals of the 16th cent. Of these many are only printed in part, and the number (895), large as it is, does not nearly exhaust the list of such compositions; for even on comparing with the lists below, a large proportion will be found not included by Kehrlein.

An interesting collection of Sequences has just been pub. under the title Prosarium Luminosum (Leipzig, Fues's Verlag, 1890). This is edited by G. M. Drownes, as pt. vii. of his Analecta Hymniaea Medii Âeat, and contains 265 Sequences, taken from the Proserpines of the 10th, 11th, and 12th cent., which formerly belonged to the Abbey of St. Martial at Limoges, and are now in the Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris.

In Part i. we append a list of first lines of Sequences and Proses contained in the Arbuthnot, Hereford, Sarum and York Missals, and a few important early ms. Service Books, mostly of English, French and German origin. In Part ii. are given the first lines of additional Sequences in later English Service Books, in a few representative French and German diocesan Missals not later than 1490, and in two Monastic Missals. In many cases there are slight variations of the text. We have given the various forms where the varieties of reading affect the alphabetical order.

Part i. In compiling the first list of first lines of Sequences an exhaustive use has been made of the following ms. and printed Service Books:

(a) The Arbuthnot Missal. This ms. is in the possession of the Arbuthnot family. It was written about the end of the 15th cent. for the use of St. Titer's Church, Arbuthnot, Kincardineshire, by Sir Islay, parson of Kincardineshire, who d. in 1507. It is a Sarum Missal with variations, and probably represents the use of the diocese of St. Andrews. The copy used is the ed. printed at Burntisland, 1684.

(b) Reg. 2 B. iv. This is a ms. Gradual in the British Museum, written in England about 1140.

(c) Reg. 8 C. xiii. Also in the British Museum, containing a collection of Sequences written about 1160, apparently in England.

(d) Add. 11669. Also in the British Museum, and is a Gradual written in Germany about 1090.

(e) Add. 18775. A four-volume manuscript containing the Bodleian (Bodl. 175) written at Winchester shortly after 989, and during the reign of Ethelred (979-1016). It is described in the Academy for Oct. 23, 1845, p. 28. The Sequences of this ms. have been printed in vol. 2 of the Sarum Society's ed. of the York Missal (see y below); those which are not included in the York Missal being printed in full, and the rest having their titles, 1st and 2nd lines, given with references to the full text where they occur in the York Missal.

(f) Add. 4393A. A beautiful Service Book written in France in the end of the 12th cent., and now in the British Museum.

(g) Add. 19798. A Tropary with a collection of Sequences written in Flanders in the 12th cent., and now in the British Museum. The hymn of this ms. is not indexed.

(h) The Hereford Missal. Of this use only one ms. is known. This was written about 1390, belongs to University College, Oxford, but is kept in the Bodleian. The ms. is very imperfect, and consequently the Sequences are made to the ed. printed at Rouen in 1651 (Missale... eceleste Helfordensis). It may be stated here that all the Sequences of the printed ed. are not contained in the Missale 1370 and York 1390 ms.; noted below are found in this ms. except two ("Gaudia prole," and "Museo est"), and the ms. has the Missal which is the basis of the printed ed. The Hereford Missal was reprinted under the editorship of Dr. W. G. Henderson, at Leeds, 1874.

(i) Hall. 1961. This ms. is of the 11th cent. and is in the British Museum. It is described under Hymanum, page 445, ii.

(j) Calig. A. xiv. This ms. is in the British Museum, and contains a collection of Sequences written in England about 1199.

(k) The Sons Missal. Of this there is a ms. in the British Museum written early in the 14th cent. (Add. 1690B). The Sequences marked A are found in the Missale... ecclesiæ Parisiensis printed at Paris in 1411 by Jeanne de Prato and Desiderius Huym, those marked b in the edition printed at Paris in 1495 by Thibian Kever, and those marked & in the edition printed at Paris by Desiderius Mabon, and pub. in 1443. In the 1443 ed. of the Sarum Missal in the British Museum, the Proses are given in full in the Masses to which they respectively belong, and not grouped together at the end of the Missal as in some other cases.

(l) The Sarum Missal. The Sarum Missal seems to have been edited in 1645 by St. Osmon, Bishop of Salisbury. The earliest complete copy we have been able to examine is a fine example in the Bodleian (Barlow 5) written about 1370. The use of Sarum became almost a national one. Mr. W. H. James Waley in his Catalogus Missarum, London, 1846, enumerates 95 editions from 1475 to 1557, and in the bibliography of the Burntisland reprint several others are mentioned. Many of those printed abroad, and used by booksellers' speculators, and differ considerably in their contents. The Sequences marked G are found in the Missale... ecclesiæ Sarum printed at London in 1449 by Wilkin de Ward. Those marked A are found in the reprint of the Sarum Missal at Burntisland, 1841, which is made up from a great variety of editions, supplemented by portions taken from the Sarum Manuscript and the Sarum Processional. The Index to the Burntisland ed. contains references to various compositions which in the text are marked as Graduale, Rainius, Tractus, Officiarium or Communion; and these have all been omitted from the list below save the Index numerum (v.), there marked as a Hymnus, but by Kehrlein ranked as a Sequence.

(m) C. C. C. 473. A Tropary with a collection of Sequences, apparently written at Winchester in the 12th cent., and now in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

(n) Deucee 222. A Tropary with a collection of Sequences, written about the end of the 12th cent. apparently in France, and now in the Bodleian.
SEQUNCES

(9) The York Missal. This represents the use of the North of England. The ms. collated was written about 1390, and belongs to University College, Oxford, but is kept in the Bodleian. The Sequences are mostly found collected together in the volume, and a few others are given in the text of the more recent Masses. The Sequences marked a are included in the reprint of the York Missal (Msasse Posta Liberatus) by the Surtesses Society, 1874, which is made up from the printed eds. (Rouen c. 1509, and again in 1516, 1517 and 1539; Paris 1535) and others.

(c) Arundel 156. This ms., in the British Museum, contains a collection of Sequences apparently written in England. The marked a are written in the margins in a hand of the early 14th cent.

A number of other mss. of interest have been collated throughout. References are made to them for all the additional Sequences which they contain, but they are not, as a rule, referred to in cases where Sequences already found in the ms. b, c, d, e, g, w, or z.

SEQUNCES

(1) Robert, King of France. Victimae paschali.
(2) Hermannus Contractus. Sancti Spiritus adae knot gratiae, and Ave praelatula.
(3) Gervaisus Centius (i.e. of Chichester, f. 1160). Ladeipsa mentes, and Exsultemus in hae die.
(6) Erfur Montac. [Montauc, a Augustinian foundation in Somerteside, dating from shortly after 1100.]
(7) Robert of Winchester, see note below (? Robert, prior of Winchester in 1173). Poteitate non natura, and Diri patris.
(9) Robert of York (d. about 1263). Exsultemus in hae die festo.

It seems improbable that Robert of York and Robert of Winchester are identical. At least in Archbishop Gray’s Registers (printed by the Surtesses Society), Robert, canon and sometime precentor of York, who d. about 1263, is always designated Robert of Winchester, and in one case as Archdeacon of Winchester (Surtesses ed., p. 323).

In his Histoire de la Poésie Liturgique au Moyen Age. Les Trois. Paris, 1886, pp. 111-136, M Leon Gautier describes (with many facsimiles) 40 important mss. containing Sequences, which are now found at Paris, St. Gall, Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Rome; also the ms. e, g, k, z noted above. In the Verzeichniss der Handschriften der Stiftsbibliothek von St. Gallen, Halle, 1875, the St. Gall mss. are shortly described; and at pp. 569-580 there is an index which professees to include the first lines of all the Sequences, with references to the mss. in which they are contained.

The occasional references by numbers are to the printed Missals in Part ii. of this article.

Part II. In this second part are given the first lines of Sequences which are not included in the first part of this article. These are principally taken from certain representative French and German diocesan Missals printed not later than 1490; and from two monastic Missals, viz. an Augustinian and a Benedictine.
A few more are taken from English service books other than Missals, the editions used being as follows:

Barum Processional, in a ms. written about the end of the 14th century, and now in the British Museum (Harl. 2942), compared with the Antwerp ed. of 1523.

Barum Processional, in the Rhen ed. of 1530 (reprinted in vol. 63, 1876, of the Surtees Society's publications).

York breviary, in the Venice ed. of 1485 (reprinted by the Surtees Society, 1866-83, vol. 71, 725).

Haresford breviary, in the Rhen ed. of 1566. Of this the Paris Hymnal is in the Worcester Cathedral Library, and the Paris version is said to be the best.

The Missals collated are the following:

(1) Angers. The ed. used is the Missale Angu-emense printed at Paris in 1499 by Joannes de Prato.

(2) Augustinian. The ed. used is the Missale canonicocorum regularum ordinis Sancti Augustini, secundum ritum insignis ecclesiae Sancti Victorii ad maruos Parisienses, printed at Paris in 1529 by Nicolai Prevost.
In this ed. the word Præse is always used instead of Sequena, and the Sequences are printed together at the end of the Missal in the Commun Præseurum. The name of the composer is given in all cases known to the completers. A large proportion are ascribed to Adam of St. Victor, and two to Henricus Pistor, frater S. Victoris:
with one each to St. Bernard (Latalbundus), St. Thomas of Aquino (= Lauda Sonno), Peter Abelard
("Mutil ad virgines") and Robert, King of France ("Sancti Spiritus... Quae"). The rest are anonymous.

(3) Basel. The ed. used is the Missale Basilense printed at Basel in 1488 by Michael Wesseler.

(4) Benedectine. The ed. used is the Missale...ordinis sancti Benedetti reformatorum nigrorum monas-chorum per Germaniam; printed at Hagenau in 1518 by Thomas Angeline. In this ed. the word Sequens is always used instead of Præse, and the Sequences are printed together at the end of the volume.

(5) Breisach. Missale Wurttataricum. The ed. used is that printed at Mainz in 1483 by Petrus Schöffer.

(6) Constanza. The ed. used is the Missale secularum chororum Constantinopolitanorum printed at Basel in 1488 by Petrus Kollicker.

(7) Freising. The ed. used is the Liber Muzalis...ecclesiae Præsensanensis printed at Bamberg in 1497 by John Sensenschmidt.

(8) Magdeburg. The ed. used is the Missale Magde-burgense printed at Liefheb in 1490 by Bartholomaeus Gothan and Lucas Brandus.

(9) Tréveris. The ed. used is the Missale Treverarianum printed at Basel by Michael Wesseler. Mr. W. H.
James Weale, in his Catalogus Missalium, 1886, p. 209, dates this c1488. In the British Museum Catalogue it is dated c. 1490.

(10) Würzburg. The ed. used is the Missale Herbipotenae printed at Würzburg in 1441 by Georgius Reyser.

(11) Cologne. The ed. used is the Missale Coloniense, printed at Basel 1487, without name of printer.

(12) Regensburg. The ed. used is the Liber Muzalis...ecclesiae Præsensanensis, printed at Regensburg in 1488, by Joannes Sensenschmidt and Joannes Seckenhahn.

The image contains a page from an ancient manuscript, possibly a Latin religious text, with various prayers and dedications to saints and religious figures. The text is formatted as a table with columns for the first line of the sequence, the location of the found text, and the use or significance of the prayer or dedication.
SERGIUS

Many of the Sequences in the English Missals are only to be found in these Missals. Of the remaining Sequences in both of the above lists a considerable proportion have not yet (Feb. 1888) been edited in any way. Mr. W. H. James Weale, in his Analecta Liturgicae, is beginning the publication of all known Sequences which are not given, or only part of them, in Kehrlein's Lateinische Sequenzen, and hopes in about five years to complete the work.

[F. E. W. and J. M.]

SERGIUS. [Greek Hymnody, § xii. 2.]

Servant of God, well done! Rest from thy loved employ. J. Montgomery. [Death and Burial of a Minister.] This poem was pub. in Montgomery's Greenand and Other Poems, 1819, p. 191, in 6 st. of 8 lines, with the following heading:

"The Christian Soldier. Occasioned by the sudden death of the Rev. Thomas Taylor, on having declared in his last Sermon, on a preceding evening, he hoped to die as an aged soldier of Jesus Christ, with his sword in his hand."

Mr. Taylor, who was a Methodist preacher, was found dead in his bed on the morning of Oct. 15, 1816. The poem is given as a ballad in the 8th ed. of Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 306; in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 354; and in his Original Hymns, 1838, No. 311. In addition to the use of this hymn in its original form, three centos are also in C. U. — (1) "Servant of Christ, well done," which begins with l. 5 of the last stanza; (2) "The pains of death are past," beginning with 1. 1. of the same stanza; and (3) "The voice at midnight came," st. i. 1. 5.

Servant of God, well done! Thy glorious warfare's past. C. Wesley. [Death and Burial of a Minister.] This hymn, in 4 st. of 8 lines, was printed at the end of the Funeral Sermon by John Wesley, on the death of G. Whitefield. (P. Works, 1806-72, vol. vi. 316.) Whitefield died on Sept. 30, 1770, and J. Wesley preached the Funeral Sermon at the Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, and again at Moorfields on Nov. 18, 1770. He also preached on the same subject at Greenwich and Deptford. His remark in his Journal is, "In every place I wish to show all possible respect to the memory of that great and good man." It must be noted that this hymn is a distinct piece from C. Wesley's Elegy on the Death of the Rev. George Whitefield.

[ J. J.]

Servants of God, awake, arise. [Exhortation.] This is an altered form of P. Doddridge's "Awake, ye saints, and raise your eyes." p. 103. It was included in the 1815 Appendix to Cotterill's Sel., No. 219, and is found in a few modern collections, including Windle's Ch. & Home Mel. Ps. and Hymnal, and others. In the 1819 ed. of his Sel. Cotterill again altered the text, and gave it as "Servants of God! Lift up your heads," p. 214. This form of the text is seldom found in modern hymn-books.

[ J. J.]

Servants of God, His praise proclaim. J. Montgomery. [Ps. cxiii.] Holland, in his Memoirs of Montgomery, says that after Montgomery ran away from the Monvian school at Fulneck, he lived from 1788 to June 19, 1789, with one Lockwood, at Milfield, near Leeds. This person was a Moravian. He kept a small retail shop, and went by the name of the "Fine Bread Baker." Holland says: "Of the conduct of Montgomery behind the counter we never heard much: he did not remain there longer than a year and a half; he had little to do, and still less inclination for the employment, such as it was. While there he composed the largest part of the poems of 1789, and amongst his smallest pieces a metrical version of the 112th Psalm, which, many years afterwards, was published, with some verbal alterations, in the collection [Cotterill's Sel., 1819] now in use under the auspices of the Archbishop of York in various churches in his diocese and elsewhere."—Memoirs, i. p. 105.

This version of Ps. 113 is on p. 57 of Cotterill's Sel., 1819, in 5 st. of 4 lines. It was re-published in Montgomery's Songs of Zion, 1822, and is found in several modern hymn-books. It very frequently begins "Servants of God! in joyful lays." This is the first line of the last stanza, and is substituted for the original opening of the hymn. This is the earliest of Montgomery's hymns to which a date can be given. He was about 17 when it was written.

[ J. J.]

Set thine house in order. H. Alford. [Sunday after Christmas.] 1st pub. in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 27, in 4 st. of 8 lines, and repeated in the Universal H. Bk., 1885. It is based on the first lesson at Evening Prayer on the 1st S. after Christmas, Isaiah xxxviii. 1.

[3. J.]

Seymour, Aaron Crossley Hobart, s. of John Crossley Seymour, M.A., Vicar of Cahirely, Diocese of Cashel (and elder brother of the Rev. Michael Hobart Seymour, author of several works on the Roman controversy), was b. in the county of Limerick, Dec. 19, 1789. From an early age he gave much attention to literary pursuits, and at the age of 21 he pub. his Vital Christianity exhibited in a Series of Letters on the most Important Subjects of Religion, addressed to Young Persons, 1810. This work, written during an illness, contains several of his hymns and other poetical pieces. He also edited a new edition of Dr. Gillies's Life of Whitefield, and wrote a "Memoir," which was prefixed to the Reliques of Ancient Irish Poetry, by Miss Charlotte Brooke, 1816. His most important work was his Life and Times of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, 2 vols., 1839. He resided for some time in Naples (circa 1839-1847), and then at Bristol.

He d. Oct. 1870. A few of his hymns are still in C. U., including "Jesus, Immortal King, arise," p. 499, i. and others. For these details we are indebted to Miller's Singing Songs, 1869, pp. 410-12.

[ J. J.]

Shall heavenly wisdom cry aloud? [Christ, the Wisdom of God.] This hymn appeared in the Scottish Draft Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, No. 36, in 10 st. of 4 lines, and based on Prov. viii., 22, &c. It was composed by J. Watts's "Shall wisdom cry aloud?" (s. m.) from his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. I., No. 92; and st. ii., ill. of his "Thus with the wisdom of the Lord" (l. m.) from the same work, Bk. i., No. 94; re-written in c. m. in the authorized issue of the T. and P., 1781, No. 13, this arrangement is given with alterations as "Keep silence, all ye sons of men." In the markings of the Tr. and Paraph. by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 800, li.) this form of the text is attributed to him. [J. J.]

Shall we go on to sin? I. Watts. [Rom. vi. 1-6.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1709, Bk. i. No. 106, in 3 st. of 4 1, and entitled "Death to sin by the Cross of Christ." Its use is limited. Orig. text in modern editions of Watts. In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, it was given as "And shall we then go on to sin?" the alterations being confined to the change of metre. In adopting the hymn for the authorized issue of the Trans., in 1781, No. xlii. (Rev. W. S. Praed, ed. i-7), the first line only of the 1745 alterations was retained, the whole hymn being rewritten in 4 st. of 4 1. This recast has very little indeed of Watts, being to a great extent new. This form, according to the markings of the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 800, li.), was by Cameron. It is given in several modern collections. [J. J.]

Shelly, Martha Evans, née Jackson, daughter of John Jackson, of Manchester, b. at Stockport, Cheshire, and married in 1846 to J. W. Shelly, of Great Yarmouth. The hymn appeared in Curwen's Child's Own Hymn Book, 1844-1874, and include:—

1. Father, let Thy benediction On behalf of Children. Appeared in Curwen's Child's Own Hymn Book, 1844, and is found in a few modern collections.
2. Lord, a little band and lowly. Children's Prayer, Mrs. Shelly's account of this hymn is:— "At a Sunday School meeting in Manchester, the Rev. John Curwen, one evening, gave a lecture on singing. He sang a very pretty and simple tune, to which he said he had no suitable words, and wished that some one would write a hymn to it. I wrote these verses and gave them to him after the close of the meeting." (Curwen's Blog, Notes, p. 15.) The tune which Mr. Curwen sang was a German one, and was given in his Child's Own Tune Book under the name of Glover. The hymn was pub. in his Child's Own Hymn Book, 1844, and has passed into a large number of collections for children.
3. Lord, help us, as we sing. Sincerity. Pub. in The Voice of Praise, 1866. [J. J.]

Shepherd, Anne, née Houlditch, daughter of the Rev. E. H. Houlditch, sometime Rector of Speen, Berkshire, was b. at Cowes, Isle of Wight, Sept. 11, 1809; married to Mr. S. Saville Shepherd in 1843; and d. at Blackheath, Kent, Jan. 7, 1857. Her Hymns adapted to the Comprehension of Young Minds were pub. (3rd ed. 1847 5th ed. 1853,) and contained 64 hymns. Of these the following have come into C.U.:—

1. Around the throne of God In heaven. (See p. 82, ii.)
2. Glory to Jesus, glory, Praise. (See p. 82, iv.)
3. Here's a message of love, Invitation. (See p. 82, vi.)
4. I have read of the Saviour's love, The Love of Christ. (See p. 82, viii.)
5. See where the gentle Jesus reigns, Jesus, the Children's Friend. (See p. 82, x.)

Of these hymns the first has by far the widest acceptance, and is found in a large number of children's hymn-books. Her religious novels, Ellen Seymour, 1848; and Reality, 1852, attracted some attention. [J. J.]

P. Doddridge. [During a Ministerial Vacancy.] In the D. Mss. this is No. 63, in 5 st. of 4 1, and is headed, "Of seeking a right way from God, from Ezra viii. 21. At a meeting of ministers at Bedworth, during their long vacancy;" and is dated "April 10, 1733." It was pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 370, in a slightly altered form: and the same text was repeated in Dr. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839. It is usually given in modern hymn-books in a slightly altered form from that of 1755. In the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, st. ii.-iv. are given as "O Lord, Thy pitying ear surveys." [J. J.]

Shepherd of the ransomed flock [The Good Shepherd.] In Miss Dorothy A. Thrupp's Thoughts for the Day, 1837, 1st series, p. 8, are the following lines, sometimes given as a hymn in 2 st. of 4 1:—

"Shepherd of the little flock, Lead me by the shadowing rock: Where the richest pastoral grows; Where the living water flows; By that pure and silent stream. Sheltered from the scorching beam.
Shepherd, Saviour, Guardian, guide, Keep me ever near Thy side."

In the Rev. T. Darling's Hymns, for the Church of England, 1855, lines 1-4 of the above were given with alterations as the opening of the hymn "Shepherd of the ransomed flock," the remaining four stanzas being by Mr. Darling. This form of the hymn was repeated, with the addition of a doxology, in the 1883 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns, and again in other collections. In Mr. Darling's Hymns, &c., 1887, it is condensed to 4 st. It is specially adapted to the 2nd S after Easter. [W. T. B.]

Shepherd of Thine Israel, lead us, J. Conder. [The Good Shepherd.] In Conder's Hymn of Praise, Prayer, and Devout Meditation, 1856, p. 201, this hymn is given in 3 st. of 6 1, together with the following note by the author's son, the Rev. E. R. Conder:—

"It is not quite certain whether the Author designed this Hymn to be included. It originated in an attempt to render a well-known imitation from Mr. Webbe (Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah, p. 77, i.) the popularity of which far exceeds its poetical merit, more worthy of the place it now has in our psalter. But so little is borrowed, beyond the form and leading thought, that the foregoing seems fairly to rank as an original composition.—E. R. C."

This has failed to receive the attention of hymnal compilers. [J. J.]

Shepherd, Thomas, s. of William Shepherd, sometime Vicar of Tilbrook, Bedfordshire, and subsequently a Nonconformist Minister at Oundle, and at Kettering, was b. in 1665. Taking Holy Orders he held for some time precentor in Huntingdonshire and in Buckinghamshire. Seceding from the Church of England, he became, in 1684, pastor of the Castle Hill Meeting House (Independent), Nottingham, of which Dr. Doddridge was subsequently pastor. In 1700 he removed to Bookng, near Brantree, Essex, where he began his work in a barn. A chapel was erected for his congregation in 1707. He d Jan. 22, 1739. His publications consisted chiefly of Sermons. His Penitential and Grievous were a continuation of those by John Mason.
Shirley, Hon. Walter, M.A., fourth son of the Hon. Laurence Shirley (s. of the 1st Earl Ferrers and cousin of the Countess of Huntington), was b. in 1725. He was a friend of Whitefield and the Wesleys, and often preached in their chapels. He was for sometime Rector of Loughes, county of Galway. He d. April 7, 1786. A selection of his sermons was published; also two poems in 1761—Liberty, an Ode, and The Judgment. In 1774 he assisted the Countess of Huntington in revising the collection of hymns used in her chapels, and therein a few of his productions are found. In the Life of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, 1839, vol. ii., p. 291, the following note is given on Shirley’s hymn-writing:

"Mr. Shirley was the author of several well-known hymns in Lady Huntington’s collection, particularly:

—From heaven the loud angelic song began.
—Hark! in the wilderness a cry.
—Flow fast the tears, the cause is great.
—Sweet as the shepherd’s tuneful reed.
—Son of light and power divine.

There are also some in other collections; and a few little poems scattered in various periodical publications.

The lines on the departure of the missionaries from Lady Huntingdon’s College for America, in 1772, under the direction of Mr. Piercy, have been much admired; they were re-published in the Evangelical Magazine, in 1786, on the departure of the ship Affliction, for the South Sea Islands.

1. Arm of the Lord, awake, awake. Put on Thy strength, the nations shake. Missions. This appeared in Missioury, 1793; and in Morris’s Fathers and Founders, 1844, vol. i. p. 461, in 6 st. of 4 l. Dr. Rogers in his Lyra Ephraimiana, 1775, made this his hymn to Shirbsole’s father, and dates it 1780. Against this statement we can only put the fact that it is claimed in Morris for the son. Orig. text, Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 507.

2. Bright as the sun’s meridian blaze. Missions. Written Aug. 19, 1785, for the first meeting of the Huntingdon Missionary Society. It was printed in the Evangelical Magazine, Sept., 1780, headed "On the intended Mission," and signed "Junior." It is also in Morris, 1844, i. p. 449, together with the note that the hymn "was duly acknowledged by Mr. Shirbsole in his lifetime, and the original ms. with numerous corrections, in possession of his family, in his own handwriting, and that it bears date "August 19, 1785." Orig. text, Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 504.

The well-known cento, "As every day Thy mercy spares," is from this hymn, and begins with st. iii.

6. Ye saints, your grateful praises bring. Praise in the Evangelical Magazine, 1794; and Morris, 1844, i. p. 421, in 5 st. of 4 l.

7. Zion awake. Thy strength renew. The Glory of the Church. Appeared in the Evangelical Magazine, 1796; and in Morris, 1844, i. p. 450. It is sometimes given as, "Zion awake, behold the day."

Of these hymns the most widely used are Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 7.

Sic ter quaternis trahitur. [Last Evening.] This is found in a ms. circa 800 in the Bodleian (Junius 25, f. 128); in two ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xi., f. 50 b; Harl. 2961, f. 236 b); and in the Latin Hym. of the Anglo Saxon Ch., 1351, p. 61, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 18). In the York Breveary of 1493 (where it begins "Jam ter quaternis trahitur") it is appointed for singers on the Saturday before the 3rd S. in Lent. The text is also in Daniel i. No. 77, Tr. as:

1. Now twice [thrice] four hours have passed away. By J. D. Chambers, in his Psalter, 1852, p. 344; his Lauda Sion, 1857; and the 1863 Appx. to the Hymnal N.
SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP

2. With its three quartered hours. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn and Tune Book, 1852-55. [J. M.]

Sidney, Sir Philip (b. 29th Nov., 1554; d. 7th October, 1586) and Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke (b. 1530 (?); d. 25th September, 1521). This illustrious pair claim notice in this work from their versification of the Psalms. These are frequently noticed by contemporaries, memorably by Dean Donne (Poems, vol. ii, pp. 313-15 in Fuller Worthies' Library); but they were not printed until 1823, as follows:—

The Psalms of David, Translated into Divers and Sundry Kinds of Verses, Very Rare and Excellent For the Method and Variety Than are Common in English. Begun by The noble and learned poet, Sir PHILIP SIDNEY, Knt., and finished by The Right Honorable The Countess of Pembroke, his Sister. First printed from A Copy of the Original Manuscript, Transcribed by JOHN DAVIDES of Hereford, in the reign of James the First.

This MS of John Davies, the renowned calligraphist, passed from the Bright Sale to Penhurst. Its exquisite penmanship is its chief value. It has many bad readings and gratuitous obscurities. A more accurate text is preserved in the Bodleian (Rawlinson, Poet. 25.), written by Dr. Samuel Woodford, having been made from the MS. of a scribe who copied under the supervision of Sir Philip Sidney himself, with the exception of one or two certain places where he has written "Leave a space here" for a variant stanza. There are also occasional alterations in Sidney's own autograph. This MS. is the text of the present writer's reproduction in both of his editions of the complete Poems of Sir Philip Sidney in the Fuller Worthies' Library (2 vols.) and in Early English Poets (3 vols.). The critical reader is referred to the "Various Readings" from both the above MSS., and from a third in Trinity College, Cambridge, and two in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 12,048 and 12,047), and many notes and illustrations. It was for long doubted whether certain portions belonged to Sir Philip and which to his sister (e.g. Dr. Macdonald in his Antiphon). But the evidence is multiplied to show that Sidney belong only the first forty-three; e.g. Lord Brooke's Letter, which is reprinted in our Essay (as above), names "about forty psalms," and Dr. Woodford, at end of Psalm xliii., notes, from the autograph-corrected Sidney MS., "Thus Sir Philip Sidney" and the British Museum MSS. (12,048) writes there "Hacetenus Sir Philip Sidney:" and so elsewhere. Most will agree that the Countess excels her brother, and that, of its kind, the best poetry is found in her Psalms. John Ruskin, in his Fors Clavigera, has dedicated a whole chapter to the Psalms of both. Some of Sir Philip Sidney's Songs and Sonnets deserve introduction into the Church's Praise. Many seem to set themselves to music. [See Psalters, English, § ix.] [A. B. G.]

Sie ist mir lieb, die werth' die Magd.
M. Luther. [The Christian Church.] Founded by Rev. xii. 1-6: 1st pub. in Klug's G. B., Wittenberg, 1535, in 3 st. of 12 l.; and thence in Wackenroder, iii. p. 24, in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 80; and in the Unr. L. S., 1851, No. 246. The tra. are:

(1) "The worthy maid is dear to me," by H. Anderson, 1846, p. 26 (1847, p. 47). (2) "She's dear to me— the worthy maid." By Dr. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 87. (3) "Dear to me the Holy Maid." By E. Massie, 1854, p. 27; and thence in Dr. Huxley, 1886, p. 63. (4) "To me she's dear, the worthy maid." By Dr. G. Macdonald, in the Sunday Magazine, 1864, altered in his Echoside, 1874, p. 70. (4) "I love her comely gracious maid." By R. Massie, 1867, p. 59. [J. M.]

Sieh hier bin ich Ehren König, J. Neander. [Supplication.] This beautiful and searching hymn is traditionally said to have been written in 1677 during enforced absence from his duti. Founded on Mt. iv. 7 ("God, my heart is ready, to sing and to praise"). Ist pub. in his Glaub- und Liebes-übung: aufgenommen durch einfältige Lieder und Danks-Psalmen. Bremen, 1680, p. 139, in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "Encouragement to Praise." In the Unr. L. S., 1851, No. 341. Tr. as:

1. Behold me here, in print draw near. By Mrs. Findlater in the 1st Ser., 1854, of the H. L. L., p. 44 (1884, p. 46). This follows the text of Knapp in his Ec. L. S., 1837, No. 2060 (1865, No. 1682), omitting st. iv. St. v. of this version is not by Neander, and had appeared in the Württemberg G. B., 1791, No. 464, thus:—

"Tief in Nächten lass mich, Herr, nicht vergessen, Ich, erscheine, Wenn ich weine, Bald mit deiner Hülfe mir!"

"Lass mich finden! Lass mich finden!

Der mein Herz verlangt nach dir!"

Included in full in Cantate Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859, and omitting Mrs. Findlater's st. iv. in the Meth. N. Connexion H. Bk., 1863.

2. Here behold me, as I cast me. A very good tr., omitting st. iv., v., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Germ., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 170; repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 122. Included in Dr. Fagenstecher's Coll., 1864; Christen H. Book, Cincinnati, 1885; Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868, &c. In 1876 it was included in the Scottish Presb., Hymnal, with a tr. of the stanza quoted above made by Miss Winkworth on the request of the committee of publication. This form is repeated in Newman Hall's Christ Church Hyl., 1876. The form in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, beginning "Look upon me, Lord, 1 pray Thee," consists of st. ii. and iii.

Other trs. are: (1) "King of glory, see before Thee," from Knapp, by E. Massie in the Scottish Herald, May, 1865, p. 86, repeated in Reid's Praise Hk., 1872. (2) "Now behold me, King of glory," in the German Reformed Guardian, June 1866, p. 172, signed "A. T." [J. M.]

Συγγραφτώ τόσα σάρξ βροτοία [Holy Communion.] This is the "Prayer of the Cherubic Hymn," from the Liturgy of St. James, as given in Neale and Liddell's Translations of the Primitive Liturgies, 1868-9, but rendered into metre as "Let all mortal flesh keep silence," by G. Moultire, in the 2nd ed. of the Lyra Eucharistica, 1894, in 4 st. of 3 double lines. In 1887 it was transferred to the People's H., for use "Before Communion." [J. J.]

Sigourney, Lydia, née Huntley. This distinguished name stood at the head of the female poets of America a generation ago, and is still well remembered. Born in Norwich, Connecticut, in 1791, she conducted a school 3 Y in the same town from 1809 to 1814, when she removed to Hartford, where she was married to Charles Sigourney in 1819. Most of her subsequent life was spent at Hartford, and she died there, June 10, 1863. Her first publication was Moral Pieces in Prose and Verse, 1815. This was followed by 58 additional works. A thorough exploration of these, or of such of them as are poetical, would be necessary to trace her hymns with accuracy. They, however, are more numerous than important. Many have been used in the older collections; some are still in use, but few are extensively and none are universally so. The principal hymn-books in which they appeared were the Congregational Village Hymn, 1824; Ripley's Sel., 1829; and the Connecticut Ps. & Hys., 1845; the Baptist Additional Hys. by Winchell, 1882; and Linley and Davis's Select Hymn, 1836; and the Universalist's Hys. for Christian Devotion, by Adams & Chapin, 1846. Her best known hymns chronologically arranged are:—

2. Blest Comforter divine. Whitmanode. This is one of four hymns by Mrs. Sigourney, which appeared in Nettleton's Village Hymn, 1824, under the signature of "H." It is sometimes altered to "Thou Comforter divine." Her best hymn.

3. We mourn for those who toil. Death and Burial. This poem on "Mistaken Grief" appeared in Cheever's children's Place Book, 1831. It is in a few English collections, including the Leets H. Bk., 1845.

4. Choose ye His Cross to bear. Holy Baptism. This was given in Ripley's sel., 1829-31.

6. Onward, onward, men of heaven. Missions. This missionary hymn appeared in three different books in 1833, including the Christian Lyre Supp., &c. It is in C. U. in Great Britain (Kennedy, 1863, &c.).

7. Labours of Christ, arise. Home Missions. This was contributed, with nine others, by Mrs. Sigourney, to Linley & Davis's Select Hymn, 1836. This is one of the most widely used of her hymns.

9. Go to thy rest, my (fair) child. Death of a Child. From a Selection from her poems pub. in London in 1841.

10. Not for the summer hour alone. Holy Matrimony. In the same Selection as No. 9.

12. Lord, may the spirit of this feast. Holy Communion. In the same as No. 11.

In addition to these hymns there are several others in the collections named above. As, however, they are not repeated in modern hymn-books they are omitted from this list. We would add that two hymns, not noted above, "Little maidens feed the rill" (Power of little things), and "There was a noble ark," are in C. U. in Great Britain; and that a selection of her pieces is given in the Lyra Sac. Amer., Lond., 1869.
Williams, in the British Mag. Feb., 1837; and his Hymns, tr., from the Parisian Breed. 1839.

Since Jesus freely did appear. J. Hewitt. [Holy Matrimony.] This hymn, based on Ps. cxiv. 1, 2, appeared in his Hymns of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 5 in st. 5 of 81. It was repeated with slight variations in his Spiritual Songs, 1869, and again in his Parish Hymnal, 1873, No. 13. The text in C. U., as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hym., 1871; Thring’s Coll., 1882, and others, is that of 1863.

Since the dear hour that brought me to Thy foot. [Faith in Christ.] The closing lines of W. Cowper’s poem, entitled Truth, which was pub. in his Poems, 1782, read as follows:

"All joy to the believer! He can speak—
Trembling yet happy, confident yet meek.
Sure that a dear hour that brought me to Thy foot,
And cut off all my follies by the root,
I never trusted in an arm but Thine,
Nor put my trust in those that dwell in the divine;
My prayers and alms, imperfect and defiled,
Were but the feeble efforts of a child;
Heard, it was, the smallest thought of an angel;
Thy commands, in Thine own purifying blood,
Forgive their evil, and accept their good;
I cast them at Thy feet—my only plea,
Is what it was, depend on it, depend on Thee.
While struggling in the vale of tears below,
That never fail’d, nor shall it fail me now;
Angelic gratulations rend the skies,
Pride’s falls unvisited, never more to rise.
Humility is crowned and Faith receives the prize."

On these lines the Rev. J. G. Pike, Baptist minister at Derby, based a cent in 5 st. of 6 l., the first of which reads:

"Jesus, if Thou hast brought me to Thy foot,
And cut all my follies by the root,
No more may I trust in any arm but Thine,
Nor hope but in Thy righteousness divine;
In life and in death, be this my only plea,
Thus, Thou an answer didst give me."

The italics show the changes made by Mr. Pike in adapting these opening lines for public worship. The remaining lines are similarly treated, and the result is a most pleasing and devotional hymn. It was 1st pub. in a hymnbook compiled by Mr. Pike for the use of his own congregation, about 1850. From that collection it passed into the General Baptist’s New H. Bk., pub. in 1851 by Mr. Pike’s two sons; and again in the Bapt. Hymnal, 1879.

Sing to God in sweetest measures. [St. Mark.] This hymn, No. 170 in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, was adapted by Canon Cooke from R. Campbell’s “Come, pure hearts, in sweetest measures” (p. 250, ii.), in 3 st. of 6 l. St. ii. and iii. are almost entirely new. This text, with slight alterations, was repeated in Kennedy, 1863. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord a joyful song. J. S. B. Monnell. [Morning.] This hymn, based on Ps. cxiv. 1, 2, appeared in his Hymns of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 5 in st. 5 of 81. It was repeated with slight variations in his Spiritual Songs, 1869, and again in his Parish Hymnal, 1873, No. 13. The text in C. U., as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hym., 1871; Thring’s Coll., 1882, and others, is that of 1863.

Sing to the Lord a new-made song. Great miracles to Him, &c. R. H. Kennedy. [Ps. zeriti.] Appeared in his Hymns, or Ps. of David, &c., 1860, p. 155, in 7 st. of 3 l., and again, with a doxology, in his Hymno. Christ., 1863, in 4 st. of 6 l. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord a new-made song; Let all in one, &c. H. F. Lyte. [Ps. zeriti.] Pub. in his Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, as the 2nd version of the 96th Ps., in 3 st. of 8 l., and again in other hymn-books. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord a new-made song. Who wondrous things, &c. Tate & Brady. [Ps. zeriti.] This N. V. (1826) paraphrase of Ps. 98 is not in C. U. The cento given by Spurgeon’s O. O. H. Bk., 1866, as No. 98, is composed of st. i.–iv. from this paraphrase, and st. v., vi., of Bp. Mant’s version of the same psalm, 1824. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord of harvest. J. S. B. Monnell. [Hasten.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymns of Love and Praise, 1866, in 4 st. of 8 l. and, again, altered, to “Sing to the Lord of bounty,” in his Parish Hymnal, 1873. Both forms of the text are in C. U. in Great Britain and America. In his Parish Hymnal, Dr. Monnell appointed this hymn for Reformation Days.

Sing to the Lord with joyful voice. I. Watts. [Ps. c.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 256, in 6 st. of 4 l. In this form its use in modern collections is limited; that which has been added to the greatest popularity being—“Before Jehovah’s awful throne.” This arrangement is by J. Wesley, and was first pub. in his Ps. & Hys., at Charleston, U.S.A., in 1786–7, p. 5, and repeated in J. & C. Wesley’s Ps. & Hys., 1741, p. 74; the Wes. H. Bk., in 1797, as the first of the “Additional Hymns,” and the revised ed. of 1875. Modern collections of the Church of England have received it through Madan’s Ps. & Hys., 1760, Toplady’s Ps. & Hys., 1776, and others of the last century. It consists of Watts, as follows, with alterations thus: st. i., Watts’s st. ii. altered, by J. Wesley, to —

"Before Jehovah’s awful throne"
"National bow with sacred joy
St. ii., Watts’s st. iii. unaltered. St. iii. Watts’s st. v. unaltered. St. iv. Watts’s st. vi. altered, by an unknown hand, for the “Additional Hymns” added to the Wes. H. Bk. after Wesley’s death, in 1797, thus:—“Firm as a rock Thy truth shall stand.” In this last form it is known in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into many languages. A Latin tr. by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, begins, “Ate Jehovae tremendum.” [J. J.]

SING WE THE SONG

SING, ye faithful, sing with gladness.

_ J. Ellerton. [Christmas.]_ 1st pub. in the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick's _Sixteen Hymns, for Church and Home_, 1870, in 8 st. of 6 l., with the refrain, "Evermore and evermore." It is repeated, and altered, in the Brown-Borthwick _Select Hymns, for Church and Home_, 1871. This form of the hymn is the authorized text. In the _S. P. C. K. Church Hymn_, 1871, it was given, with slight alterations, and the omission of st. ii.—iv., and the refrain. This hymn is partly an imitation of Prudentius's "De puer spectrurn" (p. 276, l.)

Singleton, Robert Corbet, M.A., was

b. Oct. 9, 1810, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin; b.a. 1830; m.a. 1833. He was for some time Warden of St. Columba College, near Dublin; and subsequently First Warden of St. Peter's College, Radley, from 1847 to 1851. In 1851 he retired to Monkstown, near Dublin; and then to York, where he d. in 1881. In 1868 he pub. in conjunction with Dr. E. G. Monk, the _Anglican Hymn Book_ (2nd ed. 1871). To that collection he contributed a large number of trs. from the Latin, a few from the German, and the following original hymns:

1. _As James the Great, with glowing zeal._ _St. James._
2. _Beneath the fig-tree's grateful shade._ _St. Bartholomew._
3. _From out the deep, O Lord, on Thee._ _For those at sea._
4. _Good Lord! who hast the weighty woes._ _S. Anderdon._
5. _Hail! highly favoured, blessed Maid._ _Annunciation._
6. _How blest the union, gracious Lord._ _S. Simon and Jude._ In 1871 it reads, "How blest the happy, good Lord!"
there is also a cento, "Sinners, turn while God is near," beginning with st. xy. [J. J.]

Sinners, James, M.A., son of the Very Rev. John Skinner, Dean of Dunkeld and Dunblane, and grandson of Bishop Skinner of Aberdeen, was b. June 23, 1818, and educated at the University of Durham, N.A. 1837, M.A. 1840, and subsequently a Fellow of his University. Taking holy orders in 1841, he became a Chaplain to Her Majesty’s forces in 1844. He was subsequently appointed to the pasture of Barmabas, Pimlico, Vicar of Newland, and Warden of the Penachamp Charity. Through ill-health he retired from parochial work in 1877, and d. in Dec. 1881. His pub. works include (1) A Guide to Advent; (2) A Guide to Lent; (3) Warnings and Consolations; (4) an Office of Spiritual Communion; and (5) Celestia. This last is a versified tr. of the so-called Manual of St. Augustine in 36 odes. Mr. Skinner’s Daily Service Hymnal, was pub. in 1863. To this collection he contributed several trs. from the Latin, and two or three original hymns, including “The Seven Canonical Hours of the Passion,” adapted from other sources:

Nones. Jesu, Lord, for sins of mine.
Vespers. Jesu, Lord, with bleeding brow.
Compline. Jesu, Whose pure limbs for me.

These hymns were subsequently transferred to the Appx. of the Hymnal N. Usually Skinner’s trs. are not found beyond the Daily Service Hymnal. [J. J.]

Slain for my soul, for all my sins defamed. H. Kynaston. (Good Friday.)

Pub. in his Occasional Hymns, 2d Series. P. iv. Chiefly on the Miracles: 1866, p. 11, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed “Lord, remember me.”

In 1872 it was repeated in the Hymnary, with the omission of st. iv. The same text is in the American Church Praise Bk., 1882. [J. J.]

Slatter, James, was b. at Oxford in 1790, and spent his life in that city. He was a layman, in business, and a member of the Baptist church in the New Road. He d. May 22, 1862. Mr. Slatter wrote a book entitled "Rural Pictures," which however was only circulated privately. He also wrote many hymns, which were never published, and two, which appeared in the Bap. New Selection, 1828: (1) "Great God, to thee a lowly band" (Sunday Scholars’ Hymn). (2) “Through Nature’s temple, large and wide” (Divine Worship). [W. R. S.]

Slavery and death the cup contains.

L. M. Sargent. [Temperance.] Mr. Nutter says in his Hymn Studies, &c., N. Y., 1881, p. 347, “This hymn was written during the Washingtonian Temperance Revival.” It appeared in Adams and Chapin’s Unitarian Hymn, for Christian Devotion, Boston, U.S.A., 1846, No. 703, in 4 st. of 4 l. In the American Meth. Episco. Hymnal, 1876, it begins “Bondage and death the cup contains.” The author, Lucius Manlius Sargent (b. 1788, d. 1867) was an earnest advocate of Temperance, and the author of Temperance Tales, and other works. [J. J.]

Sinners, the call obey. The latest call of grace.

C. Wesley. [In Time of National Danger.] This hymn was written under the instantaneous circumstances as “Sovereign of all. Whose will ordains” (p. 1969, ii., and was pub. in the same tract, Hymns for Times of Trouble and Persecution, 1st ed., 1744, in 8 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 12.) In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, st. v.-vii. from this hymn, and st. vi. from C. Wesley’s Tremendous Love, published in Hymns Occasioned by the Earthquake, March 8, 1750: London, 1750, were given as No. 441, as a hymn “For England,” beginning, “Terrible God and true.” In the 2nd ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1781, this cento was replaced by st. i., ii., vi., viii., as “Sinners, the call obey,” and this was retained until the revised ed. of 1875, when it was replaced by “Jesus, the word bestow’d” (Home Missions), which had been previously pub. from the Wesley MSS in the 1830 Supplem. to the Wes. H. Bk., No. 706 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xii. p. 22). [J. J.]

Sinners, the call obey. Why will ye die?

C. Wesley. [Expostulation.] Appeared in Hymns on God’s Everlasting Love, 1741, in 16 st. of 8 l., and based upon Ezekiel xviii. 31. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 54.) In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, 12 st. were given as three separate hymns:

2. God sees the beasts their breath resign. No. 7.

And these have been repeated in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. In the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, Slinn, Sarah. In the Gospel Magazine for July 1779 a hymn in 9 st. of 4 l. was given beginning "God with us! O glorious Name!" headed "Emmanuel; or, God with us. By a Lady," and signed "S. S.—N." In Rippon's Bap. Sel. 1787, st. i. ii. iii. iv. with alterations, and in the order named, were given as No. 174, but without signature. In J. Dobell's New Sel. 1806, the same text is repeated as from Wood's Col. The same text was again repeated to modern hymn-books, and is that now in C. U. From D. Sedgwick's ms. we find the signature "S. S.—N." was filled in as Sarah Slins by him, but his papers do not furnish any authority for the name, nor for the date of 1777 which he has attached there to in his ms. note to Dobell's New Sel. [J. J.]

Sloan, John Morrison, M.A., eldest s. of John Sloan, farmer of Stairайд, near Mauchline, Ayrshire was b. at Stairaid, May 19, 1835. He studied at the Universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Erlangen, and graduated M.A. at Edinburgh in 1859. In 1864 he became college minister of the Free Church, Dalkeith; in 1868 minister of the South Free Church, Aberdeen; in 1878 college minister of Andersonston Free Church, Glasgow, and is now (1890) minister of the Grange Free Church, Edinburgh. He contributed 8 trs. from the German to the Rev. J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1863, 2 of which have since appeared in Mr. Wilson's Songs of Zion, 1877, and 1 in the Free Church H. Bk., 1882. The best known of these is his tr. of "Wie herrlich strahlt der Morgenstern" (see p. 1810). He also contributed a hymn beginning "O Shepherd, good and gracious" (The Good Shepherd) in 4 st. of 8 lines, as No. 126 to Way-side Songs for Young Travellers Zionward (Paisley: N.D. 1881) a hymnal compiled by the Rev. Dr. J. J. Black of Inverness primarily for his own Sunday School. [J. M.]

Smith, Caroline Louisa, née Sprague, was b. at Salem, Massachusetts, and married to the Rev. Charles Smith, pastor of the South Congregational Church, Andover. Mrs. Smith is the author of:-

Tarry with me, O my Saviour. An Old Man's Prayer. Mrs. Smith's account of this hymn is: "About the year 1855 [in the summer of 1852], I heard the Rev. Dr. H. M. Dexter preach a sermon on 'The Adaptedness of Religion to the Wants of the Aged.' I went home and embodied the thought in the hymn 'Tarry with me, O my Saviour!' I sent it to Mr. Halliwell, for The Messenger. He returned it as 'not adapted to the readers of the paper.' Years after I sent it, without any signature, to the little Andover paper... I sent it to you in its original form, in a little paper of which my sister, Mrs. Terry (Rochester, N.Y.), is editor." (Hattfield's Poets of the Church, N.Y., 1884, p. 564.) Hattfield gives the full text in 7 st. of 6 l. In the Plymouth Bk., 1856, No. 1337, in 5 st. of 4 l., was compiled from st. i., st. ii., the 3rd line being omitted. This was repeated in The Sabbath H. Bk., 1855, and others. Of this text st. ii. is sometimes omitted. [J. J.]

Smith, Charitie Lees. [Bancroft, C. L.]

Smith, Elisabeth Lee, née Allen, daughter of Dr. W. Allen, President of Dartmouth Coll., was b. in 1817, and married in 1843 to Dr. H. B. Smith, who became Professor in Union Theological Seminary, N. York, in 1850, and d. in 1877. Mrs. Smith's hymns, including trs. of "Je Tu sole" (p. 579), i., "O Jesus Christus" (p. 666), are in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869 and 1870. [F. M. B.] Smith, George, D.D., Secretary of the Congregational Union, began his ministry at Liverpool in 1827, and passed on to Plymoutli, and then to Trinity Chapel, Poplar, London (1842). He is the author of The Domestic Prayer Book, 1843; Sermons, 1851: Life Spiritual, 1853: Lectures on the Pentateuch, 1863. &c. He also compiled during his residence at Plymouth a Supplement to Watten's Ps. & Hymns, to which he contributed:-

1. Come in, ye chosen of the Lord. Admission of Church Members.
2. Thou art, O Christ, the Way. Christ the Way, the Truth, and Life.
which were included in the New Cong. 1859 (Miller's S. and S. of the Church, 1889, p. 552). [J. J.]

Smith, Isaac Gregory, M.A., s. of Rev. Jeremiah Smith, D.D., was b. at Manchester, Nov. 21, 1826, and educated at Rugby and Trinity, Oxford, where he held both the Hertford (1846), and Ireland (1847) scholarships, B.A. 2nd c. Lit. Hum. 1849. Taking holy orders, he was preferred to the rectory of Tedstone-de-la-Mere, Hertfordshire, 1854; and the Vicarage of Great Malvern, 1872. From 1852 to 1855 he held a fellowship at Brasenose, Oxford, and was also Bampton Lecturer in 1875, his subject being The Characteristics of Christian Morality. In 1870 he became Prebendary of Pratum Minus in Hereford Cathedral, in 1882 Rural Dean of Powick, and examining Chaplain to the Bp. of St. David's, and in 1887 Hon. Canon of Worcester. Prebendary Smith has pub., in addition to his Bampton Lectures, an Epitome of the Life of Our Blessed Saviour, &c., Fra Angelico and other Poems, and other works. He has also contributed hymns to the collection of which he was co-editor, and to the Rev. O. Shipley's Lyrae. In preparing A Hymn Book for the Services of the Church, and for Private Reading, Lond., Parker, 1855, 2nd ed., 1857, he was assisted by his brother John George Smith, Barrister-at-Law, and the Rev. W. S. Raymond. To this collection Canon Smith contributed:-

1. By Jesus's grave on either hand. Easter Bk.
2. The tide of years [time] is rolling on. The Circumcision and the New Year. and a tr. of "Adeste Fideles" (p. 32, i. 17). In addition to these the following are in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1884:—
3. Adown the river, year by year. Second Advent Bk.
4. Comes at times a stillness as of even. Death Anticipated. Written for the unveiling of the Abbey Memorial in Edinburgh, and set to music by W. S. Oakley.
5. The day-beam dies behind you cloud. Winter Evening.
There is also in Pt. ii. "For Reading" in the Hymn Book of 1855, a sweet hymn to Heaven beginning "Come away, where our shadows are lost, in a glass." [J. J.] Smith, Sir James Edward, b. at Keswick Dec. 2, 1757; d. March 17, 1827, a distinguished botanist, and President of the Linnean Society from its foundation is noted for the time of his death. He was knighted when the Prince Regent became, in Patron of the Society. Smith studied medicine at Edinburgh, and, in 1786, graduated as a physician at Leyden. After further travels abroad he finally settled down at Norwich in 1797. He pub. English Botany in 1806 (beginning in 1790) and various other botanical works. He was also a large contributor to Reeves's Encyclopaedia. The friend of Dr. Eustis and John Taylor, he was also a member of the congregation meeting in the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, and a subscriber to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. He contributed 3 hymns to A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship, Norwich, 1814 (printed for the Octagon Chapel); and 6 others to the Suppl. added to the 2nd ed., 1826. Of these the following are in Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840; his Hymns, &c., 1873, and other Unitarian collections:—

1. Adore, my soul, that awful Name (1814). Dependence upon God.
2. As twilight's gradual veil is spread (1814). Nature and immortality.
5. Praise wait's in Zion, Lord, for Thee (1826). Public Worship.
6. When power divine in mortal form (1826). Confidence in God.
7. Thou wilt build a temple for Him (1826). God's Temple in the Heart.

Smith, Joseph Denham, was b. at Romsey, Hants, circa 1816. After studying for some time in the Dublin Theological Institute, he entered the Congregational Ministry in 1840. In 1849 he became Pastor of the Free Congregational Church at Kingstown, near Dublin, and in 1863 began a series of services at Merrien Hall, Dublin, and subsequently at other places. His Evangelistic work in England and Ireland is well known. In connection therewith he has published a large number of tracts, pamphlets, and small books. One of these, Times of Refreshing Illustrated in the Present Revival of Religion, 1869, included several of his hymns which were sung during that time at his special services at Kingstown. He also pub. Seven Hymns for the Present Time, circa 1870-6; and The New Times of Refreshing. Hymns for General and Special Use compiled by J. Denham Smith, London, 1866, J. E. Hawkins, 1869. In this collection his signed hymns are 36 in all, and deal with the subjects usually associated with what are known as "Gospel Hymns." There are several also in The Enlarged London H. Bk. 1873. His hymn "Just as Thou art—how wondrous fair!" (1860) is in Spurgeon's O. H. Bk., 1866, and "Yes, we part, but not for ever." (Parting) in several Unitarian collections. Mr. Smith's hymns have not been incorporated into the leading hymnals of G. Britain or America.

Smith, Samuel Francis, D.D., was b. in Boston, U.S.A., Oct. 21, 1808, and graduated in arts at Harvard, and in theology at Andover. He entered the Baptist ministry in 1832, and became the same year editor of the Baptist Missionary Magazine. He also contributed to the Encyclopaedia Americana. From 1834 to 1842 he was pastor at Waterville, Maine, and Professor of Modern Languages in Waterville College. In 1842 he removed to Newton, Massachusetts, where he remained until 1854, when he became the editor of the publications of the Baptist Missionary Union. With Baron Stow, several of the Baptist collection known as The Psalmist, pub. in 1843, to which he contributed several hymns. The Psalmist is the most creditable and influential of the American Baptist collections to the present day. Dr. Smith also pub. Lyric Gems, 1854, Rock of Ages, 1870, &c. A large number of his hymns are in American collections and several have passed into some of the English collections. Taking his hymns in C. U. in alphabetical order, we have the following:—

1. And now the solemn deed is done. Ordination. Given in The Psalmist, 1843, No. 954. In Dr. Hasfeld's Ch. H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, it is altered to "The solemn service now is done."—

8. Hail! ye days of solemn meeting. Public Worship. An altered form of this was pub. in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1846, as an "American Hymn, 1840."

13. My country, 'tis of thee. National Hymn. "Written in 1822, and first sung at a children's Fourth of July celebration in Park Street church, Boston. Included in the Psalmist, 1843, No. 1056, and found in a large number of American hymn-books. Also in Lyra Sacra Americana in G. Britain. It is one of the most popular of Dr. Smith's compositions. Text, with note in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1869.

16. Planted in Christ, the living Vine. Christian Fellowship. In For Unity. Given in The Psalmist, 1843, No. 929, in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1869, and several hymn-books. Of the hymns contributed by Dr. Smith to The Psalmist this is the best, and one of the most popular.

No. 295, and again in The Psalmist, 1843, No. 284. In the Unitarian Hymn, for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1853, St. II., III., iv. were given as "Spirit of God, Thy Church shall live!". This same form of the text and the original are both in modern hymn-books.

22. The morning light is breaking. Missions. Written in 1832, and included in Hastings's Spiritual Songs, 1833, No. 251, and in The Psalmist, 1843, No. 912. This hymn is very popular and has been translated into several languages. Dr. Smith says of it that "it has been a great favourite at missionary gatherings, and I have myself heard it sung in five or six different languages in Europe and Asia. It is a favourite with the Burman, Karen, and Telegu in Asia, from whose lips I have heard it 'sung profanely'" (Duffield's English Hym., 1886, p. 534.) Full text in Lyra Sac. Americana, 1853.

23. The Prince of Salvation in triumph is riding. Missions. Given in Hastings and Mason's Spiritual Songs, 1832-33, No. 274; The Psalmist, 1843, and later collections.

24. This done, the (important) solemn act is done. Ordination. Appeared in The Psalmist, 1843, No. 501, and later hymn-books.

25. To-day the Saviour calls. Invitation. First sketch by Dr. Smith, the revised text, as in Hastings and Mason's Spiritual Songs, No. 176, and The Psalmist, No. 263, by Dr. T. Hastings (p. 605, i. 19).

26. Welcome, days of solemn meeting. Special Devotional Services. Written in 1834, and given in Dr. Hatfield Church H. R., 1872. See No. 29.

27. When shall we meet again? Parting. This is a cento. The first stanza is from Alaric A. Watts's Psalters: Sketches, &c., 1822, p. 186, and st. II.-iv. are by Dr. Smith. In the form in which it was pub. in L. Bacon's Supplement to Insight, 1833, No. 499. It is in several American hymn-books; and also the English Hymn. Ps. & Hym. 1834, &c.

28. When the harvest is past and the summer is gone. Close of Worship. Contributed to Hastings and Mason's Spiritual Songs, 1831, No. 244; and repeated in the Fuller and Jeter Supplement to The Psalmist, 1847, No. 22, and later collections.

Smith, Samuel J., b. in the autumn of 1771, and d. Nov. 14, 1835. He was a wealthy Quaker, resided at Burlington, New Jersey; but followed no profession. His Miscellaneous Writings with a short Memoir, were published posthumously in 1836. He is known to hymnology through his hymn—

Arise, my soul, with rapture rise. Morning. The earliest date to which we have traced this hymn is Priscilla Turner's Hymns, Lond., 1817. It was included in the American P raising Book Collection, 1826, No. 163, and thence has passed into several collections. It is also in the Misc. Writings, 1836; but there are slight differences in the text. It is incised, together with a second piece, on Christ sitting the Temple, "When on His mission from His throne in heaven." in Lyra Sac. Americana, 1868.

[F. M. B.]

Smith, Walter Chalmers, b. Dec. 5, 1824, and educated at the Grammar School and University of that City. He pursued his Theological studies at Edinburgh, and was ordained Pastor of the Scottish Church in Chadwell Street, Islington, London, Dec. 25, 1850. After holding several pastorates he became, in 1876, Minister of the Free High Church, Edinburgh. His contributions to poetical literature have been many and of great merit. His principal works are:

From his Hym. of Christ, &c., 1876, the following, after revision, were included in Horler's Cong. Hymns, 1884:—

1. Immortal, Invisible, God only wise. God, All is All.

2. Lord, God, Omnipotent. Omniscience.

3. Our portion is not here. Preserve us in Heaven.

4. There is no wrath to be appeased. God is Love. In The Cong. Hymns a new opening stanza was added to this hymn by Dr. Smith at the request of the editor, and in that collection the hymn begins: "I vexed me with a troubled thought."

Dr. Smith's hymns are rich in thought and vigour in expression. They deserve and probably will receive greater notice than hitherto at the hands of hymnal compilers.

Smith, Wharton Buchanan, M.A., was born March 15, 1818, and educated at King's College, London (where he was Maceaul and Prize prizeman in 1870), and Trinity College, Dublin, B.A., 1878; M.A. 1883. Taking Holy Orders in 1871 he was from 1871-73 Curate of St. Mark's, Surbiton; and from 1873-83 of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, London. In 1883 he became Chaplain to the Bishop of Grimsby-town. He is the author of two hymns in Thring's Coll., 1882: "My God, I praise Thee for the long returning", (Morning), which appeared in the Parish Magazine of St. Peter's, Eaton Square; and "Risen between the earth and heaven" (Dedication of Church Bells).

Smyttan, George Hunt, B.A., s. of Dr. Smyttan, of the Bombay Medical Board, was b. circa 1825, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, B.A. 1845. He took holy orders in 1848, and in 1850 was preferred to the Rectory of Hawkesworth, Notts, where he d. in 1870. He pub. Thes. and Vers. for the Afflicted, 1849: Mission Songs and Ballads, 1860; and Floraume, 1861. He was the author of the well-known hymn, "Forty days, and forty nights" (p. 894, i.), and of a second, which is found in several collections below. "Jesus, ever present with Thy Church, ever with Thy Church", (Hymn Community), which appeared in the 2nd ed. of Lyra Eucharistica, 1864.

So did the Hebrew prophet raise. I. Watts. [Passionate.] Pub. in his Hymns and S. Songs, 1709, Bk. i. No. 112, in 4 st. of 4 l. In the same work, Bk. i. No. 150, is the l. m. hymn, "Not to condemn the sons of men," in 4 st. of 4 l. These hymns are in G. U. in their original forms, but their principal interest arises out of their connection with the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases. In 1745, st. i.-iii. of "So did the Hebrew prophet raise," were adopted as st. i.-iii. of the Draft Trs. and Paraph. "Of old the Hebrew prophet rais'd," and "Not to condemn the sons of men," was rewritten in G. M., and given as st. iv.-vii. of the same hymn. In the Draft of 1751 this arrangement was altered to "A. When the Hebrew prophet rais'd," the alteration being confined to st. i. The Draft of 1781 contained further alterations, and finally the hymn came forth in the official Translations and Paradphrases, 1781, as a paraphrase (No. xii.) of St. John iii. 14-19, "As when the Hebrew prophet raised," st. ii. being from the Draft of 1751, as above: st. ii., iii., iv., new, but based upon the Draft of 1745; st. iv. from the Draft of 1745; st. v. new; st. vi. from the Draft of 1745. This form of the hymn has been authorized for use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and is also found in several modern hymn-books. In a list of authors and revisers of the Scottish Trs. and Paraphs. 1781, made by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), the 1781 revision is attributed to

J. Watts, 1709; Scottish Trs. and Paraphs., 1745-51; and W. Cameron, 1781. [J.J]

So firm the saint's foundations stand.
P. Doddridge. [Joy in Affliction.
This hymn is No. 3 of the B. usid., in st. of 4 l., and headed, "The impoverished saint rejoicing in God." from Holy Scripture, and it is undated, but is found between two hymns dated respectively "Oct. 29, 1735," and "Nov. 16, 1735." This associates it with the year 1735. In 1755 it was pub. in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, No. 161, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1790, No. 182. Its use is limited.

About 1741 (see Notes, P., in Various), a copy of the above-named ws. was given by Lady Frances Gardner to Robert Blair (p. 148. i.), of Athelstaneford, Scotland, who, in 1742, became one of the Committee by whom the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745 was compiled. In this hymn this ws. appeared as, "What time the saint's foundation stands." In 1748 the Presbytery of Edinburgh proposed to add an alternative version of the same passage (Habak. iii. 17), in 4 st., and probably made by Dr. Hugh Blair. The Assembly's Committee, however, not seeing the need for two versions of the same passage (from Holy Scripture, and it is undated, but is found between two hymns dated respectively "Oct. 29, 1735," and "Nov. 16, 1735." This associates it with the year 1735. In 1755 it was pub. in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, No. 161, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1790, No. 182. Its use is limited.

So as I live, thy Maker saith.
In his ed. 1732, p. 93, altered and beginning "Sure as I live;" and from this st. i., ii., v., li. 1-4, and vi., ll. 1-2 were included in the Moravians H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 470; and st. i., iv., v. in the Evang. Union H. Bk., 1856.

Other tras. are: (1) "Sinners, your Maker is your Friend," a tr. of st. i., as No. 225 in the Moravians H. Bk., 1789. (2) "As truly as I live, God saith," by Miss Burlington, in the British Herald, Aug. 1865.

Soden, Alfred James, 5. of Thomas Soden, J.P. of Coventry, was b. at Coventry, Jan. 9, 1839, and educated for the legal profession, in which he practised as a solicitor, at Coventry, for three years. With a prosperous career before him, yet the profession was distasteful to him, and in 1864 he took Holy Orders; was successively in the curacies of Kings Norton, 1864; and of Blockley, 1866. In 1878 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Aston Magna in the Diocese of Worcester, which he has since exchanged for Hogsthorpe, Alford, Lincolnshire. Mr. Soden pub. in 1875 The History of Blockley. He also edited:

The Universal Hymn Book, specially adapted for Sundays and Holy Days, and for General Use in the Church. Lond., J. H. and J. S., 1831. It contains 625 hymns, which are arranged mainly in the order of the Book of Common Prayer, special attention being given to supply hymns based on the Collects, Epistles and Gospels throughout. This is a distinctive feature, and worthy of notice. There is also a large percentage of hymns not found in other collections. The work is comprehensive and well edited.

To this collection Mr. Soden contributed the following hymns:

1. A quiet eye at Bethany, The Barren Fig Tree.
3. Almighty God, this truth we own. Collect for 12th S. after Trinity.

of God from several Scriptures." In C. U. it is usually abridged. Modern hymn-books also contain the following stanzas therefrom:

1. So new-born babes desire the breast.
J. Watts. [Christian Life.]. Pub. in his Hys. and S. Songs, 1709, Bk. i. No. 143, in 10 st. of 4 l., and headed "Characters of the Children

2. Doest thou the high and heavenly One? This, in the American Unitarian H. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, No. 427, is composed of st. ix., vii., with slight alterations.

4. Grace, like an uncorrupted seed. This begins with st. v. and is found in a few American hymnals.

5. Immortal principles forbid. This, in the New Cong. 1858, is composed of st. vi., with slight alterations.

6. Lord, I address Thy heavenly throne. This, in the Hatch. Ps. & Hymns, 1856, is composed of st. ix., vii., vii., viii., in the order named.

This hymn in these various forms is in extensive use.

So wahr ich lebe, spricht dein Gott.
J. Heermann. [Lent.] On Ezekiel xxxiii. 11. 1st pub. in his De mortu musicae cordis, Breslan, 1830, p. 1, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled, "A true admonition from St. Augustine that one should not put off repentance." It seems to be suggested by chap. 2 in the medieaval compilation known as the Meditationes of St. Augustine. It is in Mützelf, 1858, No. 13, in Wacker-nagel's ed. of his Geschichte der Lieder, No. 1, and in the also December 1851, Tr. as

As sure I live, thy Maker saith.
In his ed. 1732, p. 93, altered and beginning "Sure as I live;" and from this st. i., ii., v., li. 1-4, and vi., ll. 1-2 were included in the Moravians H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 470; and st. i., iv., v. in the Evang. Union H. Bk., 1856.

Other tras. are: (1) "Sinners, your Maker is your Friend," a tr. of st. i., as No. 225 in the Moravians H. Bk., 1789. (2) "As truly as I live, God saith," by Miss Burlington, in the British Herald, Aug. 1865.

(3) "Yes as I live, Jehovah saith," by E. Mauje, 1862.

American collections, are centos from the original, with alterations. [J.]

Soldiers of the Cross, arise. Bp. W. W. How. [Home Missions.] 1st pub. in Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., 1854, in 7 st. of 4. When included in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, slight changes were made by Bp. How, in the text of st. vi. and vii. This form of the hymn is authorized. [J.]

Solemnem nos jejunii. [Lent.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1706, where it is appointed for Teens on Sundays and is repeated in Lent to the Saturday before Passion Sunday exclusively. The text is in J. Chandler's Hs. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 61, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. The solemn season calls us now. J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 68, and again in his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 38. It is in C. U. in its original form, and also as:—

(1) Again the solemn season calls. This is in Berry's Ps. & Hys., 1862, &c.

(2) Once more the solemn season calls. An altered version of Chandler's tr. with this opening stanza was given in Murray's Hymnal, 1852. This stanza and portions of the rest of Murray's text have been repeated in later collections but without uniformity, the principal alterations being:—

(a) In H. A. & M., and Sarum, by Chandler, Murray, and the compilers of H. A. & M.

(b) In Mercer, by Chandler, Murray, and Mercer.

(c) In Kennedy, by Chandler, Murray, and Kennedy.

(d) In Morrell & How, by Chandler, Murray and comp. of the Church of England.

In addition to these collections there are others of less importance, in which variations are introduced.

(3) The sacred season now doth call. This appeared in the English Hyl., 1852-41. This opening line, but not the rest of the English Hyl. alterations was repeated in the 1843 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 217.

(4) O sinner, bring not tears alone. This, in Martinus' Hymns, &c., 1840 and 1873, and in a few American collections, is composed of st. ii.-v. of Chandler's tr.

When these various forms of the text are taken into account, Chandler's tr. is found to be in extensive use.

2. Weeping on God we wait. By W. J. Bickell. In his Church Hg. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, Let., No. 12, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

Translations not in C. U.:—

1. And now the season grave and deep. J. Williams, 1839.

2. Again the time appointed see. R. Campbell, 1858. This owes a little to Chandler, and is in the old style, ii. 3, 3, and iv. ii. 3, 4, are by trr. Neale, and were supplied to Campbell in ms. This tr. is repeated with slight variations in O. Shipley's Annuv Sanctuary, 1884.

3. The solemn fast of Lent is here. J. D. Chandler, 1857.

It must be noted also that although No. 288 in the Hymnary begins with the same line as Chandler's tr., yet the hymn as a whole is a tr. by the editors of the Hymnary, based upon Chandler. [J.]

Sollit ich meinem Gott nicht singen P. Gerhard. [Thanksgiving.] One of Gerhardt's finest hymns, setting forth the eternal love of God in His creation, redemption, and sanctification. A kind preservation in all our troubles and crosses, even in our forgetfulness of Him: ending with a prayer thus rendered by Mr. Mussie:—
SOMETIMES A LIGHT

"Grant me grace, O God, I pray Thee,
That I may have with all my might Love, and trust, and obey Thee,
All the day and all the night:
And when this brief life is o'er,
Love and praise Thee evermore."

It is in the 35th ed. Berlin, 1863, and in the Frankfurt ed., 1856, of Krüger's Praxis, No. 230; reprinted in Wackernagel's ed. of Gerhardt's Gesell. Lied. No. 81, Bachmann and Gerhardt's ed., No. 60, and the Uleri. L. S., 1851, No. 722. It is in 12 st. of 10 l., II. 9, 10 in each st. except xii. being

"Alles Ding währt seine Zeit, Gottes Liebe in Ewigkeit."

Of it Laumann in Koch vili. 335 relates the following:

"At one of the Pastoral conferences, which the venerable Father of the Faith, Karl Heilicher, of Döffingen in Württemberg, conducted from 1756 to 1784, a great many of these words, together with the characteristic points of the German. His st. ii., iv.—vii. beginning "As the eagle fondly hovers," were included in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850—52, No. 85.

1. Shall I not His praise be singnag. By Dr. Mills in his Horae Germaniae, 1845, p. 141, and in the 3d ed. of his Praxis, 1856, p. 194. It is a poor version, altogether missing the characteristic points of the German. His st. ii., iv.—vii. as the eagle fondly hovers, were included in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850-52, No. 85.

3. Can I not sing my Saviour's praise. A tr. of st. i., ii., iv. by F. C. C., as No. 218 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

Other trs. are:

Sometimes a light surprise. W. Cowper. [Joy and Peace in Believing.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii. No. 48, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "Joy and Peace in Believing." It is in C. U. in its full and in an abbreviated form. There are also two centos therefrom in modern collections:—(1) "In holy contemplation, we sweetly then pursue," in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and later editions; and (2) "Thy children, Lord, lack nothing," in Nepe's "Songs of G. & G.," 1870. [J. J.] and were pasted into unsold copies of the 3rd ed. of that work, in 1864. In 1864 they were given as the opening hymns of the Holy Year, and have since come into somewhat general use in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Son of the carpenter, receive. C. Wesley. [To be Sung at Work.] Pub. in Hymns and Poems, 1739, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "To be sung at work." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 172.) Two centos from this hymn, and both beginning with st. ii., "Servant of all, to till for man," are in C. U. The first, composed of st. ii. appeared in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 313, and the second, st. ii.-iv. and i. in the New Comp., 1859. [J. J.]

Sonent Regi nato nova cantica. (Christmas.) Found in a ms. in the Boldeian (775, f. 129 b); in a Winchester ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, No. 473; in a Sarum Missal, circa 1370, in the Boldeian (Birlov 5, f. 18 b); in the St. Andrews, Augers of 1489, Sors of 1529, and other Missals. In the Sarum use it also in the sequence in the Mass at Daybreak ("in aurora") on Christmas Day. The printed text is also in Neile's Sequentiæ, 1582, p. 9, Daniel v. p. 175, and Kehren, No. 17. The stanzas are expanded and set to new music by E. H. Plumptre, made for and pub'd in the Hymnary, 1872.

Songs of praise the angels sang [sing]. J. Montgomery. [Universal Praise.] Pub. in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 198, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Gauda, worthy of all Praise." It was used in Montgomery's Christmas Psalmist, 1823, No. 592; and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 90. The heading in 1823 and 1853 was changed to "Glory to God in the highest." The opening line is sometimes changed to "Songs of praise the angels sing." The use of this hymn is extensive. [J. J.]

Songs of thankfulness and praise. Bp. C. Wordsworth, of Lincoln. [Epiphany.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, No. 23, in 5 st. of 8 l., with the heading:

"Sixth Sunday after the Epiphany.—Recapitulation of the Subjects presented in the Services of former weeks throughout the season of Epiphany; and Anticipation of the future great and glorious Epiphany, at which Christ shall appear again, to judge the World. See Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for this week.

In Bp. Wordsworth's revised and enlarged edition of the Holy Year, 1863, st. v., l. 2, was changed from "Mirrord in Thy holy word," to "Present in Thy holy word;" and the heading expanded to the following:

"Sixth Sunday after the Epiphany.—A Recapitulation of the successive Epiphanies or Manifestations of Christ, which have already appeared in the Services of the former weeks throughout the season of Epiphany; and which are preparatory to that future great and glorious Epiphany, at which Christ will appear again to judge the World. See Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for this week.

This hymn is one of the most popular of Bp. Wordsworth's hymn's, and is in extensive use in most English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Sons of God, triumphant rise. C. Wesley. [Spiritual Exaltation; or, Holy Communion.] Pub. in Hymns and Sac. Poems, 1739, Pt. ii., in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Hymn after the Sacrament." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 170.) This hymn is known in three forms in addition to the original:

1. The first was given to it by A. M. Toplady, in his Ps. & Hymns, 1716, No. 295, where it is noted as a "Confirmation of the original, and st. ii. of C. Wesley's "Lord and God of heavenly powers" (q.v.). In this form it is a hymn of Praise.

2. The second is in Mercer, 1855-6, 1-64 (Oxford ed., No. 571). This is from Toplady's cento; st. 1. being from "Sons of God, triumphant rise"; and st. ii., from "Lord and God of heavenly powers." The refrain "Hallelujah" is added to each line, and it is appointed for Easter.

3. In the Altar Hymnal, 1884, No. 171, st. i.-iv., v., vii., are given for Holy Communion. [J. J.]

Sons of men, behold from far. C. Wesley. [Epiphany.] Pub. in Hymns and Sac. Poems, 1739, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Hymn for the Epiphany." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 184.) In M. Madan's Ps. & Hymns, 1750, it was given No. 23, and was thus brought into use in the Church of England. It is seldom given in modern hymn books in its full form; and slight alterations are nearly always found in the text. It is in extensive use in most English-speaking countries. Notwithstanding this popularity it was excluded from the Wes. H. Bk. of 1780 and 1873. In the C. Wesley and Denton Hymnals, 1853, st. vi., of this hymn, rewritten, together with an opening stanza and a doxology from another source, were given as, "Lo, the Gentiles bend the knee." This cento was repeated in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and other collections. Sometimes it reads, "Lo, the Gentiles bend the knee." [J. J.]

Sons we are through God's election. [Election.] This hymn was given in the Gospel Magazine, April, 1777, in 8 st. of 6 l., based on the words, "The godly consideration of Predestination and Election in Christ, is full of sweet, pleasant, and unspeakable comfort to godly persons." Church of England, Article XVII.; and signed "S. P. B." In J. Dobell's New Sel., 1806, it was repeated, with slight alterations, and the omission of st. iii., and given as by "R."

"From the New Sel. it has passed into other hymn-books in the same form. In the s. mss., the Rev. S. Adams (see p. 599, ii., "Jesus is our great salvation") says he believes this hymn to be his father's (see Adams, J., p. 15, ii.), but gives no proof, as he has done with others of his father's hymns. The hymn certainly reads like one of Adams's compositions; but his authorship is open to doubt. His usual signature in the Gospel Magazine was "J. A." [J. J.]

Soon shall this earthly frame, dissolution. [The Resurrection.] This paraphrase of 2 Cor. 5:1-11, appearing in the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, in 1745, and was repeated in the Draft of 1751. In the authorized issue of the Texts and Paraphrases, of 1781, No. 51, several alterations were introduced into the text by W. Cameron. (See p. 500, ii.) Of this paraphrase, st. v.-vii. are from I. Watts's "There is a house made with hands" (Hys. & S. Songs, 1709, iii.-v.), somewhat altered. Possibly some of the remaining stanzas may have been suggested by other hymns by Watts on kindred subjects, as, for example, Bk. i. No. 100: and Bk. ii., No. 61, in the Hys. & S. Songs, 1740; but the similarity between these hymns and this paraphrase is very slight.

SOPHIE ELISABETH OF Sachsen-Zeitz. [Schütz. J. J. ii.]
Sophronia. [Greek Hymnody, § vi.]
Soul in heathen darkness lying. Cecil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Mission.] This hymn is known in four forms, each by Mrs. Alexander, and beginning with the same first line, as follows:
1. In E. Hawkins's Verses in Commemoration of the Third Justice of the S. F. G., 1851-52, p. 59, in 9 st. of 6 l.
2. In the S. P. C. K. Hys. for Pub. Worship, 1852, New York, in 4 st. of 6 l., of which st. i.-iii. No. 1 and st. iv. is new. This is the form in which it is usually given in modern hymn-books.
3. In Mrs. Alexander's Legend of the Golden Prayers and Other Poems, 1859, p. 167, in 9 st. of 6 l. This is the text of the Verses, &c., 1851-52, with the omission of
   st. iv.
4. In Mrs. Carey Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1851,-No. 310 is composed of st. i., ii., vi., vii., from The Legend of the Golden Prayers, &c., as above. [J. J.] Soul of men, why will ye scatter? F. W. Faber. [Invitation: The Divine Call.] This is given at p. 308, l. 51, as from his Hymns, 1848, and 1849; &c., &c., 1854, in 4 st. of 8 l., with the heading "Come to Jesus." It is found in its full form in some collections; and the following centos there from are also in C. U.:—(1) "There's a wide-ness in God's mercy;" and (2) "Was there ever kindest Shepherd?" These are in several collections. [J. J.]
Southey, Caroline Ann, née Bowles, daughter of Charles Bowles, of Buckland, North Lymington, was b. in 1786; married, in 1839, to Robert Southey, the poet; and d. in 1854. Her publications include Soitary Hours, 1826; The Birth-day, a Poem, 1836; and some prose works. Her Poetical Works were pub. in 1867; and her correspondence with Southey in 1822. A few pieces from her work are in C. U., as follows:
1. Extract, but not rebellious bears. For the Aged.
   Pub. in her Soitary Hours, 1826; and, again, in her Poetical Works, 1867, p. 250, in 5 st. of 6 l. It is a fine, in full, line. It really appeared in his Odeary Hys., 1854, in 8 st. of 4 l., with the heading "Come to Jesus." It is found in its full form in some collections; and the following centos there from are also in C. U.:—(1) "There's a wide-ness in God's mercy;" and (2) "Was there ever kindest Shepherd?" These are in several collections. [J. J.]
Soverign of all, Whose will ordains. C. Wesley. [In Time of National Trouble.] This is from the tract of Hymns, For Trouble and Persecution, 1st ed., 1744, No. 10, in 9 st. of 4 l., and headed, "A Prayer for His Majesty King George, 'Fear God and honour the King.'" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv, p. 21.) Jackson, in his Memoir of C. Wesley (ed. 1848, pp. 149-51), says that the dread of invasion by France on behalf of the Pretender, and the fear that Popery would be re-established, drove the people to many excesses, not the least marked of which was a common crusade against the Wesleys and their followers on the alleged ground (amongst other things), that they were secretly furthering the Pretender's views, and were receiving money for their labours. It was under these circumstances that the Hys. for Times of Trouble and Persecution were written and published, the finest being "Saviour of all, Whose will ordains," and "Lord, Thou hast bid Thy people pray," the latter being entitled "For the King and the Royal Family." The former of these hymns was given in the latter of the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 453, and the latter in the 1830 Supp. thereto, an abbreviated form as No. 755. [J. J.] Sow in the morn thy seed. J. Montgomery. [Mission.] Under the date of June 16, 1832, Montgomery, in a letter to his friend George Bennett, gives the history of this hymn in the following words:
"In the month of February last, on our return from Bath, as my friend Mr. Rowland Hodgson and myself were travelling between Gloucester and Tewkesbury, I observed from my side of the carriage, a field which had been recently ploughed, and apparently harrowed, for the surface lay not in furrows; but upon it were several women and girls in rows, one behind another, laterally, as though they were engaged in parallel lines, but did not keep pace with each other in their work. When the work was over I could not guess: it was evidently not weeding, for the ground was perfectly clear and fresh turned up. It seemed to be planting, all at once, without design appearing to put something into the earth, but they were too far off for me to distinguish what. I therefore described the scene to my friend and he who, being blind, could not help out the imperfection of my eyes by the aid of his. He immediately replied, 'I dare say it is dibbling, a mode ofhusbandry by which the second or third grain necessary in the ordinary way of sowing an acre is saved: holes are picked in lines along the field, and into each of these two or three grains are dropped.' 'I have often heard of dibbling or dibbling, but I never saw it before,' I exclaimed; 'and I must say if this be the latter, dibbling is quite in character with everything else in an age of political economy. ***
but for my part, give me broadcast sowing, scattering the seed on the right hand and on the left, in liberal handfuls; this dibbling is very unpoetical and unprincipial; there is neither grace of motion nor attitude in it.  I felt immediately into a musick fit, and moralised most magnificently upon all kinds of husbandry (though I knew little or nothing of any, but so much the better, perhaps, for my purpose) making out that each was equal in its way, and best in its place.
 By degrees my thoughts subsided to verse, and I found them running lines, like the lines of the field of my imagination; and in the course of the two next stages they had already assumed the form of the following stanza, which I wrote as soon as we parted at Bromsgrove.
This is the whole history and mystery of which I fear you have heard so romantic an account, "Sow in the morn thy seed." Memoirs, by Holland, vol. v, p. 34.

The hymn written under these circumstances, in February 1832, was printed for the use of the Sheffield Sunday School Union, at their Whitsuntide gathering of the same year. It is in 7 st. of 4 l. It was pub. in Montgomery's Poet's Portfolio, 1835, p. 218, and headed, "The Field of the World," and again, with the same heading, in his Original Hymns, 1853, p. 228. It is given in many modern hymn-books.

[J. J.]

Sowers went throughout the land, Emily E. S. Elliott. [Harvest.]. 1st pub. in the Church Missionary Journal, 1872, p. 124, in 4 st. of 8 l., and then in her Chimes of Consecration, 1873, p. 146. It was included, as No. 362, in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1879, as a hymn for teachers as workers in the spiritual harvest.

Spake the glorious Lord in heaven. Archbishop E. W. Benson. [Ps. cx.] Written for and first pub. in the Wellington Coll. H. Bk., 1860, and repeated in Kennedy, 1863, and others.

Spangenberg, August Gottlieb, s. of Georg Spangenberg, Lutheran pastor at Klettenberg near Nordhausen, was b. at Klettenberg, July 15, 1704. He entered the University of Jena in 1722, as a student of law, but soon abandoned law for the study of theology. He lived in the house of Professor Buddeus, graduated m.a. in 1726, and for some time lectured there. In Sept. 1732 he went to Halle as adjunct of the Theological faculty and superintendent of the Orphanage schools. Here he associated himself with the Separatists, and by an edict from Berlin was deprived of his offices, and, on April 8, 1738, was expelled from Halle. He at once proceeded to Herrnhut, and was received into the Moravian Community, with which he had become acquainted as early as 1727. In 1735 he accompanied the Moravian colony which settled in Georgia, and served also in Pennsylvania and in the Island of St. Thomas. He returned to Germany in 1739, and was for some time at Marienborn in Hesse. In Sept. 1741 he was present at an important Moravian Conference in London, and was there appointed a member of the Unity's Direction, and also director of their financial affairs. While in England he founded, in 1742, the first English Moravian settlement, at Smith House in Yorkshire. He was then, on June 15, 1744, consecrated at Herrnhaag as Moravian Bishop for North America, and from that time till 1762 was for the most part in America, working principally in Pennsylvania and among the Indians, and paying two visits to Europe. In 1762 he became the senior member of the Unity's Direction as successor to Zinzendorf, and thereafter resided for the most part either at Herrnhut or at Barbry. The last years of his life were spent at Bertholdshof near Herrnhut, where he resigned his offices in Sept. 1791, and d. Sept. 18, 1792. (Koch, v. 337; G. F. Otto's Lexicon Oberlausitzischer Schriftsteller, iii. 306; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xiv. 460, &c.)

Spangenberg was an earnest and able man, was much beloved and respected, and was entrusted by the Brethren with many important missions, being e.g. the principal agent in the negotiations between the Moravians and the British Government (see p. 767, l.). He did good service both in consolidating the Moravian organization and by uniting labours in America. His autobiography appeared in 1784. He also wrote a life of Zinzendorf, in 5 vols. pub. at Barmen 1779-1781. His other chief work is his Idei fidei fratrum, &c., Bary, 1779 (English tr. as An Exposition of Christian doctrine, as taught in the Brethren Church in the United Brethren, &c., London, 1781), which is accepted as an authorised exposition of the Moravian theology. He only wrote a few hymns, which are of frequent rational poetry, but do not equal him to high rank as a hymn-writer. They were mostly written before 1765. Ten of them are included in the Breeder G. B. of 1775.

SPANGENBERG, AUGUST G.

Of these ten hymns the following may be noted here:—

i. Der König ruht, und schauet doch. Christian Weise. 1st pub. as No. 1004 in Appendix 1, 1751, to the Herrnhut G. B., 1753, and is in 8 st. of 10 l. Repeated in the Breeder G. B., 1778, No. 1365, and in the Host. Nachricht thereto, marked as "On Zinzendorf, May 26, 1734," i.e. as written for Zinzendorf's birthday. Included in Knaup's Ev. L. S., 1885, No. 1126. Tr. as:—

High on His everlasting Throne. This is a spirited but free tr. by J. Wesley, in Hymns, &c. Poems, 1742 (P. Works, 1768-72, ii. p. 614 a 13 st. of 8 l. St. i.-vi. are from st. i.-vii. of the German; vi. from iv. i, vii. from vi., i. x. from vi.; i. x.-iiii. from viii., vii, vii. This tr. was included in full in the Moravian H. Bk., 1854, No. 37, and repeated abridged in later eds. (1886, No. 888, in 9 st.). Centos under the original first line are given in Montgomery's Christian Poesist, 1825, the Amer. Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, &c. Wesley's st. xiii-xvi. altered and beginning, "What shall we offer our good Lord," were included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1870, No. 479 (1875, No. 492), and repeated in the Mek. N. Conn. H. Bk., 1893, and others.

ii. Die Kirche Christi ist hin und her. Unity of the Christian Church. Included as No. 2219 in the 2nd Suppl., circa 1746, after the 12 Appendices to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735; and is in 12 st. of 5 l. In the Bräder G. B., 1778, No. 959, st. ii., vi.-vii. xii. omitted, and it is altered to "Die Kirche Christi, die er geweht." In the Host. Nachricht to the 1778 it is marked as composed in North America in 1745 (at a Union Synod at Lancaster, Pennsylvania). The text of 1778 is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1502. In the Württemberg G. B., 1842, st. i.-iii. are as i.-iii. in 1778; iv., v. are based on v., vi. in 1778; while vii. is not even suggested by Spangenberg. St. vi. reads:—

"O Gese izler Herren, der das Leben schafft.
Waite in der Kirche mit deiner Kraft.
Dass die Gottes-Kinder Geboren werden
Gleich wie der Morgentau schon auf Erden Zu Christi Preis."

The hymn has been tr. as:—

The Church of Christ that He hath hallowed here. This is a good tr. of st. i.-iii. of the 1778, and of the st. printed above, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Tier., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 58; repeated in Pos. & Hymn. Bedford, 1859, No. 169.

iii. Heilige Einfall, Gnadenwunder. Christian Simplicity. This is an excellent picture of his own Christian character. It was 1st pub. as No. 1589 in Appendix x. circa 1741, to the Herrnhut G. B., 1753, and is in 19 st. of 4 l. In the Bräder G. B., 1778, No. 835, reduced to 11 st. (st. iv. is by Zinzendorf), and this form is in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 823 (ed. 1881, No. 411), and in some recent German collections, e.g. the Pfalz G. B., 1860. According to Bunsen, 1855, p. 904, it was written as a birthday hymn.
for his sister. The date which Bunsen gives for its composition (1744) is probably a misprint for 1741.

1. When simplicity we cherish. This is found in 14 stanzas, No. 587 in pt. ii., 1746, of the Moravian H. BK. In the 1759 and later eds. (1849, No. 505) it is reduced to 6 stanzas, and entirely rewritten, save the opening line. [See Various.]

Spee, Friedrich von, s. of Peter Spee (of the family of Spee, of Lungenfeld), judge at Kaiserswörth, was b. at Kaiserswörth, Feb. 25, 1591. He was educated in the Jesuit gymnasium at Cologne, entered the order of the Jesuits there on Sept. 22, 1610, and was ordained priest about 1621. From 1613 to 1621 he was one of the tutors in the Jesuit college at Cologne, and was then sent to Paderborn to assist in the Counter Reformation. In 1627 he was summoned by the Bishop of Würzburg to act as confessor to persons accused of witchcraft, and, within two years, had to accompany to the stake some 200 persons, of all ranks and ages, in whose innocence he himself firmly believed. [Cautio criminalis, seu de processibus contra suagas liber, Rinteln, 1631, was the means of almost putting a stop to such cruelties]. He was then sent further to the Counter Reformation at Pöine near Hildesheim, but in April 29, 1629, he was nearly murdered by some persons from Hildesheim. He became professor of Moral Theology at Cologne. The last years of his life were spent at Trier, where, after the city had been stormed by the Spanish troops on May 6, 1635, he contracted a fever from some of the hospital patients to whom he was ministering, and d. there Aug. 7, 1635. (Koehler, N. C., 1685; Goedecke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1857, p. 193, &c.)

Spee was the first important writer of sacred poetry that had appeared in the German Roman Catholic Church since the Reformation. Among his contemporaries he was noteworthy for the beauty of his style, and his mastery of rhythm and metre. He seems to have come independently to much the same conclusion as regards regarding poetry as a vehicle for the ascetic life, and the reform of German prose as did Oelitz (see p. 871, ii.). He was however of a much deeper and purer nature than Oelitz; and it was his creed and his life in originality, in imagination, in poetic inspiration. His poems are characterised by a very keen love for the works of God in the natural world, in the appearance of light in all the skies and sounds of the country, especially in spring and summer; and at the same time by a deep and fervent love to God, to Christ, and the flocks of men. On the other hand his mannerisms are very pronounced; the pastoral imagery and dialogue which he is fond of using jar upon modern ears when used on such serious subjects as the Agony in Gethsemane. In the hymns to Jesus he is too subjective and sentimental, and works out the idea of Christ as the Bridegroom of the soul with unnecessary detail. His poems are often full of beauty, of pathos, and of genuine religious warmth, but they cannot be considered as suitable for public worship, and hardly ever came into use except as processional sung by the people at the great festivals or at outdoor gatherings. A few of Spee's works on metaphysics, books of the 17th cent., and one or two still survive. Recently Knapp, in his Er. L. S., 1900 and 1905, has included a few of Spee's works in his PoetiCKET, J. I:., o. 2. Fried. pulling, ed. D. (1906), &c., Cologne, 1849. [Brit. Mus., Berlin Library, &c. The ms. of this work, completed in 1634, is in the Town Library of Trier.] This is in 1634. The first book of the best book; it reached a 9th ed. in 1633. Spee's most important book; reached a 9th ed. in 1633. Spee has been several times reprinted in this century, e.g. ed. at Berlin, 1818; by Wilhelm Stites, at Oesfeld, No. 2. at Berlin, 1817; by Wilhelm Stites, at Oesfeld, 1845 (2nd ed., Bonn, 1849); by Karl Simrock, at Heilbronn, 1847; by Gustav Balke, at Leipzig, 1877, &c. A few of the hymns have appeared in the Neusser Luthertag, Cologne, 1635; the Geistlicher Psalter, Cologne, 1635, and other German hymnals. (1) Guiding, Puppenbuch, &c., Cologne, 1649 (Goldsmith's Library). This is a prose work on the Christian graces of Faith, Hope, and Love, and has a few hymns interpolated.

The hymns by Spee which have passed into English appear to be only two, viz.

   In the Trutz Nachtigal, 1649, p. 225, in 15 st. of 4 lines, entitled "A mournful song on the agony of Christ on the Mount of Olives in the garden of Gethsemane." Included are also the Neusser Luthertag, Cologne, 1635, p. 160, in 17 st., beginning, "Bei fistcher Nacht," and this text is followed in H. Bone's "Christian," 1647, No. 83, where it begins "Bei fistcher Nacht, vom Garten her," and is reduced to 3 st. The form which has passed into English is that in the Trutz G. R. (H. C.), 1646, p. 56, in 13 st., entirely rewritten, having already save the first two lines the same as in 1649. Trutz in C. U. is—Within a Garden Round. Published in England by Miss Cox for Lyra Mystica, 1644, p. 119, and in her Hymns from the German, 1646, p. 45. Her trt. of st. 1, ii., x.-xiii. are included in J. L. Porter's Cath., 1876.

2. Der thiere Winter ist vorbei. Summer. In his Trutz Nachtigal, 1649, p. 36, in 12 st. of 14 lines, entitled "Love Song of the Bride of Jesus in the beginning of summer time." It is a beautiful poem rather than a hymn. Included in Knapp's Er. L. S., 1850 and 1865, after the text of W. Stites. Trutz in C. U. is—The gloomy winter now is o'er. By Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 242. [J. M.]

Spener, Philipp Jakob, D.D., s. of Johann Philipp Spener, keeper of the archives of Count von Rappoltstein, at Rappoltsweiler, near Freiburg, in 1631 was b. at Freiburg, Jan. 13 (25), 1635. He matriculated at the University of Strassburg, in 1651, and graduated M.A. in 1653. From 1654 to 1656 he had the oversight of the studies of two sons of the Pfalzgraf Christian i. In 1659 he went to Basel, and then spent a year at Geneva. He left Geneva in 1661, and accompanied the young Count von Rappoltstein on a tour to Wurttemberg, staying principally at Stuttgart and Tübingen. During 1662 he gave some University lectures at Tübingen. He was then appointed, in 1663, as general preacher at Strassburg (d. from the University from 1664), and gave also University lectures there; pronouncing his farewell sermon in Tübingen on May 14, 1665, and then moved to Berlin, July 3, 1666. He then became chief pastor of the Franciscan church (Barfüsserkirche, now St. Paul's), and Senior of the Lutheran clergy at Frankfurt am Main. Here, in Aug. 1670, he began to hold the Collegia pietatis or pray'r meetings which are regarded as the beginnings of Pietism. During this period he pub. his famous Pia desiderata. In 1686 he was called to become senior lutheran court preacher at Dresden, then regarded as the most important post in the German Lutheran Church. Here, however, he found much in the court life which needed reforming; and finally, on the general Fest day, Feb. 23, 1689, he addressed to the people of the Catholic church at Dresden a treatise. [First appeared, 1675, in his ed. of Arnold's Pustilla. First separate ed. in German, dated Frankfort, with a dedication of Sept. 8, 1675, in Brit. Mus. Latin ed. pub. 1678. In this work he set forth what he considered to be the great desiderata in the Lutheran church of his time.]

* First appeared, 1675, in his ed. of Arnolt's Pustilla. First separate ed. in German, dated Frankfort, with a dedication of Sept. 8, 1675, in Brit. Mus. Latin ed. pub. 1678. In this work he set forth what he considered to be the great desiderata in the Lutheran church of his time.
ceived from the Elector Friedrich Wilhelm iii., of Brandenburg, an invitation to become Probst of the St. Nicholas church, Consistorialrath, and Inspector of Schools and Churches at Berlin. He preached his first sermon in Berlin on June 21, 1601, and his last on July 1, 1704. In these last months of his life he was unable to undertake any duty. He d. at Berlin, Feb. 5, 1705 (Koch, iv., 201, v., 688; Goedcke's Grundschr., vol. iii., 1887, p. 204; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xiv., 500, &c.).

Spener was a man of high personal character, and of unquestionable sincerity. By means of his official positions, of his intercourse with men of light and leading all over Germany, and through the extensive correspondence on spiritual matters by which he became the confessor of hundreds of all ranks and classes of the German people, he greatly moulded the religious life of his times. He came into fame and influence as the leader of a great religious movement. During his latter years at Berlin he had the pleasure of seeing the University of Halle formed (formally opened in 1694), and of finding his friends and pupils, like A. H. Francke (see p. 385, ii.) and P. Anton, appointed professors, and propagating his teachings there, and bringing on the triumphs of the Pietistic movement.

To Hymnology Spener did not make important contributions. Though he wrote a great deal of verse, hardly any of it could be called poetry. His hymns derive their interest from the fact of their authorship rather than from their intrinsic value. In them we find the characteristic Pietistic view of the Pietistic school, and they give the keynotes to many of the later Pietistic hymns. They are only nine in all, and appeared in the Frankfurt ed., 1674, of Crüger's Praxis (see p. 278, i. Copy in the Hamburg Library), in the Premonstratensia Christi Erfreutliche Himmels Lust (copy in the Göttingen Library, without date or publisher's name. Koch dates it 1675), and in his Gesamtrirke Gesänge, at Halle, 1716. Six of them were included in Freytaghulsen's G. B., 1704 and 1714.

Those of Spener's hymns which have passed into English are:—

i. Nun ist außerstanden. Easter. 1st pub. 1674, as above, No. 261, in 10 st. of 10 l., marked as by "P. J. S. D." In the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863, No. 313. The 1st ed. of Wittenberg of, 1642, No. 169, which begins, "Aus des Todeshanden," The tr. is "I'll die death's bowl are riven." In the British Herald, July 1666, p. 296, signed "W. T. H." Repeated in Reid's Praxis Bl., 1774.

ii. So liest an dem dass ich mit Freuden. For the Dying. His finest hymn. 1st pub. 1674, as above, No. 254, in 6 st. of 8 l., marked as by "P. J. S. D." (in Busch's Versuch, 1833, No. 901 (Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 699). Tr. as "Then now at last the hour is come." By Miss Winkworth, 1858, p. 215.

iii. Soll ich denn mich täglich kränken. Resignation. 1st pub. 1674, as above, No. 527, in 12 st. of 8 l., marked as "P. J. Spener D." In Knopp's Ev. L. S., 1837 and 1865. Tr. as "Shall I ever face the future?" By Miss Winkworth, 1849, p. 270.

Spengler, Lazarus, was the 9th of the 21 children of Georg Spengler and Agnes his wife, and was b. March 13, 1479, at Nürnberg, where his father was clerk of the Imperial court of Justice (Landgerichtsrevisor). He entered the University of Leipzig in 1494; but on the death of his father on Dec. 27, 1496, he returned to Nürnberg, obtained a position in the town clerk's office, in 1517 became himself town clerk (Rath-Syn dend), and in 1516 also Rathsherr. When Luther was passing through Nürnberg, in 1518, on his way to Augsburg, Spengler made his acquaintance. He warmly espoused the Reformation doctrines, pub. in 1519 his Schutizel in Luther's favour, and himself became one of the leaders in the Reformation work at Nürnberg. He was one of those condemned by name in the Bull of Excommunication launched by Pope Leo the Tenth, on June 15, 1520, against Luther and his friends. Dr. Eck sent the Bull to the Town Council of Nürnberg, and urged them to proceed against Spengler, but they ignored it, and then sent him as one of their representatives to the Diet of Worms, in April 1521. In 1525 Spengler went to Wittenberg to consult with Luther and Melanthon and became the Benedictine Angelicoster (Schottenkloster) into an Evangelical Gymnasium, and this was opened as such by Melanthon on May 23, 1526. Spengler was also the prime mover to the Visitatation of 1528, and upheld strict Lutheranism in the negotiations at the Diet of Augsburg in 1530. He d. at Nürnberg, Sept. 7, 1534 (Koch, i., 308; Will's Nürnberg'sches Gelehrten-Lexikon, ii., p. 731; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xiv., 500, &c.).

Spenser was a trusty friend and valued counsellor of Luther and the principal Reformers of Germany. He also interested himself in the improvement of the church services, and in 1532 was able to have a manuscript Liturgy (Kirchenordnung) printed. He wrote a considerable quantity of verse, sacred and secular; but only two hymns are ascribed to him. The one is an indifferent version of Ps. cxvii., beginning "Verzeigen ist all Mut und Kost." The other is:—

Durch Adams Fall ist ganz verderbt. Fall and Redemption. 1st pub. in the Georgics, i. 1641, p. 198, ed. 1674, Wittenberg, 1524, and thence in Wackenroder, p. 45, in 9 st. of 10 l. Also in the Curs. L. S., 1841, No. 409. During the Reformation period it won great popularity as a didactic and confessional-hymn of the Evangelical faith. It is one of the most characteristic hymns of the time, conceived in the spirit of deep and earnest piety, eminently Scriptural, and setting forth the Reformation teachings in concise and biblical form, but is however too much like a system of theology in rhyme. The tr. are:—"I By Adam's fall, was all forsoiled." By Bp. Coverdale, 1559, reprinted in his Remains, 1646, p. 556. 2. "When Adam fell, our Frame fell." By J. C. Jacobit in his Psalmodia Evangelica, pt. ii., 1726, p. 17. In his ed. 1732, p. 86, it begins "When Adam fell, the Frame entire;" and this form was repeated in the Moravians H. B., 1754, pt. i., No. 304, and later eds. (1849, No. 18). (3) "Our nature fell in Adam's fall." This is a paraphrase, in 8 st. of l., by Dr. M. Loy, in the Ohio Luth. Hym., 1860, No. 247. [J. M.]

Spenser, Edmund (b. 1552; d. 1599), has a right to his place in this work extrinsically and intrinsically. Extrinsically his name is the parent of the new Hymns, giving us a connecting link with Chaucer; and intrinsically they are of the "brave translunary things" that ought long since to have introduced much in them to the Church's Hymnology. Spenser in the outset acknowledged Chaucer for his "dere musiter," and throughout there are echoes and re-echoes of him. Specifically in relation to the Four Hymns, the Compend of Pite must have been carried by the youthful Spenser to Italy and the Pindal district, or was found in one or other of the contemporary cultured Spenser households there. The Compend is of Love, as is Spenser's first of the immortal four "in honour of Love." Like Chaucer's, the metre of the new Hymns is rhyming-royal; and the meditative reader of the elder and later poets will catch notes and images common to both, e.g., in the "Hymne to Beatrix" (I. 257) we find—

"Doe seeme like twinkling starres in frostie night."

So in the "Prologue" (I. 289):—

"His egrhen twinkled in his hed e aright.

As don the sterres in the frostie night."

Nor is it mere verbal resemblances that we come upon. The thought and emotion flow in the same channels. It were easy to multiply proofs of the truth of Spenser's own grateful acknowledgment in Colin Clout:—

"The sheep's ear'd boy (best known by that name) That after Ulysses first sang his lay," in imitation of, or as disciple of Chaucer, as we use the phrase of a painter "after Raphael."

In the Foire Hymnes have the additional interest of having been (in "Two Hymnes of Love and of Beautie" at least) among the earliest of the "new poet's" verse-attempts, though delayed in publication until 1536. There is a brilliancy, a charm, an exquisiteness of phrasing, a delicacy and daintiness of wordling, and a pardoning meekness in them that should simply have rendered anything of their kind measurer between Chaucer's Compleynt of Pite and them. His "Rosseland" was their inspiring motto; but his "high mood; lifted him to Incanmte Love and Pity and Beauty. All the more readable is it, therefore, that in the epistol-dedicated of the Foire Hymnes to the Lady Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, and the Lady Marie, Countess of Warwick's, the poet distinctly assigns the two of Love and Beauty to "the greener times" of his "youth." Turning to the Hymnes themselves, the student-reader will be rewarded if he consult Professor F. T. Palisr'sinestimable Essay (Green's Spenser, vol. iv., pp. xevi.-c.) on the "Minor Poems of Spenser," I can only ent this two on the two greatest of the Hymnes, Of "Love":—

"The love painted here is at once so idealised and so general the human and the personal aspect of passion so faintly present, that we feel as though the poet's splendid procession unrolling itself before us in progress to the Capitol, rather than a hymn sung in the highest shrine of Eros. What we hear is far less the music of Love, than Love set to lovely music: a stream of gorgeous beauty, in which the chivalry of the Middle Ages blooms audibly with the mythology of the Renaissance."

Then of "Heavenly Love:"—

"Nowhere, I think, has Spenser written, in his larger pieces at least, with more uniformly equable dignity, united with more serene melody, than here; and great is the gain in summing to the celestial elevation and the pictures from the Gospel story which he presents, from the absence of that Patonic colouring—so far as I can perceive—of which he is—perhaps the instance Oode. Spenser, in fact, now writes from the fulness of his faith; and the poem has hence a reality and a beauty, in the most skilful which the poet's skilful art alone, in the most skilful words, ever fail to compass."

Speratus, Paulus, p.d., was b. in Swabia, Dec. 13, 1484. In a poem, written circa 1516, Dr. J. Eck, he calls himself Elephasquius, i.e. of Ellwangen; and in his correspondence preserved at Königsberg, he often styles himself "a Rutilis" or "von Rötlen." These facts would seem to indicate that he was b. at the castle of Rötlen, near Ellwangen. This property belonged to the Probst of the ecclesiastical corporation at Ellwangen, and Speratus's father was probably his bailiff or agent. The family name seems to have been Hoffer or Offer, and to have been in later years, following a practice common in the 16th cent., Latinized by himself into Speratus. He is probably the "Paulus Offer de Ellwangen," who studied at the University of Freiburg (Baden) in 1503. He is also said to have studied at Paris, and at some of the Italian universities. In 1518 we find him settled as a preacher at Dinkelsbühl, in Bavaria. In the end of that year he was invited to become preacher in the cathedral at Würzburg. He went to Würzburg in Feb. 1519, but his preaching was much too evangelical for the new bishop, and he had to leave, apparently in the beginning of 1520. Proceeding to Salzburg he preached for some time in the cathedral, until the archbishop there would not tolerate his opinions. He left Salzburg in the autumn of 1520, and went to Vienna, where he appears to have graduated p.d. at the University. He was already married (probably as early as 1519). and was one of the first priests who had dared to take this step. After a violent sermon against marriage, delivered by a monk in St. Peter's church, at Vienna, the governor of Lower Austria (Count Leonhard von Zech) asked Speratus to make a reply. With the consent of the bishop he did so, and preached, on Jan. 12, 1522, a sermon in the cathedral (St. Stephen's), founded on the Epistle for the 1st S. after the Epiphany, in which he expressed his opinions very severely concerning the monastic life and enforced celibacy, and also clearly set forth the doctrine of Justification by Faith. This sermon (pub. at Königsberg in 1524) made a great impression, and was condemned by the Theological Faculty at Vienna, who also prevented Speratus from accepting an invitation to be canonized at Ochsen, near Vienna. On his way from Vienna to the north he stayed at Iglan in Moravia, where the abbot of the Dominic monastery appointed him as preacher. Here the people became greatly enamoured of him and of the Reformation doctrines, and stood firmly by him, notwithstanding the remonstrances and threats of the king, and of the bishop of Olmütz. In the summer of 1523 king Ludwig came to Olmütz and summoned Speratus to him. Without even the form of a trial he put him in prison, but after three months he released him, probably through the influence of his queen (Maria of Hungary, see p. 710, L.), and of his cousin, the Margrave of Branden-burg, but on the condition of his leaving Iglan and Moravia. In the end of 1523 Speratus came to Wittenberg, where he worked with Luther, and assisted him in the preparation of the first Lutheran hymn book (the Lied erchristlicher läuter ). See p. 709, IV. It contained 4 German hymns by Luther, 3 by Speratus, and 1 anonymous German hymn. Luther then recommended him to the Margrave Albrecht, and about May 1524 the Margrave appointed him as court preacher at Königsberg. Here he had also charge of the Altstadt church till Graumann came into residence, in Oct. 1525 (see p. 451, L.). He seems to have had the principal share in drawing up the rules and regulations for the new church service (Kirchenordnung or "Book of Church Order") for the Prussian church, which was presented to the Diet in December 1525, and printed in 1526. On March 31, 1526, he was chosen as the clerical commissioner to visit the parishes of Prussia and see that the new arrangements were carried out; and in the end of 1529 he was appointed Lutheran bishop of Pomesania, with his residence at Marienwerder. Here he remained till his death on Aug. 12, 1551.
Speratus was the author of various works, but was best known as a reformer of Prussia. Feeling that the worldly attitude of ordinary people was necessary to have large, and good, and learned, he gladly welcome the foundation at Königsberg (1544) of the first Prussian university. Among other important events affecting his administration may be mentioned the Visi-tions of 1525, of 1536, and especially that which lasted from Dec. 15, 1542, to the middle of February 1543; the Synod of 1529 (the Synodal Constitutions were pub. in 1530), of 1531; and of 1534; the new Kirchenordnung of 1544; and the welcome he extended, in 1544, to the exiled Bohemians: Brethren who settled in Prussia.

As a hymn writer Speratus is principally known by the three hymns published in the Etliche cristlich lider, 1524. He also pub. (no place or date but Königsberg, 1527), in 1527, a version of Ps. xixi, beginning, "Erzurm dich not, sei nicht neidisch;" and a Hymn of Thanksgiving, to be used after the sermon, begining, "Gelobet sej Gott, unser Gott." These five are all that can be confidently ascribed to him. The two collections which Cosack attributes to him do not bear any indication of his authorship; and Wackenagel, lib., pp. xix, 386, 387, 388; iii. pp. 618-643, denies that they are his, and thinks that they are, much more probably, by Caspar Lüther or Liner, who in 1524 became Lutheran pastor at Hof, in Bavaria; and in 1542, at Nördlingen, in Bavaria. The Low German hymn-books which he was for some time supposed to have edited (1525 and 1526), were really edited by Joachim Sluter, the Rostock Reformer.
(See Dr. J. Bachmann's Gesam.
Kirchenliederyn in Mecklenburg, Rostock, 1881. p. 28, &c.) Of the five hymns mentioned above two have passed into English, viz.,—

1. Es ist das Reit uns komman her. Law and Gospel. This, his most famous hymn, is found in Rom. iii. 28. It was probably written in the autumn of 1523, either during his imprisonment at Olmütz, or else during his stay at Wittenberg.
Included as one of the 8 hymns in the Etliche cristlich lider, 1524, dated 1523, and entitled,
"A Hymn of Law and Faith, powerfully furnished with God's Word, Doctor Paul Speratus." In some eds, it has two pages of references to texts of Holy Scripture printed with it (Wittenberg, 1524), and signed "Paulus Speratus." It was repeated in the Erfurt Erzchirih, 1524, and hence in Wackenagel, iii. p. 31, in 14 st.
of 7 l. In the Unc. L. S., 1851, No. 411.

Laxmann, in Kock, viii. 236, calls it "the true con-fessional hymn of the Reformation, or, as Albert Knapp puts it, "the poetical counterpart of Luther's preace to the Ezstit of the Romais." He relates many instances of the effects it produced. It is a Scriptural ballad, setting forth, in what was, for the time, excellent verse, his characteristic teachings of the German Reformers; and is of considerable historical importance. But for present day use it is too long, somewhat harsh in style, and too much a compend of doctrinal theology.

The only version we have found in English
G. L. is:

To us salvation now is come. In full by Dr.
H. Mills, in his Horae Germaniores, 1845, p. 44 (1856, p. 60). His trs. of st. i., ii., v., xiii., were repeated, with alterations, in the Amer. Luth.

Spirite of God, that moved Cicil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Whitetudite.] Appeared in the S. P. C. K. Hymn.
1852, No. 70, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Mrs. Alexander's Hymn. Descriptive and Devotional, 1858.
No. 15, it was republished in 8 st. of 4 l, the new stanza, the third, being "Unasal the Well within our hearts." The 1832 text is usually given in modern hymn-books. Dr.
Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873. No. 95 is an altered form of st. ii., iv. of the 1832 text, as SPIRIT OF HOLINESS

begins, "Thou Power and Peace ! in Whom we find." [J. J.]

Spirit of holiness, look down. W. H. Bathurst. [Divine Grace desired.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hsy., 1831, No. 59, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "For healing and strengthening Grace. The hymn, "Lord, let Thy saving mercy heal me," in the American Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1882, is a cento from this hymn (st. ii., ii., iv.). [J. J.]

Spirit of life, Thine influence shed. W. H. Bathurst. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1831, No. 56, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Spiritual Strength and Wisdom desired." In modern hymnals st. v. is usually omitted, as in the New Cong., 1859. [J. J.]

Spirit of mercy, truth, and love. [Whitsuntide.] The earliest date to which this hymn has been traced is 1774, when it appeared in the Collection published for use in the Foundling Hospital, London, where it is given as follows:—

"Spirit of mercy, truth, and love! Shed Thy sweet influence from above, And still from age to age convey
The wonders of this sacred day.
In every clime, by every tongue,
Be God's amazing glory sung.
Through all the blessing earth be taught
The acts our ris'n Redeemer wrought.
Unfailing Comfort! Heav'nly Guide!
Still o'er Thy favour'd church preside;
Still may mankind Thy blessings prove,
Spirit of mercy, truth, and love."

From the Foundling Collection it passed into those of Cotterill, Bickersteth, Elliott, Hall, and other compilers, both old and new. Several, who copied from R. W. Kyle's Collection, 1846, have attributed it to him. It was in print, however, before Kyle was born. Some of the slight changes in the text found in modern hymnals are from Cotterill's Sel., 1819. In the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, it is altered to "Blest Source of mercy, truth, and love." [J. J.]

Spirit of Truth! on this Thy day. Hsp. R. Heber. [Whitsuntide.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 82, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is in several modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and usually in an abbreviated form. For the date 1812, sometimes assigned to it, we have no evidence. [J. J.]

Spirit of Truth, Thy grace impart. [Whitsuntide.] This cento was given in the 1803 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 296, as follows:—

1. "Spirit of Truth, Thy grace impart,
To guide our doubtful way;
Thy beams shall scatter every cloud,
And make a glorious day.
This is an altered form of st. v. of J. Needham's "Thy influence, mighty God, impart," from his Hymns, &c., 1768, p. 163.

2. "Light in Thy light, O may we see,
Thy grace and mercy prove,
Renewed and cheered and blest by Thee
Spirit of peace and love."

This is II. 5-8 of C. Wesley's "Eternal Sun of Righteousness," from his Short Hymns, &c., 1762, No. 201.

This is an altered form of st. ii. of J. Hart's "Bless'd Spirit of Truth, eternal God," from his Hymns, &c., 1759, No. 3. It was adopted from T. Cotterill's Sel., 1810, No. 66, "Eternal Spirit, Source of Truth."

4. "Subdue the power of every sin,
Whatever that sin may be.
That we, in singleness of heart,
May worship only Thee."

Also from T. Cotterill's Sel., 1810, No. 66, as above.

In Thring's Coll., 1882, this text is repeated, together with a doxology from Tate & Brady with I. 2 borrowed from C. Wesley. [J. J.]

Spitta, Carl Johann Philipp, d.d., was b. Aug. 1, 1801, at Hannover, where his father, Lebrecht Wilhelm Gottfried Spitta,* was then living, as bookseller and teacher of the French language. In his eleventh year Spitta fell into a severe illness, which lasted for four years, and so throw him back that his mother (the father d. in 1803) abandoned the idea of a professional career, and apprenticed him to a watchmaker. This occupation did not prove at all congenial to him, but he would not confess his dislike, and his family were ignorant of it till an old friend, who was trying to comfort him after the death of a younger brother, discovered his true feelings. The younger brother had been preparing for ordination, and so Carl was now invited by the family to adopt this career. He joyfully accepted the offer, left the workshop in the autumn of 1818, and succeeded, by dint of hard study during the winter, in gaining admission to the highest class in the Gymnasium (Lyceum) at Hannover, which he entered at Easter, 1819. He was thus able, at Easter, 1821, to proceed to the University of Göttingen, where he completed his theological course, under professors of pronounced Rationalistic opinions, at Easter, 1824 (d.d. from Göttingen, 1855). He then became, in the beginning of May, a tutor in the family of Judge (Oberammann) Jochemus, at Lüne, near Lüneburg. Here he remained till his ordination to the ministry, as assistant pastor at Sudwalde, near Hoya. In Nov., 1830, he became assistant chaplain to the garrison and to the prison at Hanau on the Weser, and would have succeeded as permanent chaplain there, in the beginning of 1837, had not the military authorities, warned by reports which described him as a Pietist and a Mystic, refused to sanction the arrangement. As a compensation he was appointed pastor at Wechol, near Hoya, in Oct., 1837, and married just before settling there. On his birthday, Aug. 1, 1847, he was instituted as Lutheran superintendent at Witzenberg; in Oct., 1853, at Peine; and in July, 1859, at Burgdorf—all his appointments having been in the kingdom of Hanover. A few weeks after removing to Burgdorf he was seized with gastric fever, but had apparently recovered, when, on Sept. 28, 1859, while sitting at his writing table, he was seized with cramp of the heart, and died in a quarter of an hour. (Karl Johann Philipp Spitta, Ein Lebensbild von Dr. Theol. K. K. Michael, Leipzig, 1881; Koch, vii, 232; Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie, xiv, 539, &c.)

Spitta had begun to write in verse when he was eight years old, and with his brother Heinrich. (See No. xiv. below.) During his university course he continued to write songs and sacred poems, and pub. a collection of his songs anonymously as a Singbände der Liebe für Handwerksleute. At Göttingen he formed a life-long friendship with Adolf Peters, afterwards principal in the St. Agra Gymnasium (Kirchenschule) at Melissen, in Saxony. He was also on intimate terms with Heinrich Heine, who was a fellow-member with them of the Burschenschaft, or student's patriotic union (see K. Gudera's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1851, p. 259); and this friendship continued till Heine, while visiting him at Lüne, so jested at things sacred, even in the presence of Spitta's pupils, that their friendship came to an end. After the spiritual change, which began about the end of his university course, Spitta ceased to write sacred pieces. His hymn-writing proper seems to have begun in 1821. In writing to a friend on May 5, 1826, he says, "In the manner in which I formerly sang I sing no more. To the Lord I consecrate my life and my love, and likewise my song. His love is the one great theme of all my songs; to praise and exalt it worthily is the desire of the Christian singer. He gave to me song and melody; I give it back to Him." The most fruitful period of his hymn-writing was at Lüne, where many of his most popular hymns were composed, in the quiet evenings, in his own room, often after fasting, and when, sitting at the piano or at his harp, he had tuned his spirit to song. Many others were inspired by the beautiful scenery of the valley of the Weser, and by the intercourse with friends during his residence at Hameln. In his later years his ecclesiastical duties absorbed his attention, and hardly any of his hymns were written after 1847. A number of them were first printed in the Christliche Monatschrift für künstlerische Erbauung für alle Stände, which appeared from Jan. to June, 1826, and was edited by Spitta and by Pastor Deichmann, of Lünens. Semnibrüder W. 1846 of Lünens has recently found a copy of the Christliche Monatschrift in the Town Library at Lünens. This contains ten hymns, viz.: 1. "Wir lieben, Angst wir fühlten Nun, 2. "Ja, er hat dich stets geliebet," 3. "Wie selig ist ein Herz das Judaism aufgenommen hat," 4. "Wir lieben, wie treuer und ohne Leiter," 5. "Wort des Lebens, laute Quelle," 6. "Es hat die Hand jetzt fest am Flügel," 7. "Selig, wer ins Reich der Ewigkeit," 8. "Freu dich, O Christ, zu offen Quelle," 9. "In der Angst der Welt will ich nicht klag'n," 10. "O Jesus meine Wonne, Die alle Nacht Ohne dieser Andere, Diese Nächte, Diese Morgen;" Nos. 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 in March; Nos. 3, 4, 5, 10 in April; Nos. 7, 9, 5 in May; and Nos. 10 in June. They are probably all by Spitta (p. 339, &c.), but only Nos. 5, 9, 10 are included in the Psalmer und Harfe. No. 10 being given as "O Jesu meine Wonne."

The first separate collection was the result of a selection and arrangement made by himself and Adolf Peters, and appeared at Pirna, in 1833, with the title, Psalmer und Harfe. Eine Sammlung christlicher Lieder zu kirchlichen Erbauung. This contained 61 hymns. In the 2nd ed., published in 1834, five were added, viz.: (1) "Der Mensch hat lange Stunden." (2) "Ein lieblich Lied ist uns gefallen." (3) "O dass mein Leben deine Rechte." (4) "Was macht dir, dass ihr weinet." (5) "Wohlan, der Verachtung muss ich lieben." This work attained an unexampled popularity, and, year after year, editions followed; all reprints of the 2nd ed., the 5th ed. being published at Pirna, in 1862. The success of this first series led Spitta to pub. a second series, consisting of 46 hymns, and entitled: Psalmer und Harfe. Zweite Sammlung, &c., at Leipzig, 1843. This reached a 2nd ed. at Leipzig, 1843, and a 42nd at Bremen in 1857. After Spitta's death, his widow handed over to Professor Peters (see above) a considerable number of pieces from her husband's papers, to which Peters added others in his own possession, and pub. them as Spitta's Nachgelassen grzittliche Lieder, &c., at Leipzig, 1861. One of the most patronising was hardly to be called a hymn; dates from 1822, the rest of the 112 were written in the years of Spitta's early manhood (from 1820 on), a fact which renders them, even if not Peters, still more valuable to his memory, than to his happiness. The circulation of this work has been comparatively limited (5th ed., Bremen, 1883), and hardly any of the hymns it contains have passed into the Church books in Germany, or even into collections of Gene-

Sacred poetry. It is by his Psalmer und Harfe that Spitta is known and loved.

Various causes doubtless contributed to the popularity of Spitta's Psalmer und Harfe. The hymns were used as a rule, of moderate length, are clear and simple, refined in diction, sweet, flowing and simple. Their quiet beauty, their tone of simplicity, their childlike pieté, or glorious devotion to the Saviour, in calm resting on, what to Spitta were, the ser-} ious profession of faith, and the inspiration which the renovated churchly life in England brought K. S. Christian Year. As the title adopted shows, Spitta meant them for family and children, and this they are best fitted, being, for the most part, in the best styles of German and English hymns.

Another element of Spitta's popularity in Germany has been contributed by the very numerous music settings which have appeared to his hymns. In 1832, 246, gives a list of the more Important of the collections; but, besides these, many of the separate parts have been set to music by various composers. In "Angel of Peace" (see p. 556, &c.) being one of the greatest favourites (see also Dr. J. K. Schömer's Geschichte der evangelisch-kirchlichen Lit.- und Tonkunst, &c., p. 149).

A number of Spitta's hymns are annulled under their original first lines (see Inn Authors and Translators). Of the rest we note here the following:

By Miss Fry, in 1859, p. 36. (2) "Oh where is mercy and compassion." By R. Maxie, in 1864, p. 69, repeated in Lady Durand, in 1870. (3) "Oh where is mercy and compassion." In L. C. Biggs's English Hymnology, 1873, p. 114.

The whole of the remaining hymns in the Psalter and Hymn, 1833 and 1843, have been tr. by R. Maxie, in his Lyra Domesticz, vol. 1. 1860, ii. 1864; and versions of many of them are included in Miss Fry's Echoes of Eternity, 1859; Miss Manning's Footprints of the Holy Dead, 1863; and Lady Durand's Invitations from the German Psalter and Terfegean, 1875. To annotate them in full would exceed the limits of our space.
II. From his Nachgelassene geistliche Lieder, Leipzig, 1861.

Many of these have come into use in Germany; and they have either remained unknown to or have been almost entirely ignored by translators into English. We need only note two, viz.:

xlvi. Die erste Kuhstätte die die Welt. Christmas. 1st pub. at Leipzig, 1861, p. 154, in 3 st. of 5 l., and No. 4 of the Hymnen zu Christnus. It is tr. as: "The cradle which the world bad dast." In the Family Treasury, 1865, p. 251, and signed "X. V."xlvii. Der Bert, du Abendstunde. Autumn. 1st pub. at Leipzig, 1861, p. 181, in 7 st. of 4 l. It is tr. as: "O autumn, fair pensive evening." By Miss Borthwick, in the Family Treasury, 1861, p. 191, dated September 1864, and included in her Thoughtful Hours, 1867, p. 181.

Splendor paternae gloriae. St. Ambrose. [Morning.] A beautiful morning hymn, to the Holy Trinity, but especially to Christ as the Light of the World, and a prayer for help and guidance throughout the day. It is the companion and sequel to the "Aeterne rerum Conditor" (p. 26, l.), and, like it, is almost indescribable by St. Ambrose. It has been ascribed to him by Fulgentius, Bp. of Rupea, in North Africa (d. 533); by Bele d. 735), in his De arte medicina; and by Hicunarc, in his De una et non trina Deitate, 857; It is one of the twelve hymns which the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose receive as genuine; and is included by Biraghi as one of the Inni sinceri et Carmi di Sant Ambrogio, Milan, 1862. It is mentioned in the Rule of Aurelianus, Bp. of Arles (d. 555).

It is found in the Psalter, in an ms. circo 700, in the Brit. Mus. (Vesp.', A., l. f. 192); in a ms. circo 920, in the English (Jutius 24, f. 123 b); in four ms. of the 11th cent., in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii., f. 126; Jul. A., vi., f. 24; Harl. 2961, f. 226 b); Add. 30,484, f. 78; in a ms. of the 11th cent., at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p. 222); in the St. Gall, ms., 367, 413, of the 11th cent.; and in the Lat. Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1831, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. ill. 32, f. 5 b). Most of the mediæval Breviaries include it, e.g., the Ambrosian of 1529, Monument of 1562, Roman (Venice, 1474, and the revision of 1852), Marum, York, Aberdeen, &c. Its use was generally for Matins or Lauds on Monday, though some of the Monastic orders (e.g., the Benedictines and Carthusians) used it daily. It is printed by Isaacl. l., No. 17, and iv., p. 20, from a Rheinland ms. of the 9th cent., a Rheinland ms. of the 10th cent., &c.; by More, No. 272, from a Trier ms. of the 9th cent., &c.; by Drexel, in his hymnarium musicaeae, 1898, p. 29, from a ms. of the 10th cent. Also in Wackermon, Eccles. lit. 11, No. 34 F. A. March's Lat. Hymn., 1873, p. 11; Carol. Newman's Hymn. Mediolan., 1839 and 1865; and others. The text, with a full commentary, will also be found in the Able S. 6. Pium's Hymn. del breviare Romano, vol. ii., 1774, p. 139; and in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur tieferehrichtte und Erklärung der altesten Kirchenwenden, 1861, p. 135.

This tr. is found in a large number of hymn-books in Germany and America. In Mercer, 1864, Aford, 1867, Barry, 1862, the People's H., 1897, and others, the text is unaltered, but given sometimes with abbreviations; whilst in the Salisbury, 1857, Kennedy, 1863, the Irish Church Hym., 1873, and others, slight changes are introduced. See also Nos. 9 and 13.

2. From the Father's glory shining. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hym. for the Week, &c., 1848, in 9 st. of 4 l.; and in Horsman's Hymns, &c., 1851. A.

3. O Thou the Father's image blest. By E.
In the Paris Missal of 1739, p. 684, the name of the author is given as "Joann. B. de Konte Decanus Paris.," i.e. Jean Baptiste de Contes, who became Dean of Paris in 1647; and, after holding this office for 33 years, d at Paris, July 4, 1679, aged 78.

The Sequence is also found in the Norweigan Breviary of 1709; in J. Chudshur's Hymn of the Prim. Church, 1837, No. 97, as "Spousa (printer's error) Christi quae per orbum." in Card. Newman's Hymn Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, and in Daniel, ii. p. 377. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:—

1. Spouse of Christ, to whom 'tis given. By J. Chanderl. in his Hymns of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 110, in 10 st. of 10 l.; and, again, in his Hymn of the Church, 1841, No. 63. It is found in a few collections, but in an abbreviated form.

2. Spouse of Christ in arms contending. By W. Palmer, in his Short Poems and Hymn, the latter mostly Translations, 1845, No. 75, in 13 st. of 4 l. It is specially unused into several collections, usually in an abbreviated form, including the People's H., 1867, and others. See also Nos. 6 and 7 below. It is the most extensively used of the trs. of "Sponsa Christi."

4. Spouse of Christ, that through the wide world Militant doth, &c. This, in J. A. Johnston's English Hymn, 1855 and 1861, is an arrangement of the above trs., with special indebtedness to Mr. Blew.

5. Bride of Christ, to whom 'tis given. This in Kennedy, 1861, No. 1378, is an altered form of J. Chardelires's tr. as above.

6. Bride of Christ, through Him contending. This, in S. J. H. W., 1868., is an altered form of W. Palmer's tr. as above.

7. Spouse of Christ, in arms contending. This, in the 1860 Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 194, is thus composed: st. i.-viii., and x., W. Palmer, ix., xi.-xiii., a new translation by an unknown hand.

8. Church of Christ, whose glorious warfare. By J. Elliottt; written for and pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, with the omission of st. ii.; and, in full in the Hymns for Use in the Church of S. Ethelburga, Bishopapge, London, 1873. In the 1889 Supp. Hymn. to H. A. & M. it is altered to "Bride of Christ, whose glorious warfare, and in Mr. Elliot's Hymns, &c., 1888, this revision is dated 1887."

In Kennedy, 1863, "As the Church to day rejoices," is a century from W. Palmer's tr., as above, beginning with st. ii. in the original, "Hæc dies eunctis dicit." [J. J.]

Spurgeon, Charles Haddon, the world-famous preacher, was b. June 19, 1834, at Kelvedon, in Essex, where his father was Congregational minister. He was educated at Colchester, and at an Agricultural College at Maidstone, after which he was for a few years usher in schools at Newmarket and Cambridge. In 1851 he became minister of a small Baptist church at Waterbeach, near Cambridge, and soon attained great popularity. In 1854 he removed to New Park Street, London, the place where Drs. Gill and Rippon had formerly ministered, and ere long the thronging of people to hear him led to the temporary occupation of Exeter Hall, and of the Surrey Music Hall, and then to the erection of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle, where he still ministers. Mr. Spurgeon is chiefly known as a preacher and as the author of many vol's. of sermons, expositions, and other homiletic literature; but he is also a hymn writer, and the compiler of a well-known hymn book. This book was prepared, in 1866, primarily for the use of the congregation at the Tabernacle. Hence its title Our Own Hymnbook, a collection of Ps. & Hymn. for public, social, and private worship. It contains nearly 220 versions of the Psalms, and 910 hymns. Of Mr. Spurgeon's contributions noted below, only one, "Sweetly the holy hymn," can be regarded as possessing any particular merit. The others do not rise above respectable mediocrity. His psalm-versions and hymns, all dated 1866, are:—

In addition to these Mr. Spurgeon re-wrote or added to the hymns of others, as "Come ye who bow to sovereign grace"; "Great King of Zion, now"; "O God, before whose radiant throne"; and "Woe's me that I in Meekam"; and composed or made over several, before and two after Meat. [W. R. S.]

Stabat mater dolorosa. Pope Innocent II (8. [Passiontide.)] This noble poem (used both as a sequence and a hymn) has been, not unjustly, styled the most pathetic hymn of the Middle Ages. The vivacity with which it pictures the weeping Mother at the Cross, its tenderness, its beauty of rhythm, its melodious double rhymes almost defying reproduction in another language, and its impressiveness when sung either to the fine plainsong melody or in the noble peripteral tune which many of the great masters of music have set to it, go far to justify the place it holds, and has long held, in the Roman Catholic Church. It was not indeed officially sanctioned for general use, or regularly incorporated in the Roman Breviary or Missal, till by decree of Pope Benedict xiii. in 1727: but long before that date it was in popular use, especially after the Flagellants in the 14th cent. had brought it into notice by singing it on their way from town to town. The passages of Holy Scripture on which it is based are St. John xii. 23; St. Luke ii. 35; Zech. xiii. 6; 2 Cor. iv. 10; and Gal. vi. 17.

Concerning the authorship of this poem there has been, and still is, a great amount of uncertainty. It has been ascribed to Pope Gregory the Great (d. 604), to St. Bernard of Clairvaux (d. 1153), to Pope Innocent III. (d. 1216), to St. Bonaventura d. 1274); to Jacobus de Benefidibus (d. 1306), to Pope John xxii. (d. 1331), to Pope Gregory xi. (d. 1378). The verse-form is, however, not earlier than 1150, while Daniel, p. 140, cites it as in a MS. not later than 1360. The only ascriptions which bear any impress of probability are those to Pope Innocent III. and to Jacobus de Benedictis.

For Pope Innocent III. there is, it must be confessed, ill-pose evidence. Pope Benedict xiv. (d. 1758), who had made Hymnology a special study, in his De fesitum domini nostri Jesu Christi, Padua, 1758, ascribes it to Pope Innocent III. So does F. E. von Hirtz, in his Geschichte der Popularen Inszenen dert Stettn, Hamburg, 1834-12. So also does Done in the notes to his No. 446. Certainly Pope Innocent III. had quite sufficient occasion to have written such a masterpiece, and the ascription is strengthened by the fact that to him has been attributed, with great probability, another masterly Latin religious poetry, viz. the "Veni Sancte Spiritus Et emite" (R. V.).

For Jacobus de Benedictis (Jacobone) the evidence at first sight seems more probable. In the Bibliotheca Sacra, in 1511, it is said that there is a MS. of the beginning of the 15th cent., which formerly was catalogued as No. 7763, but now bears the press-mark "Fonds Italien, No. 559". This MS. was kindly sent by M. Leopold Delesse, the Principal Librarian, it appears that the title of this MS. is "Luctulx laudes quasi fecit sanctus frater Jacobone de Benedictis ut ebder in cartis fraternitate monastic." Besides poems in Italian this MS. has the following in Latin:

I. Jesu mecula memoria. f. 106.
II. Verbum caro factum est. f. 107.
III. Crux de te volo conqueri. f. 108.
IV. Cur mundus sullat. f. 108 b.
V. Ave regina caelestia. f. 109.
VI. Stabat mater speciosa. f. 109 b.
VII. Stabat mater dolorosa. f. 111.

The whole of these, save No. 1, are also included in the printed edition of Jacobone's poems, pub. at Brescia in 1495. But No. i. is certainly not by Jacobone (see p. 465, ii. No. ii. is also certainly not by him (see "Verbum caro") II. is a MS. of the same period, and is also exceedingly doubtful (see e.g. the Ecclesiologist, July 1888, p. 17). It may be added that no Latin poems are found in the ed. of Jacobone's Lude, pub. at Florence in 1496, nor in the ed. of his Canzoni, pub. at Rome in 1556. In the complete edition of his poems, that by the Franscian, Giovanni Tresali (Venec, 1617), the "Stabat mater dolerosa" is not included. The present writer, in view of all the evidence at his command, has come to the conclusion that it is exceedingly doubtful if Jacobone wrote either the hymn or alternatively that he was merely an alterer or imitator of earlier compositions. It is almost impossible to believe that the person who wrote the "Stabat mater dolorosa" could also have written the "Stabat mater speciosa." This difficulty being felt, it has been sought to meet it by asserting that the dolorosa is by Jacobone, and that the speciosa is by somebody else, or of his style. To the present writer the contrary supposition is much more probable, viz., that the speciosa is by Jacobone and that the dolorosa is an early form of Jacobone. Indeed, the dolorosa does not seem to have been capable of writing such a poem as the "Stabat mater dolorosa." Certain of the expressions in St. V. 13 of the dolorosa have been thought to refer to the Stigmatisation of St. Francis of Assisi, the inference drawn being that the hymn was by a Franciscan. This, if true, would make it impossible that at least the form of the dolorosa be by Pope Innocent III., for he d. 1216, and the date commonly assigned to the composition of the Stigmata on St. Francis is Sept. 18, 1224. It is however a little difficult to see how any ordinary person could be supposed truly to pray to be allowed to pass through such an ordeal (see the Stigmata of Saint Francis under Sept. 15.). And in the Vespers there are various close parallels, e.g. Zech. xiii. 6 ("Et dicitur ei, quaesumis") and Matt. xxvi. 36 ("Et dixit eis, Vos dimittam in mundum") It does, his plagues sum in dominion of learner, on which the medieval writers refer to the Passion of Our Lord; Gal. vi. 16 ("Ego enim stigmatizata Domi nos in corpore meo posui") As for Jacobone, it is impossible to say what John gave by Luke 23:43 in his Sticarum ordinis Minorum, Rome, 1543, one must bear in mind that Wadding was not using his authority to claim for his Order at least all that was done. And in fact Wadding's account is much more of the nature of a series of pious imaginations than of a sober record of actual facts.

From the other MS. containing the poem one does not get very much help, for none of those yet described are earlier than the 14th cent. There is a slightly later, and now in the Bodleian (Liturg. Nos. 251, f. 212 B), it occurs with the note, "Bonifacius Papa concesi cui libertatem sua hanc planctum hunc septem annos et quadrans quattuor dies indulgentiam." This almost certainly refers to Boniface viii. of 1294 to 1303, for Boniface viii. was not become Pope till 1295. But if the accounts of the relations between Pope Boniface viii. and Jacobone are all trustworthy, it is most improbable that this Pope (who is said to have shut Jacobone up in prison until it was only released after the Pope's death in 1303) would have thus honoured the poem he had known that it was by Jacobone; though he knew that Innocent III. his action would be intelligible enough. In a MS. of the 14th cent. in the Brist. Mus. (Arundel, 1143, f. 111) it is headed, "Quicumque diem occisum est, et aeternum planctum beatae virgini Mariae devotum, cum septem annos et xi karenas indulgentiam a papa Bonifacio." The poem is also in a 15th cent. MS. in the Bodleian (Ashmole, 1291, f. 1401), in a Horae Beatae Mariae Virginis in the British Museum (Add. 1412, f. 212 b); in three vols. of the 15th cent. at St. Gall (Nos. 309, 489, 519); in three vols. of the 15th cent. at Kinskyheim in the Austrian National Library; and, last of all, in a MS. of the 15th cent. at Salzburg, ms., one of the 15th cent. and from other sources. It is quite impossible that the original form was by Pope Innocent III. and that Jacobone may have made alterations and additions. It says that the text of the Romam Missal, with st. vii., viii. omitted, would represent a MS. of the same period as the Seven Dolors of the B. V. M., and that this form is found in some MS. But the original form would, be represented by six stanzas of the text of the Roman Missal, with slight alterations, and arranged in the order 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. This proposed text is actually printed by Wechermaier, i. No. 214, under the name of innocent III. (as No. 262 Wuckerswehr). In the Roman Missal, the "Stabat mater dolorosa" is 10 stanza form under the name of Jacobone); but it is purely conjectural, and is not found in any MS. yet described. Daniel, ii. pp. 313, 385, 554, etc., prints the text from a MS. at Munich of circa 1356, and from other sources. Daniel also prints the text given by Giorgiana Stella (d. 1420) in his Historia ecclesiastica, where Stella speaks of it as being sung by the Flagellants in 1388 in the chronicle compiled for the magistrates of Lubeck (jentricarum Chronicon). It is also mentioned, under date of 1399, in use by the Flagellants, and also the text given by Bernardinus de Bustis (d. 1500) in his Historia Germanes. It may be noted in passing that though Bernardinus was a Franciscan, he evidently had no idea that the "Stabat mater dolorosa" was by Jacobone. The text in also in Ashmole, No. 2251, in Rau, No. 165; in Königsmarck, Stabat Mater, By M. A. Marchal's Lat. Hymn, 1875, p. 171; in Cardinal Newman's Hymnis Ecclesiast., 1838 and 1866, etc.

Although, as stated above, this Sequence was brought into notice by the Flagellants and was well known at least as early as 1380, yet it only very gradually came into use in the services of the Church. It seems to have been added to the Breslau breviar in Missal shortly after 1414, and is found in the Missal of 1438. It is also in the Paris Missal of 1418, and various other Missals of the 15th cent., but was not included in any of the English Missals. (The York Missal has a sequence somewhat resembling it, beginning "Stabat justa Christi crucem," and this is found in the ms. York Missal, circa 1390, now in the Bodleian, as well as in the printed ed.;

the text being also in Wackernagel, i. No. 2633, and in Kayser as below. It was not received into the Roman Missal or Breviary till after 1727, and is there appointed for use in the office of the Seven Dominions of the B. V. M., 1st day of Friday after Passion Sunday (the office of the Seven Dominions, being appointed in the Breviary for the 3rd S. in September to several other hymns. In the Roman Breviary it is divided into three parts, viz. st. i.-v. at Vespers; vi., vii. ("Sancta mater, istud agas"), at Matins; and vii.-x. ("Virgo virginum praeciosa"), at Lauds.

There is quite a literature on the subject of the "Stabat mater dolorosa." The best and most complete summary of it is that by Dr. J. Kayser, in his Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenhymnen, vol. ii., Paderborn, 1886, pp. 110-192, where the different forms of the text are printed in full, with elaborate commentary and a full apparatus of various readings. See also Dr. F. Schaff, in Hours at Home, for May 1867.

The "Stabat mater dolorosa" is also worthy of note by reason of the frequency with which it has been set to music by the great composers, such as Palestrina, Pergolesi, Haydn, Rossini, and, more recently, Dvorak. The particulars regarding their printed settings are given at length by C. H. Bitter, in his Studia zum Stabat mater, Leipzig, 1883. See also the Catechism Kalender (Regensburg, Pustot), 1883, p. 39; 1886, p. 79; 1888, p. 97.

It is also noteworthy on account of the very numerous translations in which it has passed into various European languages. Dr. F. G. Lisco, in his Stabat Mater, Berlin, 1843, prints 78 versions in German, to which list a good many more might now be added. The list of English trs., as will be seen, is also large. The fact that so much of the hymn is directly addressed to the B. V. M. has limited its use, however, to outside those of the Roman Catholic Church. Perhaps the most skilful attempt to bring the hymn into greater harmony with 1 Tim. ii. 5, is by J. S. B. Monseil, in his Parhial Hyl. 1873 (see below).

[J. M.]

The trs. of this poem into English are (1) of the full text, as in the Roman Missal and Breviary; and (2) of the stanzas as appointed for Vespers, and are:

i. Roman Missal and Breviary text.

This text is thus divided:

Vespers. Stabat Mater dolorosa.
Matins. Stabat Mater istud agas.
Lauds. Virgo virginum praeciosa.

and is tr. sometimes with these divisions, and again as one hymn, viz.:

1. At the Cross her station keeping. Vespers. Stabat Mater dolorosa. Holy Mother, pierce me through. Matins. Virgin of all virgins bestr Laid. Virgin of all virgins. Laid. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 138; and in his Hymn. and Poems, 1873, p. 76. Some three or four lines are from Bp. Mant’s tr., as below. In these divisions, or as one hymn, this tr. is extensively used in Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools.

2. To her heart with anguish rending. Vespers. This. O Holy Jesu, grant me. Matins. King of saints, all saints out-shining. Laid.

By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn & Tune Bk., 1852-55. The tr. of the Vesper text is also in Rice’s Sel. from Blew, 1870, No. 39, altered to—"Stood the woe-born Mother weeping."

3. At the Cross her station keeping. This, in the Roman Catholic Hymns, for the Year, N. D. 1867, is composed of two parts: Pt. i. being E. Caswall’s tr. of the Vesper text, as above; and Pt. ii. "Fount of Love and holy sorrow," a tr., probably by Dr. Rawes (the editor), of the rest of the hymn. This combined tr. is also in the Catholic Hyl., N. D. 1860.

4. Flung in grief the Mother stood. In The Crown of Jesus H. Bk., N. D. 1862; a tr. of the full text as one hymn.

5. Sorrowful the Mother stood. In Saint Winfred’s H. Bk., N. D. 1890; a tr. of the full text as one hymn.

6. Close beneath the Cross that bore Him. By Francis Trappes, in his Liturgical Hym. for the Chief Festivals of the Year, &c. N. D. 1865. In full, as one hymn.

7. Stood the mournful Mother weeping. By J. S. B. Monseil, in his Parish Hymnal, 1873; and his Watcher by the Cross, 1876. In full, as one hymn.

Other trs. are:

1. The Mother stood in woful wise. Primer, 1599.
2. The Mother stand with grief confounded. Primer, 1616.
3. The dolorous chain of the Mother stood. Primer, 1695.
4. Under the World-Redeeming Rod. Primer, 1867 and 1876.
5. Close by the ever-hallowed cross that bore. D. Perek, 1838.
6. See the Mother stands deploring. A. D. Wackerbarth, 1842.
8. Tearful stood the Mother lowr. J. F. Beste, 1849.
10. By the Cross and vigil keeping. Lord Lindsay in Seven Great Hymns of the Church, 1863.
12. By His Cross the Mother stood, Hanging on its fatal wood. T. Morgan, 1871.
15. Weeping sore the Mother stood. J. D. Ayward, in Shipley, as above.
16. By the Cross of expiation. A. de Vere, in Shipley, as above.

ii. The Vesper text. Stabat Mater.

1. By the Cross and vigil keeping. Stood the Mother, dolorful, weeping. By Bp. R. Mant, in the British Magazine, Oct. 1833, p. 397, in 5 st. of 6 l., and signed "A." It was repeated in Bp. Mant’s Ancient Hymn., 1837, p. 54, and 1871, p. 96. The original tr. was given in the People’s H., 1867; and, again, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872, and other collections.

2. By the Cross, sad vigil keeping. Stood the mourning (mournful) Mother weeping. This cento appeared in Murray’s Hymnal, 1882, No. 50, in 5 st. of 6 l. Of these 30 lines, 15 are from Mant, 1 from Casswell, and 14 altered from Mant, by the Editors.

3. By the Cross her station keeping. This, in the Strum Hymnal, 1888; the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875; and Thrung’s Coll., 1882, is Murray’s text; in each case with slightly differing alterations.

4. At the Cross her station keeping. This cento, as given in H. A. & M., 1864 and 1875, is composed of 2 lines directly from Casswall, 21 lines directly or indirectly from Mant, through Murray, as above, and 7 lines by the compiler. Its proper designation, therefore, is "A cento, based upon Bp. Mant and E. Casswall, from Murray's 'Hymnal', 1852, somewhat altered." As Casswall's tr. begins with the same opening lines as this cento, it should be noted, to distinguish the two, that st. 5 begins in each thus: "Casswall.—O thou Mother! fount of love! Touch my spirit from above."

H. A. & M.—"Jesus, may her deep devotion, stir in me the same emotion."

The H. A. & M. cento is found in a few collections; but out-side of that work it is not so extensively used as the Murray cento, as above.

5. By the Cross, in anguish sighing. This tr. appeared in the Rugby School Ps. & Hymns, 1850 (probably before), No. 62, in 4 st. of 6 l. (ed. 1876, No. 105). It was possibly made by J. H. Buckhill, then Assistant Master in the School, and co-editor of the collection.

6. Near the Cross was Mary weeping. By J. W. Alexander, in his work, The Breaking Crosses, and Other Translations, 1861; and in Lamb's Hymns, 1884.

7. By the Cross her sad and watch keeping. This cento, in Skinner's Daily Service Hym., 1864, is composed of st. i.–v., from Bp. Mant, and st. vi., vii., by the Editor.

8. By the Cross and vigilant keeping. This tr., in the Anglican H. Bk., 2nd ed., 1871, is by R. C. Singleton, the Editor, based upon Bp. Mant; and can be distinguished by st. v., which begins, "Fountain of divine affection."

Other trs. are:

2. By the Cross in anguish weeping. By G. Robertson, in his Hymns & Anthems, 1851.

In addition to these metrical renderings of the Roman Missal and Breveary text, Mrs. Charles Lass, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 208, a prose beginning, "The mournful mother stood tearful beside the Cross." There are also two or three metrical renderings by American writers, which we have been unable to verify. [J. J.]

Stabat mater speciosa. Jacobus de Beneficicia, f. [Christmas]. As mentioned in the note above, this sequence is found in a 15th cent. ms. in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (formerly No. 7783, now Fondi italiani, 599 f. 109 b), and in 13 stanzas. From this ms. it was printed by O. F. Ozanam, in his Pièces Franciscaines en Italie au troisième Siècle, 1832 (Œuvres Complètes, Paris, 1835–1839, vol. v, p. 790), and its text is repeated in Königfels, ii. p. 235; P. A. Marell's Lat. Hymn., 1875, p. 175; and in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenhymnen, vol. ii., Paderborn, 1886, p. 185. Ozanam thought it had never been printed, but it had appeared in Jacopone's Laude, Brescia, 1495. It has not been found in any other sources earlier than 1500, and for this cause, and for reasons mentioned in the preceding note, the present writer is inclined to think that it may possibly be by Jacopone. It has a certain beauty if looked at by itself. But on comparison with the 'Stabat mater dolorosa' it is seen to be a Staффordshire Hymnbooks. In the early part of this century several collections were published in Staffordshire for local use. It will prevent confusion to treat these as a group. The first is:

A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Use. Uxterz, Richards, 1805.

This Sel. contains 27 psalms (to which the 9th 100th was added in later editions) and 128 hymns, many of which are from Watts, Cowper, and Newton. It was edited by the Rev. Jonathan Stubbs, M.A., sometime Fellow of New College, Oxford, and Curator-to-charge of Uttoxter from 1801 until his death in 1810. He was assisted in compiling the Coll. by the Rev. T. Cotterill (q.v.), the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, and the Rev. Edward Cooper. Of Gisborne and Cooper we append the following biographical details:

Gisborne, Thomas, M.A., s. of Mr. John Gisborne, of Yoxall, was b. circa 1760, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was 5th Wrangler of his year, and Chancellor's Medalist, graduating m.a. in 1789, and m.a. in 1793. Subsequently he became a Prebendary of Durham. He was the author of a sermon; the Duties of Men; the Duties of Women; Poems Sacred and Moral, 1799 (to the later editions of which his hymns were added), 3rd ed., 1802; and of another volume of poetry entitled, Walks in a Forest, 1793. The following hymns by him are found in the Uxterz Sel.:

1. A soldier's course from battles won. Soldiers of Christ. No. 72, in 6 st. of 4 l., and in several hymn-books.

2. Hark! the bell with solemn toll. Death. No. 74, in 6 st. of 4 l.

3. O Father, glory Thy name. In Sickness. No. 92, in 5 st. of 4 l.

4. Savour! when night involves the skies. Christ and in All. No. 80, in 4 st. of 4 l.

All the above hymns, except No. 2, are in Gisborne's Poems, 3rd ed., 1803.

Cooper, Edward, M.A., of Queen's College, and sometime Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, was Rector of Hamstall-Ridill-de from 1799 to 1833, and of Uttoxzter, Staffordshire, from 1869 to 1883. He published several volumes of Sermons, and edited a small coll. of Hymns (see No. 4 below). b. 1770, d. 1853. He contributed to the Uxterz Sel.:

1. Father of heaven, whose love profound. No. 67. (See p. 369, l. 1.)

2. This is the day the Lord hath bless. Sunday. No. 69, in 4 st. of 4 l.

The hymns in the Uxterz Sel. which Cotterill is believed to have written or recast are:

1. Almighty Father, God of grace. For Pardon. No. 64, in 4 st. of 4 l. See p. 52, l. 4.

2. Blessed with the presence of their God. See p. 147, l. 4.

3. Jesus, exalted far on high. No. 77. See p. 594, l. 4.

4. Not unto us, but to Thy name. See p. 811, l. 4.

5. When the archangel's trump shall sound (q.v.).
2. Next in order of time we have the following collection —

Portions of the Psalms, chiefly selected from the Versions of Mr. T. Lickey, with occasional Hymns, adapted to the Service of M. Church, for every Sunday in the Year.

Uttazter, Richards, 1808.

This Coll. contains 174 Portions of Psalms to which may be added 8 second and third parts not separately inlaid, 12 Doxologies, and 33 Hymns (with 9 second or third parts). It repeats E. Cooper's hymn "Father of heaven," but with the exception of this and a few psalm versions found in all collections, it is wholly different, both as regards contents and plan, from the Uttazter Coll. of 1805, with which Mr. Ellerton in his Notes to the fol. ed. of Church Hymns has confounded it, also erroneously assigning the editorship of the latter to E. Cooper, whose own Coll. was not published until 1811 (see iv.). A reference in the Coll. of 1808 to Ashbourne (a parish in Derbyshire on the borders of Staffordshire), and the statement that the music to which five of the hymns were sung was adapted or composed by Edward Simms, then organist of Ashbourne church, indicate that in all probability by the Coll. was intended for use in that parish, and it is not unlikely that it was compiled by the Rev. Samuel Shipley, who became Vicar in 1804.

3. The third Sel. in this section is: —

A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Use. Newcastle, Staffordshire, 1810.

This Sel. was compiled by the Rev. T. Cotterill, and went through 8 editions. [See Cotterill, T., p. 485, ii.]

4. The fourth Sel. is: —

A Selection of Psalms and Hymns. Lichfield, Lomax, 1811.

This Sel. was made by the Rev. Edward Cooper for use in his churches of Hamstall-Ridware and Yoxall. A 2nd edition appeared in 1823. It is a small book, containing only Ken's Morning Hymn, 26 Psalms, and 19 Hymns. Of the latter, "Father of heaven, whose love profound" and "This is the day the Lord hath bless'd" are respectively Nos. 3 and 5.

5. The fifth Sel. is: —

A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for public worship. Uttazter, Norris & Son, 1843.

6. The Uttazter Sel. of 1805 remained in use for many years, and passed through several editions (4th ed. 1814) unaltered, until 1843, when a revised ed. was pub. This contains 49 Psalms, 1 Gloria Patri, 94 Hymns, and an Introductory Anthem, 145 pieces in all, of which 106 were taken from the older Sel. About 1831 this revised ed. was in turn replaced at Uttazter by A Church Hymnbook for every Sunday and Holyday. London, Massey & Co., 1837.

Uttazter Sel. of 1805, "When heaves with sighs my anxious breast," in 5 st. of 4 l. is by the Rev. Humphrey Price, Curate and afterwards (1819-53) Incumbent of Christ Church, Needwood, but it does not appear that he had any further part in compiling the Sel. This Sel. was included afterwards in Montgomery's Christian Psalms.

7. As connected with Staffordshire, though not as compilers of Hymnals for local use, two hymn-writers may be named here, the Rev. John Wakefield and Lady Lucy Whitmore.

Wakefield, John, M.A., s. of Mr. Thomas Wakefield was b. at Utzazter, Jan. 10, 1777, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1794, M.A. 1797. Took Holy Orders in 1804, and after holding curacies at St. Alkmund's and St. Paul's, Derby, became Rector of Hadnall, Shropshire, in 1815. He compiled A Collection of Psalms and Hymns, chiefly designed for Public Worship. Helper, J. Mason, 1825, containing 180 Psalms and 216 Hymns; and in 1843 printed privately a small vol. of 24 original hymns entitled Hymns and Spiritual Songs, recreations in age and exclusion of a Rural Pastor. Furthermore, he wrote "Hymns to the Memory of Mrs. Hugh Kenwood" and in 1888, an Appendix thereto of 8 hymns.

Whitmore, Lady Lucy Elizabeth Georgiana, was the only dau. of Orlando, 2nd Baron and 1st Earl of Wilford, b. Jan. 22, 1792, married in 1818 to Mr. William Wolsey Whitmore, of Bednaston, Shropshire, and d. Mar. 17, 1840. She published, "Family Prayers for Every Day in the Week," &c., 1824, containing 14 original Hymns; 2nd edit. 1827. No. viii. of these hymns, "Father, again in Jesus' name we meet" (p. 365, ii.) has passed into many collections.

To information furnished by the Rev. J. Wakefield we are indebted for much of the materials employed in this article. [G. A. C.]

Stallybrass, James Steven, fourth s. of the Rev. Edward Stallybrass, of the London Missionary Society, was b. Oct. 3, 1826, at Selengitsk, in the province of Irkutsk, Siberia, where his father was then stationed. He resided for many years in Stoke Newington, London, and d. there Dec. 2, 1888. He was a well known educationist, and fr. the German a number of scientific and other works. He contributed a large number of trs. from German hymns and poems to the various publications of Mr. Curwen, e. g. to the Songs and Tunes for Education, 1861; the Toxic Spafa Reporter, &c. In 1859 he contributed trs. of 4 German hymns to Mr. Curwen's Sabbath H. Bk. (Nos. 234, 417, 418, 420). To Mr. Curwen's Child's Own H. Bk., 1862, he also contributed: —

1. Who through Heaven is guiding. God the Child's Guide. This was originally pub. in 5 st. of 9 l., as No. 97 in Songs and Tunes, 1861, and marked as a tr., but Mr. Stallybrass in 1861 could not remember from what. It has since been included in the Congregational Bk. of Praise for Children, 1879.

2. High heaven! my home and fatherland. Heaven Anticipated. 1st pub. in 4 st. of 4 l., as No. 193, in Songs and Tunes, 1851, and marked as a tr., but Mr. Stallybrass in 1861 regarded it as an original composition.

For Mr. Stallybrass's trs. from the German noted in this Dictionary see Index of Authors and Translators. [J. M.]

Stammers, Joseph, was b. at Bury St. Edmunds in 1801, and educated for the legal profession. After practising in London as a solicitor for some time he was called to the Bar in 1833, and joined the Northern Circuit. (Lyra Brit., 1868.) He d. in London, May 18, 1876. His popular hymn —

Breath the wave. Christian (Perserverance) was contributed to the Cottage Magazine (a small serial edited by the Rev. John Buckworth, late Vicar of Dewsbury) in 1830. It has passed into several collections, being in the Bap. Ps. & Hym., 1856; the People's Hym., 1867 (altered), and others.

Mr. Stammers also contributed 4 hymns to Dr. Rogers's Lyra Brit., 1868, but these have not come into C. U. [J. J.]

Stand, soldier of the Cross. Rp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Adult Hymn.] Written for the 1st ed. of his Hymnals 1870, No. 29l, in 6 st. of 4 l. It also was given in his Two Jackson quotes the remaining two verses of Wesley's hymn (see Wes. H. Bk., No. 61), but omits to point out that there is nothing corresponding thereto in the Night Thoughts, and that they are strictly Wesley's original composition. Young began his Night Thoughts after the death of his wife and daughter in 1744, and the Preface to pt. ii. of "The Infol Beclaimed," which begins a few lines after those quoted above, states: "July 1744." This would give the date of his lines as quoted, circa 1744, C. Wesley's date is 1756. We may add that line 4 in st. iv.:—

"Yield we now our bodies up To earthquake, plague, and sword.
"refers in the earthquake to the great earthquake which demolished the city of Lisbon on Nov. 1, 1755; the plague to the terrible mortality among the cattle which had been prevailing in various parts of England; and the sword to the invasion which was feared from France. These things made the strongest men in the land tremble.

Stanley, Arthur Penrhyn, D.D., was b. at Alderley, in Cheshire, Dec. 13, 1815. His father, Edward Stanley, was the son of Sir Edward Stanley of Alderley, and younger brother of the first Lord Stanley of Alderley, and was rector of the parish until 1837, when he became Bishop of Norwich. His mother, Catherine Stanley, was daughter of the Rev. Oswald Leycester, Rector of Stoke-upon-Tern, Shropshire. Arthur Stanley received his early education under the superintendence of his father; but in 1829 he was sent to Rugby to be under the direct charge of Dr. Arnold, who had been appointed to the headmastership the year before, and of whom Mr. Stanley had been an early friend and admirer. Arthur Stanley bore the stamp of Rugby and of its great headmaster to the end of his life. In 1834 he went up to Oxford, having won a Balliol scholarship, the "blue ribbon of undergraduate life," and commenced a career of unusual brilliancy at the University. He gained the Newdigate prize for English Verse (the subject being The Gypsi): the Ireland scholarship (the highest test of Greek scholarship), and a First Class in Classical Honours, all in 1837. He won the Prize for the Latin
STANLEY, ARTHUR PENRYH

Essay in 1833, the Prize for the English Essay, and the Elliot Prize for the Theological Essay in 1840, and was the same year elected to a Fellowship at University College, and was then appointed College Tutor, and held that office for twelve years. In 1845-6 he was Select Preacher for the University. From 1850 to 1852 he was Secretary to the Oxford University Commissioners. In 1851 he was appointed Canon of Canterbury, and held that post until 1855. In 1858 he was chosen in Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford, to which a Canonry at Christ Church was attached. He was also chosen in 1858 Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London, his fellow Ruggbean, Dr. Tutt. These offices he held until 1868, when, on the elevation of the Dean of Westminster, he was appointed to the Deanery of Westminster. In the same year he married Lady Augusta Bruce, a sister of the Earl of Elgin, and a personal friend and attendant of Queen Victoria. This marriage brought him into still closer relation with the Court, at which he had before been so highly valued, that he was twice chosen to accompany the Prince of Wales in his travels in the East. He was singularly happy in his married life, and felt the death of Lady Augusta, which occurred in 1876, as an irreparable loss. In 1872, he took part in the Old Catholic Congress at Cologne; and at the close of the same year was again appointed Select Preacher, not, however, with too considerable opposition being made to the appointment on account of the Dean's theological views; the vote, however, was carried by 349 against 287. In 1875 he was installed Lord Rector of the University of St. Andrews, having received the degree of A.D.L. from the University four years previously. He died at the Deanery, Westminster, on July 18, 1881, after a short illness.

Dr. Stanley was a voluminous and very popular writer, his pure and picturesque style being singularly fertile. The first work by which he became known to the literary world was the Life and Correspondence of Dr. Arnold, pub. in 1864. This is an almost perfect model, and the hero's character is vividly and exquisitely drawn, with too little discretion in permitting him, as far as possible, to tell his own tale. This was followed in 1866 by Memoirs of Rev. Dr. Stanley, Bishop of Norwich, and Catherine Stanley, which is very interesting both for its intrinsic merits, and as a painful tribute of filial affection; but it does not reach the level of the Life of Arnold. In 1850 appeared the Spitalites to the Orinians, the value of which will be variously estimated according to the theological standpoint of the reader.

In the next two works will command the admiration of all persons who are competent to judge. In his Historical Memoirs of Canterbury, pub. in 1854, and Sinai and Palestine in connection with their History, pub. in 1856, Dr. Stanley was again on his own proper ground, and not only the almost unique powers of description which had their full scope, but in a very popular work, reaching a 4th ed. in 1872; but Sinai and Palestine was still more warmly welcomed, and may be considered, with the Life of Dr. Arnold, as Dr. Stanley's chef-d'œuvre. Passing over for the present the present sermonists, we next come to his Lectures on the History of the Church, published in 1863-5, which were immediately popular, reaching a 4th ed. in 1869. Then followed a series of Lectures on the History of the Jewish Church, in 1874, and the next publication of this period showed him at his best. The Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey, pub. in 1847, may be regarded as the mature work to the climax of the Historical Memorials of Canterbury, and is, at least, worthy of its predecessor. It is a fortunate circumstance that two of the most interesting places in England have had for their historian one who, both from his position and his power, was, of all men, the most fitted to do justice to his subject. His researches have been vast, yet it does not seem necessary to do more than specify the titles. They include Lectures on the History of the Church of Scotland, 1846; an Essay connected with Church and State, 1847; a great number of single Addresses, &c., on various subjects, and Christian Institutions, Essays on Ecclesiastical Subjects, pub. not long before his death.

Dr. Stanley attained great eminence as a preacher, especially in his Chapelectures, in which, he was at once the most adoring and impressive, and his style of composition was exactly suited for a sermon. It is far to add that sermons would also, of course, be the special composition in which what many considered the most unsatisfactory features of Dr. Stanley's intellectual character, his vagueness of doctrine and extreme breadth of statement, were most conspicuous. He pub. several volumes of sermons and single sermons. The chief are: sermons and Essays on the Apologetical Age (1866), Sermons preached in Canterbury Cathedral (1859), Sermons on the Unity of Evangelical and Apologetical Teaching (1859), Sermons in the East preached before the Prince of Wales (1845), Address and Sermons at St. Andrews, 1877.

The point of view from which this sketch naturally regards Dean Stanley as a writer is that from which he appears at the least advantage. Thirteen of his hymns which had been published singly have been incorporated in the Westminster Abbey Hymn Book, but none of them have attained any extensive popularity; and, to tell the truth, they do not deserve it. That exquisite taste and felicity of diction which distinguish more or less all his prose writings seem to desert him when he is writing verse. This is all the more strange because one would regard outward nature, as well as the works and history of man, with a poet's eye. Like another great writer, Jeremy Taylor, his prose is poetical, but his poetry is prosaic. The divine afflatus is wanting. Of course he always writes as a scholar; hence his translations are more successful than his original hymns; but in neither department has he produced anything that can at all be termed classical; and it is from his general eminence rather than from his contributions to hymnology that he requires even the small space which has been devoted to him in this article.

[J. H. O.]

In addition to Dean Stanley's Hymns, from the Latin, and his popular hymns, He is gone beyond the skies, and a Master, is a good one, which are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary, the following are also in C. U.:

1. Let us with a gladsome mind. National Hymn. The Accesison. This hymn is called "Hymn for the Accession (June 20). An Accesison. A Version of the 136th Psalm," and was pub. in Macmillan's Magazine, June 1753, in 11 st. of 8. Lines 3, 4, of st. 1. "Long our island throne has stood, Planted on the ocean flood;"

2. O frail spirit, vital spark, Easter. Given in Macmillan's Magazine, May 1786, and headed "Our Future Hope." An Easter Hymn. It has been thought that there may be a place for some expression under the following hymn or hymn-like song, that embodies the hopes of another world, more hopeful than the touching address of the Emperor Hadrian to his soul, less vague and material this also was within his well-known lines, "Vital spark of heavenly flame." The hymn following this introduction is in two parts; i. "O frail spirit, vital spark," and ii., "Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wings," also in 6 st. of 8. Of ii. st. 1, ii. 1-4, are from Robert Southey's "The Land of Eden," st. 1, in 8 st. of 8; st. 5 and 6 are from Lord Byron's "The Giaour," st. 2, in 6 st. of 8; st. 7 and 8 are from Lord Byron's "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage," st. 2, in 6 st. of 8. These stanzas are generally sung in this order.

This hymn was pub. in Macmillan's Magazine, May 1878, in 7 st. of 10 st. 1 st. of 9 l., with the following note: — "Manzoni's Hymn for Whit-Sunday. Of all the Sacred Hymns of Manzoni this is the one which breathes the most complete Ghettian spirit. The first part runs on the more mystical emblems of the Church. But the latter part, which alone is capable of general use, enters into the very heart of the doctrines of the spiritual nature of Christianity, and contains a meaning beyond the original force of the words, which was intended to be confined to the lips of the Roman Church. It is in this wider sense than the following paraphrase has been attempted." Manzoni's poem on Pentecost was pub. in 1850. [See Italian Hymnody, p. 11.]

5. The Lord is come: On Byron's soul. Advent.

This hymn appeared in Macmillan's Magazine, Dec. 1872, in 6 st. of 9 l., with the following introduction: — "Hymn for Advent. The accompanying hymn is offered as a sequel to the two which have already appeared in this Magazine, April 1870, [No. June 1872, sec. p. 118.], on the Ascension, and the Transfiguration [April 1876, see p. 718.]." The first four stanzas run parallel to the Gospels of the four Sundays in Advent, and the two last on the Gospels and Epistles for Christmas.

6. When the Paschal evening fell. Holy Communion.

This appeared in Macmillan's Magazine, Nov. 1874, in 6 st. of 9, 1 st. of 12, 1 st. of 9 l., with this introduction: — "This do in Remembrance of Me. It is intended in the following lines to furnish a sacred hymn founded on the one common idea of commemoration which lies at the basis of all views of the Eucharist, whether material or spiritual, and to express this undoubted intention of the original institution apart from the metaphorical language by which the ordinance is often described."

7. Where shall we find the Lord? Epiphany. Given in Macmillan's Magazine, March 1888, in 7 st. of 9 l., and introduced thus: — "The Divine Life. 'Who lived amongst men.' (In the original draft of the Nicene Creed, the title of the Church of Palestine.)"

8. Where shall we learn to die? Good Friday. This was pub. in Macmillan's Magazine, March 1888, in 7 st. of 9 l., with the simple heading, "The Perfect Death. Dixie mori."

All these hymns were given in full, and without alteration, in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883. Their use is mainly confined to that collection. [J. J.]

Star of morn and even. F. T. Palgrave. [Morning or Evening.]

Written in 1862, and given to Sir R. Palmer (Lord Selborne) in ms., and included by him in his Bk. of Prayers, 1882, in 4 st. of 9 l. It is also given in the author's Hymns, 1867, p. 7, where it is entitled "The Day Star." in the Soror Hymnody, 1882; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. It has been set to special music by Tilliard, Lond., Novello, 1885. [J. J.]

Stars of the morning, so gloriously bright. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [St. Michael & All Angels.]

In the Paraclete there are several Canons of the Bodiless Ones, and all are of an ornate character. In Dr. Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, these stanzas appeared with the following title and note: — "Stars of the Morning. A cento from the Canon of the Bodiless Ones. Translated in the Weck of the Fourth Tone." In omitting the opening line of the Greek, Dr. Neale, doubtless, intended it to be understood, that he had followed the spirit rather than the letter of the original. In fact, there is no attempt to reproduce the sequence of thought as set forth in the Canon, although the ornate character of the original is imitated. Since the adoption of Dr. Neale's translation for congregational use, in II. J. Palmer's Supp. Hymnal, 1866, the People's, 1867, H. A. & M. 1868, and others, it has become most popular, and is found in a large number of hymn-books. The texts in use, however, vary considerably. Dr. Neale's authorized text is in the 3rd ed. of the H. of the E. Church 1866. The original Greek Canon is found in modern editions of the Octoechos. [J. J.]

Statuta decreto Dei. C. Coffin. [Advent.]

Pub. in his Hymn Sacri, 1736, p. 35, and also in the Paris Breviary the same year, where it is appointed as the Ferial hymn at Vespers in Advent. It is in several modern French Breviers, in J. Claudetier's Hym. of the Prim. Church, 1837, No. 38, and Card. Newman's Hymn Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as: —

1. The rolling years at length fulfil. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 42. Generally given in an abbreviated and altered form.

2. Deep hidden by divine decree. By L. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 48. The tr. in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 104, "O Lord, the rolling years fulfil," is by the editors based on L. Williams's tr.

3. And now, by God's sure word decreed. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tene Bk., 1842—55, Advent, No. 7. This is a tr. of st. 1, v., vi. The Advent hymn, No. 8, in Blew, is a tr. of the remaining stanzas of the hymn, beginning with st. ii., "Pater nefando crimen," which is rendered as, "While Adam's race sore wounded lay." This is in Lyra Messianica, 1864.

Other trs. are: —

1. The times of old by God decreed. J. D. Chambers, 1847.

2. Sing we now redeeming love. D. T. Morgan, 1850.

Stay, Thou insulted Spirit, stay. C. Wesley. [Lent.]

Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., 41, in 7 st. of 9 l. (P. Works, 1868—72, vol. iv., p. 370.) It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 153, with the omission of st. vi. and the change of st. ii., l. 4, from, "For twenty long rebellious years" (the forty referred to his own age at the time), to "For many long," &c. The Wes. H. Bk. form of the text is in most of the Methodist collections, and a few others. Other forms of the text are: — (1) "Stay, injured, grieved, Spirit, stay," in Beckersteth's Christ. Psalmody, 1883, and later collections; and (2) "Stay, Thou long-suffering Spirit, stay," in the American Meth. Episco. Hymnal, 1878. [J. J.]

Steane, Edward, d.d., was b. at Oxford, Mar. 23, 1798, studied at the Baptist College, Bristol, and at Edinburgh University. In 1823 he became pastor of a Baptist church at Cambewell, London, where he labored with success until his death on May 8, 1882. Dr.
STEELE, ANNE

Steane was for many years one of the most eminent ministers of the Baptist denomination; one of the founders of the Baptist Union; the Bible Translation Society; and the Evangelical Alliance. He edited the 'Tract for the Times,' and published 'The Doctrine of Christ, derived by the Apostles, in 1828. He was one of the compilers of the New Testament, which prepared by him appeared in that book: "Prophetically! blissful day!" (The Triumphs of Christ anticipated.) It reappeared in the Selection Enlarged in 1838. [W. R. S.]

Steele, Anne, b. in 1716, was the daughter of Mr. Wm. Steele, a timber merchant, and pastor, without salary, of the Baptist Church at Broughton, in Hampshire. At an early age she showed a taste for literature, and would often entertain her friends by her poetical compositions. But it was not until 1760 that she could be prevailed upon to publish. In that year two vols. appeared under the title of Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, by Theodosia. After her death, which occurred in November, 1778, a new edition was published with an additional volume and a Preface by the Rev. Dr. Caleb Evans, of Bristol (Bristol, 1780). In the three vols., 144 hymns, 34 Psalms in verse, and about 30 short poems. They have been reprinted in one vol. by D. Sedgwick, 1863. Miss Steele's hymns were first made available for congregational use in 1769, 62 of them being then introduced into the Boston Baptist Coll. of Ash & Evans, the letter T for "Theodyssey" being affixed to each. They were also given in Dr. Rippon's Sel., 1877, and 26 in Dr. W. B. Collyer's Coll., 1812. Among Baptist hymn-writers Miss Steele stands at the head, if we regard either the number of her hymns which have found a place in the hymnals of the last 120 years, or the frequency with which they have been sung. Although few of them can be placed in the first rank of lyrical compositions, they are almost uniformly simple in language, natural and pleasing in imagery, and full of genuine Christian feeling. Miss Steele may not inappropriately be compared with Miss F. R. Havergal, our "Prophetically! blissful day!" of the 19th century. In both there is the same intense personal devotion to the Lord Jesus. But whilst Miss Steele seems to think of Him more frequently as her "bleeding, dying Lord"—dwelling on His sufferings in their physical aspect—Miss Havergal often refers to His living help and sympathizing grace, with gladness His present claims as "Master" and "King," and anticipates almost with certainty His second coming. Looking at the whole of Miss Steele's hymns, we find in them a wider range of thought than in Miss Havergal's compositions. She treats of a greater variety of subjects. On the other hand, Miss Havergal, living in an age of missions and general philanthropy, has much more to say concerning Christian work and personal service for Christ and for humanity. Miss Steele suffered from delicacy of health and from a great sorrow, which befell her in the death of her betrothed. In other respects her life was uneventful, and occupied chiefly in the discharge of such domestic and social duties as usually fall to the lot of the oldest daughter of a village pastor. She was buried in Broughton churchyard. [W. R. S.]

A large number of Miss Steele's hymns are in C. U., the larger proportion being in American hymn-books. In addition to "Almighty Maker of my frame," "Far from these narrow scenes of night," "Father of mercies in Thy word," and others annotated under their respective first lines, there are also:

1. From her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vols. I, ii.

All the foregoing hymns are in D. Sedgewick's reprint of Miss Steele's Hymns, 1863.

Stegmann, Josua, D.D. s. of Ambrosius Stegmann, Lutheran pastor at Salzfeld, near Meiningen, and finally, in 1835,superintendent at Eckartsberg, near Merseburg, was b at Sulzfeld, Sept. 14, 1588. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1604, M.A. in 1611, and was for sometime assistant of the Philosophical Faculty. In 1617 he was appointed Superintendent of the district (Grafenschaf) of Schaumburg, and also pastor at Stadthagen, and first professor of the Gymnasium there; and before entering on his duties graduated D.D. at Wittemberg, on Oct. 24, 1617. When the Gymnasium was erected into a university, and transferred (1621) to Rinteln, he became ordinary professor of Theology there. By the withdrawal of his wife he was forced to leave from Rinteln, in 1623. After his return he was appointed, in 1625, Epiphora of the Lutheran clergy of Hesse-Schaumburg. By the Edict of Restitution, promulgated by the emperor on March 6, 1629, he was greatly harassed; for the Benedictine monks, after they had settled in Rinteln, in 1630, claimed to be the rightful professors, and demanded the restoration of the old church lands, and especially the property formerly belonging to the monastery at Rinteln, but which had previously been devoted to the payment of the stipends of the Lutheran professors. They sent soldiers into Stegmann's house to demand that he should refund his salary, and on July 13, 1632, compelled him to hold a disputation, at which they annoyed him in every possible way. Soon after he was seized with fever, and d. Aug. 3, 1632. (Koch, iii. 128; Wetzel, iii. 231; Einladungsschreiben des Gymnasium Bernhardinum, Meiningen, 1888; ms. from Pastor A. Bicker, Rinteln; Dr. Förstermann, Leipzig), &c.

Stegmann was known as a writer of Latin verse while yet a student at Leipzig, and by his contemporaries was reckoned as a hymn writer. It is, however, very difficult to discriminate his productions. The hymns inter-persened in his devotional works are given without any indications of authorship, and many of them are certainly by earlier writers, or recasts founded on earlier hymns. They appeared principally in his (1) Stegneria Temporum. Of this the 3rd ed., Rinteln, 1629, is in the KTBarche Library. (2) Erntewerte Hirtent- und Saeterflarzer, Lubeck, 1633, (colophon gives the correct date viz. 1630). Of this there is a copy in the University Library at Breslan. In der Hlitter für Hymnologie, 1888, p. 162, a list is given of the more important hymns in No. 2, tracing as far as possible those which had previously appeared elsewhere. Two hymns, which are usually ascribed to Stegmann, and are not found earlier than in his works, have passed into English as follows:

i. A bush bleib mit deiner Gnade. Supplication. Included in 1628, as above, p. 452. In 1630 it is given, at p. 347, in 6 st. of 4 l., as a "Closing Hymn," after the "Prayer for the Preservation of the Doctrine, and of the Church of God." Hence in Mittell, 1858, No. 337a. In J. Claud. Pistoria, 1631, p. 266, it is ascribed to Stegmann, and so in later collections. It is a simple and beautiful hymn, and is found in most recent German hymns, e.g. as No. 208 in der Lit. L., S. 1951. Lauxmann, in Koc., viii. 146, relates various incidents regarding its use (it was, e.g., a favourite hymn of King Friedrich Wilhelm iv. of Prusia), and thus analyses it:

"It has as its keynote the saying of the two disciples at Emmaus, 'Abide with us.' St. 1. puts this prayer simply before the Lord Jesus; st. ii. vi. develop it in detail: Abide with us with Thy Word as our Saviour (ii.); with the illumination of Thy Spirit as our guiding Truth (iii.); with Thy blessing as the God rich in power (iv.); with Thy protection as the Conqueror in battle (v.); and with Thy Faithfulness as our Rock in the time of need (vi.)."
The Translations are:

1. Abide with us, our Saviour. This is a free tr. of st. 1, ii., as No. 53, in the Dalston Hospital L. Bk., 1848; and repeated in the Pennsylvania Coll., 1864, of tr. of st. iv., vi., were added.

2. O Saviour, go beside us. This is a free tr. with an original "Shepherd," in the New York Reporter, July 1877; and in Curwen's Sabbath H. Bk., 1859, No. 420. Thence in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, No. 116.

3. Abide among us with Thy grace. This is a good and full tr., in c.m., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Garg. 2nd ser., 1856, p. 84; and her Allon's Suppl. Hys., 1854, Irish Church Hys., 1889 and 1873; and other; and in America, in the Catechism, 1859, Boardman's Sel., 1861.

4. Abide with us. Lord Jesu! Thy grace. This is a complete tr., as No. 8 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1870, regarded as a compilation.

5. Come, abide with Thy grace. in our hearts.

O Lord. By Dr. R. Mayhew, 1872, p. 197.

How schon leuchtet die Morgenstern. Von Firmament des Himmels fern. Morning. Included in 1850, as above, p. 10, in 8 st. of 10 l., entitled, "Morning Hymn." (The text printed by Fischer, ii., p. 385, as that of 1830, is really the greatly altered form in the ed. of 1839; and repeated in the Leipzig Vorrath, 1673, No. 838, and others. St. viii. is altered from st. ix. of "O Lebensbrünnlein, tief und gross" (see p. 775, ll.). It is an imitation, but not a recast, of the hymn by P. Nicola, noted at p. 806, ii. The form in C. U. was given to it by Burchard Wiesemmyer, in Crieger's volkliedkinder (G. B., 1840, No. 111, and further recast in Crieger's Poesie, 1648, No. 3, which begins, "Wie schön leuchtet die Morgenstern." This form is No. 477, in the Univ. L. S., 1851. The tr. in C. U. is—

How beautiful the Morning Star shines from the firmament afar. This was contributed by Philip Pusey to A. R. Pegge's Ps. & Hg. Tunes, C. U. ed., 1840, p. 190 (see p. 188). It is a fairly close version of st. i, while st. ii., iii., are very free tr. of st. vi., vii. Included, slightly varied, in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and thence, with st. i., ii., 5, 6, altered in Kennedy, 1863. It was considerably altered in the Sarum Hg., 1868; and this form is repeated in R. Minton Taylor's Coll., 1872, and J. L. Porter's Coll., 1875.

Other trs. are:—1. "How fair shines forth the Morning-star." By H. R. Buckland, 1842, p. 42. (2) "How lovely now the morning-star." By Miss Fox, 1844, p. 3. (3) "How beautiful the morning star, Shines in." By R. Massie, in the tray of Rest, 1876, p. 472. [J. M.]

Stennett, Joseph, the earliest English Baptist hymn-writer whose hymns are now in C. U., was b. at Abingdon, Berks, in 1663. He received a superior education at the Grammar-School of Wallingford, and at the age of 22 removed to London, where for several years he engaged in tuition. In 1688 he married a daughter of George Guill, a French Protestant refugee, another of whom was the wife of the celebrated Presbyterian minister, Dr. Daniel Williams, who became a generous friend to Stennett. In the following year he was called to preach by the Baptist Sabbatharian congregation then meeting in Devonshire Square, London, after wards in Pinners' Hall; and in 1690 became its pastor, a position he retained to his death, July 4, 1718. Since the meetings of this congregation for worship were on the seventh day of the week, he was free to preach to other congregations on the Sunday, which he did very frequently, especially to the General Baptist Church in the Barbecue. Such was Stennett's reputed piety, learning and practical wisdom that his advice was often much sought by his Christian friends, and by the "great Whig Lords" of that day he was occasionally consulted as to the feeling of the Dissenters concerning national affairs. His published works include:

1. Hymns in commemoration of the Sufferings of our Blessed Saviour Jesus Christ, composed for the Celebration of his Holy Supper, 1697; 2nd ed. 1763 (This is entitled Stennett's Works, 1732, Hymns for the Lord's Supper). These were 27 in number, increased to 80 in the 3rd ed. 1769. (2) In 1760 he published a poetical Version of Solomon's Song of Songs, together with the XLYTA Poem. A 2nd ed., corrected, appeared in 1769. (3) In 1712 he pub. twelve Hymns composed for the Celebration of the Holy Ordinance of Baptism; 2nd ed. 1722.

Stennett also translated Ducier's Plato and other works from the French, and published several sermons preached on days of National Thanksgiving and other public occasions. His Works were collected after his death and pub. in 1732, in 4 vols. 8vo. They contain a Memoir, Sermons and Letters, the Hymns and Poems mentioned above, and a number of other poetical pieces. A controversial work, An Answer to Mr. Ruschen's Book on Baptism, 1702, may be reckoned as a 5th vol. Of his hymns, that which, in the form of varying centos, is most widely known is, "Another six days' work is done" (p. 71, ll.). Others in C. U. include:—

4. Lord, at Thy Table I behold. Holy Communion. This hymn is not in Stennett's Works, but is appearing in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1757, with his name prefixed, and was probably supplied to Dr. Rippon by Dr. S. Stennett, J. Stennett's grandson. "With humble faith and trembling heart, is taken." is taken.

6. The great Redeemer we adore. Pub. in his Hgs. for Baptism, 1712. (Works, 1732, i. p. 15.)

7. Where'er one sinner turns to God. Holy Baptism. Pub. in his Hgs. for Baptism, 1712, No. 12. (Works, 1732, ii. p. 149.) From this "From this we'll sing, a willing convert's trace." is taken. It begins with st. iii.

Several of his hymns additional to these are given in the older collections, but have passed out of use. We may add that the Joseph Stennett, the subject of this article, had a son, Joseph Stennett, d.d., who also became an eminent Baptist minister, and was the father of Samuel Stennett, who is noticed below.

[W. R. S.]

Stennett, Samuel, d.d., grandson of Joseph Stennett, named above, and a of the Rev. Joseph Stennett, d.d., was b. in 1689, most probably in 1727, at Exeter, where his father was at that time a Baptist minister. When quite 4 A 2 young he removed to London, his father having become pastor of the Baptist Church in Little Will Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields. In 1748, Samuel Stennett became assistant to his father in the ministry, and in 1758 succeeded him in the pastoral office at Little Wild Street. From that time until his death, on Aug. 24, 1795, he held a very prominent position among the Dissenting ministers of London. He was much respected by some of the statesmen of the time, and used his influence with them in support of the principles of religious freedom. The celebrated John Howard was a member of his congregation and an attached friend. In 1763, the University of Aberdeen conferred upon him the degree of D.D. Dr. S. Stennett's prose publications consist of volumes of sermons, and pamphlets on Baptism and on Nonconformist Disabilities. He wrote one or two short poems, and contributed 38 hymns to the collection of his friend, Dr. Rippon (1787). His poetical genius was not of the highest order, and his best hymns have neither the originality nor the vigour of some of his grandfather's. The following, however, are pleasing in sentiment and expression, and are in C. U., more especially in Baptist congregations:

[1882]

Stephen, primo martyri. [St. Stephen.] This hymn is found in various forms. Moist. No. 1156, gives first what he professes to consider to be the original text, and which he says is very probably by St. Ambrose himself. But for this text (which begins "... Stephani corona martyris") he gives no source, and seems to derive it from his own imagination. His second form begins "Stephani corona martyris." If from this second form are rejected the additions (including st. i., which is not found in other ms.), from a Benedictine MS. cited through Casard, then we have what is probably the original text, beginning in the steps: "Stephani primo martyri." This last form is found in two mss., circa 1150, in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc. 202, f. 141; Liturg. Misc. 206, f. 306); in a ms. of the 12th cent. in the British Museum (Add. 18301, f. 112); in the St. Gall ms. No. 413, of the 11th cent.; in a ms. of the 10th cent. at Munich, &c. Also in the Ambrosian Breviary, 1539. In the Ambrosian Breviary, 1830, there is a recent beginning "Duci cruento martyrum" and the text is in Dr. Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 79. All these forms and variations are given by Daniel, i., No. 82, and iv. pp. 89, 90, 354-357. [J.M.]

Of these forms of the text two have been rendered into English, viz.:

1. Stephanus primo martyri.
   2. Blood is on the martyr's palm. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn and Tune Bk., 1852-53. This was altered by Canon W. Cooke, and given in the Cooke and Newton Hymnal, 1853, No. 30, as, "Jesus, Lord, Thy praise we sing."
   2. Duci cruento martyrum.

   To Thee, O Christ, our hymn we raise. By E. A. Dayman, in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868, No. 46. This is rather a paraphrase than a tr. of the hymn. [J. J.]

Stephenson, Thomas Bowman, D.D., LLD., s. of the Rev. John Stephenson, was b. at Newcastle on Dec. 22, 1849, and educated at Wesley College, Sheffield, subsequently graduating at the University of London. In 1869 he entered the Wesleyan Ministry, and has since laboured in Norwich, Manchester, Bolton, and London. The great work of his life has been the establishment and maintenance of The Children's Home at Victoria Park, London, and its branches at Bolton, Birmingham, and the Isle of Man, and in Canada. Dr. Stephenson has written for Magazines and Reviews, and pub. a small work on Sisterhoods, and a Memorial Sketch of the late James Berlow. He has written several hymns, of which the following are most widely known:

1. Fading like a lifetime ends another day. Evening. Written, printed circa 1873, and pub. in The Methodist and Expository Bk., 1879, No. 457, in 2 st. of 4 l.
2. Hear us, Saviour, bowd before Thee. Children's Hymn. Written for a Festival at the Children's Home, circa 1879.
3. O Father, whose spontaneous love. Easter, et

Another tr. is: "Another year is gone, and now." By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 64.

J. M. Stevenson, John, was b. at Aldwick, in Northamptonshire, June 8th, 1776. About the age of sixteen he went to London, where he joined the Baptist church in Grafton Street, whose pastor was at that time R. Burnham (p. 100, 1.). He began to preach, and in 1797 became master at Oxford Hall, afterwards at St. Neots, and then at Boston. In 1811, after the death of Burnham, he was invited to succeed him at Grafton Street. Stevens had popular gifts as a preacher: the place became too small, and ultimately a new chapel was built in Mead's Court, Soho, where he continued to work till 1847. Stevens was a High Calvinist in theology, and an ardent polemic. He wrote several controversial works, the most famous of which was entitled, A Scriptural Display of the True God & the early existence of Jesus' human soul, Lond. 1812. From the theory advocated in this book he was called a Pre-existerian. In 1809 he pub. A New Sel. of Hymns, including also several Original hymns never before offered to the Public. This, and the 2nd ed., 1812, contained 465 hymns. The 5th ed., 1825, had an Appendix of 192 hymns, and the 12th, 1898, one of 365 hymns. The ed. of Stevens's hymn-book now in C. U. was edited, in 1881, by J. S. Anderson. It is described on the title-page as "enlarged and improved," and contains 970 hymns. Of these a few are by Mr. Anderson, and 34 by Stevens. Many of the hymns of Stevens embody High Calvinistic views, strongly expressed; some however, on the Lord's Supper would be used by most Christians. Of his hymns the following are in Snype's "Songs of G. & G., 1872.

1. Christ has a chosen Church (1809). Election.
2. Eternal election preserves me secure (1809). Election.
3. Grace is Jehovah's sovereign will (1809). Election.
4. Long as I live I'll sing the Lamb (1809). Praise to Jesus.

Stevenson, George John, M.A., was b. at Chesterfield, Derbyshire, July 7, 1817. In early life he was connected with the printing and bookselling business, and continued therein until 1844, when he entered St. John's College, Battersby, where he was trained for an organizing Mastership under the National Society. In 1846 a Reformatory School was established in the Philanthropic Institute, Southwark, for the benefit of the better-conducted criminals from the convict prisons, and Mr. Stevenson was the first Master. This school is now represented by the Farm School at Red Hill, Regent. In 1848, he was appointed Head Master of the endowed parochial school at Lambeth, but resigned in 1855, and established himself in Paternoster Row as a bookseller and publisher, where he continued the business until a few years before his death, on Aug. 16, 1888. His interest in education was shown in his publication of the periodicals, School and Teacher, The Pupil Teacher, and The English Journal of Education. In 1861 he purchased the Wesleyan Times newspaper, and for six years he bore the editorial and financial responsibility. Mr. Stevenson's

9. Open o'er the gates of heaven. (Christmas.) Pub. in the Church S. S. Musical Leaflets, No. 6, with music by J. H. Nottingham.
10. Open o'er the gates of heaven's glory. Hymn. Pub. in the same Leaflets, No. 9.
12. There's a fight to be fought, there's a work to be done. Missionary. Written for the Church Missionary Inquirers' Annual Meeting, Nov. 1888, and issued as a C. M. S. leaflet.
13. We know not how the rays that stream. Holy Trinity. Written for the Church S. S. Magazine. Pub. in an abridged form as "We cannot read the mystery," in the Church S. S. Bk., 1889.

Of these hymns, Nos. 1, 7, 8, 11, and 12, were pub. in Eight Missionary Hymns and Poems, C. M. S., 1889. Miss Stock contributed 3 hymns to the "Golden Songs," which appeared in the 8. S. C. Sunday School Chronicle, 1875; 7 for children to the Sunday at Home. She has also written several others on various subjects, which have been issued as leaflets. Her hymns are bright and musical, and should be sought out by hymn compilers. Her poems are pub. as Joy in Sorrow, 1884.

J. J.

STOCKER, John, some-time of Hounslow, Devonshire, contributed, during 1776 and 1777, 9 hymns to the Gospel Magazine. These hymns were collected and reprinted, in 1861, by D. Sedgwick, as Hymns and Spiritual Songs, and, with their dates, are:

These varying signatures, "J. S.", "J. Stocker," and "John Stocker," led D. Sedgwick to conclude that the signature "J. S." meant the same person as the other two. We doubt this: first, because Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6 above, were all printed in May 1777, in the order named; and we cannot prove that the signature "J. S." should have been adopted in this number; and, second, because other hymns signed "S." are found in the same numbers of the magazine as those signed "J. Stocker." If "J. S." is John Stocker, why not "S." also? Sedgwick had no authority for saying that "J. S." was John Stocker; we have no authority for saying this not so. There is no proof either way. (J. J.)

1094 STILL WITH THEE, O MY GOD

literary work began with contributions to the Sheffield Patriot, in 1830, and the Norfolk News, 1841. Having joined the Methodist Society in 1831, his interest in Methodism, and specially in Methodist history and literature, became very keen, and has had much to do with his literary life. His publications outside of hymnology are numerous, and include biographical works mainly on the Wesley Family, and Methodist Worthies; historical works on City Road Chapel; the Young Men's Church Association; Methodist in Chesterfield; Methodist in Hucknall; and historical articles on Methodism in several Encyclopedias, &c.; Essays on Education; and smaller works on other subjects. His hymnological work began with his biographical sketches of hymn-writers and notices of hymns in the Wesleyan Times, which were subsequently largely used by Dr. Rogers in his Lyra Britannica, and Miller in his Singers and Songs of the Church. His Methodist Hymn Book and its Associations was pub. in 1869; and in an enlarged form as The Methodist Hymn Book Illustrated with Biography, Illustration, and Anecdote, in 1883. The first of the latter dealt with the writers and hymns of the Wm. H. Bk. of 1790-1831; and the second with the revised ed. of the same, 1873. The latter is the most complete account of Methodist hymnology extant, and is indispensable to every lover of the Wesleyan Hymn-book. Outside of Methodist hymnody, Mr. Stevenson's acquaintance with English and American hymnology was very superficial; and of the vast stores of Greek, Latin, German, French, Italian, Scandinavian, and other treasures he knew almost nothing. His reputation entirely rests upon his researches as a student of and authority upon Methodist Hymnody. In that department he had no equal. (J. J.)

Stichéra. (Greek Hymnody, § xvi. 9.)

Still With Thee, O my God. J. D. Burns. [Evening.] Included in his little work, The Evening Hymn, 1857, No. 23, in 6 st. of 4 l. It passed into the Bap. Ps. & Hgs., 1858; and, subsequently, into other collections. In the Cong. Hg., 1887, it begins "With Thee, my Lord, my God." Although this mainly included, because of its beautiful simplicity, in children's hymn books, it is yet better adapted for congregational use. (J. J.)

Stock, Sarah Geraldina, b. Dec. 27, 1838, has devoted much time to literature with special reference to Mission work and Sunday Schools. Her prose publications include Lessons on Israel in Egypt, &c., 1874; The Child's Life of our Lord, 1879; Bible Stories from the Old Testament, &c., 1881, and others. Her hymns in C. U. include:

1. A debtor! for the love of God unbounded. Missions. Written for the Church Missionary Almanack, 1876, and also issued as a C. M. S. leaflet.
2. Behind and Before. Departure of Missionaries. Written for Indian Women, and sung for the first time at the dismissal of Church of England Zenana missionaries, Sept. 30, 1887. Since issued as a C. M. S. leaflet.
3. Called to Thy service. Lord, Holy Matrimony. Written for the marriage of Mr. W. Merry and Miss Granger, of the "Home of Industry," Bethnal Green Road, London, March 14, 1889.
4. Coldly the wind is sweeping. For Workers. Pub. in the Church S. School Magazine, 1887.

1. Laurelled with the staves victorious. By J. M. Neale in the enlarged ed. of his Medieval Hymns, 1863, in st. of 9. l. In an abbreviated form it is in the 1867 Appendix to the H. Noted, and the Hymn, 1882.

Other texts are:
1. 2. Glorified with apostolic cohort. B. T. Morgan, 1871.
3. Decked with robes such state befitting. B. S. Wraghman, 1881.
in 1833 for The Society of St. Katharine for Invalids, and pub. in the Monthly Packet, 1844.

49. Remember Me, where I Am, Holy Communion. Written at Windsor for the Monthly Packet, in 1849, and included in The Knight of Intercession, 1872.

51. There's an ancient river. The Spiritual River. Written at Windsor for the Monthly Packet, in 1849; and given in The Knight of Intercession, 1872.

52. There who hast charged Thine elder sons. For School Teachers. Written in 1847 for St. Katharine's Training College for Maids, and subsequently adapted for use by teachers of both sexes.

53. Those who did love as when we woes began. Temperance. Written for the Ch. of England Temperance Society Magazine, 1849.

55. Wash away the God, hear from eternal heaven. On behalf of the Jews. Written for the East London Mission to the Jews, 1858. It is included in an abridged form in the 1932 Appendix to H. & A. M.

56. While the Shepherds kept their vigil. Christmas Carol. Written at Windsor, in 1849.

58. Wistful are our waiting eyes. The Judgment. Pub. in his Lyra Pedoidea, 1846, on Art. 7 of the Apostles' Creed, "From hence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead." The faithful few of Israel's captive days. Holy Scriptures. Written at Windsor for the Monthly Packet, in 1849.

59. Some of Mr. Stone's finer hymns, including "Round the Sacred City gather;" "The Church's One Foundation;" "A want of heart and help from sin," and others, are annotated under their respective first lines. These, together with the 45 above, are given in his Hymns, 1866, some of the trs being recast. Additional trs from Thomas à Kempis are also noted under his name.

Another hymn, inseparably associated with Mr. Stone's name is:

60. Lord of our Soul's salvation. National Thanksgiving. This was ordered by command of Her Majesty the Queen to be sung at the Thanksgiving for the Recovery of H. R. H. The Prince of Wales, on Feb. 27, 1872. In its original form it was in 7 st. of 4 l., and was thus sung throughout the country. But this variation was caused by the necessary restrictions as to time as to space in the Cathedral service, a selection of four verses only—the 1st, a combination of the 2nd and 4th, the 6th, and the 7th—was adapted by the author for use in St. Paul's. The full text was included in The Knight of Intercession, 1872.

Mr. Stone's hymns vary considerably in metre and subject, and thus present a pleasing variety not always found in the compositions of popular hymn-writers. His best hymns are designed and clearly expressed. The tone is essentially dogmatic and hopeful. The absence of rich poetic thought and graceful fancy is more than atoned for by a masterly condensation of Scripture facts and of Church teaching given tersely and with great vigor. His changes and antitheses are frequently abrupt, in many instances too much so, according to present-day conceptions of congregational purposes, and his consumerism is somewhat limited. His rhythm, though in many instances broken either by long or by compound verse, is rarely at fault, and his rhyme is almost perfect. A few of his hymns are playful and pithy, as the tender "Wary soul and laden with my sin:" others are more serious, as "Lord of the harvest: it is a time and meet." but the greater part are grand and dignified, statements of a manifold faith, with dogma, prayer, and praise are interwoven in such a manner that the key-note of the psalm is Hope.

Stowe, Harriet, née Beecher, daughter of the Rev. Lyman Beecher, b. New Lebanon, New York, Jan. 13, 1812. Her father having been appointed President of Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio, she removed with her family, and in 1813 was married to the Rev. Calvin E. Stowe, M.D., Professor of Languages and Biblical Literature in the same Institution. Her high reputation as an author is well known; and the immense success of Uncle Tom's Cabin, which first appeared in The National Era, in 1851, secured her a lasting reputation. She has written other well-known works, and several of her hymns appeared in the Plymouth Collection, edited by her brother, H. W. Beecher, in 1854—

1. Still, still with Thee, a ben part in the heaven.

2. By winds are raging over the upper deeps.

Another hymn by Mrs. Stowe, "How beautiful, said he of old" (The Gospel Ministry), is No. 281 in the Boston Hymn Book, the Spirit, 1884. Her poetical pieces were pub. in her Religious Poems, 1867; and from a poem therein the hymn, "Knocking, knocking, who is there?" (Christ knocking) in Sack's Sacred Songs and Solos is adapted. (F. M. B.)

Stowell, Hugh, M.A., S. of Hugh Stowell, Rector of Ballang, near Ramsey, was b. at Douglas, Isle of Man, Dec. 3, 1756, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, M.A. 1822; M.A. 1826. He was ordained in 1823, and held the curacy of Shropshre, Gloucestershire, and then that of Holy Trinity, Huddersfield. Subsequently he was Curate in charge of St. Stephen's, Salford, and became rector of Christ Church, Salford, in 1831. In 1845 he was appointed Hon. Canon in Chester Cathedral; in 1851 Chaplain to the Bp. of Manchester; and Rural Dean of Eccles. He d. at Salford, Oct. 8, 1865. His Memoir, by the Rev. J. B. Marston, was pub. in 1868. Canon Stowell was a popular and effective preacher. His publications included Tractarianism Traversed, 1845; A Model for Men of Business, 1854: The Peaceful Valley, 1826; and a large number of single sermons, pamphlets, &c.

His Sel. of Ps. & Hymns was pub. in 1821.

This Sel. contained 233 hymns, in addition to versions of the Psalms. Of the hymns the following were by the compiler:
STOWELL, THOMAS ALFRED

2. From every stormy wind that blows. See p. 339, l.
4. Great God, we dare not bow the knee. Holy Communion.
5. Meek Lamb of God, on Thee. Lent.
6. Of Thee, O God, we raise. Sunday School Anniversary.
7. Tune every heart, wake every tongue. Sunday School Anniversary.
8. When Jesus left the glorious sky, For an Infant's School.
9. Yes, in the morning of our years. Sunday School Anniversary.

The 12th ed. of this Sel. pub. by Canon Stowell in 1861, was increased to 275 hymns, the additional hymns being in nearly every instance his own compositions. In addition to those already given we have:
10. Again our yearly strain we raise. 1864.
11. Another year has gathered past. (Before 1846.)
12. Before Thy throne, O Lord, we bend. (Before 1846.)
13. By pressing dangers compassed round. 1843 (?).
14. Come, raise we all the blessed strain. 1862.
15. He, of bourned day a heavenly rest. 1844 (?).
16. Hark, how sweet those infant voices. 1841 (?).
17. How fruitless is the ploughman's toil. 1855.
18. It's silently in night's command. 1856.
19. Jesus is our Shepherd, Wiping, etc. 1849.
21. Lord, we wait on Thee. (Before 1846.)
22. Jesus, our Saviour and our Lord. (Before 1846.)
23. Jesus, Propriet of Thy Church. 1861.
24. Lord, if our land be great and free. 1851.
25. Lord, in this dark and stormy day. 1848.
29. Saved out of the life's changeful ocean. (Before 1846.)
30. Save, guide this little band. (Before 1846.)
31. The day of rest is past away. (Before 1846.)
32. The morn of our life-time is fast gliding by. (Before 1846.)
33. Though our lot be poor and lowly. 1847.
34. Thy cross, O Lord, the holy sign. 1849.
35. Wake, wake, our yearly strain anew. 1852.
36. Wake, the joyful song. 1844.
37. We, a little simple throng. (Before 1846.)
38. We, little pilgrims of a day. 1845.
39. We love the holy house of prayer. 1857.
40. We will not weep as others do. 1842.
41. What is thy life? It glances by. 1860.
42. What though our earthly lot be low. 1854.

These hymns were all written for the Anniversary Services of Christ Church Sunday Schools, Salford, and are included with others in a special Appendix in the 1877 ed. of the Sel. as above. Other hymns by Canon Stowell are:
44. Children of old, Hosannah sang. Sunday Schools. 1830.
45. Lord of all power and might, Father of love, &c. Missions. Written for the Jubilee of the B. & F. Bible Society. March 7, 1853.
46. Shepherd of the ransomed sheep. The Good Shepherd.
47. Pilgrims in the narrow way. Sunday School Anniversary. This was his last hymn, and was written for the Choral of the S. School Anniversary, 1865.

Of Canon Stowell's hymns the most popular are Nos. 2, 3, 20 and 44. As a writer for children he was very successful. All the foregoing hymns are in the 15th ed. of his Sel., edited by his son, Manchester, 1877; and in Hymns. By the late Rev. Canon Stowell, M.A. Manchester, 1868. [J. J.]

STOWELL, THOMAS ALFRED, M.A. B. of Canon H. Stowell, was b. at Salford, July 15, 1831. He was Bridgman Exhibitioner at Queen's College, Oxford, 1853, and B.A. in honours in 1855. Taking Holy Orders in 1857, he became Curate of Bolton, Diocese of Ripon, 1857-60; Inebiend of St. Stephen's, Bowring, Bradford, 1860-65; and then Rector of Christ Church, Salford, in succession to his father, 1865. He was also appointed Rural Dean of Salford in 1876, and Hon. Canon in Manchester Cathedral in 1879. The Rev. H. Stowell has pub. The Church Catechism simply and clearly explained, 1882, various Sermons, papers on Education, &c. Most of his hymns were written for the Anniversary Services of Christ Church S. Schools, Salford (nearly 2000 children), and include:
1. Blessed Saviour, hear us as we cry. 1872.
2. Happy were those mothers. 1866.
3. In God's holy dwelling. 1873.
4. Lord, on Thy day, within Thy holy dwelling. 1877.
5. Lord, Thy children holy leading. 1875.
6. My Saviour, be thou near me, When I lie down. 1874.
7. O Jesus! [Saviour; we have promised Hencforth to be Thine Own. Confirmation. 1871.
8. Sweet day of rest which God has given. Sunday. 1864.

While the sun is shining. Work. 1869.

These 9 hymns are in Canon T. A. Stowell's 1877 ed. of his father's Sel., and of these Nos. 3 and 9 are the most popular. He is also the author of:
13. Saviour, we are young and weak. The Christian Race. In Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881.

Several of these are popular hymns for children, and will no doubt gradually come into somewhat extensive use. [J. J.]

STRAFFORD, Elizabeth, daughter of H. Strafford, of Belper, b. in London, Oct. 30, 1828; d. at Belper, April 4, 1869. Her hymns appeared in Hymns for the Colleets throughout the Year, for the Use of Children, 1857 (W. F. Stevenson's Hymns. for Ch. and Home. 1875). From this, "God Almighty heareth ever" (Love of God), "Once to our world there came" (Passiontide), and "We praise Thee, we bless Thee, O Father in heaven" (Praise for Salvation), have come into C. U. [J. J.]

STRAUSS, Victor Friedrich von, was b. at Bückeburg, Schaumburg-Lippe, Sept. 18, 1809. He became a student of law at the Universities of Erlangen, Bonn, and Göttingen. In 1832 he married Albertine von Torney, daughter of a Hannoverian landed proprietor; and, in 1872, at the request of her relations, added her name to his own (Strauss and Torney), having been previously, in 1851, raised to the Austrian nobility. Having entered the diplomatic service of Schaumburg-Lippe, in 1832, he was appointed, in 1840, Archivrat at Bückeburg; and attended the Frankfurt Diet as Geheimrat, in 1850, as the accredited representative of Schaumburg-Lippe. He was also, from 1853 to 1866, the regular representative of Schaumburg-Lippe, at the North German Diet. Thereafter he retired on a pension, and went at Easter, 1869, to Erlangen, where he wrote a tr. of the works of the Chinese philosopher Lao-tse, with a commentary (pub. 1870). In 1872 he removed to Dresden, where he still in Lent. Contributed to Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881.

Mrs. Streathfield has also a "Litanv for a Children's Service," in A Little Garland of the Saints, 1877. Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5 and 7 of the above hymns are in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, and they all rank with the sweetest and most tender of modern verses for children. Some have been arranged as songs, and have been set to music by M. S. Skeffington. Mrs. Streathfield's prose works include Meditations on the Seven Last Words, 1874; and Words of Comfort, 1875.

STRYKER, MELANCTON W.

Strong, Nathan, D. D., a leading Congregational divine of his day, was b. in Windham, Connecticut, Oct. 16, 1748, and educated at Yale College, where he graduated in 1768. He first studied law, but soon turned his attention to the ministry. In January 1771 he became the Pastor of the First Congregational Church at Hartford, and remained there to his death in 1816. In 1796 he won much repute through his essay on The Doctrine of Eternal Misery consistent with the Infinite Benevolence of God. He founded the Connecticut Evangelical Magazine, in 1800, and also took a prominent part in establishing the Connecticut Home Mission Society in 1801. His degree of D.D. was conferred by the University of Princeton. His services to American hymnology, as the principal editor of the Hartford Sel. [American Hymnody, p. 57, 1799], have been very great. As in that Sel. the author's names were not given, most of his numerous contributions thereto cannot be identified. Six of these hymns, however, are reproduced in Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, with his name attached thereto. These are:—

1. Ais, alas, how blind I've been. The Sinner awakened.

2. Blest Lord, behold the guilty scorn. Prayer for oppressors to be relieved.

3. Long have I walked this dreary road. The Sinner's Complaint.

5. Smote by the law, I'm justly slain. The Law, and the Gospel Ministerial to Sinners, 1818.

6. The summer harvest spreads the fields. The Great Harvest.

In addition to these the following are from the Hartford Sel., 1799 (but not in the Village Hys.) They are the best known and most widely used of Strong's hymns:—

8. Swell the anthems, raise the song. National Thanksgiving.

STRYKER, MELANCTON WOOLESEY, D.D., b. of the Rev. Isaac Pierson Stryker, was b. at Vernon, New York, Jan. 7, 1851, and educated at Hamilton College (1872) and Auburn Theo.
STRYKER, MELANCTHON W.

Sturm, Christoph Christian, s. of Johann Jakob Sturm, lawyer (Imperial notary) at Augsburg, was b. at Augsburg, Jan. 23, 1740. He studied at the University of Marburg (M.A. 1761) and Halle. He was then appointed, in 1762, as one of the masters in the Pardagogium at Halle, and in 1765 became Con- rector of the school at Sor.-u., in Brandenburg. In 1767 he returned to Halle as fourth pastor of the Market Church, and became third pastor in the same year. He left Halle in 1770, to become second pastor of the church of the Holy Spirit at Magdeburg, where he passed the happiest part of his professional life, and where he wrote most of his devotional works. Finally, in 1778, he was appointed chief pastor of St. Peter's Church at Hamburg. Here he at first lived happily, beloved and respected as a preacher and author, until, in 1781, his view of the Salvation of the Heathen led J. M. Gootze, chief pastor of St. Catherine's Church in Hamburg, to accuse him of Rationalism, &c. The resulting controversy embittered and shortened Sturm's life. In his latter years he suffered from a weak chest; and in the night of Aug. 10-11, 1786, he was seized with an attack of spitting of blood, from which he never recovered. He d. at Hamburg, on Aug. 26, 1786 (Koch, vi, 357; Bodc, p. 158, &c.).

Sturm is best known to English readers by his devotional works, which were for some time very popular, viz., his "Conferences with the Lord in the Morning and Evening (Unterrichtungen mit Gott in der Morgestunden, &c., Halle, 1768), and his "Reflections on the Works of God" (Unterrichtungen über die Werke Gottes, &c., Halle, 1776). He was one of the most prolific hymn-writers of the Rationalistic period, being the author of more than 400 hymns. His productions are less dear to most of the time, and are not without earnestness, devoutness, and literary power, but they are often too rhetorical, and not sufficiently simple. They found great favour with the compilers of hymn-books from 1765 to 1848, but not many of them are retained in later collections. He was the author of more than 400 hymns in German and Dutch. We need only note the following:—(1) "Der Christ ans Sonntage, Halle & Leipzig, 1764-65 (Hamburg Library). This was a weekly paper, which contained hymns by Sturm. (2) "Sammlung geistlicher Gesänge über die Werke Gottes in der Kirche Halle, 1773 (Brit. Mus. and Wernigerode Library). Over 40 of the hymns are originals by Sturm. (3) "Vollständiges Gesangbuch für Kinder, Halle, 1777 (Hamburg Library). More than 60 hymns seem to have been written by Sturm for this work. (4) "Predigtgebäude, Hamburg, 1779-86 (Brit. Mus.). An eight years' course of sermon outlines on the Gospels for Sundays and Festivals; with over 60 hymns by Sturm, some being recasts from other authors. (b) "Lieder und Kirchengesänge, Hamburg, 1765 (Royal Library, Hammev). With 54 hymns, many being recasts of his earlier hymns, made of himself or by J. S. Dietrich. (c) "Gesangbuch für Gottesfreunde und Lieb- haber der Natur, Hamburg, 1761 (Hamburg Library). More than 60 of the hymns seem to have been written by Sturm for this work. (5) "Gesangbuch für außenstehende Leh- rer der Natur, Augsburg, 1785 (Hamburg Library). More than 60 hymns seem to have been written by Sturm for this work.

The hymns by Sturm which have passed into English are:—

Sturm, Julius Carl Reinhold, was born July 21, 1816, at Köstritz, in the principality of Reuss (younger line). After being a student of theology at Jena, from 1837 to 1841, he was for two years a private tutor at Heilbronn on the Neckar, and then, for a year, at Saxon Switzerland, where he became tutor to Prince Heinrich XIV. of Rome; and after the Prince's confirmation, in 1848, acted as tutor to him for three years more at the Gymnasium in Meiningen. He was then appointed pastor at Gößchen, near Schleiz, in the end of 1850; and pastor at Köstritz, in 1858, where he still (1859) lives as Kirchenrath and Court preacher (Koch, vii. 284; Ms. from the author, &c.). Sturm is one of the most important of modern German sacred poets. Among his works of this nature may be mentioned:—

From these works a large number of pieces have passed into recent collections of German sacred poetry, and a few into recent German official hymn-books. A considerable number have been translated by Lady John Manners, the Rev. J. Kelly, and others, but none have passed into English hymn-books. [J. M.]

Sturm, Leonhard, became Master in the Latin School, and Cantor (precensor) in St. George's Church, at Nördlingen, Bavaria, in 1835. In the church registers at Nördlingen he is described as "of Felzburg in the Pfalz." (Pfalzburg in Alsace). He d. at Nördlingen, Sept. 11, 1862, aged 74 (Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 62; 1888, pp. 17-19, 178, &c.).

Eight hymns, by Sturm, are included in the Maggie of the Neumarkter christlichen Selbstverwaltung (Ansbach), 1664-65 (Heidelberg University Library, and eleven in the Nördlinger Kirchen-Schall, der Vorwärts, 1855, 9th ed. (Wien: Warnitz's Library). Only one of these has passed into English, viz.

'Ihr fahr dahin mit Freuden. For the Dying. The first stanza is taken almost verbatim from a piece by Martin Rinkart (see p. 98, &c.), on seven stanzas, which carry out Rinkart's idea without borrowing anything more from him. The initial letters of Sturm's eight stanzas are:—

Tn. and Odu. in 1677. Possibly the hymn was written at some period when she was dangerously ill. Sturm's hymn appeared in the Nördlinger R., 1876, as above (it is not in the Ansbach R., 1864-65); and in the Blätter für Hymnologie, p. 18, in full, from the Nördlinger G. R. of 1845. It is also in the Leich-Gesang-Buch, Rothenburg on the Tauber, 1859, p. 1, in the Wurttemberg. G. R., 1841, No. 311, and others. Tr. as—

Sublime numen, ter potens, ter maximum. [Holy Trinity.] Appeared in the Sens Rer., 1726, and the Paris Rer., 1736, as the hymn at Matins for Trinity Sunday. Text in Car. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. God most high, thrice mighty God. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hs., and Tune Bk., 1852-53, Trinity, No. 8; and Rice's Selection from the same, 1870, No. 90.

Other trs. are:

1. All-sacred, all-illuminated, Three in One, by I. Williams, in the British Mag., Sep. 1839, and his Hymn to the Parishes Bre., 1837, p. 161.

2. Godhead sublime, Tr. great, k. D. Chambers. 1857. [J. J.]

Summae Deos clementiae. St. ii., Da dexteram surgentibus. [Trinity Sunday.] This cento was added to the Roman Breviary at the revision of 1568, and is found at p. 433 of the ed. pub. at Rome in 1570, as the hymn at Matins on Trinity Sunday. It consists of st. i. of the hymn noted below, and of st. ii. of the hymn, "Aeterna coelorum gloria," with an added doxology. At the revision of 1628-32 st. i. was rewritten, beginning, "Summac Pater clementiae" (st. ii. "Da dexteram surgentibus"), and this form is repeated in the editions of this revision, and in Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Transiations in C U:—

1. Parent of all, whose love displayed. By Bp. R. Mant, in his Ancient Hs., &c., 1837, p. 65, ed. 1871, p. 113. In the English H. L., 1852 and 1861, it is altered to "Almighty God, whose love displayed." [J. M.]

2. O Thou eternal Source of love. St. ii. Is night to us, &c. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 109, and his Hs. & Poems, 1875, p. 62. It is given in a few collections only.

Transiations not in C U:—

1. O God, by whose command I am sway'd. Prim. 1706. In D. Chippen's Anima Sancitate, 1884.

SUMMAE DEUS CLEMENTIAE

Summae Dei clementiae. Munde factor machine. [Saturday Morning.]

This has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, as by Hincmar, in 857, but it is not one of the twelve hymns received as genuine by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose, nor is it included by Birraghi as one of the hymns of Sant' Agostino, 1586. Daniel, i. No. 24, gives both this text and that of the Roman Breviary, 1632

(below), and at iv. p. 38, cites it as in a

Rh. inam. among the hymns of the 15th cent., at Tricier. Among the British Museum

 MSS. it is found in three 13th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xi. f. 246; Jul. A. vi, f. 30; Harl. 2961, f. 224b); in a Mozarabic Hymnarium of the 11th cent. (Addl. 30851, f. 175); in a Mozarabic Breviary of the 11th cent. (Addl. 30848, f. 88), &c. It is in a MS. of the 14th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 237); in three MSS. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 413, 414; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Saturturk's Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. ii 32, f. 9). In the Roman Breviary, 1632, it begins "Summae

Pares clementiae, Mundis regi qui machiname." The original form is included in the older Roman (Venice, 1778), Sarum, York,

Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, for Saturday and Matins. This text is also to be found in Wackernagel, i. No. 5: Hymnarium Sarisc.

1851. P. 57; in D. C. Brews's Hymnarium

Mozacensic, 1888, from a MS. of the 11th cent., &c. The revised text of the Roman Breviary, 1632, is given in the recent ed. of that revision, in Daniel, i. No. 24, and Card.

Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865.

See also note on the previous hymn. [J. M.]

Both forms of this hymn have been rendered

into English, viz.:

1. Summae Dei clementiae, Mundia.

By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn, and Tune BK., 1852-55.

D. Chambers, in his Psalter, 1852, p. 248.

3. Great God of boundless mercy, hear. By J.

D. Chambers, in his Lauda Sion, 1857, p. 31.

This is given in the Hymner, 1882, with extensive alterations, as, "O God of mercy passing thought."

ii. Summae Pares clementiae, Mund.

1. O Thou eternal Source of love. St. i. For Thy dear mercy's sake, &c. By E. Caswall, in his

Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 33, and his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 20. In limited use.

for the Year, 1897, No. 214. E. Caswall, altered.

3. Father of mercies infinite. By Card. Newman, in his Verses on Religious Subjects, 1853,

p. 68; and his Verses on Various Occasions,

1868, p. 215. It is in the Marquess of Bute's

Roman Brevi., into English, 1879, O. Shipley's

Annum Sanctis, 1884, &c, and several other collections.

Other Hys. are:

1. O God, by Whose command is sway'd. Primer, 1706.

SUMME PATER

2. O God of graciousness, Maker of all we see Hymnarium Anglicanum. 1841.

1848.

4. Father, Thou Whose love and care. R. Campbell.

1859.

5. Great Source of goodness, Godhead blest. St. lll.,

May we Thy mercy, &c. J. Wallace. 1874. [J. J.]

Summae, Deus, clementiae, Septem

Dolores Virginis. [Dolores of the B. V. M.]

This is the hymn at Lauds in the office of the Seven Dolours, which was declared in 1814 to be not obligatory. The office is found in the Proprium officiorum, obitii servorum

B. M. V. in Germania, Prague, 1720, and includes three stanzas, viz.:

Vesper. O quam superabat luxuriam. (See Various.)

Matins. Jam into subitus. (p. 578, &c.)

Lauds. Summae, Deus, clementiae.

In the Kymde ed., 1746, of the Roman Breviary, this hymn is at p. cx. The text is to be found in recent eds. of that Breviary, and also in Daniel iv., p. 308. Tr. as:

1. God, in Whom all grace doth dwell. E. Cas-wall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 173; and his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 93. It is given in a few Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools.

2. God of mercy, let us run. By F. W. Faber, in Hys. for the use of the Schools and Cony. of St.

Wisfard's Staffordshire, 1849; Jesus and Mary,

&c, 1849; Oratory Hys., 1854, and his Hymns,

1862.

Another Hys. is:

Great God of clemency supreme. By J. Wallace.

1874. [J. M.]

Summe Pater, O Creator. [Life of our Lord.] This appears in J. M. Horst's Paradius Anima Christiana, Cologne, 1614, pp.

96-71, in the Section "On the Life and Passion of our Lord." It is entitled, " Rosarian D. N. Jesus Christi, praevisus vici Ae

Passionis ejus puncta, graves breviata com-plectent; ubercem meditandi materiam, facilemque praxim suppeditant." It opens with an introduction in 19 lines, the rest being divided into decades i.-v. There are three Hys.

of the complete poem, made in this order,

viz.:—(1) In Dr. Pusey's tr. of the Paradia

Anima Christiana, 1817, according to Canon

Liddon, the tr. is probably by W. J.

Copeland; (2) by F. W. Faber, in his Jesus and Mary, &c, 2nd ed., 1852, and (3) by Canon

F. Oskeley, in his tr. of the Paradia, 1850. These Hys. in the order of the poem, are:

Summe Pater, O Creator.

1. Father, All-creating Mind. Pusey.

2. Father! Creator! Lord most high. Faber.

Jesus through majestatis.

1. Jesus, for lost sinners' sake. Pusey.

2. Jesus, Whom from Thy throne didst come. Faber.

Jesus fonte beatissimae.

1. Jesus, as the waters crown Thee. Pusey.

2. Jesus, the Father's words approve. Faber.

3. Jesus, baptised, the Father's voice. Oskeley.

Jesus Deus et magister.

2. Jesus, Who deemed it not meet. Faber.

Jesus crucem dum portabat.

1. Jesus, now the hard cross bearing. Pusey.

2. Jesus, along Thy proper road. Faber.

Jesus nostras ob restas.

2. Jesus, all hail, Who for my sin. Faber.

3. Jesus, because of all our guilt. Oskeley.
From these, the following hymns have been selected:

1. Father, 'tis now the last day of the year. Fabor.
2. When the embers are down, and the day is gone. Fabor.
3. When, when I thought I saw a little lamb. Fabor.
4. When, when I saw the life of Christ. Fabor.

These hymns have been selected from the Cooke and Denton Church Hymnal, 1834. Another series of hymns is in the Boston Congregational Hymnal, 1834. These hymns of the 18th cent. are in the British and American Hymnals.

These hymns have been selected to form a-hymn-book of the 18th cent. in the British and American Hymnals. The 3rd Part of i. of the Morning Hymn should read: "Has waked me up from sleep, and not as in many collections.

[July]

Summi largior praemii. [Rerum.] Sometimes ascribed to St. Gregory the Great, but not assigned by him to the Benedictine editors. It is found in three ms. of the 10th cent. of the British Museum (Vesp. D. viii. f. 341; Harl. 2961, f. 257), and in the Latin Hymns of the Angle-Saxon Church (Surtees Society), 1831, p. 57, printed from ms. 11th cent. By Durandus (B. iii. 32, f. 196). In these ms. it begins "Summum largior." Among the St. Gall ms. it is in No. 95 of the 10th or 11th cent., and No. 414 of the 11th. It is also in a 10th cent. ms. at Bonn, No. 455. Also in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviraries, the Sarum use being at Matins on the 1st Sat. and daily up to the 3rd Sat. in Lent. The printable text is also in Monte, No. 75; and is printed in the Sarum Praelectiones, 1888. The printed text is also in Monte, No. 75; and is printed in the Sarum Praelectiones, 1888. The printed text is also in Monte, No. 75; and is printed in the Sarum Praelectiones, 1888.

Translations in C. U.:

1. Thou Who dost man to accord. By J. W. Hewett, in his Verses by a Country Curate, 1839, p. 34, from the text as in Daniel. It was included in an altered form in H. A. & M., 1861. The H. A. & M. text was repeated in the 1877 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns.

2. Giver of the perfect gift. By J. D. Ellet. made for and published in the English church, 1871, and again in Mr. Ellet's Hymnari, 1888.

Translations not in C. U.:

2. Dispenser of the gifts of heaven. J. D. Ellet, 1852, and 1857.

Summi Parentis Filio. [Lent. The Sacred Heart of Jesus.] Probably of the 18th cent. In the Roman Breviary, Lisbon, 1789, pars cæl. p. 461, it is the hymn at Lauds in the office of the Most Sacred Heart of Our Lord Jesus Christ. Text also in Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867. (See note on Queretariarum sacrament. Tr. as:"

To Christ, the Prince of Peace. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholic, 1849, p. 123, and in his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 69. It is a very great and powerful hymn-book, usually unaltered, but sometimes with the changes in the text made in A. A. M.

Another tr. is:

To Jesus, Son of God most high. J. Wallace, 1834.
SUMMI PUSILLUS

Summi pusillus grat Patria. Gillian de la Brunelleie [Common of a Just Man. Saints' Days.]. Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1680 and 1739. Also in the NARBONE Brev., 1709, as the hymn for first and second Vespers, in the Common of Just Persons. It is also in later French Breviaries; in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 99; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

Be not afraid, ye little flock. I. Williams, as the first of a series of trs. from the Paris Brev., contributed by him to the British Magazine. This appeared in Dec. 1833. It was republished in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 314, and in the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 201.

Other trs. are:—
1. Thou little flock whose Shepherd is above. J. Chandler, 1837.
2. To God, your mightiest Father, dear. J. D. Chambers, 1866.
3. Little flock, be not afraid. D. T. Morgan, 1889. [J. J.]

Summi Regis potentia. [St. Andrew.] This is found in a ms. of the early part of the 14th cent. in the Bolliel (Ashun-le, 1523, f. 236b), as a hymn in 6 st. and a doxology for the "Translation of St. Andrew." Mr. Chambers erroneously quotes the first line as "Rey Jostu potentissime." Mr. Chandler's tr. "O King Supreme, of boundless might," appeared in the 1863 Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 168, and again in his Lauda Syon, Pt. ii. 1866. [J. M.]

Supernae maris gaudia. Adam of St. Victor. [All Saints.] This sequence is, as Dr. Neale justly remarks, "one of the loveliest that Adam ever wrote." In it, contrary to the usual practice, the church triumphant is spoken of as the mother, the church militant as the daughter. Gautier, in his ed. 1881 of Adam's Oeuvres posth., gives it at p. 290 from a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat., Paris, No. 14452), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (B.N. No. 15015), and says it is also in a 12th cent. Antiphoner now in the Library at Chaumont, and formerly of the monastery of Montierend. It is also in a collection of sequences written circa 1199 (Calig. A. xiv. f. 30); and a French Missal of the end of the 13th cent. (Add. 29335, f. 439 b), both in the British Museum; and in a ms. of the latter half of the 13th cent. in the Bolliel (Ravelston, C. 510. f. 23 b). Among Missals it is found in an early 14th cent. Paris in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 239 b), and the Saints of 1491, and others. The printed text is also in Conv. No. 623: Daniel, v. p. 199; Krehren, No. 338; and D. S. Wrangham's Lit. Polity of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, vol. iii. p. 170. [J. M.]

Translations in the H. Noted, 1844, and again in the Medialas Hys., 2nd ed., 1863. It has passed into a few collections, including the Poet's H., 1867, the Hymnus, 1882, &c.

The strains of joy that ceaseless flow. By Harriet M. Chester, made for and first pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, and signed "H. M. C."

3. Christ's Church in heaven to-day. Rejoiceth. By C. S. Calverley, also made for and first pub. in the Hymnary, 1872. In the 2nd ed., 1872, it was considerably altered, and begins, "Christ's Church in heaven is glad to-day."

Translations not in C. U.:
2. Those endless joys the Church on earth pourtrays. D. T. Morgan, 1871, and 1890.
3. The Church on earth those joys pourtrays. D. S. Wrangham, 1861. [J. J.]

Supreme High Priest, the Magnific's Light. A. M. Toplady. [Christ the High Priest, orLet.]. 1st pub. in his Poems on Sacred Subjects, Dublin, 1759, p. 29, in 12 st. of 41, and again in Sedgwick's reprint of Toplady's Poetical Works, 1860. In Drummond and Greville's Ch. of England St. Bk., 1838, st. v.-vii. were given, unaltered, as "Ah, give me, Lord, the single eye. Those stanzas have passed into later collections. [J. J.]

Supreme Motor cordium. C. Coffin. [Saturday Evening; or Quinquagesima.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1839, No. 135; and in Hymni Sacri, p. 31, the same year. It is the hymn for Saturdays at Vespers from Trinity to Advent. The text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 34; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, and L.C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

1. Supreme Dispenser of the heart. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 31, and a few hymnals.
2. Great Mover of all hearts, Whose hand. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839. This is the most popular and widely used of the trs. of this hymn. It is in a large number of hymn-books, including H. A. & M., 1875, Thring's Coll., 1882, and others.

Other trs. are:—
2. Thou Ruler of the human heart. J. D. Chambers, 1857.
3. O Sovereign Mover of the heart. D. T. Morgan, 1889. [J. J.]

Supreme quales, Arbitr. Jean Baptiste de Sartois [Festival of an Apostle]. This is given in the Channic Brev., 1869, p. ii.; his Hymni Sacri et Nori, 1869, p. 190 (ed. 1898, p. 236); the Paris Brev., 1736; and later French Breviaries. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 80, with the omission of a stanza; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L.C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

1. Disposer Supreme, And Judge of the earth. I. Williams, pub., together with the Latin, in the British Magazine, June 1856 (vol. ix. p. 627), and again in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 271. It has passed, either in its full form or abbreviated, into a large number of hymn-books. Of the altered texts the most popular is that in H. A. & M., 1861-75. For congregational purposes this is one of the most successful of the translator's efforts.

2. What feeble instruments, 0 Lord. By J.
Supreme Rector coelitum. [Whitman Eev.] This anonymous hymn is in the Chaucie Breve., 1688, p. 506: the Paris Breve., 1736, and later French Breve. The text from the Paris Breve. is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, No. 78: Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M. Tr. as:—

1. Ruler of the hosts of light. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 88. It is found in a few collections. The popular tr. of this hymn is the cento in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1873. It is thus composed: st. i., Chandler; st. ii. 1. 2, Chandler, ii. 3, 4, Compilers; st. iii., Compilers; st. iv. v., Chandler, rewritten by the Compilers.

2. Dread King, to Whom the angelic hosts do cry. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brevei, 1839, p. 148; and Lyra Messianica, 1864.

Other trs. are:—
1. 0 King, most high, of earth and sky. W. J. Blyse. 1852-55.
2. Celestial Monarch, strong to quell. J. D. Chambers. 1857. [J. J.]

Surrexit Christus hodie. [Easter.] This hymn, or rather Easter Carol, exists in a great variety of forms. For the determination of the original text we have three ms. of the 14th cent., viz., a Munich ms. of the 14th cent., cited by Mone, No. 143; a Prag ms. of the 14th cent. cited by G. M. Droeves in his Cautiones Bohemicae, No. 183, and an Engellberg ms. of 1872 cited by Bäumker, i. p. 517. From these we obtain the following:—

1. "Surrexit Christus hodie
Humano pro salamane.

2. "Mortem qui passus corpore
Miserimo pro homine.

3. "Mulleres ad tumulum
Dona ferunt aromatum.

4. "Album videntes angelum
Annuntiantem gaudio.

5. "Mulleres a tremula
In Via sacra pergente.

6. "Pascallm pleno gaudio
Benedicamus Domino.

7. "Nulla sequens a me
Magnum est immensum.

8. "Laudentur sancta Trinitas.
Deo dirimus granias."

Of these eight stanzas 1-4 and 6 are found in all three ms., 5 in the Engelberg and Prag ms., 7 in the Engelberg and Munich, S. in the Engelberg and Prag. The text above is from the Munich ms.; the only variations of importance in the Prag ms. being ii. i. i., passus pridie and vii. i. i., Ergo cum dulce melito.

Droeves gives two additional st. which are probably of Bohemian origin, and are not found in the later printed books, viz.:—

9. "Ubique precessis aures,
Si munere beneficis hodie.
Quae dixit, discipulis.
Quis nos redemit sangine?

He quotes them from two ms. now at Prag.

viz. a Hofenfurt ms. circa 1410 (st. i-x.); and the Gradual of Jistebuzic circa 1420 (st. i-iii. v.-vii., ix. x.). The later stanzas are apparently all interpolations. Those given by Daniel i. No. 390, are:—

12. "Quarantex Jesus Domi-
" Petro endeine et carernarum.

Of these st. 12 is found in the second part of Leisnitritt's G. B. (R. C.), 1507; st. ii. in the Dillingen G. B. (R. C.), 1589; and st. iii. in the Specier ed. (R. C.) printed at Cologne, 1590. The order of stanzas in Daniel's text is 1-3, 11, 4-6, 12, 7, 13, 8; and he gives st. 7, 1, i. in "In hoc pascachl gaudio." The Dillingen G. B., 1589, gives four additional st. which need not here be printed. Wacken-

11. "To-day the Victor o'er His foes.
By J. M. Nye,
In his Medleal Hymn, 1851.

12. "S. Christ is risen this day, and brings.
J. W. Hewitt, in his Verses by a Country Parson, 1850.

13. "It has also often been translated into German. One of these trs. has passed into Eng. lish, viz.:—

Erstanden ist der heilige Christ. This is found in a great variety of forms. That which is tr. is given by Wackenagel, ii. p. 737, from a broadsheet printed at Nürnberg, 1644, and is No. 135 in the t. 1. E. S., 1921. It is in 19 st. of 2 l. with Hallelujah. St. i-ix are narrative, vii.-xxv. a dialogue between Mary and the angel, xviii. Mary to the chorus, xix. the chorus. It is based on st. i.-viii. x. of the Latin. This form probably originally formed part of an Easter play. So is "Christ our Lord is risen to-day." In Lyra Invenc, 1708, p. 12. [J. M.]

Sutton, Amos, D.D., was b. at Sevenoaks, Kent, on Jan. 21, 1802. Though educated with a view to secular business, when about the age of 21 he felt constrained to offer himself for service in connection with the General Baptist Foreign Missionary Society. He was sent to India; and in the year 1825 was stationed at Cuttack, in the province of Orissa, where, with intervals during which he visited England and America, he laboured most usefully until his death on Aug. 17, 1854. He was gifted as a translator; and compiled an Uriya Dictionary, besides translating a number of English books into that language. He also prepared the first Uriya Hymn Book, 179 of the hymns being his own composition. [Missions, Foreign] The degree of D.D. was conferred on him by the College of Waterfille, U.S.A. On his visit to England in 1833 he composed a farewell hymn to the tune of "Auld lang syne"—"Hall sweetest, dearest tie that binds." (Part-
g. It soon became very popular, and is now in C. U. Another hymn written about the same time, entitled "The Macedonian Cry," is now almost forgotten. [W. R. S.] Swain, Joseph, was b. at Birmingham in 1761, and after being apprenticed to an engraver, removed to London. After a time he became a decided Christian, and being of an emotional poetic temperament, began to give expression to his new thoughts and feelings in hymns. In 1785 he was baptized by the Rev. Dr. Rippon, and in 1791 became minister of a Baptist congregation in East Street, Walworth. After a short but popular and very useful ministry, he d. April 15, 1796.

Swain pub. the following:—

In addition to a limited number of Swain's hymns, annotated under their respective first lines, the following, from his Walworth Hps., 1792, and the 2nd ed., 1796, are also in U. C. —

1. Brethren, while we sojourn here. Mutual Encouragement.
2. Children of the King of grace. Holy Baptism.
3. Christ the Lord will come again. Second Advent.
5. How sweet, how heavenly is the sight. Communion of Saints.
6. If expectation sweet. Second Advent.
7. Lift up your heads, ye gates. Ascension.
8. Love, the sweet bond that draws. A Flower on the Emblem of Christ.
9. O how the thought that I shall know. Heaven Anticipated.
10. Sometimes it begins with st. ii. “For ever anticipated.
11. to behold Him shine” (p. 387, l.).
13. Pilgrims we are to Canaan bound. Pilgrimage of Life.
14. Praise ye the Lord, the eternal King. Divinity of Christ.
15. Praise your Redeemer, praise His Name. Praise for Redemption.
16. What is it for a saint to die? Death and Burial.
17. What must [will] it be to swell above? Heaven Anticipated.

18. When firm I [we] stand on Zion's hill. Confidence.

From his Redemption, a Poem in Five Books, 1791, the following hymns are also in C. U.:

Of these hymns the most widely known are Nos. 1, 5, 6, and 20. We may add that several of Swain's hymns appeared in The Theological Miscellany, 1784-1789.

Swain, Leonard, d.d., was b. at Concord, New Haven, Feb. 26, 1821, and educated at Dartmouth College and Andover. In 1847 he became a Congregational minister at Nashua, New Haven; and in 1852 of Central Church, Providence, Rhode Island. He d. July 14, 1869. His hymns, "My soul, it is thy God" (The Christian Race), and "My soul, weigh not thy life" (The Good Fight of Faith), appeared anonymously in The Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and their authorship has only recently been determined. The second hymn is the more widely used of the two. [F. M. B.]

Swain, Edward, b. at London, Sep. 21, 1795. He was for about 40 years a deacon of Craven Chapel (Congregational) under the pastorate of Dr. Leifelth and others; one of the directors of the London Missionary Society, and founder and chairman of the Printer's Insurance Aid Society. He d. April 22, 1862. (Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 441.)

Mr. Swain wrote several tracts, and also printed for private circulation The Hand of God, A Fragment, with Poems, Hymns, and Versions of Psalms, 1839. His hymns, "Hail! blessed communion of love" (Holy Communion), and "Lord Jesus, let Thy watchful care" (For Emigrants), were written in 1855 for the New Cong. H. Bk., and given therein, 1859. See also, "O how the thought that we shall know" (p. 387, l.).

Swedishborgian Hymnody. The hymnody of the religious body known as The New Church signified by the Jerusalem in the Revelation, or briefly, The New Church, commenced d. with the Rev. Joseph Proud. Proud was the son of a General Baptist minister, and was b. at Beaconfield, March 22, 1745. Entering the Baptist ministry, he became pastor successively at Knipton, Fleet, and Norwich. In 1788 his religious views underwent a change, and the following year he openly adopted those of Emanuel Swedenborg. He at once broke into song; and it is told us by his biographer, the Rev. E. Mayhew, that his first volume of more than 300 original hymns occupied him only some three months in its production. This volume appeared in 1790; again, with additions, in 1791; and, again in 1798. The title of the 3rd ed. is:—

Hymns and Spiritual Songs for the Use of the Lord's New Church, signified by the Jerusalem in the Revelation, by Joseph Proud, N. H. M. London, Printed by R. Hudson, and sold at the New Jerusalem Temple in Cross Street, Station Gardens, E. d. 1389.

This volume contained 359 original hymns of decided merit. After leaving Norwich Proud went to Birmingham, where he suffered great misfortunes. He passed on to Manchester, but in a few months again returned to Birmingham. Subsequently London was the scene of his labours for a time. During his residence there he printed a small book of Hymns and Songs for Children in 1810. Three years later he returned to Birmingham, where he d. on Aug. 3, 1826. The esteem in which his hymns are held by The New Church is seen in their authorised hymn-book of 1880, in which a total of 750 hymns, 164 are by him.

2. The next hymn-writer of note in The New Church was the Rev. Manon Sibylly (b. 1757), whose Hymns and Spiritual Songs appeared, in 1802, from the press of the same printer as Proud's book; but also "sold by the Author, No. 35, Gionwell Street." It contained 222 original hymns and 11 doxologies. The literary merits of this volume are below that of Proud's work. The hymns are solid and practical, and are more akin to those by Beddome and Dodridge than to those either by Wesley or Watts. Sibly died in 1840.

3. The first Swedeborghian minister in England was the Rev. William Cowherd, a man of high scientific attainments, who had been for some time a clergyman in the Church of England. Shortly after joining the Swedeborghian body he established a cause in Manchester, which he called "The Bible Christian Church." The members of this society held the doctrine of Swedeborg in a modified form, with the additional obligations of total abstinence from animal food and intoxicating liquors. (See Various.) For their use Cowherd compiled Selected Hymns for Christian Worship. By the Rev. W. Cowherd, Manchester. Printed by Snuer & Russell, 1800. The 3rd ed., pub. at Stourport in 1810, contained 218 hymns; the 5th ed., printed at Salford in 1818, was increased to 221 hymns, a few of which were by Cowherd, but the greater part were taken from Proud, Sibly, Watts, Wesley, and others.

4. In 1813, the Rev. Robert Hindmarsh, then minister of the Swedeborgian congregation in Salford, compiled a small volume of hymns, chiefly selected from Proud and Sibly, which he published as:—

Hymns for the Use of The New Church, signified by the New Jerusalem in the Apocalypse, Carefully Corrected, and arranged under proper heads. Manchester. F. Davis, 1813. It contained 153 hymns and 5 doxologies.

5. Next, in order of date, came a small volume as:

Original Hymns, for Family and Congregational Worship, chiefly designed for the use of those who acknowledge the Supreme Divinity of the great Redeemer. By P. H. Hudson. Manchester. J. Gleere, 1819.

This volume contains only 45 hymns and 2 doxologies. Whilst some of these hymns do not rise above mediocrity, others have certainly higher literary and poetic merit than those of either Proud or Sibly, and one or two are not unworthy of C. Wesley. Of his hymns 6 are in the authorised hymn-book of 1880. Of his life little is known. He was at one time with the Rev. Richard Jones, as joint minister of the Manchester and Radcliffe Swedeborgian Societies. Afterwards he preached in St. George's Chapel, near Oldham Road, Manchester; and, at a later period, he settled in Hull.

6. In 1822 a new departure was made. The General Conference of The New Church in session, respectively, at Manchester and London, authorised a Committee to prepare a hymn-book for general use, "adapted not only for public devotion, but also for private instruction and instruction, and which should form a useful and agreeable companion on every day of the week, at home as well as in the public assemblies of the Church." The outcome of this was the first authorised hymn-book of the Swedeborghians. It was pub. as:—

This collection contains 690 hymns and 7 doxologies. While borrowing largely from Proud and Sibly, it is at once catholic and eclectic. The alterations made in the text of the hymns of Watts, Wesley, and others to adapt them to the creed of The New Church are less frequent and distasteful than in many similar cases. A singular feature in this collection is the large number of Unitarian hymns found therein, when doctrinal differences would have suggested the necessity for their exclusion. This hymn-book was mainly compiled by the Rev. William Mason (b. 1758 d. 1830) of whose original hymns about 60 are included therein. Mason subsequently published a separate collection as:—

Hymns of Spiritual Experience, Eminently Calculated to Promote the Growth of Individual Piety. Chiefly selected, with a few originals. London, 1840.

This volume contains 166 hymns, of which 23 are by Mason. We may add that Mason possessed musical gifts of no mean order, and that he composed a number of hymn tunes.

7. In 1872, an authorised Supplement to the 1824 collection was published as:

In this Supplement translations of Latin and German hymns are found for the first time in Swedeborgian hymnody. This blending of the old and the new was hardly successful, and the hymns were more didactic than lyrical. The general result was felt to be more unsatisfactory, and led to the appointment of a Committee, to whom was entrusted the compilation of a new hymnal. Of this committee the Rev. Jonathan Bayley, D.D., was the chairman, and the Rev. John Presham, the secretary. The result of their labours was published in 1880, as:

This collection contains 750 hymns, and deserves the attention of compilers of hymnals. To it Dr. Bayley contributed 5 hymns, the Rev. Joseph Dean 3, and "J. C." 3. From this collection a selection for mission service was published in 1883.

8. The Swedeborgians have been among the foremost in recognizing the value of hymns and music in Sunday schools. As already noted, Proud's Hymns and Songs for Children (1810) were published contemporaneously with the early efforts, in the same direction by Anne and James Taylor. In 1833, an excellent little collection was published by the Rev. E.
SWEET AS THE SHEPHERDS

Madeley, which went through several editions. In 1866 it was greatly enlarged and revised from a poetical and musical point of view, by Mr. John Bragg, of Birmingham. To this revised edition in 1867, by "The New Church Sunday School Union," in its complete form it contains 336 hymns. [See Various.] [W. T. B.]

Sweet as the Shepherd's tuneful reed. W. Shirley. [Spring.] Pub. in The Coll. of Hys. sung in the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapels, Bath, W. Gye, N. D. (circa 1775), No. 86, in 4 st. of 6 l. In common with all the hymns in that Coll. it is anonymous; but in the "Life of the Countess, 1839, vol. ii. p. 291, it is definitely stated to be by W. Shirley. The most widely known form of this hymn begins with st. ii., "Peace, troubled soul, whose plaintive moan. It is composed of st. ii., iii., and iv., and appeared in the American Prayer Blk. Coll, 1826, No. 130. It is repeated in several American hymn-books. [J. J.]

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright. G. Herbert. [Virtue, Spring.] Appeared in his posthumous work, The Temple, 1633, in 4 st. of 4 l. As a poem on "Virtue."

(Thos. Chantonn. Classics, ed. 1887, p. 140.) It is a beautiful poem, but is unsuited as a hymn for congregational use, although found in a few collections for that purpose. I. Walton's reference to it in his Complete Angler, 1653, is very tender and just: ""Piscator.—And now, scholar! my direction for thy fishing is ended with this shower, for it has done rainine. And now, look about you, and see how pleasantly that meadow looks; and, as the earth smells as sweetly too. Come, let me tell you what you holy Herbert says of such days and showers as these; and then we will thank God that we enjoy them. "Sweet day, so cool," &c.

Sweet feast of love divine. Sir E. Denny. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in his Sel. of Hymns, 1839, No. 295; and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1848, p. 96 (3rd ed. 1859, p. 66), in 4 st. of 4 l. It is in C. U. in its original form; but much more extensively as "Blest feast of love divine." In America especially, this is the popular form of the hymn. [J. J.]

Sweet is the last, the parting ray. [Saturday Evening.] This hymn is usually attributed to Charles Jenkins, for some years a Congregational Minister in Portland, Maine, but upon insufficient evidence. D. C. Colton, in a sermon, says that it was repeated by Mr. Jenkins in a sermon, and the congregation supposed it to have been his own. No other claimant having appeared it is often attributed to him on this uncertain ground. J. Curtis, in his Union Coll., Lond., 1827, No. 519, gives it as from the "American Monthly Mag." [F. M. B.]

Sweet is the scene when virtue dies. Anna L. Barbauld, nee Aikin. [Death and Burial.] Appeared in the Leisure Hour Improved, pub. at London, 1801, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in The Works of Anna Laetitia Barbauld, with Memoir, 1825, p. 313, with the heading "The Death of the Virtuous." In the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, it begins, "Sweet is the scene when Christians die." On the death of Mr. Barbauld Nov. 11, 1808, Mrs. Barbauld, in the "Dirge," beginning "Pure Saviour! O when art thou now" (p. 941, ii.). From the date of the publication of "Sweet is the scene when virtue dies" (1809), it is probable that it was the outcome of the same sad event. The popular form of this hymn is, "How blest the righteous when he dies," which appeared in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 185. It was first printed Jan. 13, 1824, James Montgomery gave an account of the Rev. T. Cotterill's funeral, in which he says concerning "How blest the righteous when he dies," which was sung on that occasion:

"This hymn was not the composition of the deceased, as has been mistakenly reported. It was extracted with some modifications from a longer copy of verses which appeared in the Iris many years ago, the author of which we understand to be Mr. Robert Barnard, formerly of this town, and one of the Society of Friends. The opening of the original lines being 'Sweet is the scene when virtue dies,' was altered by Mr. Cotterill, &c.) for an obvious reason when the stanzas were adopted for Mr. Cotterill's hymn-book. We can further say that he was peculiarly fitted with them. The following exquisitely poetical stanza follows the first as they stand in the hymn-book:

"So fades a summer cloud away,
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eye of day,
So dies a wave along the shore."

From this extract it is evident that the alterations in the text of the poem adapt it for congregational purposes were made by Montgomery for Cotterill. Montgomery's guess is as to the authorship of the original was disproved by the publication of Mrs. Barbauld's Works in 1825 with the poem therein. This form of the hymn is in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Sweet is the work, my God, my [and] King. J. Stubbs. [Ps. xci. or Sunday.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c, 1710, p. 237, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed, "A Psalm for the Lord's Day." In G. Whitefield's Hys. for Social Worship, &c, 1753, No. 20, st. i., iii., vii., were given as "Sweet is the work. O God, our King." This was repeated in M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 165. A. M. Toplady gave the same stanzas in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, as No. 24, but with another change in some stanzas, and the opening line as "Sweet is the work, my God and King." This reading is found in some modern collections in the Church of England. Other arrangements of the text are given in hymn-books in G. Britain and America. It is a good and popular hymn. [J. J.]

Sweet Saviour, bless us ere we go. F. W. Fulcher. [Evening.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, 2nd thousand, 1852; and again in his Hys., 1853, p. 254, in 7 st. of 6 l. It was written in 1849 for use as an Evening Hymn at the Brompton Roman Catholic Oratory, of which Dr. Fulcher was then the Superior. In most hymnals the last stanza is usually omitted, or if retained, the second line, "My Lord and Philip, near us be," is altered. In some collections it opens with "Dear Saviour, bless us ere we go"; in others, "O Saviour, bless us ere we go." In the Welling-
1. When evening shadows gather. Evening. Written in 1873, and first sung in public at the Wesleyan Choral Festival in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in 1874. It was included in his Hymn for Home, etc., No. 1, in 3 st. of 4 lines. It then passed into Thring's Coll., 1892, the Prim. Hymnal, 1897, and others. It is a very beautiful Evening Hymn.

2. Have you heard the sweet, sweet story? Life of Jesus. Written in 1874, and pub. in his Hymn for Home, etc., 1875, No. 4, in 3 st. of 4 lines, with a chorus of 4 lines.

3. When life is gay with sunshine. Refrain to Trouble. Written in 1874, and pub. in his Hymn for Home, etc., 1875, No. 5, in 3 st. of 4 lines.

Of these hymns No. 2, 3 have been largely used at Sunday School Anniversaries and similar gatherings.

SYNESTHUS

In the Gospel Magazine, 1876, &c., i.e. Jehoiada Brewer.

Symonning, Andrew James, s. of R. B. Symonning, of Paisley, Scotland, was b. there on July 27, 1825. After receiving his education at the Grammar School of his native town he entered into business with his father and brother. During the intervals of business he has devoted himself to literature. His publications include Harebell Chimes, 1848; Geneeese, and Other Poems, 1851; The Beautiful in Nature, Art, and Life, 1852; Pen and Pencil Sketches of Faroe and Iceland, 1862; The Reasonableness of Faith; with an Appendix containing Hymns and Verses of Consolation and Hope, 1870; Hints to our Boys, 1881; Poems, and other works. He also edited Blackie's series of Men of Light and Learning, and has contributed to a large number of magazines in Great Britain and the United States. Several of his hymns have been pub. by J. and R. Parlane, Paisley, as leaflets, and include:—

1. Hear Jesus say to Thee. Jesus the Way, the Truth, and the Life. (1869.)

2. I long for rest. Rest desired. (1869.)

3. In love and mercy have we. Morning or Evening. (1869.)

5. Peace among the warring hearts. Comfort. (1869.)

Of these hymns No. 5 is the best known and most widely used. Taken as a whole Mr. Symonning's hymns are better suited for private devotion than for public worship.

SYNAPOLIS, a native of Cyrene, b. circa 375. His descent was illustrious. His pedigree extended through seventeen centuries, and in the words of Gibbon, "could not be equalled in the history of mankind." He became distinguished for his eloquence and philosophy, and as a statesman and patriot he took a noble stand. When the Goths, led by their threatening his country he went to the court of Arcadius, and for three years tried to rouse it to the dangers that were coming on the empire. But Gibbon says, "The court of Arcadius indulged the zeal, applauded the eloquence, and neglected the advice of Synesius." In 410 he was made Bishop of Rome, but much against his will. He d. in 450. Synesius's opinions have been variously estimated. That he was imbued with the Neo-Platonic philosophy there is no doubt [see Greek Hymnody, v. and viii.], but that be was a semi-Christian, as alleged by Mosheim. [see Eccles. History, Lond., ed. 1815, vol. i., pp. 310, 439, and Notes], or that he denied the doctrine of the Resurrection as stated directly by Gibbon [see Decline and Fall, vol. ii.], and indirectly by Bingham [see Christian Antig, Lond., 1843, i. pp. 461-2] is very doubtful. Mr. Chattfield, who has translated his Odes in his Songs and Hymns of the Greek Christian Poets, 1876, contends that his tenth ode, "Lord, thou hast not a semi-Christian" was not a semi-Christian; but held the doctrine of the Resurrection. The first is clear; but the second is open to doubt. He certainly prays to the Redeemer, but there is nothing in the hymn to show that he looked upon the Redeemer as being clothed in His risen body.

This tenth ode is the only Ode of Synesius, which has come into C. U. The original Odes are found in the Anth. Graeca Carth. Christ., 1871, p. 2 seq., and Mr. Chattfield's trs. in his Songs, &c., 1876. [Greek Hymanody, § v. and Μετοχ Χριστ. Synesius Odes have also tr. by Alan Stevenson, and included in his The Ten Hymns of Synesius, Bishop, A.D. 410 Tr. by Tyron, A.D. 1871. And some occasional Pieces by Alan Stevenson, LL.B. Printed for Private Circulation, 1865. [See Various.] J. J.]

Syriac Hymnody. No history of Christian hymnody can be deemed complete which fails to give some account of the hymns of the other Eastern churches of Syria, Upper Mesopotamia, and Western Persia. At an early period in Christian history a fountain of sacred poetry and song burst forth in that region, from which for a time there flowed a stream of marvellous fulness; but soon the stream dwindled, and its flow became intermittent, until, by the middle of the 14th century, like a river lost in desert sands, it had almost, if not entirely, disappeared.

Syriac, the language of these ancient hymns and poems, is akin to the Hebrew, and resembles, if it is not identical with, the language spoken by the common people of that part of the world. It is still used in religious services, like Latin in the Church of Rome; but, as a vernacular in Syria proper, it has long been supplanted by the Arabic; whilst, in Mesopotamia and Persia, the Christian inhabitants, though they call themselves Surayé, or Syriacs, speak a dialect termed Suth, which differs almost as much from the old Syriac as Italian from Latin.

1. History of Syriac Hymnody.

Concerning the hymns sung in Syria in the first century, after Christ, we have no certain information, although tradition connects the origin of responsive singing in Christian worship with Ignatius, the martyred bishop of Antioch. But the commencement of Syriac hymnody, so far as known to us, was on this wise.

1. Bar-Dalasis, or Bardeanes, b. A.D. 151, at Edessa, was a religious teacher, who sought to combine the truths of Christianity certain speculations of the Gnostics. Being a man of poetic genius, he was led to compose hymns or songs, which, set to music and sung by his disciples, became very popular. His son, Harmonius, followed in his steps, composing additional hymns and introducing new metres. But of their compositions only a few fragments have been preserved.

2. Simon bar Sabbae. The next Syriac hymn-writer of whom we have any mention was of the orthodox school, Simon bar Sabbae, bishop of Seleucia, who suffered martyrdom A.D. 296. Two hymns composed by him are said to be found in the sacred offices of the Chaldeans.

3. Ephraem Syrus. But about A.D. 307 there was born at Nisibis, in northern Mesopotamia, Ephraem or Ephraim Syrus, the most celebrated father of the Syrian church, and famous not only as a theologian, but also as a poet and hymn-writer. His hymns differ as to the details of his life; but it is known that having first been a pupil of James, bishop of Nisibis, he finished his education at Edessa, where for the rest of his days he chiefly resided. He visited Basal at Caesaarea, in Cappadocia, and by him he was ordained to the office of deacon. He d. at Edessa in 373. Ephraem was not only a religious writer of commentaries, expository sermons, hymns, and metrical homilies, Metrical Homilies, first mentioned in connection with him, are a peculiar kind of composition, to which we know of nothing in other literature exactly similar. The tracts in verse explanatory of the Christian religion, contained in the missions of some parts of India, and which the people like to read aloud in a kind of chant, seem most nearly to resemble them. The Homilies are in metre, i.e. in lines containing a fixed number of syllables, e.g. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, or 12, as the case may be, and are divided into strophes, but differ from hymns in that they are less in their greater length and more decidedly didactic character. We might have supposed them to be poems intended to be simply read, but from notes found on mss. giving directions as to the singing, it appears as though, at least in some cases, they were actually sung or chanted in connection with religious services. In neither the hymns nor the homilies is any regard paid to accent or quantity, and only occasionally does there seem to have been an attempt at rhyme or assonance. The main characteristics of Syriac poetry are (1) a certain elevation of style, (2) division of the verses into strophes, and (3) the use of lines or verses with a fixed number of syllables. The Syriac metre is a tetrasyllabic, or four-syllable, one, and the first four lines of each stanza are the same, the first line containing four words of two syllables. The second strophe or couplet differs from the first one, and the third strophe or couplet differs from the second one. The following are illustrations of some of the metres, taken from the writings of Ephraem, the translations being those of Dr. H. Burgess, in his Select Metrical Hymns and Homilies of Ephraem Syrus, translated, with Notes, &c., London, 1858, a work to which reference may be made for further examples.

"Lord! appoint not a place with the wicked:

Do Thou, Lord, confess me, who have confessed Thee."

The poetical compositions of Ephraim, so far as printed, are no less interesting, beginning with a work edited by J. S. Asseman and P. Benedict at Rome, in 1732–16.

(1) Eleven metrical expositions, in heptasyllabic and pentasyllabic metre, of portions of Scripture treating of the Creation, the Temple of Worship, the Mission of Christ, and the Promise of the Holy Spirit. The last two, especially the first, are distinguished for their exalted and majestic style, and the author of them, the Rabbâli, of the Syrian Church, has claimed for himself the -詩0 or Emissary, which might be supposed by the author to have extended to thirty years, and to every one of these years is assigned an act of praise from some celebrated teacher, beginning with the chrestus of the first year, and ending with the dead who have lived again, the living who have repented, and heaven and earth, which through the power of Christ have been reconciled, in the thirtieth, Dr. Burgess says that this is "a very beautiful production, tastefully conceived, and carried out in a masterly manner."

(2) Ghosts of Ephris's Nativity. These are of various length and metre. The last is tetrasyllable, in strophes of 10 lines, every tenth line being a doxology. The life of Christ is supposed by the author to have extended to thirty years, and to every one of these years is assigned an act of praise from some celebrated teacher, beginning with the chrestus of the first year, and ending with the dead who have lived again, the living who have repented, and heaven and earth, which through the power of Christ have been reconciled, in the thirtieth, Dr. Burgess says that this is "a very beautiful production, tastefully conceived, and carried out in a masterly manner."

(3) Next come 56 homilies in various metres against "False Doctrines," especially those of Bardeanoses, Marzion, and the Manichæans. In the first homily of this collection Ephraim pays the following compliment to the skill and influence of Bardeanoses, whilst he condemns his use of them:

"In the resorts of Bardeanoses

There are songs and melodies.

For seeing that young persons

Loved to set music.

By the harmony of his songs

He corrupted their minds."

Elsewhere we are told that it was Ephraim's desire to counteract the influence of these heretical songs, as well as to provide a substitute for profane games and noisy dances, which prompted him to compose hymns and train choirs, "in the midst of whom he stood, a spiritual harper, and arranged for them different kinds of songs, and taught them the variation of chants, until the whole city was gathered to him and the party of the adversary was put to shame."

(4) Then follow 47 homilies against Rationalists or Free Thinkers, in which occur many curious and highly artificial arrangements of metre. These are succeeded by a collection of seven homilies, forming a separate work, entitled "The Pearl, concerning Faith." This poem is tetrasyllabic, in strophes of 10 lines each, and highly fanciful in conception, though not without passages of beauty. A pearl is treated as suggestive of truths connected with Christ and His Church.

(5) Other controversial homilies follow, after which come the pieces which may be more properly called hymns. Of these perhaps the most interesting are 83 relating to "Death," apparently intended to be used in funeral services. One of these was made cene, in Dr. Burgess's translation, both as short and as a good specimen of Ephraim's style.

The fathers through their sons;

And death now breaketh

The staff of their old age—

Lord! may they lean on Thee!"

The beloved one from its mother,

And cuts off the arm

Which would have been her stay—

And the mother wails and griveth

Because her intercourse with it hath perished—

May she see it in the Kingdom!"

"O happy infancy

Which hath gained Paradise;

Away! for old age

Which still remains in sorrow—

Lord! be Thou its helper:"

(6) This collection of Funeral Hymns is followed by four short pieces on the "Freedom of the Will," strophes of which have an alphabetical arrangement, like the Hebrews of the 119th Psalm. The succeeding 78 homilies have the general title "Exhortations to Penitence," and among them are found morning and evening hymns, and a hymn for the Lord's day.

(7) Next come twelve homilies on the "Paradise of Eden," and finally, in the Roman edition of Ephraim's works, is a discourse on various subjects in pentasyllabic and hexasyllabic metres. But in 1868, Richard P. F. W. Mau, in a note on "Hymnody," says that most of the hymns have been translated by the Rev. Dr. Worthington, in the "Book of Common Prayer," which is a most important and learned work. It is, however, not without its faults.

In 1882 and 1886 Lamy pub. 2 vols., entitled S. Ephraemi Syri Hymni et Sermones, containing hitherto unpublished metrical homilies and hymns, on the Epiphany, the Nativity, the Blessed Virgin, the Passion, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, &c. [For translations see end of this article.]

4. Various. Ephraim was followed by a succession of authors of metrical homilies, hymns and anthems, most of whom of our limited space forbids us to do more than mention. Among these were Balat or Balaxis, who, about the year 396, wrote a poem on the invasion of the Huns; Abasampa, son of Ephraim's sister; Rabba, bishop of Edessa, a.D. 411, some of whose hymns have been printed by Overbeck; Ishiba, or Bas, who succeeded Rabba in the see of Edessa; Marisba, bishop of Maipce, a learned physician, who wrote hymns in honour of the martyrs; and Isaac of Antioch, commonly called the Great, and styled by Dr. W. Wright (Encyclop. Brit., vol. xxii, p. 829; "one of the stars of Syrian literature." He was abbot of a convent near Antioch, and died about a.D. 460. His works were almost as voluminous and varied as those of Ephraim. One of his metrical homilies may be mentioned as a literary curiosity, a poem of 216 lines, on a parrot which proclaimed itself "a priest of the streets of Antioch. Isaac was followed by Bertramus, bishop of Notio-Mediaean (5th-6th), author of compositions of the class called Turgamê, hymns calling on the faithful to give ear to the words of the New Testament. In the Nestorian worship of the present day the Turgamê are chanted responsively by the officiating deacons around the altar, at that part in the service when the Epistle and Gospel are about to be read.
5. Narsai. A fellow-worker with Bar-sauma, both at Edessa and Nisibis, was Narsai, or Narses, called by his co-religionists the "Harp of the Holy Spirit." He was especially famous for his metrical homilies, 360 in number, and his hymns, two of which are now in the Nestorian psalter.

6. Jacob of Serugh. We come next to Jacob of Serugh, one of the most celebrated writers of the Syrian Church (b. 461, d. 521), styled by his contemporaries the "Harp of the Holy Spirit and the Harp of the believing Church." Besides commentaries, he wrote odes, hymns, and metrical homilies, 760 in number, mostly in dodeca-syllabic verse, i.e. the four-syllable line thrice repeated. Bar Hebraeus says that he had 70 amanuenses to copy out his homilies. More than half of his homilies have perished, 300 are preserved in European collections.

A liturgy in use among the Maronites is ascribed to him.

7. Simeon Kūkāya. The deacon Simeon Kūkāya was a potter by trade, as his name denotes. Whilst working at his wheel, he composed hymns, which he wrote down on a tablet or papyrus. Serūgh visited him, admired his compositions, and encouraged him to continue his labours. Nine of his hymns, on the "Nativity of our Lord," are now in the British Museum. In the same treasury of antiquities are to be found a few hymns out of a rather large number composed by the abbot John bar Aplōnē, who d. A.D. 524, to the Emperor Euphrates. Also a few hymns are extant of Mārabbā the Elder, Catholics ofSeleucia, from 556 to 552, one of which commences "Glory to Thee, Lord, how good Thou art!"

8. Seventh Century. With the seventh century began the slow decay of the native literature of the Syrians, one cause being the dreadful sufferings of the people during the great war with the Persians, and another the conquest of Syria by the Muhammadans in 633-636, from which time the Arabic language began to supplant the Syriac. Nevertheless, Professor W. Wright, LL.D., in his "History and Exhubris of the Syriac Literature," in the "Encyclopaedia Britannica," vol. xii., an article to which in this paper we are ourselves greatly indebted—gives the names of seventeen writers between the beginning of the 7th century and the end of the 12th, who were authors of either hymns, or metrical homilies, or both. In most cases some of their writings are extant in the libraries of the British Museum, the Vatican, or Berlin, and not unfrequently their hymns are found in Nestorian Psalters.

9. Bar Hebraeus. The thirteenth century was an age of literary revival with the Nestorians. Bar Hebraeus, "one of the most learned and versatile men Syria ever produced," lived at this time. He was almost equally eminent as philosopher, historian, theologian and poet, and to him we are indebted for much of the information we possess in regard to Syriac hymn-writers.

10. George Wara. In this century lived George Wara (the Rose of Arbel), whose hymns and other poems have entered so largely into the use of the Nestorian Church that one of their service books is to this day called the Warda.

11. Māu'd, a Syrian, who was physician to the Caliph al Ma'mun in the years 1222-1258, wrote hymns for the Feast of the Epiphany, one of which is in the Vatican library.

12. Khānis bar Karahā, of Arbel, is another favourite hymn-writer of this period, whom we shall have occasion to mention again when speaking of the lives of the Nestorians. But besides the hymns of this author, to which we may then make reference, others are found in the great libraries of Europe.

13. Abīl-ḥaša bar Berikha. Lastly, there was Abīl-ḥaša bar Berikha, or, as he is called by some, Mar Abī Tēshwā, Metropolitan of Nisibis and Armenia, a.d. 1298-1318, who has rendered valuable service to literature by a catalogue of nearly 150 Syrian authors and their works, beginning with Simeon bar Sabbāē, in the 3rd century, and ending with one, whom in his humility he calls his "vile self." This last he describes as the author of a commentary on the Bible, Consolations, Antiquities, and a number of other works. Turgān, written by him, are in ms. in the library of Berlin.

14. Dr. Wright says that after Abīl-ḥaša there are "hardly any names worthy of a place in the literary history of the Syrian nation." The scanty crumbs of information are poured forth with water. It remained for the men of succeeding ages to make use of the compositions of their predecessors.

ii. The present use of Syriac hymns.

In order to a clear understanding of this part of our subject it will be needful to explain the various services to which the Syrian branch of the Christian church is divided, a division which in at least three instances is of ancient date.

(1) Nestorian. — One section, once very numerous, and sending its missionaries even to Tartary and China, but whose members, now few in number, have found chiefly in Kurdistan and Western Persia, is known by the name of Nestorian. It is so called from Nestorius, who was condemned by the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431, because, as it was alleged, he held that in the one Christ there were two Persons, Divine and human, and with this doctrine these Syrian Christians are supposed to sympathise.

(2) Jacobites. — Another section, called Jacobites, inhabiting both Syria and Mesopotamia, received their name from a certain Jacob Burīš, bishop of Edessa in the middle of the 6th century, who was the chief agent in organising them into a distinct community. Their peculiar belief is that in Christ the human nature was absorbed into the Divine. Hence they are called Monophysites.

(3) Maronites. — The date and occasion of their origin as a sect are disputed, but most probably they received their name from a certain abbey of a monastery near the Orontes, called John Maroun, who lived in the 7th century, and favoured the doctrine of Christ's person known as Monothelites. From this monastery, the Maronites in 1155 acknowledged the authority of the Roman Pontiff, and are at the present time in nominal communion with Rome. In the district of Mount Lebanon they have now 82 convents, containing 2500 monks and nuns.

(4) Chaldæans.— In Mesopotamia and Persia are Syrian Christians, who were originally Nestorian, but about the year 1650 made their submission to Rome and have since been known by the name of Chaldæans, the Maronites, for the most part, speaking Aramaic and Arabic as their vernacular, but using in their worship Syrian hymns and prayers. They are probably descendants of Syrians, who centuries ago came from Western Asia by way of the Persian Gulf and settled in these parts. Some are Nestorian in their creed, others Jacobite, and yet others, through the influences brought to bear upon them by the Portuguese at Goa, have adopted the faith of Rome.

Now all these differing sections of Syrian Christians have their respective service books and liturgies, and all use hymns. The following are the facts we have been able to ascertain with respect to their use of hymns:

(a) The Nestorians. In 1832, an Anglican clergyman, the Rev. G. P. Badger, D.D., published two volumes (London, J. Masters) containing a narrative of visits paid by him to the Syrian Churches of Kúrdistan and Mesopotamia, with an account of his researches into the condition of the Nestorians, Syrian Jacobites, Papal Syrians, and Chaldaens. The work is entitled The Nestorians and their Rituals, and is full of information concerning the Nestorian service books.

(1) First, he mentions a book called Targum Ó or Instruction, containing hymns chanted before the reading of the Epistle and Gospel. To this we have referred when speaking of Haranaa, of Nisibis.

(2) Another book is the Khudra, or Cycle of Services for all the Sundays in the year and for certain fast days. Dr. Badger describes this as a collection of anthems, responsories, hymns and collect, comprised in a large folio volume of more than 800 pp.

(3) The Gíras, or Treasury, contains the services for all the festivals throughout the year, Sundays excepted. It also comprises anthems, hymns and collect, and is a volume equal in size to the Khudra.

(4) The Vovatho d' Nineve, or Prayer of the Ninevites, is described as "a collection of hymns in verse ascribed to St. Ephraim, Syrus," and from the account given of its contents it is evident the metrical hymns were mentioned in our notice of the writings of Ephraim. The Nestorians use it in connection with an annual commemorative service, having reference to the Ninevites, lasting for three days and accompanied with fasting.

(b) The Khansia is a collection of hymns chiefly in praise of the Life, Parables and Miracles of the Saviour and on the duty of Repentance. It has its name from its author, Khansia bar Kardbil, whom we have mentioned as a writer of the 13th century. A long hymn from this collection, which has been translated by Dr. Badger, is appended in the Geza to be used on the feast of the Holy Nativity.

(c) The Kerubia is a collection of hymns written and compiled by George Wardik, already mentioned. They were apparently prepared for use at church festivals, the particular occasions for which they are fitted being noted at the head of each. Dr. Badger has translated a hymn from the Wardik, five pages in length, in praise of the Virgin Mary, and intended to be used on any of the festivals commemorative of her.

In the services for Marriages and Burials, anthems and hymns are introduced. The following is a translation by Dr. Badger of a short and rather beautiful hymn sometimes sung in the part of the marriage service called "The Setting up of the Bridal Chamber." It seems intended to be sung responsively.

"Blessed is he who hath built for His Church a house not made with hands, and hath raised and set her up on high according to His promise."

"The elect Church saith to Christ in her supplications: 'Show me from the Scriptures what dowry Thou wilt give unto me.'"

"O lovely Spouse, in line thine ear and hearken to my voice, leave thy father and thy mother, and come, follow me, for I am thy Bridegroom.""

"Behold, I flee to Thy love, and adorn all the house of the heathen, and leave off worshipping them, and flee to Thee cross."

"I have espoused thee through water and the Spirit, and have saved thee from Satan and from death: beware that thou come not another's, for there is none other that can help thee as I can."

"If thou art faithful unto Me, O thou daughter of the poor, I will make ready for thee a bridal chamber above, and will call prophets, apostles, and martyrs to thy wedding."

"Thy commandments are dearer unto me than car or pearls: and the words of Thy mouth are sweeter unto me than honey-corn."

From all this it will be seen that hymns are largely used by the Nestorians, besides which they chant Psalms from the Davved, or David, in connection with nearly every service. But it must be added that only the clergy and a few of the more educated hymns fully understand the meaning of the words read or sung. Indeed, says Dr. Badger, "many even of the clergy have no certain knowledge of what they read in the church services."

The great is the difference between the modern Syrian and the ancient Syrian, and such the present backward state of education.

(b) The Chaldaean services appear to resemble those of the Nestorians, excepting that a few expressions have been modified in accordance with the Roman doctrines they have embraced.

(c) The Jacobites and Maronites, J. W. Etheridge states, in his book on the Syrian Churches (Lond., 1846), that, among the Jacobites and Maronites, the favourite one is that ascribed to St. James, the brother of our Lord. Now in the public or preparatory part of this service a hymn is appointed to be sung after the prayer for all believers, and this hymn is said to be frequently a composition of Mar Ephraim, as he is termed—Mar signifying Master or Lord. A letter, also, with which we have been favoured from the Rev. Dr. Carslaw, minister of the Free Church of Scotland at Siweir, on Mount Lebanon, informs us that the hymns of Ephraim are now used in that region by both Jacobites and Maronites, though not to any great extent. But they are simply read by the priest, not sung either by priests or people. Dr. Carslaw adds that most of the service of the Maronites is in the ancient Syrian, but as a rule neither priest nor people understand it. The priest has to read it, and that is all that is considered necessary.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Bliss, President of the Protestant College at Beyrouth, has also obtained for us the following list of first lines of hymns now used in the Maronite churches of Mount Lebanon, with the names of their reputed authors. All are in the ancient Syrian language.

1. By St. Peter the Apostle——

"O Lord, God of Peace and Master of Safety."

2. By the Twelve Apostles——

"O Lord, merciful God, who hast prepared for us this spiritual table."

3. By St. James, Brother of our Lord——

"O Lord, our God and our Master, Lord of mankind."

4. By St. John, the Apostle and Evangelist——

"O Lord, mighty God, Thou art the true King."

5. By St. Mark, the Evangelist——

"O Lord God Almighty, Thou art the Holy One, who hast true love."

6. By Pater Noster of Rome——

"O Lord, grant Thy church, and the sheep of Thy pasture, safety, peace and everlasting love."

7. Prepared by order of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, Mother of all churches——

"O our Lord Jesus Christ, who hast said to Thine Apostles 'Peace, I leave with you, my peace I give unto you.'"
SYRIAC HYMNODY

8. By St. John Marcon, Patriarch of Antioch —

"O God, Most Merciful and Holy God, Who hast through Thine only-begotten Son, Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," etc.

(5) Christians of St. Thomas. With regard to the use of Syriac hymns by the so-called Christians of St. Thomas, on the Malabar coast of India, we have been kindly furnished with information from agents of the Church Missionary Society, whose head-quarters are at Cottayam, in Travancore, which is also the centre of the district inhabited by the Syrian Christians. One of our correspondents is the Rev. J. H. Bishop, B.A., the other is The Archdeacon Koshi Koshi, who is himself of Syrian parentage.

Mr. Bishop informs us that "The Syrian Christians of Travancore have no choral or congregational singing, or musical instrument in their worship. The ancient liturgies of St. James and others are monotonized by the Cottanars or Priests, and the people standing in the nave repeat the responses from memory. In many Syrian churches the services are conducted in the Malabar language; the nuns, that of the country, "though formerly they were always performed in the Syrian tongue, which is still used more or less, especially in the celebration of the Mass."

Archdeacon Koshi states that "The hymns used in the Syrian church are too many to be numbered. They are also scattered throughout their service books that it is impossible even to form a guess respecting their number. The Syrians have no separation of hymns such as we have. They have more than 500 tunes, and everyone of their hymns is so made that it can be sung to eight different tunes. All the great poets of old, such as Mar Ephraim, had each his own eight tunes distinct from the eight belonging to every other. The great hymns of Ephraim's (a Syrian Saint,) in 6 (or 7) tunes, are the only ones I have seen. Hymns composed by poets of inferior grade, who were unable to invent new tunes, are never credited with their real authors, but go under the names of those to whose tunes they were adapted."

The Archdeacon then proceeds to give a list of hymn-writers, a number of his names coinciding with those we have given in the former part of this article. If at first view there seems to be some disagreement between the accounts, that correspondence is doubtless to be found in the fact already stated, that the Syrian Christians of India are divided among themselves, and consequently, in all probability vary in their usage as regards singing.

We have seen the past and present of Syriac Hymnody: one word may be permitted with respect to the future. It is then, we think, morally certain that Syrian Christians, in whatever country living, will, with the progress of enlightenment, come to realize the fact that acceptable worship must be intelligent and spiritual, and will therefore cease to employ in their religious services a dead language. Nevertheless, the large-hearted studium of Christian history will always feel an interest in the great collection of old-world metrical compositions, lyrical and hortatory, noticed in this article, remembering that for a thousand years or more they were the medium of prayer and praise, consolation and adoration, to successive generations, confessing the One Saviour, and having hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, duties and temptations common to man. [W. R. S.]

Several of the Syriac hymns of Ephraem Syrus have been translated into English as follows:

Of his hymns 35, and of hismetrical homilies 9, have been rendered into prose, printed by Dr. Henry Burgess, in his Select Metrical Hymns and Homilies of Ephraem Syrus (London, 1862), and from these versions the Rev. T. G. Crispin translated St. Henry's metre in his Ancient Hymns and Poems (London, 1864). Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song (London, 1868), gives extracts from a German in Daniel, iii. (1446), where are given 16 of his hymns in the Syriac, with German (trans. taken from Pius von Zinguer's Heiligensang der Kirche, etc., 1770, p. 211) by T. R. Morris, in his Select Works of S. Ephraem the Syrian (Oxford, 1847). There is also 1 tr. in the Rev. J. W. Hewett's Verses by a Country Curate, 1849.

As for the majorities of his hymns it would be useless to give the translations under the first lines of the Syriac, they are here given together.

i. Versions by Horatius Bonar.

1. Glory to the glorious One. For the Lord's day. (Canon 41.) Tr. in 2nd series, 1861, of his Hymns of Faith and Hope, and Joy, p. 90. Used from this st. 1, 3, 4, 10. It was taken, slightly altered, with 2 st. adapted from Dr. Bonar's st. 5, 6, 7, 8, as No. 16 in the Hymnary, 1871. Dr. Burgess quotes it from the Opera, vi. 526, and says it is hexametrical, in strophes of 4 lines, and gives his version at p. 83.

2. Jehovah, judge my cause. Battle Song against Satan. (Canon 58.) In 9 st. of 4 lines, in the 2nd series, 1861, of his Hymns of Faith and Hope. Burgess quotes it from the Opera, vi. 526, and says it is hexametrical, in strophes of 4 lines, and gives his version at p. 89.

ii. Versions by Mrs. Charles.

1. To Thee, O God, be praises. On the Children in Paradise. (Canon 44.) In 5 st. of 4 lines (p. 46, ed. 1858) by Syriac and German texts in Daniel, iii. pp. 165, 186.

3. He calls us to a day of gladness. Christ's Entry into Jerusalem. In 11 st. of 4 lines (p. 49, ed. 1858) by Syriac and German texts in Daniel, iii. pp. 159-162.

5. Child by God's grace born. Death of a Child. A beautiful lament of a father on the death of his little son. (Canon 36, "In finem poenitentiae") In 2 st. of 12 lines (p. 32, ed. 1858) by Syriac and German texts in Daniel, iii. pp. 151-152. Dr. Burgess says it is hexametrical, in strophes of 14 lines, and gives his version at p. 81.

6. Then because they fled from him. Eve and Mary. Part of a poem on Eve and Mary, being a tr. of lines 24-46 of Zinguerle. Syriac and German texts in Daniel, iii. pp. 184, 185.

iii. Versions by the Rev. T. G. Crispin.

1. Blessed be Messiah's name. Easter. (Canon 40.) In 8 st. of 6 lines, given at p. 1. Dr. Burgess quotes it from the Opera, vi. p. 282, and says it is hexametrical, in strophes of 6 lines, and gives his version at p. 77.

2. When softly breathes the Resurrection air. Resurrection. (Canon 42.) In 11 st. of 4 lines (p. 49, ed. 1858) by Syriac and German texts in Daniel, iii. pp. 152-155. Dr. Burgess says it is octosyllabic, in strophes of 4 lines, and gives his version at p. 31.

3. In the time of evening let Thy praise ascend. Eternity. (Canon 60.) In 8 st. of 6 lines, given at p. 1. Dr. Burgess quotes it from the Opera, vi. p. 535, and says it is hexametrical, in strophes of 4 lines, and gives his version at p. 73.

4. Pity me, Father, for Thy mercies sake. Last Judgment. (Canon 60.) In 8 st. of 4 lines, given at p. 11. Dr. Burgess quotes it from the Opera, vi. p. 536, and entitles it "Necessity for Preparation for Death," says it is hexametrical, in strophes of 8 lines, and gives his version at p. 73.

O my child, my best beloved one. Death of a Child, In his Verses by a Country Curate, 1849, p. 167, from Dr. Burgess's tr., but adapted for a mother instead of a father.

v. Versions by Dr. Henry Burgess.

Besides those already mentioned Dr. Burgess gives 14 hymns in the Death (o) of children (pp. 4, 6), (b) of youth (pp. 9, 11), (c) of a Private Person (pp. 14, 24), prayed for, some converted, but not rejecting Christians.
He gave me the prayer Lord, give me all in this house.
And he just did. Before I left the house everyone got a blessing.
The last night of my visit after I had retired, the governess asked me to go to the daughter's. They were crying, etc. Then and there I them trusted and rejoiced; it was nearly midnight.
I was too happy to sleep, and passed most of the night in translation. They were crying; they were formed these little cotterstocked themselves, and chimed in heart one after another till they finished with "Eyes, O eyes, all for thee!"

The music to which Miss Harvelg invariably sang this hymn, and which it was always associated in the publications of which she had any influence, was her father's name Patmos, and the family's desire is that this course may be followed by others. [J. J.]

Tam. The assumed name of Thomas
Mackellar, in Neal's (American) Gazette, 1815.

Tandem audite me. [Love to Christ]
Probably of the 17th cent., and found in Canticlee ii. 5. It is found in the Manz,
G. B. (R. C.) 1661, p. 434, in 6 st. entitled "Hymn on the Love of the Mother of God in her dying hour." It is also in Wagner's G. B., Leipzig, 1897, vol. iii, p. 748, the Hymnodia Sacra. Münster, 1793, p. 211;
Daniel, iv, p. 344; and Trench's Sacred Latin Poetry, ed. 1864, p. 249. In R. Campbell's St. Andrew's Hym., 1850, the hymn "Mary mourned, said, forlorn," for St. Mary Magdalene, is partly derived from this hymn. [J. M.]

Tandem peractis O Deus. [Saturday]
Appar. in the Paris Brev., 1736, and in his Hymni Sacri, p. 29, of the same year. In the Paris and later French Brev., it is the hymn at Matins for Saturday from Trinity to Advent. The text is in
J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church
1837, No. 32; Card. Newman's Hymns Ecclesiastic, 1838 and 1865: and L. B. B r i g e, annotated ed. of H. A. & M. 1867. Tr. as—

1. At length creation's days are past. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Pri. Church, 1837, p. 29, and again in his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 16. In the Hymnal for St. John the Evangelist, Aberdeen, 1870, it begins, "And now the six-day's work is done." In one or two others it is given without alteration.

2. And now Thy labours, Lord, are done. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 36. In the Hymnary, 1872,
No. 40, this tr is rewritten as "At length six days their course have run."

3. Six days of labour now are past. This tr was given in H. A. & M., 1861. It was based on J.
Chandler's tr, as above. In the 1875 ed. of H. A. & M. it begins with the first line, but several other lines have been rewritten and much improved thereby.

Other trs. are:

1. At length the six day's course is past. W. Palmer.
1845.

2. At length, O God, Thy work is done. J. P. Chamberz. 1857.

Tappan, William Bingham, was b. at Beverley, Massachusetts, Oct. 29, 1794, and was apprenticed to a clockmaker at Boston in 1810. In 1815 he removed to Philadelphia where he was engaged in business for a time.
In 1822 he was engaged as Superintendent of the American Sunday School Union. In 1840
...
He was licensed to preach with the Congregational body, his sphere of usefulness on behalf of Sunday Schools being thereby considerably widened. He died suddenly, of cholera, at West Needham, Massachusetts, June 18, 1894. His poetical works include:

- Lyric Poems, 1822.
- Poetry of the Heart, 1845.
- Sacred and Miscellaneous Poems, 1844.
- Poetry of Life, 1872.
- The Sunday School and other Poems, 1848.
- Late and Early Poems, 1849.
- Sacred Poems, 1849.
- Ten Sacred Poems, 1860.

Among these works the earliest are the most important. His hymns in C. U. include the following:

1. Holy be this as was the place. Public Worship. Included in his Lyric Poems, 1822; and given in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868.

2. The sacred spirit to her home. Love. Appeared in Nettleton’s Village Hymns, 1824. This is probably his best hymn.

4. There is an hour of peaceful rest. Heaven a Place of Rest. The author’s account of this hymn in his Hymn of Sacred Poetry, 1860, is that it was written by him in Philadelphia, in the summer of 1819, for the Franklin Gazette, edited by Richard Bache, Esq., and was introduced by him to the public in terms sufficiently flattering and flattering to the young man, who then certainly lacked confidence in himself. The piece was republished in England and on the Continent, in various newspapers and periodicals, and was inserted in a number of music-hall and music-books. It was pub. in my first volume, at Philadelphia, in 1821; and soon after was set to music by A. F. Heinrich, Esq., in the same city. It is in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, p. 265.

5. This is the night, and an olive’s brow. Gethsemane. Appeared in his Poems, 1822, and repeated in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, and several hymnals.

6. Wake, Isles of the south, your redemption is near. Missionary. Appeared in the Lyric, 1822. It was sung at the wharf in New Haven at the embarkation of Missionaries for the Sandwich Islands, 1822.

7. Where are the costumes? Saturday Evening. Pub. in his Poems, 1822; repeated in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868. It is in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868.

9. This is the night, and an olive’s brow. Gethsemane. Appeared in his Poems, 1822, and repeated in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, and thence into Thring’s Old, 1867.

Τάς ἔδρας τὰς αἰωνίας. St. John of Damascus. [All Saints. In his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862. Dr. Neale entitles this “Idiomela for All Saints.” According to this, it is supposed to be found in the Penitencieras of various editions, however, have been searched in vain. Dr. Neale’s tr., “These eternal bourners,” was given in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in st. of 8. 1. It has since appeared in various collections, and ranks with the more popular of his translations from the Greek.

Tate and Brady. [New Version; also Psalms, English, § 13.]

Tate, Nahum. [Psalms, English, § 13.]

Tauler, Johannes, was b. at Strassburg about 1300, and seems to have been the son of Nicholas Tauler or Taweler, of Finkweiler, who in 1304 was a member of the Strassburg Town Council (Mittels des Rahe). About the year 1318 he entered the Dominican convent at Strassburg. He studied for eight years at Strassburg, where the famous Meister Eckhart (d. 1327) was Dominican Professor of Theology from 1312 to 1320. He then went to Cologne to undergo a further training, in theory and practical work, extending over four years. Thereafter he returned to Strassburg, where he soon came into note as an eloquent and practical preacher. When much of Germany was laid under interdict by Pope John XXII., because of resenting his interference with the election of the German Emperor in 1324, the Dominicans at Strassburg still continued to preach, to celebrate their, and to administer to the people the consolations of the Church, even though Strassburg was under the Papal ban. After the Diet of Frankfurt in 1328 the strife between Emperor and Pope (now Benedict XIV., Pope since 1334) became more pressing, and in 1339 the Dominicans at Strassburg still continued to sing mass, but were then compelled to cease doing so by command of the superiors of their Order. As the Strassburg magistracy still remained faithful to the Emperor, they resented this submission, and accordingly closed the Dominican convent in 1339, and it stood empty for three years. It was only about the beginning of 1339 we find Tauler in Basel, where he remained for some years, in close connection with Heinrich of Nordlingen and others of the so-called “Frieds of God,” in that city and neighbourh. About 1346 he was again in Strassburg, and he spent most of the remainder of his life there. He d. at Strassburg on June 13, 1361. (Herzog’s Real-Encyklopädie, xx. 251; Godseke’s Grundriss, New ed., 1841, p. 210; Tauler’s Bekkenrung, by P. H. S. Denifle, Strassburg, 1879. Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum, 1880, p. 209, &c.)

The above notice embraces what seems to be the best authenticated details of Tauler’s life. It differs greatly from the account which till recently was regarded as historical, and which has been made accessible to English readers by Miss Susanna Winkworth (see below), and by Miss Frances Bevan, in her Three Friends of God, London, 1857. The basis of the common account was a work by Rittersh Merswir, which Denifle’s investigations have shown to partake much more of the nature of a novel with a purpose than of authentic history (see above, Alig. Deutsch.)

Tauler was one of the most celebrated of the Medieval Mystics, and one of the most famous of all German preachers. Much uncertainty still exists, however, not only as to the details of his life, but also as to what writings may safely be ascribed to him. The best authenticated are his sermons, which were first printed at Leipzig in 1488 (good recent ed. by Julius Hammer, Frankfurt, 1834, and Frag, 1872, English version of 25, with an account of the same, by Miss Susanna Winkworth, London, 1867). The well-known Nachfolge des armen Letens Christus has generally been ascribed to Tauler, but Denifle, who edited the most recent critical ed. (Munich, 1871), is of opinion that it is not by him (a recent English version by J. R. Morell, as The Following of Christ, London, 1854). The famous Theologia Germanica (good English version by Susanna Winkworth, London, 1854, with an interesting introduction on the “Friends of God”) has also often been ascribed to him, but on no good grounds; though in its working out of the idea that a godly life is the reminiscence of self and self-will, and complete devotion to the will of God, and that in this inner union with God we again become God’s children, as at the first, the Theologia Germanica has much affinity with Tauler’s teachings.

The hymn attributed to Tauler were printed in his Werke, Cologne, 1540, and by Daniel Sudermann, in his Schönhitliche und wahrheitliche Figuren. Strassburg, 1620, and in his Eikthe heilige geistliche Geieringe, Strassburg, 1626. Sudermann seems to have rewritten them, or at least considerably altered them, Wackernagel, i. li. 302–307, gives 11 (really 9) pieces under Tauler’s name. Three of these have passed into English, viz.: —
Taylor, Ann and Jane. These names are associated together here for convenience of reference, and because many of their hymns were published under their joint names.

Gilbert, Ann, see Taylor, the elder of the two sisters, and daughter of Isaac Taylor, was b. at London, Jan. 30, 1782, her father at that time being engaged in London as an engraver. Subsequently her father became a Congregational Minister, and resided, first at Colchester and then at Unger. In 1813 she was married to the Rev. Josiah Gilbert, Classical and Mathematical Tutor at the Congregational College, Masborough, near Rotherham, Yorkshire. From Masborough they passed to Hull, and then to Nottingham, where Mr. Gilbert d. in 1832. Mrs. Gilbert remained at Nottingham, and d. there Dec. 20, 1866. In addition to contributing hymns to the joint works of herself and her sister, a few were given in Collyer's Coll., 1812, signed "A." or "A. T.,” and about 100 of her hymns appeared in Dr. Leifeld's Original Hymns, 1814, and a few in the Nottingham H. H. (15), and a few in the "Second Volume, 1827, 1824, and 1827: 24, 1842. She pub. independently, Hymns for Sunday School Anniversaries, 1827.
TAYLOR, DAN

3. Come, my soul, flattering heart (Collins's OLD 1812). Renunciation of the World. 4. God is so good that He will bear (1809). Encoun-tra to pray. 5. God! — What a great and awful name (1809). God's Condensation.

6. Oh! how the pen is to be turned away (1812). Expulsion from Sunday School.

7. Lord, I would bow thy tender care (1809). Thanks for past Mercies.

8. Love and kindness we may measure (1809).
Against Selfishness.

9. W. R. Deacon, Almighty King (1809). Evening
Hymn for a Small Family.

10. This is a precious book indeed (1809). Holy Scripture. Universal Wonders.

11. What is there, Lord, a child can do? Repentance.

12. When daily I kneel down to pray (1809). Against wandering thoughts in Prayer.

13. When for some little insult given (1809). Against Anger. &c.

14. When to the house of God we go (1809). Public Worship.

Mr. Gilbert's ed. of the Hys. for Infant Minds, 1886, together with ms. notes, are our authorities for the foregoing ascriptions of authorship. Mr. Gilbert cannot distinguish the authorship of the following hymns by one or both sisters:

1. Good David, whose Psalms have so often been sung (1812). Concerning David.

2. How shall I render (sp. 432, ii.): "Jesus, Who lived above the sky," and "Lord at noon 'tis sudden night." Miss Taylor's hymns are marked by great simplicity and directness. The most popular and one of the best is, "There is a path that leads to God." Taken as a whole, the hymns of both sisters are somewhat depressing in tone. They lack brightness and warmth.

TAYLOR, EMILY

1117 and probably was greatly modified by Taylor, since a copy now before us has on its back the title page, Taylor's Hymns. The title-page runs Hymns & Spiritual Songs, selected from Various Authors; London: printed for the Dairy and sold by D. Taylor, Union St. Bishopsgate Street, 1793. This book contains 637 hymns and includes the three by D. Taylor cited above. Since J. Deacon, in 1800, pub. a hymn-book bearing his own name, it is probable that he disapproved of the treatment his work had received, and regarded the book of 1793 as the production of D. Taylor rather than his own.

[y. Deacon, John.]

Taylor, Emily, b. 1795, was the daughter of Samuel Taylor, of New Buckenham, Norfolk, niece of John Taylor, of Norwich, the hymn-writer, and great-grand-daughter of Dr. John Taylor, the Hebraist. Miss Taylor was the writer of numerous tales for children, chiefly historical, and of various books of instruction, and of descriptive natural history. Amongst her publications are:

(1) Letters to a Child on Maritime Discovery, 1820;
(2) Vision of Las Casas, and other Poems, 1825;
(3) Poetical Illustrations of Passages in Scripture, 1826;
(4) Tales of the Seasons, 1827;
(5) Tales of the English, 1833;
(6) Memoir of Sir T. Moore, 1834;
(7) The Boy and the Birds, 1835. She also edited Sabbath Ser-vations, 1826; and Flowers and Fruit in Old English Gardens, 1838; and contributed to the Magnetic Springs, 1840, &c.; and the Rainbow Stork, 1876, &c.

Miss Taylor wrote several hymns which appeared as follows: — To the Unitarian Collection of Ps. & Hys., printed for the Renshaw Street Chapel, Liverpool, 1818, she contributed anonymously: —

1. Come to the house of prayer. Invitation to Public Worships. Sometimes given as "O come to the house of Prayer."

2. God of the changing year Whose arm of power.
Lessons of the Changing Year.

3. O Father, though the anxious fear. Sunday.

4. O here, if ever, God of love. Holy Communion.

These, and the following 6 hymns, were given anonymously in the 2nd ed. of the Norwich Unitarian Hymn Book, 1826: —

5. Here, Lord, when at Thy Table met. Holy Communion.

6. O not for these alone I pray. Holy Communion. Sometimes,
"No, not for these alone I pray."

7. The Gospel is the Light. Worth and Power of the Gospel. Sometimes "It is the one true light."

8. Thus shall thou love the Almighty God (Lord);
Self-consecration to God.

9. Who shall behold the King of kings? Purity.

10. Who that ever many a burden part. Missions.
Sometimes it begins with st. II, "Thy kingdom come!
The beaten land."

Of the above No. 6 is part of a longer poem which was given in her Poetical Illustrations of Passages in Scripture, 1826. This work also contains: —

11. O Source of good! around me spread. Seek, and you shall find.

12. Truly the light of morn is sweet. Early Piety.

13. When summer suns their radiance bring. Regenation with Praise.

In the Rev. J. R. Beard's Coll. of Hys. for Pub. and Private Worship, 1837, several of the above are repeated, and also: —

14. If love, the noblest, purest, best. Communion with Jesus.

Of these 14 hymns 10 are in Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, and 9 in his Hymns, &c., 1873. Several are also found in other collections, as Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1881, and some American and other hymn-books. Although for the greater part of her life Miss Taylor was a Unitarian, yet, under the influence of F. D. Maurice, she joined the Church of England. She d. in 1872.

[V. D. D.]
Taylor, Helen, daughter of Martin Taylor, was the author of The Child's Book of Homilies, N. D.; Sabbath Bells, A Series of Simple Days for Christian Children, N. D.; and Missionary Hymns; for the Use of Children, 1846. From her Sabbath Bells, "I love that holy Scripture" (Concerning Heaven) is taken. The following are all from her Missionary Hymns, 1846:

1. A father's seed that lifted is. Value of Little Things.
2. And shall we dwell together? Concerning Heaven.
3. Father, the little offering take. Requiem.
4. There is a happy land on high. Concerning Heaven.

[J. J.]

Taylor, Jeremy, D.D. This poet of preachers was born of very humble parentage on both sides, at Cambridge, in August, 1613. His father was a barber. He must have had a good school as a boy. He entered Caius College, of his native city, as a "sizar" in 1626. His career at the university was a brilliant one. He was made fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, in 1632; and rector of Uppingham, Rutlandshire, in 1638, as is still proudly remembered there. He was inevitably "sequestered" by Parliament in 1642. Inexorable necessities of circumstance put him in prison. During the opening of the great Protectorate he kept a school in Wales along with William Nicholson, and acted as chaplain to the Earl of Carnarvon at Golden Grove, Carmarthenshire, one of the pilgrimage spots of our country, because of this end of his impenetrable book named after it. In 1658 he is found in Ireland. He preached at Lisburn and Portmore. He returned to London early in 1660, and signed the loyalist or royalist Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry, on April 24th, thirty-five days before the "Restoration." He was not overlooked, as so many faithful royalists were. He was consecrated bishop of Down and Connor in January, 1661; made a member of the Irish Privy Council in February; entrusted with the diocese of Dromore in March; and in the same year was chosen Vice-chancellor of the University of Dublin. He d. at Lisburn, August 13th, 1667, and was interred in the choir of the cathedral of Dromore. Bishop Taylor's complete works have been repeatedly edited, e.g. by Henry Rogers, Pitman, Bp. Heber, Eden; and manifold selections and single books, as his Holy Living and Holy Dying. Notwithstanding his rich and imperial intellect, and enthralling eloquence, and absolute command of words, Bishop Taylor holds only a very small place in the Antipho of England. It has been admirably said by Dr. Rowland Williams, "Poetry differs from eloquence, as love differs from friendship" (Stray Thoughts, 1878). His attempts at verse are eloquence, not poetry, and even the eloquence cramped and sillouetted. The present writer collected his entire poems and verse-traductions in the Miscellanea of the Fuller Worthies' Library (1870). In the "Introduction" the reader will find a critical account of the various hymns; and also therein an account is furnished of a flagrant misappropriation of Bp. Taylor's Hymns by Samuel Speed in his Prison Piety, or Meditations divine and moral. Digested into poetical heads on mixt and various subjects (1675). The following is the original title-page of the volume in which all the Festival hymns are contained:

The Golden Groat, or a *Manuscript of Daily Prayers and Lectures Fitted to the Days of the Week; containing a short Summary of what is to be Believed, Prayed, Denied, Also Festival Hymns According to the manneer of The Ancient Church. Being a Set of Hymns for the Use of the Incourt, especially of Younger Persons; by the Author of The Great Exemplar. London: Printed by J. P. for R. Burton, at the Angel in Lothbury (12mo.) A 2nd ed. appeared in 1655 with the Author's name thus, By Jer. Taylor, D. D., Chaplain in Ordinary to his late Majesty's; courageous and manly in his circumstances. A 3rd ed. seems to have disappeared. The 4th ed. appeared in 1659; and from it is saved the second Christmas hymn, "Awake, my soul," that was not in either the 1st or 2nd ed. Bp. Edmund and Eden overlooked this hymn.

[A. B. G.]

From Bp. Taylor's Golden Groat, 1655, the following hymns are in C. U.:

His Christmas Carol. "Where is this blessed Baby," and his Prayer, "My soul doth cast towards Thee," are also from the Golden Groat.

[See English Hymnody. Early. § 9.]

Taylor, John, b. July 30, 1750, was the a. of Richard Taylor, of Norwich, and grandson of Dr. John Taylor (1694-1761, the eminent Hebrew scholar, who was for many years minister of the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, and afterwards Divinity tutor at the Warrington Academy. Dr. Taylor published A Coll. of Tunes in Various Airs, one of the first collections of its kind, and his grandson was one of the most musical of Unitarian hymn-writers). Young Taylor, after serving his apprenticeship in his native place, was for two years in a banking house in London, at which time he was an occasional poetical contributor to the Morning Chronicle. In 1773 he returned to Norwich, where he spent the rest of his life, first as a manufacturer, and afterwards as a wool and yarn factor. For nearly fifty years he was a deacon at the Octagon Chapel. At the time of the French Revolution he joined in the support of the Cabinet, a periodical brought out by the Litesmals of Norwich, in conjunction with Dr. Enfield, William Taylor, Miss Alderson (Mrs Oiper), and others, and, as a "poet of the olden time," he contributed five poems thereto. These and other political songs and poems relating to family events, &c., together with 50 hymns were collected in Hymns and Miscellaneous Poems, Reprinted for Private Distribution, 1818, published by M. Whitehouse, taken from the Monthly Repository of Sept. 1826, by his son, Edward Taylor, then Gresham Professor of Music. An earlier and less complete edition, containing 43 hymns, he had himself caused to be printed by his sons, Richard and Arthur Taylor, London, 1818. He d. June 23, 1826. Of his hymns the following 9 were contributed to Dr. Enfield's Sel. of Hymns for Social Worship, Norwich, 1795 (see p. 531, ii.)
TAYLOR, REBEKAH H.

2. Father divine, before thy view. Divine Providence.
3. Father of our feeble race. Christian Love. This begins in Horder's Corp. Hym., 1834, and others, with st. 11 in "Lord, what offering shall we bring?"
The first stanza is by C. Wesley (see p. 347, ii.), and the rest are by Taylor.
5. God of my mercy. God of love [grace]. Hear our sad lamentant song. Penitence.
6. I sing to the Lord a new song. Praise to the Supreme Ruler and Judge.
7. Praise to God, the great Creator. Praise to the Father.
The hymn "Saints with pious zeal attending" in Harfield's Church H., N.Y., 1872, begins with line 4 of st. 1 of this hymn.
9. Rejoice, ye Saints, the Lord is King. Penitence acknowledged in the Seasons. The first stanza and ll. 6 and 6 of all are by C. Wesley (995, ii.), and the rest are by Taylor.
10. Taylor edited Hymns intended to be used at the Commencement of Social Worship, London, 1802.

To that collection he contributed 10 hymns, including:

11. At the portals of thy house. Divine Worship.
12. A new American collection a cento from this hymn is given before thy presence some."
15. All thy works, Lord, are new. Divine Worship.

All the foregoing, except No. 8, were re-published in the Norwich Coll. of 1814. That edition contained 33 of Taylor's hymns. To the 2nd ed., 1826, he added 9 more. To R. Aspland's Sel. of Ps. and Hymns for Unitarian Worship, Hackney, 1810, he contributed 26 hymns, sold and new, including:

14. Like shadows gliding o'er the plain. Time and Eternity.

These 15 are the best known of Taylor's hymns, and are largely found in Unitarian collections. See especially Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., of 1840, and of 1873. [V. D.]

Taylors, Rebekah Hope, nee Morley, eldest dau. of S. Morley, M.P., and wife of H. W. Taylor, a member of the Plymouth Brethren, is represented in the Enlarged London H. T., 1873. "Thy presence some."

1. Blessed Saviour, I would praise Thee. Praise to Jesus.

Mrs. Taylor d. Nov. 8, 1877. Her Letters were pub. in 1878. [J. J.]

Taylor, Thomas Rawson, s. of the Rev. Thomas Taylor, some time Congregational Minister at Bradford, Yorkshire, was b. at Ossett, near Wakefield, May 9, 1807, and educated at the Free School, Bradford, and the Leaf Square Academy, Manchester. From the age of 15 to 18 he was engaged, first in a merchant's, and then in a printer's office. Influenced by strong religious desires, he entered the Airedale Independent College at 18, to prepare for the Congregational ministry. His first and only charge was Howard Street Chapel, Sheffield. This he retained about six months, entering upon the charge in July 1839, and leaving it in the January following. For a short time he acted as classical tutor at Airedale College, but the failure of health which compelled him to leave Sheffield also necessitated his resigning his tutorship. He d. March 7, 1835. A volume of his Memoirs and Select Remains, by W. S. Matthews, in which were several poems and a few hymns, was pub. in 1836. His best known hymn is "I'm but a stranger here. (p. 581, ii.) The rest in C. U. all from his Memoirs, 1836, are:

1. Earth, with her ten thousand flowers. The love of God.
3. There was a time; when children sang. S. School Anniversary.
4. Yes, it is good to worship Thee. Divine Worship. From this "Thou, sweet O God, to sing thy praise," beginning with st. 11.
5. Yes, there are little ones in heaven. Sunday S. Anniversary. [J. J.]

Te Deum laudamus, the most famous non-biblical hymn of the Western Church, intended originally (as it appears) for daily use as a morning hymn. It is now known to the Eastern Church in a Greek form, though the first ten verses exist in Greek. In the West it is known to have been in use from the beginning of the 6th cent. as a hymn for the Sunday service for matins before the lesson from the Gospel.

The subject will be treated under the following heads: i. Authorities; ii. Text; iii. Title; iv. Date and Authorship; v. Origin and Intention; vi. Versions; vii. Liturgical use; viii. Musical Settings.

1. Authorities. Of the Authorities the most important are:

1. For the earlier literature it is sufficient to refer to Bart. Gavante's Thesaurus Sacrorum rituum as edited by C. M. Merali in 2 vols. fol. Venice, 1744 (vol. 2, pp. 147-153), and to Cardinal J. M. Thome's Opera, ed. Venzel, Rome, 1747, vol. 2, p. 345 fol. and vol. 3, p. 614 fol. In the former the question of the Ambrosian-Augustinian authorship is carefully discussed by Merali; in the latter several Ms. texts are given with various readings. The dissertation of W. E. Lentz, Excercitaciones Sacrae, Leipzig and Frankfurt, 1852, is also frequently referred to.

2. Till recently the best modern authority was Daniel's Thesaurus Hymnologicus, vol. 2, Halle, 1815, pp. 274-296, but considerable advance has been made on this by Prefatory Edgar C. S. Gibson, of Wells, in his able and learned article on the Te Deum in the Church Quarterly Review, of April, 1844, (vol. 19, pp. 1-27) and supplemented by one on the Doxologia in Ritioli, ibid., Oct., 1883, (vol. 21, pp. 19, 20), which will be of the greatest service to the writer of this article. Dr. Swaimson's article in Electric's Dict. of Christian Antiquities (1890) is ill-arranged, but touches some points not noticed by the later writer.

2. A small volume by Ebeneezer Thomson called A Vindication of the Hymn Te Deum laudamus, &c., London, J. Russell Smith, 1855, contains a certain number of versions, not readily accessible elsewhere, and some notes which are occasionally valuable.

5. Dam G. Morin in the Maredonso Revue Ecclesiastique, April, 1896, discusses the authorship.

6. Thanks are due also to the Librarian of the New Haven DataLoader, Mr. Gibson and to Canon T. L. Kingsbail for important private letters; and to M. Léopold Delatte and M. C. J. Bouthillier, of Paris, Dr. Certini of Milan, Dr. Etienne of St. Gall, the Leitnisch of Bamberg, and Rev. H. J. White for copies and collations of M. S.; to Mr. W. J. Birbeck of Nag-}

6. ii. The Text. As it is impossible to discuss the Date and Authorship and Origin and Intention of the hymn without a minute analysis of its text, we here present, in parallel columns, four of the most ancient forms which we possess.
I. Irish Version.

II. Milan Version (I).

This version agrees most with that of Vat. 82 (V.), as given by Thomasius from an early Psalter, possibly Old Latin.

11. Pater: patrem V.
12. numum unigenitum V.
16. Note the omission of ungenitum, which is also omitted in Maskell’s MS. English Primer: see below, p. 1180, ii.
26. om. sanctis V; it is found however in other MSS. in the order of ergo sancte quasemus. Mr. Gibson derives this gloss from the latter stanza of the morning hymn, Rex eternae dominæ jeronem creator omnium. (See p. 597, ii.)
23. laudatam: laudamus V.
26. + at end Amen V.

12. numus + et a good many MSS. but not the best.

20. ergo + sancte. See note on col. II. tua familia: tua familia tuae later texts; see also col. I.
21. gloria numerari old MSS.: a few have in gloria numerari: in gloria numerari does not appear to be found in any MSS., but in many (not all) printed editions of the Breviary from about 1481 onwards, Mr. Gibson supports (p. 14) that it is not so much due to the natural confusion of letters as to the well-known words added by Gregory the Great to the Canon of the Mass, in electorum tumorem ubius gregis numerarum.

11. enemos T. This seems a barbaric trans-literation of the Latin immemus.
12. So in G: om. HT.
iii. Title (cp. cap. Thomasius, l. c. 3, p. 614 foll. note, C. Q. R. pp. 3–7, 11). The hymn is found in many MSS, without any title and so in some printed books. In earlier literature it is generally cited by its first three words. Later it is cited simply, as with ourselves, the Te Deum, and sometimes, though less commonly, the Hymnus Ambrosianus. The titles found in Psalters and early printed books may be divided into three classes: (1) those which define or describe its ritual use; (2) those which refer to its character or contents; (3) those which assign it to a particular author or authors. Sometimes 2 and 3 may be combined. The first class appears to be the earliest, which would coincide with the early method of citation and with the uncertainty as to its authorship.

1. Titles denoting its ritual use are, Ymnus matutinalis (Bamberg Quadruple Psalter, copied from one dated a.d. 909, A. D. 1, 14), Hymnus ad matutinam die dominico (Queen Christina Psalter in the Vatican, ascribed to the 7th cent., Cod. A. L. Alex. xi., of Thomas, 2, p. 943, and 3, p. 614 m.) and many similar titles, eg. Lambeth 427, Hymnus domini nonnullior (Aleuin, officia per diem, tom. 2, p. 116 = Migne's PP. Lat. 101, p. 592), Ymnus in die dominica (Baugur Antiphonary, late 7th cent., now at Milan, Bib. Ambros. C. 5 infra, rather incorrectly printed in P. P. Lat. 72, p. 587), Ymnus dominicalis pro nocturnis hoc est ante lectionem evangelii (S. Gall, 20, 9th cent.), Hymnus domini a nocturna laude canendus (B. M. Arundel 155, 11th cent.).

3. Titles indicating authorship are numerous but inconsistent. Indeed they may not all have been intended at first positively to assert the authorship of the person named, but perhaps to ascribe the introduction of the hymn to him, or possibly its musical setting, or it may be even to refer to his frequent use of it as a favourite hymn. Some however distinctly assert composition.

(a) The oldest of these titles as far as MSS are concerned, would appear to be Hymnus quem S. Hilarius primus componuit (Cod. S. Emmeram, 155, 9th cent., C. xlv., now in Munich, Daniel's M. 1 iv.). Cp. the Quaternio Grammatici of Abb. Flortiacense (a. d. 965), P P. Lat. 129, p. 532 2/8, "in hui paleotina quom composuit Hilarivs Flortiacensis episcopos novit quod inter laudem imperitans errores succipient, sed patiens succipientium legendum est."

(b) Next would seem to be those which incorporate the tradition with regard to S. Ambrose and S. Augustine, Hymnus quem S. Ambrosius et S. Augustinus interlata est (Cod. S. Gall, 27 and 21, 9th cent., Vienna Psalter, No. 1861, said to have been sent by Charles the Great to Pope Hadrian, but perhaps in this part of a later hand, B. M. M. 44 on Viretus, E. xlviii., B. M. Laud. 96, 11th cent., preceded by the older title, Laudes pro devoto; i. e. once a. d. 1050, Hymnus... is not easy nor perhaps possible, especially as internal evidence tends to fix the composition to a period very near the time suggested. But the comparative lateness of its appearance, the variety of other claims to authorship at about the same date, and the apparent use of S. Jerome's revision of the Psalter in the last 8 verses, pointed out by Mr. Gibson (p. 22 foll.) combine to deprive this tradition of any real probability. The coincidences are rather with S. Jerome's second revision, the so-called Gallican Psalter, dated 388 a.d., than with the Roman Psalter, his first revision of 382. As S. Ambrose in 385 the conclusion is fairly strong as regards the hymn in its present form, although it is just possible that these sentences from the Psalter might have been modified afterwards to agreement with the current use; and the verses in question, as we shall see presently, do not belong to the body of the hymn. The disproof of the claims of S. Ambrose to carry with it those of S. Hilary of Poitiers (d. a.d. 368), and probably also of Nicetus of Vienne (circa a.d. 379). Cassiodorus praisies highly a book de fide on the doctrine of the Trinity by a certain Nicetus or Nicennus, mentioned for comparison with another book by S. Ambrose (De duob., lib. ii. 13). It is probable that the Nicetans meant is the contemporary at Vienne of the great Bishop of Milan, but there is no hint in this passage that he was a hymn-writer. Another Nicetus, Abp. of Treves, circa a.d. 527-366, has left two treatises or sermons, De vitiglis serious deli et De generibus humanorum, which make no reference to the Te deum and in no way touch our subject; and the Te deum is clearly older than his time. Under these circumstances Dom G. Morin's conjecture (above, iii. 5) that Nicetas of Aquileia is meant, and that he and Ambundus introduced the hymn into Northern Italy, is very plausible. Susebutus may have done something for the musical setting.

3. If therefore we take the date of the Gallican Psalter as a probable terminus a quo for the origin of the hymn in its present form, we have next to ask what is the superior limit of date which can be fixed for it? The first actual reference to the hymn is in the role of S. Cassian of Arles, drawn up, it is said, before his elevation to the episcopate in 502 a.d. It is here ordered as part of the Sunday morning service (Regula ad Monachos, xxxi. = PP. Lat. 67, p. 1102). It is ordered also by S. Aurelian of Arles to be said "omni Sabato ad matutinis" (PP. Lat. 68, p. 396), and by S. Gregorius the Great on Sunday and Wednesday, when it is to precede the Gospel which is to be followed by the little hymn Te decet laus (Regula, cap. xi. = PP. Lat. 66, p. 436). All these cite the hymn simply by its first three words.

4. These indications point to the 5th century as the date of the hymn, and to its third rather than to its second, and even at the end of the century it had gained a recognized position almost equal to that of the ancient Psalms. Fifty years is not too long to allow for the growth of this popular acceptance, and allowing some time for the popular acceptance of S. Jerome's Gallican Psalter at the beginning of the period, we may date the Te deum as it now appears in our prayer-books about 400-450 a.d.

5. An attempt has been made to define the date more precisely by an ingenious comment on the 16th verse. Dr. Swanton wrote (Dict. Chr. Ant. II. p. 1956 B), "The phrase 'suscipere hominem' was current in the time of S. Augustine, but went out of favour after the Nestorian controversy; it gave place to the phrase 'suscipere hominum naturam.'" Mr. Gibson accepts this dictum (C. Q. R. 18, p. 10) as a second proof of the date already suggested, and possibly as throwing the date further back in the 6th century.

It is certainly a priori not unnatural to suppose that hominem suscipere would be a phrase viewed with suspicion, since the Council of Ephesus in 431 condemned a creed, attributed to the presbyter Chasius to Theodorus of Mopsuestia, in which the crucial phrase descriptive of the Incarnation is & διεσητήθη Θεὸς λόγος ἀνθρώπων ἐλπίς τιλιυον, εὐ στίματοι δοτα Αβραάμ καὶ Δαυί, κ.π.λ. (ap. Labbe, Concill. iii. pp. 677 and 689). The words ἀνθρώπου ἐλπίς could only be rendered hominem suscipit or admonevit. The text also of the different forms of the Te deum show more variation in this 6th verse than in any other, and that of a kind which suggests that a difficulty was felt as to the propriety of the language. The original reading appears to have been that preserved in the Irish text (as Bp. Lightfoot is said to have been the first to suggest, C. Q. R., vol. 18, p. 10, note 2) which runs as follows: "Tu ad liberalandum hominem non horrusti virginis uterum." There is a Johanneine and Pauline fulness about this (reminding us of John iii. 16, 17, iv. 42; 1 John iv. 14; Rom. viii. 21; Eph. i. 10, &c.), and it is also as clearly intelligible, that it is difficult not to believe it the true reading. The other readings are easily explicable as derived from it, possibly through the loss of "liberalandum" on account of similarity of ending with "liberandum," possibly from a wish not to lay so much stress on the phrase "suscipere hominem," which might be misunderstood in a Nestorian sense. In the Milan text and in one of the early English versions the verb "suscipere" is omitted altogether, and the two parallel clauses are united into one sentence, "Tu ad liberalandum hominem non horrusti virginis uterum." In the common text of the old missal the parallelism is preserved, "Tu ad liberalandum susceperis hominem: Non horrusti virginis uterum," but the ambiguity is introduced as to whether "suscipere," is to be rendered "thou tookest upon thee to deliver (him)," which is a harsh ellipse; or "thou tookest upon thee to deliver man"—as we render it (since the last Primer of Hen. viii., 1546)—which is scarcely good Latin. The modern printed text again, which was used by Hámmer in the 9th, and insisted upon by Abbo of Fleury, in the 10th, and in one sentence, to avoid the anas- lution, "Tu ad liberalandum susceperis hominem non horrusti virginis uterum"—but this is of inferior authority, and appears to be a mere correction for the sake of supposed elegance, such as is often made nowadays by editors of hymns.
6. What then are the facts as to the use of the phrases "suscipere" or "assumere hominem" by the Fathers? This question has been discussed by Gerhard, Loci theologiae IV., vi. § 96, in opposition to Bellarmine who accused Brentius of Nestorianism for having said, "Filii dei assumpti filium hominem." The truth is it is not easy to verify Gerhard's quotations, it is possible to find many to them.

S. Cyprian does not seem to use either phrase exactly, though he twice employs the idiom "hominem intitul" (quod idola dixi non sum, 11 and 14). Others however do not seem to have taken it, having on their side Biblical authority in two striking phrases: (1) the old version of Hebrews ii. 16 (Sabatier), "nec enim statim angelus ad- sumptus sed noster Alphæus susceptur" (see also Augustin); and (2) the frequent use in the Psalter of "susceptor meus = θεόν οτι θεον, answering to various Hebrew words, which was sometimes translated literally as "he who takes me up" or "upon himself." Much stress cannot be laid upon the use of the Latin version of S. Irenæus, though it was probably made early and widely read. Here we find nesciam ut diui dei assumatur, quamvis perf. "assumatur," as the Present tense occurs, but even this is as has been as yet observed. In de Fide, vi. § 66, he has the remarkable phrase "quamvis ex personæ hominis incarnati suscepsi et lectoretur" (or as variously read, ex persona hominis in carnis susceptio); but in his treatise de Incarnatione, while he constantly uses the verb "suscipere" and less frequently "assumere," it is always apparently with "carmen," "corpus," "anima," "sensus," "naturam hominum," "naturam humanam," etc., and never with the concrete "hominem." Indeed the guarded language of this treatise would seem by itself to make it highly improbable that he could have been the author of the Te Deum.

On the other hand, the phrase appears to be widely used by S. Augustinian and with greater boldness, repeated for instance in his de Prodestinatione Sanctorum, where he does not shrink from asking the question, "ille homo, ut in verbo Patris coeterno, in unitatem personæ assumatur, Filius dei unigenitum esset, unde hoc meruit?" (see cap. xv. § 30, 31). Taken alone, it is obvious how open such a speculation is to a Nestorian misconception. (See also Serm. de Catech. 8, de persona, de unio solo ("ut totum hominem suscipere dignaretur in utero virginis") and 18, Excidionem 36, cp. de Trin. I. vii. 14, "nuper acceptum hominem," and of Gratian Dei hominem, and of assumptum homine. Probably S. Augustinian's use is the strongest instance, but we also find the phrase used by writers in the midst of the Nestorian controversy and later. Such are Leporius, in his recapitulation made about a.d. 420, quoted by John Cassian, and Cassian himself (de Inc. contra Nestorium, i. 5 and ii. 3, where he uses the phrase "hominum Deus") and S. Leo. Serm. 24, 6 and 12, 6 (cp. Dr. W. Bright, Sermonts of S. Leo, p. 165, ed. 2). It may be that, as Mr. Gibson suggests, both Cassian and Leo are more cautious in their later books, but they are not the latest writers who use the phrase. Vigiliius Tapiensis (circa A.D. 484) writes, "Jucundus est virginis utero dei filius, et suscipit hominem qui iam habebat a patre plenissimam deltam" (de Unitate Trinitatis iv. § 25. Lat. 62, p. 343). Another sufferer from Vandal persecution in Africa, Fulgentius of Ruspe, uses the phrase frequently, both with "hominem" alone and qualified by an epithet, in his books ad Prisca Marcam regem, written about a. d. 520 (e.g. lxx. 12, 16, 18; with a qualification ib. 7, 8, 27, parallel naturally with a use of "hominem" and "caro"). Florus Ludginensis de Ex- pulsione, written in the 9th cent. (§ 5 (P. Lat., 119, p. 21 c) is the last author that need be quoted for "suscipere" with "totum hominem" and "mortalis." The use of "susccipere hominem" by Bohethius, de Personae et substantia Natarum cap. 1, and by Hammas, de Corpore et Sane- gine Domini 28, is of course closely parallel. Thomas Aquinas in the Summa, pars qu. 4, art. 3, says, "hominem suscipere quod homo sit assumptum," though he is obliged to admit that many fathers used the phrase with some offense. Cp. Biliart, Tract. de Inc. dissert. iv. art. 1.

It seems, then, that Dr. Swainson's assertion is much too sweeping, and that though some authors may have grown shy of the phrase "suscipere hominem," during or soon after the Nestorian controversy, others did not feel scrupulous about it. The names of Augustine, Leporius (and with him Cassian), Vigiliius and Fulgentius suggest that the African school especially accepted the phrase as a convenient and telling one and without any fear of being misunderstood. The use of the double phrase "totum hominem suscipere in utero virginis" by S. Augustinus, and of "ingranti est virginum utroque" et suscepitur," by Vigiliius, is also a point of contact with the hymn. How far does this fall in with other probable evidence?

7. Merati long ago suggested that the Te Deum originated in Southern Gaul and particularly in the school of Lerins, though his further conjecture that S. Hilary of Arles was the author does not seem a happy one. This suggestion is adopted by Daniel in several terms (p. 288) and is also considered probable by Mr. Gibson, as far as Gaul and Lerins are concerned. The evidence in favour of Gaul drawn by the last writer from the Centenio- nes or precates of the Gallican Sac- mentraries is certainly very striking, and is one of the most important of his contributions to the history of the hymn. Such are par- ticularly: "Diguum et iustum est... ut dominium ac deum totis visceribus humanis conditio renovatur" (Missa geliocam, p. 84) and Gallicam, deident adorat et conterit viri; et celci caelestum et angelicae potestates certaminis laudare, dicentes Sanctus." (Miss. Goh. p. 518): "Quem angeli et archangi quem throni et dominations quem Cherubin et Seraphin inessebili rove proclamant, dicentes Sanctus." (Miss. Munea, ii.): and others of the latter verses, which deserve to be read, though none of them touch verse 10. The early adoption of S. Jerome's revision of the Psalter by Gallienus, as far as the writers mentioned above are in the same direction; and the fact that Cassianus of Arles, who was a disciple of the famous school of Lerins (in the little island of St. Honoratus between Antibes and Frejus), is the first person known to have used the hymn, gives a certain plausibility to the conjecture of Merati with regard to the specific locality of its origin. But verse 16 is a difficulty: since the phrase "suscipere hominem" appears to be African rather than Gallican. It is natural then to think of Cassian, whose monastery at Marseilles was probably the model for that of Lerins, and whose intercourse with S. Honoratus is well known, as the intermediary link in this as he was in some other greater matters. It is not sug- gested that Cassian himself was the author or compiler, but some one under his influence. Perhaps it is impossible to go any nearer than this with the present imperfect analysis of the writings of the Latin fathers.

v. Origin and Intention.—If therefore it is impossible to fix the authorship of the Te Deum, can we go any further in the enquiry as to its origin?

1. A careful comparison of the four parallel columns given under the head of Text (§ 1) will suggest at any rate some interesting con- clusions. In the first column we have the Irish text, mainly from the Bannor Antiph- ory, which is by internal evidence dated about A.D. 680-691 (Warren's Liturgy and Ritual of the Celtic Church, p. xiii.). This text appears to be the most primitive. In the second we have a version which is that of a Breviary of Milan, kindly cited to us for this article by Dr. Ceriani; and of an early Psalter in the Vatican library described by Thomaussius. In the third is the ordinary version found in Ms.; and in the fourth a Greek version extending to the first eleven or twelve verses found in four or five Ms., three from the Monasteries of S. Gall, Bamberg and Cologne, and one from Tournai (at Paris). The version of the Mssarable Breviary is interesting, but seems to require more careful editing.

2. The hymn in its current form consists of 29 verses. The other forms have only 20 each. The three forms agree very closely for the first 21 verses, though for some interesting variations of reading, especially, as we have seen, in verse 16. But they differ considerably, particularly as to the order and arrangement of the concluding portions, which nevertheless are all of the same antiphonal character. The last verses in all three forms are sentences which are mainly taken from the Psalter, and one from Daniel. Only one ("Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin") is non-biblical, and that is taken, together with a number of the sentences from the Psalter, from the very similar antiphonal sentences at the close of the Greek morning hymn generally known as the Gloria in excelsis.

These facts were first fully brought out by Mr. Gibson, who has shown the similarity of the conclusions of the two hymns both of which he has carefully analysed in the two articles above named. The conclusion to the Gloria in excelsis exists in at least five different forms in Greek (the earliest being in the famous Ale, written by Tryphone), one of which is here given from a xiii cent. Ms., in the British Museum (Harl. 5541) as printed by Mr. Gibson, to which we have prefixed verse numerals and subjoined references to the Te Deum parallels for the purpose of comparison. A list of other Ms. forms will be found in the C. Q. R., xxii. p. 101.

3. Mr. Gibson's suggestion that these antiphons were transferred from the Greek morning hymn, Gloria in excelsis, to the Latin morning hymn, which is used for the daily service, is very plausible (C. Q. R. 21, p. 20). This accounts for the variety of the three endings, since these antiphons did not belong to the original hymn and were felt to be public property to be used as Hirutiae thought most fitting. It is also noticeable that a similar antiphon in the Latin liturgy: luditate nomen dominii precedes the hymn in the Irish version in the Bawor Antiphonary and in the Dublin Book of Hymns, being the antiphon to the short Greek evening hymn at the end of the fifth book of the Apostolic Constitutions, which hymn closes with the ευπαναλαμβάνων άλος, &c. Hence we conclude that the Te Deum as first used as a whole in the Latin Church consisted of verses 1-21, ending with the words "sederna fac eum sanctis [+ tuia?] gloria munari=" "make them to be gifted in company with the saints with eternal glory." The musical evidence given below strongly confirms this.

4. Can we analyse this conclusion further? Not with any certainty: the Greek version of the first part, existing in four Ms., suggests prima facie that verses 1-10 down to "sae. contet. ecceles." were originally a separate Greek hymn and we are an address to Christ as God; that the Trinitarian passage (11-13) is an insertion, a sort of doxology added at the end like that in the Te deae memores; and that 14-21 is an exclusively Latin composition ("Te rex glorise Christe., . . . gloria munari").

5. That hymns were addressed to Christ as God as early as the 1st and 2nd centuries is not only suggested by the well-known passage of Pliny's letter to Trajan (xii. 96), but asserted apparently by S. Hippolytus (Ep. Euseb. Hist. Eev. c. 28) who speaks of Psalms and Odes of the brethren "written by faithful men from the beginning, which hymn Christ the Word of God calling him God" (τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ τὸν Χριστὸν ἐμοὶ καθευδησε). There would be nothing historically improbable or incredible in the supposition that verses 1-10 were a Greek hymn dating back to the 2nd cent. and known in a Latin form to S. Cyprian in the 3rd cent. The passage of his de Mortalitate (ch. 26, written circa A.D. 252) seems, as Abp. Benson remarks, something more than a coincidence. He is speaking of course of the joys of heaven:

Illic apostolorum gloriosus cursum, illic prophetarum existantiam numerum, illic martyrum innumerabilium populos ob certamina et passiones gloriam et victoriam coronatas, triumphantes virgines ... remotiuitatem immortalitatis, &c.

It is not however close enough to suggest that the first part of the hymn, as we have it, was known to him by frequent usage, else we should suspect some other epithet than "exultantiam," and some reference to the white robes of the martyrs. On the whole it seems safest to conclude that verses 7-9 are a reminiscence of S. Cyprian, not from versus; and that the Greek form of verses 1-10 is a translation from the Latin, not an original composition. Yet this is to be observed (1) that the Te deae memores and the Gloria in excelsis are both from a Greek original; (2) that the other canticules in the Quadruple Psalters have their Greek originals, in parallel columns, in just the same writing and style as the Te Deum; and (3) that there is nothing in verses 1-10 which reads like a translation except the form of the Teruncstus and a phrase which we shall discuss below, verse 8. It is only necessary to read them in a form which is more easy for ourselves than the Latin characters into which the Greek of the Psalter is (as usual) transliterated, to be convinced of their genuine ring of strength and simplicity.

1. Χέ θεόν (θεόν B.) αἰώνων. 2. ἡ κυρίων ἡμών ἡ ζωή. 3. ἢ κοινωνίαν ἡ ζωή. 4. σύναψιν καὶ σύναψιν ἡ ἐκκλησίαν. 5. Αἰγίος τοίχῳ ἡ κύριον ἡ θάλασσα. 6. κράτησεν ἡ δικαιοσύνη τῆς δόξης σου. 7. Χέ δεδουλεύσαντος Ἀπόστολον χρόνον. 8. προφητῶν αἰνέτος ἀγάπης. 9. ἔξωφροις ἐκλαμπρήσαντες ἐπὶ στριτά. 10. Χέ κατὰ πάντα τὴν αἰωνίων ὧν ἡ ἐκκλησία εὐκλησία.

In verse 2 we notice the absence of a verb after γι, such as σέβεται. This is an argument, it may be, for the mutilation of the Greek copy from which the aribble wrote, but does not suggest (as verses 11 and 12 do) an attempt at translation by an ignorant person. For any one who could (ἐν hypothesei) translate so freely, using for instance the compound words which this writer does, would have been able to find an equivalent for "veneratur." Its absence might indeed be explained as an omission from carelessness on the part of a scribe who was making an interlinear gloss, such as as a occasional aspect to be met with in the versions about to be examined. But such omissions of words may equally be set down to carelessness of transcription, e.g. the Mur- bach O.G. ms. omits to gloss "redemisti" in verse 20; which is probably merely an accident in copying. The only other verse which calls for remark in point of style is the 8th, where the use of ἀλληθινός is rather peculiar. The verses after the Teruncstus rise to a gradual climax in point of force. First comes the small and well-defined band of Apostles (ἐπ. χρόνος προφητῶν, 1 Sam. x. 5, 10, and χρόνος εὐφρατής) at the close of the hymn of Clement of Alexandria, then the well-disciplined and therefore praiseworthy regiment (numerous) of prophets, then the bright-clad army of martyrs, then the universal Church. Now there is no doubt that "numerous" constantly means a regiment, from the time of Tertullian onwards, but this use of ἀληθινός is not so common. It is found indeed in the LXX. in Isa. xxxix. 24, in Matt. i. 63, and in later writers as noticed by Sophocles, Leseon, &c., and it may be remarked that ἀδελφότης and αὐτὲς occur together in the Greek Song of the Three Children and in the Anaphora to the Gloria in excelsis. We are however bound to notice that the Teruncstus follows the wording of the Latin Mass (God of hosts and heaven, instead of heaven), and not that of the Greek Liturgies. This is an almost conclusive argument against the originality of the Greek poem, at any rate as it has come down to us.

But this version, if not original, is the work of one to whom Greek was thoroughly familiar, and implies that verses 1-10 are a separate hymn. For the peculiar form of verse 11 in all three mss., and of verse 12 in the S. Gall. ms., and the absence of verse 13 (see Text, § i. p. 1120) betray an incompetent and bungling hand attempting to translate at a later date and drooping the attempt. The barbarous word "emense" or "emesses" can scarcely be anything else than a puerile transliteration or vague representation of "inmensae," remembering the length of e in Latin before m and the forms Consan, Κρανκης, &c., for "Constans," "Creases," which show how easily the s was dropped in such a position. No true Greek word can be thought of (such as ákterpou) of which "emese" could be a corruption.

The next verse in the S. Gall. ms., on the other hand, might be a bad copy of a correct but mutilated or blotted line, or on the whole it is most probable that the "allic eikon" represents a barbarous ἀληθινός, not a blurred ἀληθινός, formed on the analogy of such words as ἀδελφικός, εὐφρατής, &c. The absence of the last line would then be due to the interpreter's consciousness of failure, or at any rate to his self-distrust, unless theory of an incomplete doxology be reported to, as in the grace after meat at the close of the Apostolic Constitutions.

7. The arguments in favour of the theory that this early part of the hymn is in intention an address to Christ are chiefly based on the first verse and on the use of the accusative case in it. "We praise thee who art God; we acknowledge thee who art the Lord." The parallel of the Gallican Contestata quoted above, which is addressed distinctly to our Lord, is very striking, and we are also necessarily reminded of the confession of S. Thomas, "My Lord and my God." The mention of the Teruncstus to the second person of the Trinity is also justified by the quotation from Isaiah, chap. vi. 10, made by S. John, and by his description of the scene from which it is taken, "These things said Elias who saw his glory and spoke of him" (John xix. 41). The only real difficulty is in the second person of the sect, and in the use of the accusative case as that of our four Mss. The article is less exactly used. In verse 15 it must be as αὐτῶν ἑκατεροί, and in verse 6 μεγαλεστάτης is not in natural as μεγαλεστός.

"Nous célébrons tes louanges, ô Dieu, et nous reconnaissons que tu es le Seigneur.

Il n'est pas exact (e.g. "La glorieuse assemblée des apôtres, des prophètes et des martyrs célébre tes louanges") or spirited, and it is, says M. Berger, rarely used. On the other hand the hymn in verse "Grand Dieu nous te bénisons, Nous célébrons tes louanges," which is by the famous Genevan poetist, H. L. Empetaz (d. 1853), is sung at all national festivals and thanksgiving services in all the churches in which the French language is used. It may be found in Recueil de Contiques à l'usage des églises évangéliques de France, Paris, Rue Chauclier, 1876, &c. It is not however so much a translation as a partial adaptation. It is curious that it wholly omits the central doxology (verses 11-13) and therefore, perhaps by accident, reproduces what we have supposed to be the original intention of the hymn. Verses 16 is also wholly omitted. The last three stanzas, 8-10, have a very faint resemblance to the original. The last is a doxology often used at the end of the ordinary service:

"Glorie soit à mon Seigneur !
Glorie soit à Dieu le Père !
Glorie soit à Jean-Christ
Notre époux et notre frère !
Son immense charité
Dure à perpetuer."

Another metrical rendering is given, together with that of Empetaz, but anonymously, in Recueil de Psaumes et Contiques à l'usage des Églises Réformées, Paris and Strasburg, 1859, in 14 stas., beginning:

"(Grand Dieu, nous te couns, nous t'adorons, Seigneur, Et nous voulons chaster un hymne en ton honneur.

A. 1., added in the catalogue to the 8th century. There is also a tenth century MS. Peulter (Lambeth, No. 427), which contains it. They vary considerably from one another, but in such a way as to suggest a common origin. The version of the Lambeth Ms., Fol. 195, is here given as it appears never to have been printed. Some words are unclosed, and the gloss is supplied from the context or the margin, or from the Arundel Ms. [in square brackets].

The latter part of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th century saw a considerable spread of English prayers and devotions as well as of versions of the Scripture. Ms. Maskell has printed three of these in his Monumenta Ritualia Eccl. Anglic. 1846, viz. in vol. ii. pp. 12-14, 11 of a ms. of about 1410 in his own possession, ib. pp. 229, 230, from the Bodleian Douce Ms. 275, and pp. 231, 232, from the Douce Ms. 246, both probably a few years later than 1410. The British Museum also contains two in Add. MSS. 10446 and 10447, and others are mentioned by Maskell in his preface, pp. xxxiii, xxxiv. The relation of these versions to the Wycliffe movement is difficult to define or even to be discussed here; it belongs to the general history of the Prayer in English. A few readings from these three MSS. however will be of interest.

Ms. 1 reads in verse 1, 2. "We beren the god we knowlichen the lord. Thee, everlastynge fader! the erthe worshipcht."
16. "Thou wryst not synnes (the maidenes wombe to deliveyr mankynde) (\texttt{[the ms. version om. suspepted]})."
21. "Make hem to be rewarded with the synnes in blisse with everlastynge pore" [perhaps a confusion of two versions of the same text].
30. "Thou art bleyne to be borg to cons;"
32. "be I not schent wibben ende"

Ms. 2 and MS. 3 agree much together and with the British Museum MSS. MS. 2 begins, "Thee, god, we prisen thee, Lord, we knowlichen" (\texttt{[similar MS. 3]}). Verse 16. "Thou wyrst not synnes to take the erthe worshipcht" (\texttt{[similar MS. 3]}). verse 14. "Thou art kyng of glorie" (\texttt{[similar MS. 3]}). verse 17. "For thou undercote the name of death;" verse 18. "Thee godis rite syde" (\texttt{[similar MS. 3]}).

The two Brit. Mus. Add. MSS. 10446 and 10447 agree closely with one another as well as with MS. 2 and MS. 3. The most remarkable phrases in these are already quoted; verse 2, "every erthe worshipht;" verse 13, "and the holy gost comfoortor;" verse 14, "Thee art kyng of glorie;" verse 15, "and art."
on the services to be said by the nuns, and is apparently quite independent of the preceding versions. The modern editor, Rev. J. H. Blunt, in his "Early English Text Society, extra series, No. VI., 1873, p. ix, includes it as his belief that the author was Dr. Thomas Gascoigne, Warden of Merton, and hence, in the middle of the 15th century. There is a certain beauty and freedom about the version of The Deum, e.g.

"We praise thee, God, we know the Lord, and all the angels, all the heavens and all the powers of the heavens, to thee do we ascribe the glory and honor and majesty. For thou hast created all things, and hast redeemed the souls of thy servants who trust in thee."

Verse 16. "When thou shouldest take upon thee mankind for the deliverance of man, thou hast redeemed the souls of thy servants who trust in thee."

This curious version is the first to read "We praise thee, God," as well as "Sabbath" in v. 5, and "O Lord in the heaven I have trusted." But its chief characteristic is paraphrase, e.g. verses 10, 11, run, "The holy congregation of faithful throughout all the world magnify thee. They knowledge thee to be the father an infinite majesty. They knowledge thee honorable and very onely. And the Holy Ghost alse also to be a comforter." Verse 14. "Thou (when thou shouldst take upon thy nature to deliver man) dost nat abhorre a virgins womb."

Verse 21 has the modern mistake, for the first time, "Make them to be numbered with thy saints in joy everlasting." Then follows the "Prayer of 1535 (Three Volumes of Henry VIII.) Oxford, 1534, p. 821 which agree generally with the preceding, but has some curious peculiarities of its own, e.g. verses 5, 6, "Holy art thou, Holy art thou, Holy art thou, Holy art thou, Holy art thou, Holy art thou." This version is probably pre-supposed in the two other Primers (of 1539 and 1545), prepared by Dr. Burton in the same volume, pp. 337 and 456, where the first words only are given—indeed in the first case with the title, The Song of Augustin and Ambrose. The second case with the title, The praise of God, the Father the Son and the Holy Ghost. (5.) The version of the last Primer of Henry VIII. 1546 (reprinted in facsimile at the end of the 17th or beginning of the 18th century), and of the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1549) is practically the same as that in our Primer. We have seen that the later versions gradually approach to the present, which is not a new one but merely a revision, based apparently upon a collation or reminiscence of several existing forms, which may plausibly be ascribed to Cranmer. It cannot be said to be successful in point of accuracy, though it is beautifully in its smoothness and rhythm. It is a failure in attempting to introduce the inaccurate renderings "thou tookst upon thee to deliver man" and "thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers," the last evidently merely for the sake of euphony; and it stereotypes the Carthusian phrase "We praise thee, O God," and makes them to be numbered with thy saints in glory everlasting," the later, however, being a misreading, as we have seen, of somewhat earlier date. (See Notes on the Metrical Versions at the close of this article.) 3. Thomas prints a modern Swedish version beginning "O God, who art the life of my soul;" and it is in answer to a French "Order, 1556, Till manniskones forlossing togs du i Jungfru lifwe mandom" and v. 21 "Och gïwer dem den eviga blytighet med din Helgen," Quotations from the Icelandic version are given below.

6. Russian. The Deum, though unknown in the Greek-speaking churches (which use the "Great Doxology" or Gloria in Excelsis in some form or other) is very popular in Russia. It is not sung at Mattins, but at what are called "molchini," which are short thanksgiving services connected with anniversaries, birthdays, &c. The "Great Doxology" in these cases allowed as an alternative is always called the "Song of St. Ambrose," and appears to be translated almost word for word from the Latin, very much in the manner of an interlinear gloss. As the mass, in which it occurs (according to the testimony of Father Pokrovski, of the Acad-emy of S. Alexander Nevski at St. Petersburg) appears not to be older than the 17th century, it is unlikely that it is of comparatively modern introduction. Mr. W. J. Birkbeck, to whom this in formation is due, suggests that it was introduced by Peter Moglina, who was at first a uniat, and was educated at Rome and Paris, and who, as Metropolitan of Kiev (eiren 1530) introduced many useful religious ceremonies from the West, while he guarded against certain Roman errors in doctrine. The Deum may be found on p. 220 of the Molitvenstoj, or popular book of prayer for the City of St. Petersburg. Press of the holy Synod, 1886, and is headed, "A song of praise of St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan," Enlarged and accenative Boga ("God") answers to Deum. In the Terraeus the fuller Latin form is used instead of that of the Liturgy and the copula (ante) sunt would have been omitted in Slavonic except in a literal fr. In verse 16 the words mean "Thou for deliverance about to take upon Thee man didst not," &c. In verse 21 the words seem to mean "Suffer Di- mare (cosa) cum sanctis tuis in aeternam gloria tua regnae," which is the only serious departure from the original. The last verse runs "O Lord in thee have we trusted let us never be ashamed (posthibili)."

vii. Liturgical Use. 1. The ancient Liturgical use has been touched with a great deal of suspicion, noticing the earliest references to the hymn, in the monastic rules of Cassarius Aurelian and Benedict. Palmer remarks that the usage prescribed by the first and second, who both appoint the hymn to be sung in the morning, is a kind of argument for their better acquaintance with the author's design than the rule of Benedict who ordered it to be sung at the nocturnal office on Sundays, i.e. on Saturday night (Orig. Lit. p. 228). From Sundays its use seems gradually to have extended to Saints' Days, and from the regular to the secular clergy.
TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

The Te Deum lauds the glory of God, the conjunction of a saint, the foundation of a church, the establishment of a kingdom, and the salvation of the world. This 12th-century Gregorian chant is often sung in Latin and is a cornerstone of Catholic liturgical music.

Musical Settings

- By Handel
  - The Te Deum was famously set by George Frideric Handel in 1733, which is widely known as the "Handel's Te Deum." It is performed at many important events and is a favorite piece in the choral repertoire.

- By Mozart
  - Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart composed a setting of the Te Deum in 1782, which is one of his most famous works for chorus and orchestra.

- By Verdi
  - Giuseppe Verdi composed a Te Deum for the coronation of King Umberto I of Italy in 1880. It is known for its powerful choruses and is often performed in opera houses and symphony halls.

- By Brahms
  - Johannes Brahms wrote a setting of the Te Deum in 1868, which is notable for its rich harmonies and the use of the orchestra to enhance the choral parts.

These are just a few examples of the many musical interpretations of the Te Deum. It remains a significant and beloved piece in the Western classical music tradition.
TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

the choral-liturgical books of the Western Church. Although slight differences appear in various dioceses, these are never more than mere local embellishments or variations, such as are constantly to be met with in local versions of the melody of the Presace, Pater Noster, and other invariable portions of the Latin services. Indeed, as Dom Pothier has pointed out in his Melodies Gregoriennes (p. 238), there is a close connection between these melodies and that of the Te Deum, as may be seen by comparing

Per omnia sancta and Sursum corda

The music of which is in the form of an antiphon of the fourth mode, and stands in the same relation to the previous seven verses as an ordinary antiphon might to its Psalm, bringing it to a complete close with a regular cadence ending upon the final of the mode. After this, although no fresh melody is introduced, the music fully bears out the conclusion to which a comparison of the various texts leads. First come two verses (22 and 23) set to the antiphon melody, and then five verses (24-28) to the Psalm tone, when the whole is brought to a fit close once more by the antiphon form:

This last quotation from Te Deum has been purposely taken from another version of the melody to show the nature of the variations between different dioceses. The former is undoubtedly the older of the two, but the latter (Sarum) is a natural development of the original melody, with the addition of an interpolation after the pause in the middle of the verse, analogous to that which appears above on the words Per omnia or Te Deum. This melody is used, with only such variations as the changes in the number of syllables or in the position of the accents necessitate, till the end of the 13th verse; and its obvious connection with the Presace music would seem to indicate its very early appearance in the Western Church: for apart from the early date which the absence of a fixed dominant suggests, the melody appears in portions of the Ambrosian and Mozarabic uses, and is therefore clearly Pre-Gregorian. At verse 14 Tu rex glorie, Christe a fresh melody is introduced, which closely resembles the ordinary Psalm tone of the fourth Gregorian mode in a somewhat ornate form of which the following verse containing a full complement of syllables is a specimen:

Tu ad fili-um suscep-tus bo- mis-non hor-ras la- ti vir-gi-nas u-te-rum.

This melody, with its clearly defined domi-
the First English Prayr Book was drawn up under the direction of Cranmer, and published in 1549. In the Archbishop's sum (as stated in his well-known letter to Henry VIII, quoted by Strype), to avoid the use of more than one note to each syllable in the adaptation of the ancient melodies to English words, is fully carried out; and in some instances it will be seen from the following examples, that he was thus unconsciously going back to earlier forms. The following passages give Merbecke's version of the verses already quoted:

We pray the o lorde, we knowlege the to be the lorde. All the earth doth wor-shipp the, the fa ther e mer last ing.

When thou takest up on the to de li-mer man,= then dest not ab horre the uir-gin's wome.

Make them to be nom bred wynt thy saints, in glo y pe e mer last ing.

O lord in the have I trust ed,
let me neuer be con found ed.

It seems that the ancient melody was known to the musicians of some of the Lutheran Churches down to at least the middle of the 18th century. We come across fragments of it amongst Buxtehude's Forspiele, and also in those of Bach. In Iceland a remarkable metrical version was retained down to the beginning of this century; it disappeared when (A.D. 1801) the independent Icelandic service books were modified in order to assimilate them to the more modern Danish forms. The following extracts from the 19th edition of the Icelandic Graduale, printed at Holar in A.D. 1779, will show how the ancient melody was still made use of:

FORSKTE KOOR.

Her ra Gud pig hestrum vier, Annark koor.

Her ra Gud vier pockum pier.

Pig Fader El-hjelle Veg samar

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

This version was sung by the sides of the choir alternately, each side taking half a verse. In the pneuma, here set to the word Amin, both choirs united.

The metrical trs. of the Te Deum into English are in almost every instance the present in the Book of Common Prayer turned inside out. That tr. beginning "We praise Thee, O God" was given in the Book of Common Prayer in 1549. (See § vi. 3. (4)). The translator is unknown. The metrical renderings therefrom in English include:

1. O God, we praise Thee, and we own. Bp. J. Patrick. This was given in his Ps. of David in Metre, &c. 1679, in 12 st. of 4 l. and began:

   "O God, we praise Thee, and we own, Thee to be God and King alone."

This version of the Te Deum has had a somewhat strange and eventful history, as the following facts will show:

(1.) In Tate & Brady's Supp'lement to the New Version, circa 1700 (2nd ed. 1702), it was given in a rewritten form as:

   "O God, we praise Thee, and confess That Thou the only Lord," and this remained in C. U. in the Church of England until the New Version was superseded by the modern hymn books. In an abbreviated form it is still in use amongst Nonconformists in G. Britain and America, as in the New C. 1859, the Hym. & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, and others.

(2.) In the English Moravian H. Bk. pub. in London in 1754, No. 209, Bp. Patrick's tr. was given in an expanded form, the additions being trs. of portions of Luther's German rendering "Herr Gott, dich loben wir!" as below. It begins:

   "O God, we praise Thee, and we own Thee, the Almighty Lord alone."

This was in 5 st. of 12 l. and chorus of 11. In the 1789 and later eds. (1849, No. 668) a begins "Lord God, Thy praise we sing, To Thee." From this the following hymns have been manipulated:

(a.) In the American Reformed Dutch Church H. Bk. 1789, is a hymn beginning:

   "O Christ, Thou glorious King! we own Thee to be God's eternal Son;"
which is taken from the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, with several lines rewritten. This is No. 193 in the American Reformed Dutch Hs.s. of the Church, N. Y. 1869.

(b.) In the American Ref. Dutch Ch. H. Bk. of 1792, there is another hymn from the same source which begins—

"Almighty God, we praise and own Thee our Creator King alone."

Several of the lines are altered, the whole being from the first part of the Te Deum. This is No. 47 of the American Ref. Dutch Hs.s. of the Church, N. Y. 1869.

(c.) In the 1815 Appendix to T. Cotterill's Sel. of Ps. & Hs.s. pub. in Staffordshire, No. 214 begins:

"Thee we adore, eternal Lord!
We praise Thy name with one accord."

This has no connection with the version in the Moravian H. Bk. 1754. It embraces st. 1-ix. of the Prayer Hook version of the Te Deum, and was probably by Cotterill. When Cotterill issued the 8th ed. of his Sel. in 1819 he was Incumbent of St. Paul's, Sheffield. In the preparation of this edition he was assisted by the Moravian poet, James Montgomery, at whose press it was printed. In this edition "Thee we adore, eternal Lord" is given as No. 25. This was followed by two hymns based on the remaining stanzas of the Te Deum as follows:

No. 26. "Thee, King of glory, Christ we own
The Father's everlasting Son."

No. 27. "The Church on earth confesseth Thee
The Father, throne in majesty."

These two hymns are adapted from the tr. in the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, and were probably moulded into their present form by Montgomery.

(d.) In the American Hs.s. & Songs of Praise, N. Y. 1874, No. 5, beginning "Thee we adore, eternal Lord," is a cento from the above three hymns in Cotterill's Sel. st. i-iii. being from No. 25; at. iv. from No. 26; and at. v. from No. 27.

(e.) In the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, No. 207, and some other collections, a cento in st. 4 of 4 l. is direct from the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, and, with slight alterations, is given as:

"Both heaven and earth do worship Thee."

(f.) In James Montgomery's Original Hs.s. 1853, No. 13, there is a rendering of the Te Deum in 50 lines. Of these 11 are word for word from the Moravian H. Bk. 1754; 9 are partly therefrom; and the rest are only the Moravian tr. rewritten. From this Montgomery-Montgomery text (which begins as in the Moravian H. Bk.) the cento in C. U. in America—

"Hail King of Glory! Christ the Lord," is taken.

2. We sing to Thee, Thou Son of God. J. Cennick. Pub. in his Sacred Hs.s. for the Use of Religious Societies, &c. Pt. 1, 1743, No. 2. This has been abbreviated and altered by various hands, beginning with Whitfield's Coll. 1753; then Toplady, in his Ps. & Hs.s. 1776; J. Conder, in the Congregational H. Bk. 1836; and others. The text now commonly in use is that of the Cong. H. Bk. 1836. It is in the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, &c.

3. Infallible God, to Thee we raise. C. Wesley. Appeared in Hs.s. for those that seek and those that have Redemption, 1747, No. xiii. in 14 st. of 6 I. In the 1830 Supplement to the Wes. H Bk. it was broken up into three hymns, and given as Nos. 564—5—6, as follows:— 1. "Infinite God, to Thee we raise" (sts. i.—v.). 2. "Messiah, joy of every heart" (sts. vi.—x.). 3. "Saviour, we now rejoice in hope" (sts. xi.—xv.). The first line of No. 3 is altered from the original to adapt it as the opening of a separate hymn. There are also other alterations in this and No. 2 as above. (Orig. text in P. Works, 1869-72, vol. iv. pp. 224—27.) This hymn in some American collections "To Thee we raise in songs of praise," is a cento from this version of the Te Deum.

4. How can we adore, or worthily praise W. Hammond. Pub. in his Ps. & Hs.s. 1745, p. 193, in 17 st. of 8 l. An abbreviated form of this rendering of the Te Deum is in Hatfield's Church H. Bk. N. Y. 1872.

5. We praise, we adore to Thee, O God. This anonymous version of the first part of the Te Deum is traced to P. Gell's Ps. & Hs.s. 1815. It is also in W. Urwick's Coll. of Hymns, Dublin, 1829; the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, the New Con. 1859, the Prim. Meth. Hymnal, 1887, and others. In some books it is given in 5 st. and in others in 6 st. The doxology is later than Gell's Coll.

6. God eternal, Lord of all. J. E. Millard. Written for and first pub. in the Rev. T. F. Smith's Devout Charitier, 1848, p. 106, in 8 st. of 4 l. and entitled "Hymn for Choristers." It was subsequently republished in Hymns and Invocn. Lond. Masters, 1852; Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise (original text), 1861; and others. An abbreviated and altered form of the text was given in H. A. & M. 1861, as:—"God eternal, Mighty King," and this has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America.

7. Holy God, we praise Thy Name. Lord of all. &c. C. A. Walthour. This is dated 1853 in the American Evangelical Hymnal (Half and Lasar), Barnes & Co., N. Y. 1880.

8. Thou art the everlasting Son. This anonymous rendering of the latter part of the Te Deum appeared in the American Sabbath H. Bk. 1858, No. 335, in 3 st. of 8 l. and has been repeated in a few American collections.

9. The God we praise, the Gracious God. W. Robertson. This rendering of the first part of the Te Deum was given in the Hymn for Public Worship, 1861, and the Scottish Hymnal, 1870.

10. Thee, Thee, we praise, 0 God, and own. E. F. Hatfield. Written in 1871 for, and pub. in 1872 in his Church H. Bk. in 6 st. of 4 l. Other translations are:—

1. We praise thee, God, we acknowledge thee. Old Version, 1660.

2. We praise thee, O God, with one accord. W. Barton, 1839.

3. O God, we praise Thy Holy Name. W. Barton, 1839.

4. We praise thee, God, we acknowledge thee. W. Barton, 1839.

5. We give thee praise, 0 God, with one accord. W. Barton, 1839.

6. Great God, we praise thee, thee our Lord. Miles Smith, 1868.

9. We praise Thee God, before Thee fall. By "M. A. C." in Almond's Hs.s. for Occasional Use in the Parish Church of St. Peter in Nottingham, 1819.
10. Before Thee, Lord of all, we bow. W. W. Hall, 1852.
11. Thy God, we praise, and Thee our Lord confess. B. French. 1839.
12. We praise Thee as our God. W. H. Hall, 1862.

The above four renderings of the Te Deum by W. Barton were written at the request of Richard Baxter (see p. 116, E.). J. R. Besto has a kind of blank verse rendering in his Church Hymn, 1849, as follows: "Thee we praise, O God: we own Thee our Lord Almighty." W. H. Jewitt (p. 603, E.) pub. in 1874, twenty-three hymns on the various clauses of the Te Deum of which four have come into C. U. [J. J.]

Many German versions of the Te Deum have been made at various periods. Of these one is noted on p. 515, i., "Herr grosser Gott!"

Another is:—

Herr Gott, die loben wir! Herr Gott, wir danken dir. This is a free version, by Martin Luther, in 52 lines arranged for antiphonal singing. It appeared in his first pub. in King's G. B. Wittenberg, 1529, and from this passed into the Rostock G. B. (Low German) of 1531. Wackernagel, iii. p. 10, prints it from the Geistliche Lieder, Wittenberg, 1531. It is also in Schirck's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 1, and in the Univ. K. S. 1851, No. 189. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Thee Lord, our God, we praise. This is No. 356 in the Ohio Luth. Hymn. 1880, marked as a cantata.

Other trs. are:—

(1) "Oh, Lord our God! Thy name we praise." By Miss Frig., 1845, p. 83. (2) "Lord God, to Thee we raise." By J. Anderson, 1846, p. 83. In his ed. 1847, p. 94, altered to "Lord God of hosts, To Thee we raise." (3) "We praise Thee, God—Thy name we praise," By Dr. Hunt, 1853, p. 106. (4) After "Lord, God we praise we sing, Lord God," By J. W. Moline, 1854, p. 86, repeated by Dr. P. Brown, 1884, p. 56. (5) "Lord, God, Thy praise do we," By Dr. G. Macdonald in the Sunday Magazine, 1867, p. 84, repeated, altered, in his Evangelia, 1870, p. 172. [J. M.]

Te Deum Patrem colimus. [Grace after Meal.] The earliest text known is in a folio volume of 17th cent. ms. music in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford (H. i. 21). It is given there with the following note (kindly communicated by the Rev. T. Vere Bayne, the librarian):—

"This hymn is sung every day, in Magdalen College Hall, Oxford, Dinner and Supper; through the yeare for the after grace, by the Chaplains, Clarke, and Choristers there. Composed by Benjamin Rogers, Doctor of Musique of the University of Oxford, 1683."

The ms. is in the autograph of Dr. Rogers, but whether he was the author of words as well as music does not clearly appear. The hymn is still sung every year on the first of May by the choristers from the top of Magdalen College Tower, and is annually sung as the after grace in Magdalen College Hall on Gaudy Day, viz. St. Mary Magdalen's Day. The text is:—

"Te Deum Patrem colimus, Te lanubis prosequimur; qui corpus cibo reddit, Coelestis mentem gratia.
"Te adoramus, o Jesus, Te fili unigenite, Te qui non dederunt aem Subire clausura virginit.
"Actus in eum sequem, factor eis Irae Iove victoria; Per te, Salvator unice, Vite spinus nolis reliquit."

TE LAETA MUNDI CONDUTOR

"Tibi, Aeterna Spiritus, Cujus iustius puer InfantemRVm Maria, Aeternum benedictus.
"Triumph Deus hominum Salutem aucto optime, Immensus loc mysteriym Orante lingus canimus."

Dr. Rogers's music is given in the Seren Hymnal, 1868, No. 181 (a tr. of the Latin above), and is dated in the Index, 1660. Tr as:—

1. Father of all! To Thee we raise. Br. W. Palmer, in his Short Poems & Hymns, the Internally Translated, 1845, p. 21, and stated: "Hymn of Thanksgiving after Dinner, Sung in the Refectory of St. Mary Magdalen College, in the University of Oxford." In it, it was included in Dr. Oldknow's Hymn for the Service of the Church, and later in several other collections, as the Sarum (where it is attributed to J. Chandler in error), and others. In the Hymnary, 1872, it is altered to "To Thee, Father, here we raise."

Other trs. are:—

2. Almighty Father, just and good. J. Chandler, 1837 and 1841. [J. M.]

Te laeta mundi Conditor. C. Croft. [Septuagesima.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1786, and in Collins's Hymnus Sacri, p. 44, the same year. It is also in later French Brev. It is the hymn at Vespers on the Saturdays before Septuagesima, Sexagesima, and Quadragesima. The text is in J. Chandler's Hymn to the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 56; Carl Newman's Hymnus Ecclesiae, 1862; and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M. 1867. Tr as:—

3. Maker of the world, dost rest. By W. J. Biew, in his Church Hymn and Tune Book, 1852-1855, Septuages. 9, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 32.
4. Maker of earth, to Thee alone. By J. M. Neale, in an article in the Christian Remembrancer. It was repeated in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, the People's H., 1867, and other collections.
5. Creator of the world, to Thee. This tr. was given in H. A. & M., 1891, and repeated in 1873. In the Index to the latter ed. it is stated to be the "Composers: based upon older translation from Latin." These "older translations" were specially the two by Chandler and Neale noted above. This text was repeated in Pott's Hymnal, &c., 1861, the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, &c., sometimes with, and at other times without the doxology. In the Hymnary, 1872, the text slightly changed, begins, "Creator of the earth to Thee."

Other trs. are:—

1. Thou, Lord, in endless rest. J. Williams, 1878.
2. Creator, Majesty divine. J. D. Chambers, 1857. [J. J.]
Te lucis ante terminum. [Evening.]

This has sometimes been ascribed to St. Ambrose; but it is not assigned to him by Thomasius. More, i. p. 372, cites it as in a MS. of the 8th cent. at Darmstadt. Among the British Museum MS. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. Dr. 2961 f. 10 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 23; Harl. Breviary (Add. 30584 f. 66 b). It is in a MS. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 231); in a MS. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, No. 387; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851. It is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. iv. f. 4 b). It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478), and, with slight differences in the text, in the revision of 1862, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1649, and other Breviaries, generally as a hymn at Compline. The text is also in Daniel i. 43 (the older, and the Rom. Breve. texts), Wattenwyl, i. No. 9, the Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 3: Card. Newman's Hymni Excerptae, 1838 and 1858, and his, ed. of H. A. & M. 1867 (Rom. Breve.). (J. M.)

Translations in C. U.—
2. Enjoy the waking light. By Bp. R. Mant, from the Rom. Breve., in his Ancient Hymns, &c., 1837, p. 28; ed. 1871, p. 53. This tr. is in a large number of hymn-books, including the Parish H. B., 1863-1875; Thring's Coll., 1882; and others.
3. Thee before the close of day. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hys. for the Week, 1848, p. 18, and the Hys. for the Use of St. John the Evangelist, Aberdeen, 1870.
4. Now with the fast departing light. By E. Caswall, from the Rom. Breve., in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 37, and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 22. This tr. is in several Roman Catholic collections for Missions and Schools.
6. Before the ending of the day. By J. M. Neale, in the H. Noted, 1852, No. 9. In this tr. Dr. Neale took the opening lines from R. Campbell, as above, as the first stanza from each will show:—— Campbell, 1850.

"Before the ending of the day
Creator of the world, we pray,
Beneath Thy kind protection take
And shield us as Thy mercy's sake."

Neale, 1852.

"Before the ending of the day
Creator of the world, we pray
That with Thy wondrous love wouldst keep Thy watch around us while we sleep."

The popular form of the hymn under these opening lines is that in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, st. i. of which reads:—

 compilers
H. A. & M. 1861.

"Before the ending of the day
Creator of the world, we pray
That Thou with wondrous love wouldst keep Thy watch around us while we sleep."

This tr. which is by the Compilers of H. A.

& M., based upon Neale, has passed into several collections, but usually with slight alterations, as Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861; the Sarum Hys., 1868; the S. P. C. K. Church Hymnal, 1871; the Hymnary, 1872, and others.

8. Now the daylight dies away. By W. J. Blew, from the Sarum Breve., in his Church Hys. & Tune Bo., 1852-55, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 100.

11. Before the waning light decay. This cento was given in Kennedy, 1863, No. 1451, and is thus composed:—st. i., ii., III: Mant's tr. as above altered; st. iii., from C. Wesley's "Forth in Thy name, O Lord, I go", st. v. (p. 188, ii.); st. tr. probably by Dr. Kennedy; st. v., doxology.

12. As now departs the light of day. This is No. 15 in T. Darlington's Hys. for the Ch. of England, 1887. In the Index it is said to be by "J. Mason Neale." It is really the H. A. & M. version from Campbell and Neale as above, with alterations by Mr. Darlington.

Translations not in C. U.—

Te matrem Dei laudamus, te omnim terra veneratur. St. Bonaventura (?). [B. V. M.]. This travesty of the "Te Deum laudamus," referred in the previous article thereon as the production of St. Bonaventura (which is open to question), is known to us in two forms. The first form is in Daniel, ii. p. 293; and the second in Monc. ii. p. 229, where it is given from two MSS. of the 14th century, and begins, "Te matrem laudamus, te virginium confitemur." More's text is tr. by Mrs. Charles in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, &c., 1858, p. 210, as, "We praise thee, O Mother, we acknowledge thee to be the Virgin." [J. J.]

Te Redemptoris Domini nostri. [B. V. M.] This is the hymn at Lamba on the festival of the B. V. M. under the title of "Help of Christians." This office has been added to the Roman Breviary since 1740, and is now said as a Greater Double on May 24. The hymn is in the Roman Breviary, Bologna, 1827, Pars Verna Supplement, p. 399, in 7 st., and is repeated in later eds. of the Breviary and in Daniel iv. p. 303. Tr. as:
TEACH ME, MY GOD

Mother of our Lord and Saviour. By E. Caswell, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 152, and his Hymns, and Poems, 1873, p. 83. Repeated in a few Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools.

Another tr. is:

Mother of our Redeemer and our Lord. J. Wallace. 1874.

Teach me, my God and King. G. Herbert. [Duty.] This hymn is found in modern hymn-books in two forms, the first as written by Herbert, and the second as altered by J. Wesley. Herbert's text was printed in his Temple, 1633, p. 178, under the title "The Elixir"; and J. Wesley's in his Coll. of Psalms & Hymns, 1738. The two texts are:

By G. Herbert, 1633.

"Teach me, my God and King.
In all things Thee to see,
And what I do in anything,
To do it as for Thee.

Not rudely as a beast,
To run into an action;
But still to make Thee present
And give it its perfection.

A man that looks on glass,
On it may stay his eye,
Or, if the pleasure, through it pass,
And then the heart's easy.

All may of Thee partake:
Nothing so mean can be,
Which with his tincture
For Thy sake, (a)
Will not grow bright and clean.

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as
For Thy laws
Makes that and th' action fine.

This is the famous stone
That turneth all to gold;
For which God doth touch and own Cannot for less be told."

In modern hymn-books, as in Mercer and others, J. Wesley's text, with the omission of the last stanza, is usually followed. We must note that in Herbert's text the line (a) reads in the 7th ed. "With which this tincture for Thy sake," and that in later editions of J. Wesley's Coll. of Ps. & Hymns, the following changes are also made:—

(b) "Nothing so small can be."
(c) "Hallowed is it, if this the cause."
(d) "The elixir this the stone."

This rugged, but beautiful hymn is well adapted in its original form for private use.

TELLURUS INGENS CONDITOR

C. Wesley. [Ordination.] Printed from the Wesley MSS. in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 140, in 2 st. of 8 l. The opening stanza reads:—

"Teacher of hearts, 'tis Thine alone
Thine officers to ordain,
Point out Thy instruments, unknown
To undiscerning men;
Our apostolic guides apprise
Of Thine unseen decree,
And stir them up to recognize
The men designed by Thee."

In the 1875 ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., No. 631, ll. 5, 6, read:—

"The pastors of Thy Church apprise
Of Thine unseen decree
and this reading was repeated in the Primitive Methodist Hymnal, 1887. By these changes Charles Wesley's well-known convictions respecting Holy Orders are completely expressed.

Tell it out among the heathen that
The Lord is King. Frances R. Havergal. [Missions.] Written at Winterbourne, April 8, 1872, and first pub. in Evening Hymns, 1872, and subsequently in her Under the Sword, 1874. Life Memory, 1879, &c. The text tells us that it was written at Winterbourne, when unable to go to church one snowy morning. She asked for her Prayer-Book (in bed), always liking to follow the service as by day. On Mr. Shaw's return from church, she heard his touch on the piano. 'Why, Frances, I thought you were upstairs.' 'Yes; but I had my Prayer-Book, and in the Psalms for to-day read, 'Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King.' I thought, 'What a splendid first line!' and then words and music ran in to me. There it's all written out. Was copperplate neatness she had rapidly written on the words, music and harmonies complete."

The words and music are issued by Patricie of Paisley as a leaflet. Both are also in the musical ed. of Sheep's Songs of G. C. 1886. The hymn is also repeated in other collections.

Telluris ingenis Conditor. St. Gregory the Great. [Tuesday. Evening.] Mon. No. 274 and i. p. 372, gives this as probably by St. Gregory (it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors), and cites it as in a ms. of the 8th cent. at Trier, one of the 9th cent. at Trier, &c. Daniel, i. No. 51, gives it as a hymn On the Work of the Third Day [of the Creation]; and at iv. p. 50, cites it as in a Rheinau ms. of the 10th cent., and makes it a hymn of the 7th or 8th cent. Among the British Museum MSS. it is found in a 16th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 16 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 28; Hat. 2961 f. 222 b), in an 11th cent. Monastic Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 73 b., &c. It is in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 234); in a ms. of the 9th cent. (No. 20), and three mss. of the 11th cent. (Nos. 387, 413, 414), at St. Gall; and in the Latin Hymns of the Anglo-Saxon (Surtees Society), 1883, printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham R. iii. 32 f. 6 b. In the revised Roman Brev. 1632 it begins "Telluris alme Conditor." The original form is included in the older Roman (Venice, 1478) Sarum, York, Aberdeen and other Breviariums as a hymn at Vespers on Tuesday. Also in Wackernagel, i. No. 91, the Hymnarium Sarisb., 1831, and G. M. Druse's Hymnarium Moissiacense, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms.

TEMPERANCE HYMNODY 1137

Tellus tot annos quid tegis, Jean Baptiste de Sainteall. [Invention of Holy Cross.] Pub. in his Hymni Sacri et Natur., 1869, p. 25 (ed. 1698, p. 90, and again in the Paris Brev., 1736, and later French Brees, as the hymn for first Vespers at the Feast of the Holy Cross. Hymn No. 219 in the People's H., 1867; Wherefore, 0 earth, while years flow by," is a tr. by "S. M." [J. J.]

Temperance Hymnody. The Temperance movement has produced abundant stores of verse, consisting of hymns, odes, ballads, and compositions descriptive, imaginative, humorous, pathetic, satirical, and didactic. America has furnished much of this material, but its principal sources have been Scotch and English. The department here treated, Hymnody, may be considered as to its rise and progress, with brief notices of some of its chief contributions and contributors. The Temperance Reform, which began in America early in 1826, took root in Ireland and Scotland in the autumn of 1829, and in England early in 1830. The first societies, founded on the basis of abstinence from distilled spirits only, do not appear to have made much noise in any special hymnody, save in the Temperance question. In a few years they took the position of abstinence from all intoxicating liquors; and in 1836 a collection of Temperance Hymns and Songs was issued from the office of the Temperance Advocate at Preston, a town which had been for some years the chief centre of the abstinence movement. Before the middle of 1837, the Rev. F. Beardsall, of Manchester, brought out the first general Temperance Hymn Book, containing nearly 200 hymns, which the editor had culled from temperance periodicals, American and British. In a second edition the number of hymns was increased to 226, and afterwards to 255, and in 1844 appeared the Hymn Book of the New British and Foreign Temperance Society, N. D.; Temperance Hymns and Songs, edited by J. W. Green, N. D. (enlarged in 1853); and the Scottish Temperance League Hymn Book, N. D. (edited by the Rev. F. C. Wilson). Collections were also issued by Rev. R. G. M'Levy, under the names of Gwyther Kendall, Nottingham, Leicester, and Bristol. The demands of the July milTa Temperance movement, especially in the Band of Hope form, stimulated the publication of poetical pieces with music attached: but hymns, strictly so called, did not multiply in the same proportion. Among works, largely but not exclusively used, in meetings of young persons, may be named, The Crystal Font, N. D.; The Crystal Spring, N. D.; The British Band of Hope Melodist, N. D.; The National Temperance Hymn Book, N. D., compiled by the Rev. H. A. Hammond: Hymns and Melodies of the Band of Hope, N. D.; The New Penny Temperance Hymn Book, N. D., by J. W. Kirton; The Book of Songs of Bands of Hope, N. D.; and Odes for Good Templars, N. D.; and W. Hoyte's Hymns and Songs, N. D. The Committee of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union have published a handsome volume of 176 Hymns and Songs for Bands of...
TEMPERANCE HYMNOLOGY

Hope, n. d. In connection with the Church of England Temperance Society a book of 254 Hymns and Songs has been published, but only a small number are on temperance topics. In 1864, Mr. J. H. Graham, of Maidstone, published the National Band of Hope and Temperance Melodist, comprising 252 pieces, the production of above 70 writers. In succession to this, and as the result of much labour, Rev. John Compton edited for Mr. Graham the National Temperance Harmonist, 1870, containing 550 hymns and songs. The musical edition contained 311 tunes. In 1872, this work was reissued in an improved form, under the name of the National Temperance Hymnal, the editor as before being the Rev. John Compton. The hymns in this collection are 490. In 1878 also appeared the Standard Book of Song for Temperance Meetings and Home Use, edited by Mr. T. Bowick; followed in 1881 by an elegant volume containing these hymns with music, by Mr. A. J. Burch. All the more recent works can be obtained from the National Temperance Publication Depot, 335, Paternoster Row. It may be observed that all these collections abound in songs as well as hymns, and it is difficult to judge of the numerical proportion they bear to each other in the whole body of metrical compositions. Perhaps it will be an approach to accuracy to estimate the number of distinct hymns at about 300, and of hymn-writers at from 60 to 70. In the earliest collection as many hymns by the same writer are printed; but in the later compilations no writer, with rare exceptions, is represented by more than a few specimens of his poetical powers.

ii. Amongst the most popular and widely used of Temperance hymns are the following:

1. A glorious light has burst around us. Walker.
2. Abasters, wake, there is work to be done. J. Anderson.
3. All gracious Lord, we look to Thee. W. J. Horsley.
4. Almighty Father, while we own, Thy saving power, etc. Vernon.
5. Am I my brother's keep'er? Yes, American.
12. Friends of Temperance, onward go. J. B.
13. Give me a draught from the crystal spring. T. Hastings.
16. Lo Zion droops; in vain, in vain. H. Anderson.
17. Lord, of both heaven and earth, defend us. Anon.
18. O Thou from Whom all gifts proceed. Vernon.
21. Pledged in a noble cause. H. F.
22. Rise, and shine through every nation. T. J.
24. Wake, for the time of slumber. Jabez Burns.
25. We praise Thee, if one rescued soul. Sigourney.
27. Who will tell of strength and freedom? Eliza Cook.
28. Wine is a mocker; it beguiles. J. R.

iii. In furnishing a few biographical details of Temperance hymn-writers we confine ourselves to the following, who have all passed away:

1. Anderson, Henry, was b. at Walton-le-Dale, near Preston, Lancashire, Dec. 3, 1806, and was one of the early Preston abstainers. He was a popular speaker, and his poems were widely recited and sung. A complete edition of his poems, with a Memoir by J. Thrush, has been published.
2. Balfour, Clara Liddall, née Lucas, was b. Dec. 11, 1848. She edited several Temperance Journals, and published the Garland of Water Flowers, and other Temperance works. On Literary as well as on Temperance subjects she was an elegant writer and charming speaker. She d. July 3, 1877.
3. Beardall, Francis, a Minister of the Baptist denomination, was b. at Sheffield, Sept. 6, 1799, and entered the ministry he became an active friend of the Temperance cause in Manchester, and edited the Temperance Star or some time. In 1837 he pub. the first general Temperance Hymn Book, which passed through several editions. He d. June 23, 1842, while on a tour to America.
4. Burns, Jabez, b. d., the well known Baptist Minister, was b. at Oldham, Lancashire, Dec. 13, 1816, and was one of the first Ministers of Religion in London who vigorously advocated Total Abstinence. He edited several Temperance publications, and employed a versatile and forcible pen in the cause of Temperance, both in prose and verse. He d. Jan. 31, 1876.
5. Green, John William, was b. in 1873, and received marked service to the Temperance cause as editor, writer, and speaker. His collection of Temperance Hymns and Songs, had a large sale in London and the neighborhood. He d. Feb. 1, 1864.
6. Masson, Robert Grey, was b. Nov. 1, 1872. He was engaged for many years in the promotion of the Temperance cause both in the pulpit and on the platform. He edited the Temperance Hymn Book, b. d. Aug. 31, 1867.
7. Tunnicliff, Jabez, a Minister of the Baptist denomination, was b. Feb. 7, 1809, and was the pastor of a Baptist congregation in Leeds, where he founded the first Band of Hope, in 1847, the outcome of which is the Leeds of Mrs. Catharine of Dublin. He wrote many songs and hymns for children. He d. Dec. 6, 1868.

iv. When it is remembered that Temperance hymns have been necessarily restricted to one topic, the variety of expression found therein may be justly regarded as being somewhat remarkable. And although not one hymn can be named which ranks with the highest productions of sacred song, yet the literary and devotional merits of not a few are compeive. Several of those named above would make unworthy addition to modern hymn-books designed for special use in divine worship. They might be embodied in a separated section of a Temperance Book. [D. B.]

Templi sacrasas pande, Sion, forea Jesu Baptiste de Santeuil. [Purification of B. V. M.] Appeared in the Paris Breu, 1888, the Charite Breu, 1886, p. 214, and in the author's Hymni Sacri et Nostri, 1859, ed. 1868, p. 65. It is also in the Paris Breu, 1878, and later French Breus, as the hymn at 468 of the Verses of the Feast of the Purification. Text in Carol Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1832 and 1865, and L. C. Biggs's annotated H. A. M. 1867. Tr. as:

1. Sion, ope thy hallowed dome. Appears in I. Williams's Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breu, 1839, p. 182, as having been contributed thereto by "a friend," who is usually understood to have been J. Chandler, although it did not appear in Chandler's Hys. of the Chard, 1841. In addition to being in C. U. in its original form, it is also found as:

(1) O Sion, ope thy hallowed dome, in the English Hys., 1852 and 1861.
(2) O Zion, open wide thy gates, The Lord before, etc., in Pott's Hymns, 1861.
(3) Zion, ope thine hallowed dome, in Kennedy, 1863.

3. The forty days are past. By Jane E. Lee, in the Irvington Hymn for the Use of the Churches, 1864 and 1871, with the signature "J. E. L."

4. Sion, open wide thy gates, Christ before his temple waits. An anonymous tr. in the Parish H. Bk., 1863-75.

5. O Sion, open thy gates, the victor. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. B.'s., 1868.

6. Other trs. are:
   - 1. Now, Sion, to the approaching King. W. Palmer, 1846.
   - 3. Sion, open thy gates, the victor! J. D. Chambers, 1866.

Tempora florigero rutilant distincta sereno. V. H. C. Fortunatus. [Easter.] This is No. 9 in Bk. iii. of his Poems. It is a poem on the Resurrection, addressed "ad Eclesiam Episcopum [Felix, Bp. of Nantes, d. 585]". It is in F. Leo's ed. of Fortunatus's Opera poetica, Berlin, 1881, p. 59; from a St. Petersburg ms. of the 8th or 9th cent., a Paris ms. of the 9th cent. (Lat. 3947), &c. Also in a ms. of the 9th cent. in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 24193, f. 33). "In this sweet poem," says Dr. Schurz (Christ in Song, ed. 1870, p. 185), "the whole Nature, born anew in the Spring, and arrayed in the bridal garment of hope and promise, welcomes the risen Saviour, the Prince of spiritual and eternal life."

In the Middle Ages varying cents beginning with II. 39, 40: Salve festa dies, toto venerabilis seve.

Qua Deus infernum visit et extra tenebras quae in tenere domum inimica? Salve festa dies. (See Sequences, pt. ii.)

Other cents from Fortunatus are in Wackernagel, i. No. 83; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 152 (10 lines); Bässler, No. 57 (10 lines), and others.

It would appear that Cranmer had made an English tr. in 1541 (see p. 344, l.). There are various centes from this "Salve festa dies." As early as the 14th cent., one of which has passed into English as follows:

- Also heilig ist der Tag. Wackernagel, in his D. Kirchenlied, ii. p. 742, gives three, really four, forms of this, pp. 1-41, in 1 st. of 3, 4. iv. in 3 st. of 4. The tr. follow the text given by Wackernagel in 8 lines from the Psalteri Eccleniastici, Mainz, 1550, where it is entitled Gemeine Mans Prozelzang, It seems to have been used in Pre-Reformation times at processions and pilgrimages. The text in the Cas. L. E., 1864, No. 125, is nearly that of this, also Mittelo, No. 151, and Hoffmann, Nos. 114, 115. It is tr. as (1) "Hallow we with praising the day." A free tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 162 in his Eccl. Hymns, 1861, and as (2) "So holy is this day of days," by Mrs. Winkworth, 1869, p. 88. [J. M.]

The rendering into English from this poem have been confined to the extract given in Daniel, i. No. 145, or to selected portions of the same as follows:

- Salve, festa dies, toto venerabilis seve.
  1. Hail, festal day, for evermore adored. By J. M. Neale, in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854. It is a tr. of a selection from Daniel. Its use is limited.
  2. Hail, festal day, ever exalted high. By Elizabeth Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, &c, 1858, p. 135. This is a literal tr. of the text, as in Daniel.
  3. Hail, Day of days, in paeans of praise. By J. P. Copeland, in his Lyro Messianica, 1864, p. 287; the People's H., 1867, and Schaff's Christ in Song, 1870.

4. Welcome, happy morning, age to age shall say. By J. Ellerton, contributed to R. Brown-Borithwick's Supp. H. and Tune Bk., 1886. It was republished in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871; the Hymnary, 1872; Things New, 1882, and several other hymn-books in G. Britain and America, sometimes in an abbreviated form. It is a vigorous and popular paraphrase rather than a direct translation. Full text in Mr. Ellerton's Hymns, &c, 1888.

5. Hail! festal day, to endless ages known. By T. A. Lacey. In the Altar Hymnal, 1884, there are two paraphrases by this translator, one for Easter day and one for the Ascension, and both beginning with the same first line. [J. J.]

Tempted oft to go astray. J. S. B. Monsell. [88. Philip and James.] The first stanza of this hymn was given in the 1st ed. of his Parish Mising, 1850. In his Spiritual Songs, 1857, three st. were added, thus forming a hymn of 4 st. of 8 l. In the revised and enlarged ed. of the H. Comp., 1876, st. L. ii. and iv. were given as No. 353. [J. J.]

Την ἡμέραν διελθών. [Evening.] The usually accepted history of this hymn is that given by Dr. Neale in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, as follows:

- "This little hymn, which, believe, is not used in the public service of the Church, is a great favourite in the Greek Isles. Its peculiar style and evident antiquity may well lead to the belief that it is the work of our present author [St. Anastasius]. It is, to the scattered hamlets of Chios and Mitylene, what Bishop Ken's Evening Hymn is to the villages of our own land; and its melody is singularly plaintive and soothing."

In 1874, under date of May 1st (13th), the Very Rev. S. G. Hatherly, then Priest of the Greek Church, Wolverhampton, and subsequently of that at Bristol, pub. Dr. Neale's tr. "The day is past and over," with slight alterations; a tr., by a friend, of the original Theodosian, in the same metre; an original tune by himself, and a note in which he pointed out that the hymn was taken from the Great After-Supper service (in Slavonic "Great After-Vesperas"), and was a cento from two parts of that service. Dr. Neale took his cento from Daniel iii. p. 127, where it is given in the Cas. L. E., 1864, No. 151, and also Mittelo, No. 115. It is tr. by J. W. Russell, as No. 166 in his Eccl. Hymns, and as (2) "So holy is this day of days," by Mrs. Winkworth, 1869, p. 88. [J. M.]" not in the original rhythmical prose but in a metrical form; and in his original tr. of 1833, as given below, he closely followed that form.

The original Greek is in the Moralia (Σημείωςτα, Venice ed. 1531, pp. 158, 157, ed. 1578, pp. 157, 156). The Greek text occurs in the Great After-Supper service as follows—

It is introduced by the Saviour, "Oti me, hýmni tis ("Our God is with us"), and then proceeds:

"Τὸν ἡμῶν ἔλεος Ἐγγύματοι σοι, εὐρήν. Τὸν ἑαυτοῦ σινοῖν σῶν ἡμᾶς ἀνακατέστη, Παρασκεύα καὶ κατάστασσο;"

"καὶ εἰς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ διαλέγοντας διάλεγοντας σε, θεσμοῖς ἑαυτοῦ σινοῖν σῶν τὸν ἑαυτοῦ ἀνακατεστητον, Παρασκεύα καὶ κατάστασσον;"

"καὶ πρὸς τὸν οὐφρόλωτον Χριστιανὸν καὶ Θεον, μὴν ἔχετε ἐν αὐτῶν ἀπειροτησία, ἀλλὰ μὴν ἔχετε ἐν αὐτῶν μὲν ἀγαπητίαν, ἀλλὰ μὴν ἔχετε μακραὶνον μὲν ἀγαπητίαν;"

"καὶ πρὸς τὸν οὐφρόλωτον Χριστιανὸν καὶ Θεον, μὴν ἔχετε ἐν αὐτῶν ἀπειροτησία, ἀλλὰ μὴν ἔχετε μὲν ἀγαπητίαν, ἀλλὰ μὴν ἔχετε σοφίαν ὑμῶν ἀκριβοτητάν, ἀλλὰ μὴν ἔχετε σοφίαν ὑμῶν ἀκριβοτητάν; καὶ ἁπλόθε τὸν ἡμῶν ἔλεος εἰς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ διαλεγόντας διάλεγοντας σε, θεσμοῖς κατάστασισσον;"

It must be noted that these stanzas are not signed. (See below concerning authorship.) It will possibly be of interest to the English reader to have a literal translation of these stanzas together with the Theotokia omitted by Daniel and the translators who have followed his text. It is as follows, with the portions known as the hymn "The day is past and over," in italics:

"God is with us, let the nations know and be discomfited: for God is with us.

"The day is passing on, I thank Thee, O Lord: that the evening with the night may be thine, I beseech,—grant to me, Saviour, and save me.

"O Glory to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost.

"The day is passing away, I glorify Thee, O Master: that the evening with the night may be thine, I beseech,—grant to me, Saviour, and save me.

"Both now, and ever, and to ages of ages. Amen.

"The day has passed away, I hymn Thee, O Holy: that the evening with the night may be thine, I beseech,—grant to me, Saviour, and save me.

"Outside then the two choirs sing together:—

"The Cherubim, of nature bodiless, with loud hymns glorify Thee.

"The Seraphim, the six winged living ones, with ceaseless voices exalt Thee.

"And all the Angelic host, with thrice-holy songs praise Thee.

"For before all things Thou art the Father, I Am, and hast Thine immaculate Son.

"And dost bear the equal-honoured Spirit of life, and manifestest the undivided Trinity.

"All holy Virgin, Mother of God; ye righteousness and mediators of the Word;

"All ye choirs of Prophets and Martyrs, having life as immortal;

"Intercede earnestly for all, that we may be supported in all dangers.

"That being delivered from the wandering of evil, we may cry aloud the Angelic ode:

"The Holy, Holy, Holy, Three Holy Lord, have mercy and save us. Amen.

"And straightway in a low voice:—

"I believe in one God, the Father, Almigty, etc."
When this tr. is compared with the revised text by Dr. Neale in his 2nd ed. of the Hymns of the E. Church, 1862, and which is followed in the hymn-books, it will be seen that the latter is much more smooth, and musical, than the former (although less literal), and on that account is better suited for public worship. Amongst the earliest hymnals in which it found a place was T. Darlington's Hymns for the Church of England, 1862; the Parish H. Bu., 1863, and others, in some cases it is admitted to be omitted. At the present time it is found in almost every hymnal of note in all English-speaking countries.

In addition, Mrs. Charles has a tr. (from Daniel) in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 25, the first of which reads:

The day is passing on, I thank Thee, O Lord.
I believe Thee this evening and this night.
Keep me without sin, Saviour, and save me!

Dr. H. Bonar has also rendered it into English (from Daniel), and included it in his Hymns of Faith and Hope, 2nd series, 1864. The opening stanza is:

The day is done! I thank Thee, Lord, alone.
This evening, and I cry, O Saviour, be Thou near;
This night from sin me keep. Preserve me while I sleep.

3. Some twenty-five years ago Mr. Hatherly wrote a tune in double counterpoint which was published in Our Own Fireside in Nov. 1863, to a "Fontainside Hymn," but was incorporated with the 6th ed. of the Rev. W. H. Havergal's Old Church Psalms in 1867, in alliance with Dr. Neale's tr. of the present hymn. It subsequently became popular in the Levant. To adapt this original Greek to the tune it has been rewritten in the following form by an unknown hand, and is one of the very few current instances of a rendering back into the original tongue of what had previously been translated from it.

"Theodoreus,
"Praefatis diei olim
"Si bene est, domine
"O domine, tuum ortum
"Nunc domine.
"Tristis, sive eternum
"O domine, tuum ortum
"Nunc domine.
"Nunc suscepcias deum
"Si agis eumque
"O domine, tuum ortum
"Nunc domine.
"Knei'jouen' 'byroS
"Et sumo et tuum
"Nunc domine.
"Knei'jouen' 'byroS
"Et sumo et tuum
"Nunc domine.

For many and important details in this article we are indebted to the Very Rev. S. G. Hatherly, Mus. Bac., editor of the 4th ed. of Dr. Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1882. [J. J.]

This Canon is found in the Triodion, and dates from the beginning of the ninth century. As a Judgement hymn, for majesty and power, it has been regarded by Dr. Neale and other competent judges as second only to the Dies Irae, which it anticipates some four hundred years. Four Odes only have been tr. into English, these are by Dr. Neale, and were pub. with notes (from which we have quoted) in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862. The variation of metre in the tr. follows that of the original; but Dr. Neale omits the expression (address to the B. V. M.) which closes each Ode. The contrast in Ode iv. with human courts of justice, is much more vivid in the original. ["Orator persnasion" = ελευθερών ὑπόθεσι.] In the first three eds., Ode ix., st. 3. 1. Dr. Neale has the curious misprint of "David" for "Daniel." This has been corrected in the 4th ed. He also omits st. v. of that Ode. The untranslated Odes repeat the same ideas as those translated, which are as follows:

Ode 1. Τον θρόνον τῆς φαντασίας.
That fearful day, that day of speechless dread. This was repeated in Lyra Mesologica, 1844; the Hymnary, altered 1811-2; and later collections.
Ten thousand times ten thousand.

The Lord draws nigh, the righteous throne's Assessor.  Also in Lyra Messianica, 1644.  [J. J.]

Ten thousand times ten thousand.

H. Alford.  [Processional for Saints' Days.]  Appeared 1st in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 229, in 3 st. of 8 1.  In 1870 it formed part of the poetical setting of F. R Pickersgill's illustration of the Lord's Prayer, which was pub. as The Lord's Prayer Illustrated by F. R. Pickersgill, R.A. and Henry Alford, D.D., p. 16.  On Jan. 17, 1871, it was sung at the author's funeral, with the additional stanza, "Bring near Thy great Salvation."  In this full form it was printed in the author's Life, &c, 1872, p. 483; in H. A. & M., 1875, and again in other collections.  [J. J.]

Ter sancte, ter potens Deus.  Claud de Santueil.  [Holy Trinity.]  Appeared in the Clunyice Brevi, 1886, p. 517.  In the Paris Brevi, 1880, and later French Brevis, it is the hymn for the 1st and 2nd Vespers on Trinity Sunday.  The Paris text is in J. Chandler's Hymn of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 82; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesia, 1838 and 1865.  Tr. as—

1. Thrice holy, thrice Almighty Three.  By J. Williams, in the British Magazine, Sep., 1837 (vol. xii, p. 267), and again in his Hym. tr. from the Parisian Brevi, 1839, p. 160.

2. Thrice holy God, of wondrous might.  By J. Chandler, in his Hymn of the Pilgrim Church, 1837, p. 92, and again in his Hymn of the Church, &c, 1841, No. 53.  It is in several collections.  The form in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, and Throng's Coll., 1882, is a cento in which st. i, ii, and ill. 1, 2 of st. iii are by J. Chandler, slightly altered, and the rest of the hymn is by J. Ellerton.

3. Lord, thrice holy, and supreme.  By E. Caswall, in his Mass of Mary, &c, 1838, p. 279, and altered in his Hym. & Poems, 1873, p. 130, to "Lord, thrice holy! Lord of might!"  Given, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872, as "Lord, thrice holy, God of might."

5. God thrice holy, God of might.  By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn and Tune Bk., 1852-55; Trinity, 7; and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 89.

Other tr. are—

2. Thrice blest, thrice mighty Deity.  J. B. Chambers, 1837.  [J. J.]

Tersteegen, Gerhard, s. of Heinrich Tersteegen (otherwise ter Stegen or zur Ziege), merchant at Mörs (Meitrts), in Rhenish Prussia, was b. at Mörs, Nov. 25, 1697.  His parents intended that he should become a minister of the Reformed Church in Germany.  His father however d. in 1703, and his mother found that after giving him a thorough classical training in the Latin school at Mörs she was unable to afford the cost of his University course.  He was accordingly apprenticed, in 1709, to his brother-in-law, a merchant at Möhlheim on the Ruhr, and in 1717 started in business of his own accord, at Möhlheim.  About his time much broken up, and his opportunities of meditation few, he gave up his business in 1719; and, after a short trial of linen weavers took up the easier and more lucrative occupation of weaving silk ribbons.  During the years 1719-24 he passed through a period of spiritual depression, at the end of which his faith in the reconciling grace of God became assured (see No. xxvii, viii. 25).  On Maundy Thursday, 1724, he wrote a solemn covenant with God which he kept with his own blood.  Previous to this, before 1719, he had ceased to attend the many services of the Reformed Church also absented himself from Holy Communion, on the ground that he could not in the absence of proper communicants and with open senses.  The beginning of 1725 he began the prayer meetings (styled "U", which had been held at Möhlheim, by Wilhelm Hoffmann, who was a breast of theology (licensed preacher) of Church.  Tersteegen was known as a religious teacher, "Sullen im Lande," as the as the meetings were called, and in his handicraft in order to devote him to the service of his Church and Quidisticians, including Made others, and the composition books, to correspondence on and to the work of a spiritus "awakened souls."  From death he was supported by a come which was substantial and friends. selves with it, especially when a less formal type of religion began to prevail therein. Of Tersteegen's public addresses given between 1733 and 1736, reports were taken of the more important, and in 1769-73, thirty-three of them were pub. as Geistliche Brot-} men von d. Tisch gefallen, &c. Seven of them have been tr. by A. Jackson as Spiritual Crumbs from the Master’s Table, 1761. This addition he pub. in 1750 a collection of tracts under the title Weg der Wahrheit. A large number of his German letters were pub. in 1773-5, at Solingen; and of his Dutch letters, in Amsterdam, in 1772.

Tersteegen's most important hymnological work was his Geistliches Blumen-Gärten, viz., in the 1st ed., 1729; 2nd ed., 1735; 3rd ed., 1738; 4th ed., 1745; 5th ed., 1751; 6th ed., 1757; 7th ed., 1768; and in each case (after 1729) the name of the editor is added. The first 4th ed. has been accessible to the present writer, but he possesses a copy of the 5th ed., which professes to be a reprint of the 7th ed. So far as the hymn proper are concerned the dates at which they appeared in the successive editions (the numbers in each case being as in Bk. iii. of the ed. of 1768), are as follows: 1729 has Nos. 1-29, 101-111; the 1735, 1-58, 107-111; the 1738, 1-60, 106-111; the 1751, 1-91, 101-111; the 1757, 1-93, 106-111; the 1768, 1-107, 101-111. In iv. Kleinert's copy of the 1784 ed., the additional hymns of the 1768 ed. are appended in the shape of several separately printed supplements, but no record of these is given earlier than 1769. So far as the shorter pieces of the Blumen-Gärten are concerned, the 1729 has 220 pieces in Bk. I., 229 in Bk. ii., and 60 in Bk. iii., and the hymns proper in Bk. iv. In the later eds. Bks. i. ii. ii. are united and enlarged; and so e.g., the 1738 ed. has 513 in Bk. i., and 120 in Bk. ii., while the 1768 ed. has 584 in Bk. i., and 120 with an Appx. of 16 in Bk. ii. The 1729 ed. does not contain the Promemotii Lotterie. This was 1st pub. separately at Elberfeld, in 1729, with 235 "Lob," and added to the later eds. of the Blumen-Gärten, the 1738 ed., e.g., containing 284 aphorisms or "Lobs," and the 1756 ed. containing 391. In the most accessible recent ed. of the Blumen-Gärten, viz., the 1805 ed., pub. by the 1st Neupunkt of Stuttgart (6th ed., 1837), neither Nos. 388-406 in Bk. i., the Erlautearte Verze der Madonna Union, appended to Bk. ii., nor Nos. 388-421 in Bk. iii. of the 1st Neupunkt (1849), Nos. 112-125 in this ed., nor Nos. 382-421 in the Promemotii Lotterie, are in any of the first eight editions; and some of these pieces are certainly of originality nor tr by Tersteegen.

The hymn-books used at the meetings of Hoffmann and Tersteegen have often been regarded as Tersteegen's. The 1st ed. appeared at Elberfeld, in 1721. Neandri vermehrte Glaubens- und Liebes-Übung, nebst einem Anhang, &c., was ed. by Adolph Weber of Hanau, near Elberfeld. The 2nd (Elberfeld, 1736), 3rd (Dulsburg, 1747), 4th (Sollingen, 1765), and 5th (Sol-}
In the 2nd ed., 1735, as above, Bk. iii., No. 37, in 10 st. of 6 l., entitled "Thorough resolution to give oneself wholly to God." Previously in the Hesse-Homburg G. B., 1734, No. 960, in 10 st. Also in the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 718. According to Koch, vi. 68, it was originally in 9 st., and st. 10 was added at the suggestion of his friend Wilhelm Hoffmann (see above). Tr. (omitting st. ii., vi., x.) as:

1. Lo! my choice is now decided. By Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hymns from the German, 1841, p. 125 (Hymns from the GER., 1864, p. 215, altered), Her trs. of st. viii., ix., viii., altered and beginning, "One thing first and only knowing," are repeated in Hedge & Huntington's Hymns for the Church of Christ, Boston, U.S., 1855.

2. Now at last I end the strife. By Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 165, repeated (omitting the trs. of st. viii.), as No. 131, in her C. B. for England, 1893.

In the 1st ed., 1729, as above, Bk. iv., No. 7, in 18 st. of 4 l., entitled "Picture of Christian childhood." Repeated, abridged, in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 924. It is a beautiful description of ideal childhood. Tr. as:

Soul! couldst thou, while on earth's green remaining, By Miss Cox, omitting st. ii.-iv., ix., xi., xv., in her Sacred Hymns from the German, 1841, p. 113. Her trs. of st. i., xvii., viii., were repeated, altered, in Hedge & Huntington's Hymns for the Church of Christ, Boston, U.S., 1855. In Miss Cox's Hymns from German, 1864, p. 197, it begins "Soul, while on earth thou still remainest."

Other trs. are: (1) "Wouldst thou thy soul, the secret find?" by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 47. (2) "Dear soul, couldst thou become a child." by Miss Winkworth, 1865, p. 32.

In the 2nd ed., 1735, as above, Bk. iii., No. 54, in 7 st. of 8 l., entitled "Prayer to Jesus on His Ascension." Repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1865, No. 1031. Tr. as:

Thank and praise Jehovah's Name. J. Montgomery. [Ps. civ.] This version of Ps. 107 was given in his Songs of Zion, 1822, in five numbers as follows:

1. Thank and praise Jehovah's name.
2. They that mourn in dungeon-gloom.
3. Fools, for their transgression, see.
4. They that toll upon the deep.
5. Let the elders praise the Lord.

In his Original Hym., 1858, numbers 1–4 were given as one hymn in four parts, with No. 3 altered to "Sinners, for transgression, see," and making 24 st. of 4 l. in all. The most widely used part is No. 1. It is sometimes altered to "Magnify Jehovah's Name," as in the American Baptist Praise Bk., 1871, and other collections.

Θαυμάστω ἀπερτοφοί. [Νηστεία γεννήματος]

This holy rite, that solemn vow. E. Oeder. [Holy Baptism.] 1st pub. in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 107, in 2 st. of 6 l., and again in Oeder's Church and King, March, 1837, as the conclusion of an article on "Easter Even." In 1858 it was adopted by the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, No. 711, but the stanzas were transposed, st. ii. being placed first, and thus opening, "Baptized into the Saviour's death." In this form it is found in a few collections.

That we might walk with God. B. Beddome. [Leadings of the Holy Spirit] This is No. 138 of Beddome's posthumous Hymns Adapted to Public Worship, &c., 1817, in 4 st. of 4 lines, and header: "Leadings of the Holy Spirit." It is not set in C. U.; but it has supplied the following to a large number of American hymn-books:

1. Heirs of unending life. This appeared in the American Prayer Bk. (iv), 1826, No. 210, in 3 st. of 4 l. Of these st. iii. is from Beddome (st. iv.) altered, and st. i. new. American authorities say that this cento was arranged by Bp. Onderdonk, who also wrote st. i. It is in several collections.

2. To God the Spirit leads. This is composed of st. iv. from Beddome, with the alteration of the first line only. It appeared in this form, anonymously, in Bickersteth's Christian Palmothy, 1835, and is in extensive use in public worship.

Sometimes Beddome's hymn is dated 1795, the year of his death.

The angel comes: he comes to reap. H. H. Milman. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 40, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in Dean Milman's Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837. It is given in several modern hymn-books, including Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, and others.

The Church has waited long. H. Honar. [Advent.] Pub. in the Bible H. Bk. 1845, No. 299, in 5 st. of 8 l., with the refrain "Come then, Lord Jesus, come." It was repeated in the 2nd ed. of the author's Songs for the Wilderness, Kello, 1850, p. 39, and again in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1857, p. 31. It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, sometimes without the refrain. [J. J.]

The Church of God lifts up her voice. W. C. Dix. [Easter.] This hymn is based upon a tr. in blank verse by Dr. Littledale of a short hymn near the end of his tr. of the office of the Greek Church for Easter Sunday, as pub. in his Office from the Service Books of the Holy Eastern Church, &c., 1863, p. 222, and begins in the original παρὰ τον ρητρον. Mr. Dix's rendering was made in 1864, and pub. in 6 st. of 5 l., in the St. Raphael (Bristol) Hys. for Public Worship, No. 293, as one of six additional hymns given at the end of the collections, and headed, "Founded on translation from the Greek. Written by W.

The ark of God in safety rode. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [For use at Sea.] Appeared in The Holy Year, 1862, p. 216, in 20 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Prayers at Sea—The Sailors' Hymn." In later editions it is divided into four parts thus:

Pt. i. "The ark of God in safety rode."
Pt. ii. "O Thou Whose way is on the waves."
Pt. iii. "Our bodies are earthy food."
Pt. iv. "The stars will fall, the sun be dark."

These parts are in the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns, st. vi. of the original being omitted. This revision was made by the author. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, is a cento composed of st. i., ii., v., xi., xx. [J. J.]

The billows swell, the winds are high. W. Cooper. [Temptation.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1777, Bk. iii. No. 18, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Temptation." It was extensively adopted by the older collection, but is somewhat restricted in its modern use. [J. J.]

The bird that soars on highest wing. J. Montgomery. [Humility.] This poem appeared in his Poet's Portfolio, 1835, p. 179, in 3 st. of 6 l., and headed "Humility." It is given as a hymn in several collections, including Martinou's Hymns, &c., 1849; the Prim. Meth. S. School Union H. Bk., 1879, and others in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

The chariot! the chariot! its wheels roll on fire. H. H. Milman. [Advent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 7, in 5 st. of 4 l., but not included by the author in his Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837. It is in several modern hymn-books, including Kennedy, 1863; Steeple's Songs of G. & G. , 1872, &c. [J. J.]

The Church has waited long. H. Honar. [Advent.] Pub. in the Bible H. Bk. 1845, No. 299, in 5 st. of 8 l., with the refrain "Come then, Lord Jesus, come." It was repeated in the 3rd ed. of the author's Songs for the Wilderness, Kello, 1850, p. 39, and again in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1857, p. 31. It is in extensive use in G. A collection of the above text of 1885, with those of 1866 and 1868, gives the following results.

St. i. The same in all.

St. ii. In 1866, line 1 reads "She is from every," &c.

St. iii. The same in 1866 and 1885.

St. iv. v. The same in all.

St. vii. vii. viii. New in 1865.

St. ix. In 1866 and 1868, ll. 1-4 read:-

"Fet she on earth hath union

With God the Three in One,

And mystic sweet communion

With those whose rest is won."

St. ix. ll. 5-8, same in 1866, not in 1868.

St. x. ll. 1-4, same in all; ll. 5-8, same in 1866 and 1868, not in 1869.

This collection and further reference to the full text show that the 1868 version of the hymn is the finest of the three, and that which will live in the hymn-books of the future.

The use of this form of the text is most extensive in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several European and other languages. The versions in Latin include "Nunc salutis hostia", from Rev. E. Marshall, 1882 (and circulated as a card); and "Qui Ecclesiam instauravit", by the late T. G. Godfrey-Faussett, in Memorials, 1878.

In reference to the fact that this hymn was chosen as the Processional at each of the three great services at Canterbury Cathedral, at Westminster Abbey, and St. Paul's Cathedral, when all the Bishops of the Lambeth Conference of 1888 assembled, the following lines were written by Bishop Nelson, of New Zealand. They appeared in Church Bells of Nov. 30. 1888.

"Bard of the Church. In these divided days

For words of harmony to these be praise:—

Of love and oneness thou didst strike the chords,

And set our thoughts and prayers to tuneful words.

The Church's one Foundation thou didst sing,

Beauty and Bands to Her thy numbers bring.

Through church and chanter, aisle, and transept deep,

In fullest melody thy watchword spread.

Now in the desert, now upon the main,

In mine and forest, on and ctittd plains:

From Lambeth tower to New Zealand's coast,

Bard of the Church, thy blare inspiring the host." [J. J.]

The city paved with Gold. Bp. W. W. How. [The New Jerusalem.] "Written for Church Hymns, 1871. Designed specially as a counteractive to the merely materialist and futurist tone of many of the ordinary 'Jerusalem' hymns (Notes on Ch. Hymns, p. lxxiii.). This is an attempt to be accomplished by giving a spiritual meaning to the "gold" and "gates of pearl," &c., of the New Jerusalem, as for instance:

"The gates of pearl are there

In penitential tears,

Bright as the jewel rare.

Each sainty grace appears:

We track the path saints trod of old,

And lo! the pavements are gold.

as said of the "true kingdom" within the man. Although well conceived, and executed in good style, it has failed to gain attention, and is very limited in its use. [J. J.]

The day is past and gone, Great God, we bow to Thee. W. J. Blew and J. Ellerton. [Evening.] This is a cento from Mr. Blew's tr. of "Grates, peracto jam die" (p. 441, i.), with original additions by Mr. Ellerton. Mr. Ellerton's tr. appeared in his Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1868 Mr. Ellerton compiled the cento for the Nantwich Festival of Choirs. It was composed of 4 st. from Mr. Blew's tr., 3 original st. by Mr. Ellerton, and a doxology, thus:

1. The day is past and gone. Blew.

ii. O when shall that day come. Blew.

iii. Where all things shall be peace. Blew.

iv. Faints are our voices here. Ellerton.

v. Yet, Lord, to Thy dear will. Ellerton.

vi. This Thine each soul to calm. Ellerton.

vii. Until at rest beneath, by the

One God, the Father, Son. Doxology.

In 1869 this cento was rewritten in 6 st. as "The day of praise is done," and pub. in the Rev. R. Brown Borthwick's Supplemental Hy. & Tune Bk., and again in his Select Hymns, 1871. This text was revised by Mr. Ellerton for the S. P. C. K. Church Hy., where it was given in 1871 as "Our day of praise is done." In this form it has nothing of Blew's hymn except that the line of thought is the same. It is a hymn of great merit, and in popularity and existence of use it is unequalled by any of Mr. Ellerton's original hymns except his "Saviour, abide with us," again to Thy dear name we raise," which was also written for a Nantwich Choral Festival. [J. J.]

The day, O Lord, is spent. J. M. Neale. [Evening.] 1st pub. in his Hymns for Children, 1st series, 1842, No. xviii., in 4 st. of 4 l., and given as a daily hymn for use at 6 F.M. It is in a large number of hymn-books, and usually unaltered, as in Tiring's Coll., 1862. In the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 150, in 4 st. of 4 l., beginning, "Saviour, abide with us," it is a cento, of which st. i. and iv. are by Canon W. Cooke, and st. ii. and iii., the corresponding stanzas of this hymn, by Dr. Neale. This cento is repeated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, with the omission of the doxology. [J. J.]

The days of old were days of might. Jane E. Leesom. [The Days of Old.] Pub. in her Songs of Christian Chivalry, 1848, No. 21, in 4 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Days of Old." In Kennedy, 1863, No. 1396, it is altered to "The ancient days were days of night." It is a plaintive poem mourning departed greatness. It is answered by No. 22
"Yea, watch and wait a little while," which is titled "Rejoinder," and is a poem of faith in and hope for the future. [J. J.]

The deluge at the Almighty's call.
P. Doddridge. [Safety in Christ.] Pub. in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 336, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 362, and in each case with the heading, "Noah preserved in the Ark, and the Believer in Christ." In H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, st. ii., iii. are omitted, whilst in the Presby. Ps. & Hymns for the Worship of God, 1867, st. vi., vii. are given as "Enter the ark, while patience waits." [J. J.]

The eternal gates lift up their heads.
Cecil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Ascension.] Contributed to the 8. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, No. 62, in 5 st. of 4 L. In 1858 it was published in a revised form in Mrs. Alexander's Hymns, Descriptive and Devotional, No. 14, as "The Golden gates are lifted up." It is in C. U. in both forms; but the earlier is the more widely used of the two. In addition st. iii.,
iv. are given in the American Unitarian Hys.
of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, as " O, ever on our earthly path."

The fabric of nature is fair. S. Pearce.
[During Sickness.] This poem, for it cannot be called a hymn, unless taken as such for private devotion, appeared in A. Fuller's Memoir of Samuel Pearce, 1800, and again in the 2nd ed., 1801, at the end of the Memoir.
It is in 15 st. of 4 L, and entitled "On being prevented by sickness from attending on Public Worship." It was added to Rippon's Sl. in 1800, No. 540, Pt. ii., through which it passed into other collections.

The faithful men of every land.
Cecil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Holy Catholic Church.] 1st pub. in her Hys. for Little Children, 1848, No. 16, in 8 st. of 4 L, and headed with the words from the Apostles' Crecd, "The Holy Catholic Church." In many instances where the hymn is in C. U.
the following stanzas are omitted (iv., v.):—
"All members of one body vast
With Jesus for their Head,
And Sacraments whereby their souls
Are born again and fed;
And Bishops good to order them,
And Priests to train and teach.—
This is the Holy Church wherein
We have our places each."—

The hymn in full or in part is found in several collections.

The fairest morn, my [O] God is come. J. Merrick. [Ps. cxzii. Sunday Morning.] Pub. in his Poems, 1763; and again in his Psalms Translated or Paraphrased in English Verse, 1765, p. 327, in 7 st.
of 6 L. It was given in several of the older, and is still retained in a few modern collections, but usually in an abbreviated and slightly altered form, as in Hatfield's Church H.
Bk., N. Y., 1872; E. Prout's Psalms, 1878;
and others. In the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, st. i. - v. were given as "With joy shall I behold the day." This form is repeated in several American Church Hymnals,
and in 4 st. in the Prot.-
Reformed Hymnal, 1871.

The glorious universe around. J. Montgomery. [Communion of Saints.] This hymn appeared in the Levisa Scl. of Hym., Compiled and Original, &c., by E. Parsons and others, 1822, No 829, in 5 st. of 4 l. In Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 476, it was given with a slight revision and the addition of the stanza “The earth, the ocean, and the sky” as st. ii. in its revised form of 6 st. The same text was reprinted in his Original Hymns, 1833. In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Br., 1866, st. iv.-vi. of the 1825 text are given as “In one fraternal bond of love.” [J.J.]

entitled “The Divine Renewer, ‘Thou re-newest the face of the earth.’ Be renewed in the spirit of your mind.” It is an exquisite lyric, and has been somewhat widely used, but usually with the omission of one or more stanzas. In G. Britain it is in Dale's English
H. Br., 1874, No. 1143; the Bap Hymnal,

The God of Abraham praise. T. Olivers. [Praise to and Trust in the God of Abraham.] Concerning the origin and first publication of this hymn somewhat conflicting accounts are in circulation. The most circumstantial is that quoted by Miller from an unauthenticated source. (Singers & Songs, 1869, p. 245):—

The son of a Wesleyan Minister said a few years ago, “I remember my father telling me that he was once standing in the aisle of City Road Chapel, during a conference in Wesley’s time. Thomas Olivers, one of the preachers, came down to him and said, ‘Look at this; I have rendered it from the Hebrew, giving it, as far as I could, a Christian character, and I have called on Leoni, the Jew, who has given me a synagogue melody to suit it: here is the tune, and it is to be called Leoni.”

On communicating with the late Rev. Dr.
Adler, the Chief Rabbi of the British Empire, we find that this account of the origin of this hymn is as near the actual facts as possible.
The hymn is a free rendering, with, as Olivers puts it, as decided “a Christian character” as he could give to it, of the Hebrew Yigdal or Doxology, which reappeared in mesrical form the thirteen articles of the Hebrew Creed. The Yigdal is supposed to have been composed by Daniel ben Judah, a Medieval writer, the date of whose birth and death is unknown. The thirteen articles were drawn up by Moses Maimonides (1130-1205), the first who formulated the Dogmas of Judaism. [See article on the Dogmas of Judaism in the Jewish Quarterly Review, October, 1888.] The Yigdal is contained in the Hebrew daily Prayer Books, and is sung at the conclusion of divine service on the eve of Sabbaths and Festivals.
Leoni, or rather Meyer Lyon, was chorister at the Great Synagogue, Duke’s Place, Aldgate, London, at the end of the last century. Leoni sang the Hebrew Yigdal to the melody now known as Leoni. It is still chanted on Friday evening in every Synagogue of the British Empire, and at the family worship in Jewish homes (Dr. Adler’s Mem). As this hymn, both in its Hebrew form, and as a paraphrase by Olivers, is of world-wide interest, we append (1) The Hebrew Text, as used in the Jewish Synagogues, supplied by Dr. Adler, (2) A literal translation, as appended to the Hebrew text in the printed form as used in some of the Synagogues, supplied by Dr. Adler, (3) the Paraphrase by Olivers, and (4) The Melody, as sung in the Jewish Synagogues.

ii. A literal Translation of the same.

Exalted and praised be the living God, who exists unbounded by time.
He is one of unparalleled unity, invisible and eternal.
Without form or figure, [incorporeal], holy beyond conception.
Prior to all created things,—the first, without date or beginning.
Lo! He is Lord of the world and all creation, which evince His greatness and dominion.
The flow of His prophetic spirit has He imparted to me selected for His glory.

1. "The God of Abraham's praise,
Who reigns enthroned above;
Antient of everlasting days,
And God of Love;
Jermovah Great I Am".
By earth and heav'n confest;
I bow and bless the sacred Name,
For ever blessed.

2. "The God of Abraham's praise,
At whose supreme command,
From earth I rise—and seek the joys
At his right hand;
I all on earth forsake,
Its wisdom, fame, and power;
And him my only portion make,
My Shield and Tower.

3. "The God of Abraham's praise,
Whose all-sufficient grace
Shall guide me all my happy days,
In all my ways;
He calls a worm his friend;
He calls himself my God;
And he shall save me to the end
Thro' Jesus's blood.

4. "He by Himself hath sworn,
On his oath depend,
I shall, on eagle's wings up-borne,
To heaven ascend;
I shall behold his face,
I shall his power adore,
And sing the wonders of his grace
For evermore.

5. "The' nature's strength decay,
And earth and hell withstand,
To Canaan's bounds I urge my way,
At his command.
The way's deep I pass,
With Jesus in my view;
And thro' the bowing wilderness
My way pursu'e.

6. "The goodly land I see,
With peace and plenty bless'd;
A land of sacred liberty,
And endless rest.
There milk and honey flow;
And oil and wine abound,
And trees of life for ever grow,
With Mercy crown'd.

7. "There dwells the Lord our King,
The Lord our Righteousness

The Prince of Peace;
On Sion's sacred height,
His kingdom still maintains;
And glorious with his saints in light,
For ever reigns.

8. "He keeps his own secure,
He guards them by his side,
Arrays in garments, white and pure,
His spouse's bride:
With streams of sacred bliss,
With groves of living joys—
With all the fruits of Paradise
He still supplies.

could use the language of it with any truth, my heart was a little at ease. There was something peculiarly solemn and affecting to me in this hymn, and particularly at this time. The truth of the sentiments I knew well enough. But, alas! I felt that the state of mind expressed in it was above mine at the time, and I felt driven to forsake all else.

The opinion of James Montgomery as expressed in the "Introductory Essay" to his Christian Psalms, 1825, is just and discriminating. Had he known, however, that this "noble ode" by an "unlettered man" had its inspiration in, and was built up from, the metrical form of the Hebrew creed, his astonishment at the result would have been somewhat modified. His note is—:

"That noble ode, page 365, "The God of Abraham praise," &c., though the essay of an unlettered man, claims especial honour. There is not in our language a lyric of more majestic style, more elevated thought, or more glorious imagery. Its structure, indeed, is unattractive; and, on account of the short lines, occasionally smooth; but, like a stately pile of architecture, severe and simple in design, it strikes less on the first view than after deliberate examination, when its proportions become more graceful, its dimensions expand, and the mind itself grows greater in contemplating it."

Preface, p. xxvii.

iv. The Melody.

The following melody has been supplied by the Rev. Francis L. Cohen, Minister of the Borough New Synagogue, London:—

YGGDAL "LEONI."

---

Mr. Cohen accompanies the melody with the following note:—

In Leoni's time it is most unlikely that its (The Melody) Synagogue version was written in score at all, for no knowledge of the condition of Synagogue music in those days leads us to believe it was then sung in unison, with no doubt an improved accompaniment by the 'bass' and 'singer' (i.e. soprano), who as 'shemesh' (i.e. accompanying singer) sustained the Haikin. (Grand.') I give you, however, the most correct form of the melody at present in use.

In connection with this hymn and the above Melody, it may be of interest to note a few facts concerning Leoni himself. Leoni is sometimes said to have been the uncle of the celebrated Brahms, but for this statement there is no evidence. Both were choristers at the same time in the Great Synagogue, Duke's Place, London. Brahms left the synagogue for the stage; Leoni was also a public singer, either at Drury Lane, or Covent Garden. It is said that his voice surpassed that of Brahms in sweetness and melody. In every other respect he was unsuited for the stage, and his appearance was a failure. Subsequently he became the first qualified chanon of the English and German Synagogue in Jamaica. Leoni died in Jamaica. (See Jewish Chronicle, Dec. 26, 1878.) [J. J.]

The God of love my Shepherd is. [Ps. xlviii.] Various versions of Ps. 23, each beginning with the same first line are in C. U. These are:—

1. George Herbert's version, pub. posthumously in his Temple, 1633, in 6 st. of 4 l., and repeated in all subsequent editions of the same. The first stanza is,—

"The God of love my Shepherd is,
And He that doth me feed:
While He is mine and I am His,
What can I want or need?"

2. George Rauven's rendering in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 26, is based upon the above by Herbert, and the first stanza is:—

"The God of love my Shepherd is,
To watch me and to feed;
Since He is mine and I am His,
What can I want or need?"

This text was slightly altered by Mr. Rawson for the Bap., Ps. & Hys., 1858, and again for his Hymns, Verses and Chants, 1876.

3. G. Rawson has a second version of Ps. 23 in his Hymns, &c., 1876, the opening stanza of which is:

   "My Shepherd is the Living Lord,
   So I can never need;
   In pastures green
   Still streams between
   I lay me down to feed."

4. G. Rawson's third version in his Hymns, &c., 1876, in 6 st. of 4 l. begins:

   "The God of love my Shepherd is,
   My gracious constant Guide;
   I shall not want, for I am His:
   In all supplied."

This was given in Thring's Coll., 1882, with a new verse by Prebendary Thring in the place of Mr. Rawson's st. v. The latter reads:

   "Thy grace astounds my demon foes;
   True oil of joy mine;
   My cup of mercy overflows
   With care divine."

Prebendary Thring's substitute is:

   "Thou spread'st my table 'mid my foes,
   The oil of grace is mine,
   My cup with mercy overflows
   And love divine."

5. Mr. Rawson, not content with his original version, supplied us with the following in MS.:

   "God is my host, His welcome grows;
   The finest oil is mine;
   My board is spread, my cup overflows,
   By care divine."

To our mind Prebendary Thring's version is the most acceptable of the three renderings of the fifth stanza. [J. J.]

The God of nature and of grace.

J. Montgomery. [Glory of God in Creation.] Pub. in his Greenland and other Poems, 1819, p. 174, in 10 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Visible Creation." It was repeated the same year in Cotterill's Sc. No. 351, in 8 st. of 4 l.; again in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 520, also in 8 st. of 4 l. (slightly altered); and again, in the same form, in his Original Hymns, 1833. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 338, st. i., and st. ii. 1-4, are from this hymn —the rest of the cento being by Dr. Kennedy. The cento begins with the same first line as above. In addition there are in C. U. two centos from the original: (1) "Behold this fair and fertile globe" (st. iii.), and (2) "How excellent, O Lord, Thy Name." [J. J.]

The golden gates are lifted up.

Cecil F. Alexander, see Humphrey. [Ascension.] Pub. in his Hymns Descriptive and Devotional, &c., 1858, No. 14, in 5 st. of 4 l., and repeated in later editions. It is in C. U. in its full form, and also as "Thou art gone up before us, Lord," beginning with st. ii. [J. J.]

The great Apostle called by grace.

H. Allford. [Conversion of St. Paul.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., &c., 1844, No. 79, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 250. It is given in several hymnals in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

It is in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, “On hearing God’s Voice immediately; from Heb. iii. 13.” It has no date: but being found between one hymn dated “April 10, 1735,” and another “Jan. 1, 1736,” we may date it circa 1736 with tolerable certainty. [Christ the King.] Pub. in his Star in the East, &c., 1824, p. 50, in 8 st. of 4 l., and based upon the words “Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.” It was repeated in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 461; in Conder’s posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 196. It is sometimes given as “The Lord is King! lift up your voice.” In addition there are also two stanzas in C. U. beginning (1) “The Lord is King! Child of the dust” (st. iii.), “He reigns! ye saints, exalt yourstrain.” Through various forms and editions this hymn is in extensive use. [J. J.] The Lord is my Shepherd, He makes me reposer. W. Knox. [Ps. xxiii.] Appeared in his Songs of Israel, &c., 1824, and concludes this hymn. [J. J.] 4 E
The Lord shall come! the earth shall quake. Bp. R. Heber. [Second Advent.] Of this hymn there are three forms in C. U. as follows:—

1. The Lord shall come! the earth shall quake. This, the original form of the hymn, was given in 5 st. of 4 l. in the text number of the Christian Observer, 1811, as a turn for the 8th S. in Advent. In its original form it is not in C. U. In the 1815 Appendix to Cotterill’s Sel., st. 1–III. and v. were given in an altered form as No. 340. In the 5th ed. of his Sel., 1819, R. 196, Cotterill restored st. IV. in an altered form. This form of the text was repeated in J. Montgomery’s Christian Psalms, 1823, No. 310, and is given in several modern hymnals including the Leeds H. Bk., 1833; the Bapt. Ps. & Hym., 1854; the People’s H., 1867, and others.

2. The Lord will come; the earth shall quake. This revised form of the hymn appeared in Bp. Heber’s posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 5. It is in extensive use in most English-speaking countries, and is by far the most popular form of the hymn. Usually the text is unaltered as in the H. Comp., 1876.

3. The Lord will come; the earth shall quake. In Murray’s Hymnal, 1852, the 1827 text was given with slight alterations, and the addition of a doxology. In Chope’s Hymnal, 1857 and 1861, st. 1–III. of Bp. Heber’s 1827 text, slightly altered, were given with a new stanza beginning, “O King of Mercy, grant us power,” and the doxology as in Murray’s Hymnal, 1852. This arrangement of the text, with slight variations, is No. 111 in Thring’s Cyc., 1892.

In other hymn-books there are variations from the above forms of this hymn. These variations can be tested by the work already named. Of Bp. Heber’s 1827 text a rendering into Latin is given in R. Bingham’s Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, as “Adveniet Dominus! Tellus tremfacta lab sắcat;” and another of the same text in H. M. Macgill’s Songs of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876: as “Deus veniens: tremuentes.” [J. J.]

The Lord will happiness divine. W. Cooper. [Lent.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. I., No. 64, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled “The entreit heart.” It is in a large number of hymnals in G. Britain and America, and is specially suited for private use. [J. J.]

The Lord’s my Shepherd, I’ll not want. Scottish Psalter, 1650. [Ps. xxiii.] We have selected this for treatment as a specimen of the so-called Scotch Version, seeing that it is the most familiar of all in Scotland; and is also included in many English and American hymnals of the present day. It is founded on the version by Francis Rose. His 1st ed. of 1641 has not been accessible, but the text of his 1643 ed. is here quoted from Dr. Laing’s Letters and Journals of Robert Balfie, vol. III., 1812.

“My Shepherd is the living Lord, and he that doth me feed; How can I then lack anything whereof I stand in need. “In pastures green and abounding he makes me down to lye: And after drives me to the streams which run most pleasantly. “And when I feel my selfe neere lost, then home he me doth take; Conducting me in his right paths, even for his owne Names sake. “And though I were even at death’s doore, yet would I fear none ill! Thy rod, thy staff do comfort me, and thou art with me still. “Thou hast my table richly stoo’d in presence of my foe; My head with oile thou dost anoint, my cup doth overflow.

THE MORNING FLOWERS

The 1825 text was repeated with slight variations in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 61, and is thus usually given in the hymn-books both in G. Britain and America. Sometimes the text is abbreviated. [J. J.]

J. Montgomery. [Praise.] Written for the Sheffield Sunday School Union Whitsunday gathering of 1819, and printed on a broad sheet for the use on that occasion. In Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is given "For the Opening of an Organ," for which it is well adapted. [J. J.]

The night is come; like to the day.
Sir T. Browne. [Evening.] 1st pub. in the 1642 ed. of his Religio Medici, p. 10, § 4, and is thus introduced in speaking of sleep:

"It sleepeth is that death which we may be literally said to die daily: a death which Adam died before his mortality; a death whereby we live a middle and mediating point between life and death. In fine so like death dare not trust it without my prayers, and an half hour to God:"

The night is wearing fast away.
[Second Advent.] This appeared anonymously in the Plymouth Brethren's Hymn, of the Poor of the Flock, 1806, No. 86, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in several later collections. In The Christian Hymn. (S.D.) It is attributed to Sir E. Denby, but it is not in his Hymns and Poems, 1814 or 1870. In J. Denham Smith's New Times of Refreshing, 1888, the author's name is given as "Hoare." [J. J.]

The poorest of the poor are we.

"We [Mr. J. Everett and himself] found that our entrance had arrested his pen in the midst of transcribing another hymn which he had requested to compose for the Ragged Schools. On being requested he had written, but with such an involuntary accent of pain and pleasure in the affecting incident.

This hymn is in 9 st. of 4 l. in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853. In its full form it is not in C. U., but st. ix. vii—viii. are given in

THE RACE THAT LONG

Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873, No. 373, as "O God, most merciful and just." [J. J.]

The race that long in darkness pined.
J. Murray. [Epiphany.] This fine hymn appeared as No. 19 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a version of Isaiah ix. 2-8 thus:

I. "The race that long in darkness pined shall have seen a glorious light; The people dwell in day who dwelt in Death's surrounding night.

II. To hail thy rise, thou better Sun! the gathering nations come, Joyous, as when the trumpers bear the harvest-treasures home.

III. For thou our burden hast removed, and quelled the oppressor's sway; Quick as the slumbering squadrons fall in Midian's evil day.

Through shrieks of woe, and scenes of blood, the warrior urges on: The lightning's speed, great Saviour! marks the conquest thou hast won.

"To us a Child of hope is born; to us a Son is given. Him shall the tribes of earth obey, him, all the hosts of heaven.

V. His name shall be The Prince of Peace; the Wise, the Mighty One; With justice shall he rule the earth from his eternal throne.

V. In the public worship ed. issued in that year by the Ch. of Scotland, and still in use st. iv. was omitted and st. vi. rewritten thus:

"His name shall be the Prince of Peace,
For evermore adored.
The Wonderful, the Counsellor,
The great and mighty Lord.

His pow'r increasing still shall spread;
his reign no end shall know;
Justice shall guard his throne above,
And peace abound below."

In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron [p. 300, ii.], ascribed to Morison. The revised text of 1781 is included in full and unaltered as No. 55 in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise Hymnal, 1868, and slightly altered as No. 47 in the American Episcopal Coll., 1826, and as No. 80 in the Anglican H. Bk., 1871. Omitting st. iii. it has been included in the American Baptist Psalmist, 1843, Kennedy, 1863, The Baptist Hymnal, 1873, and other collections. It is also found in the following forms:

1. The race which long in darkness pined. Pratt's Coll., 1829; Liverpool Coll., 1841.
2. The race that long in darkness lay. Urwick's Coll., 1829.
3. The race that long in darkness walked. S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852; Common Praise, 1879.
4. The people that in darkness sat. A greatly altered version by the compilers of H. & M., 1841, (No. 61, with an altered doxology.) This has been included in Barry's Hymnal, 1867, and in the Hymnary, 1872. The version in the Irish Hymnal ed. 1869, No. 52, is st. i., st. iv., v., of H. & M., and vi. included in the Irish Hymnal ed. 1873; the 1st ed. (No. 102) giving st. vi. nearly as in the 1781. In America it has appeared in the Francis Hymnal, New York, 1868.
5. The race that long in darkness pined. Thwing's Coll., 1883, No. 146, the revised text of 1873, slightly altered, and with doxology by Mr. Thring added; with st. ii. i., ii. st. iii., and st. iv. i. 4 as in H. & M.
7. To us a Child of hope is born. St. iv.-vi. included in England in Curwen’s and various other children’s hymn-books, and in America in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858; Robinson’s Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865; Dutch Reformed H. Bk., 1869; Baptist Praise Bk., 1871, and various others.

The text should also be compared with Watte’s Hymns, 1709, Bk. i., No. 13, “The hands that long in darkness lay;,” and “The hands that in darkness walk’d,” in Miss Leeson’s Paraphrases & Hymns for Congregational Singing, 1853, No. 43. [J. M.]

The radiant morn hath passed away.

G. Thring. [Afternoon.] Written in 1864, and 1st pub. in his H. A. Congregational & Others, 1866, p. 66; and again in his Hymns & Lyrics, 1874, p. 137, in 5 st. of 4 l. It was adopted as the opening hymn of the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., and has since then been included in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. In H. A. & M. it is set to special music by Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, Bart. This tune is known as “St. Gabriel.” [J. J.]

The rosy hues of early dawn.

Cecil F. Alexander, see Humphreys. [Evening.] Mrs. Alexander has published this hymn in two forms as follows:—

1. The first form appeared in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, No. 155, as:—

“The rosy hues of early dawn,
The brightness of the day,
The crimson of the sunset sky,
How fast they fade away!
Oh! for the pearly gates of heaven,
Oh! for the golden floor,
Oh! for the Sun of Righteousness,
That setteth nevermore!

“The highest hopes we cherish here,
How fast they tire and faint!
How many a spot defiles the robe
That wraps an earthly saint!
Oh! for a heart that never sins,
Oh! for a soul washed white,
Oh! for a voice to praise our King,
Nor weary day or night.

“Here faith is ours, and heavenly hope,
And grace to lead us higher;
But there are perfectness and peace,
Beyond our best desire.
Oh! by thy love, and anguish, Lord!
Oh! by thy life laid down!
Oh! that we fall not from thy grace,
Nor cast away our crown.”

This text was repeated in Mrs. Alexander’s Legend of the Gold’n Prayers, &c., 1899, p. 139; and is also found in a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America, including H. A. & M., the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, Thring’s Coll., the Hymn Comp., and others. Sometimes st. ii., l. 8, reads “Nor weary day nor night,” as in H. A. & M. In some collections the hymn opens with st. i. 1, 5, “O! for the pearly gates of heaven,” and in others with st. ii., “The highest hopes we cherish here.” In Bigge’s annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, the full text is rendered into Latin by Lord Lyttelton (1866), as, “Aurora rosae primum generat color.”

2. Mrs. Alexander’s recast of this hymn appeared in her Hymns Descriptive and Devotional. For the Use of Schools, 1858, No. 4v., as:—

“The crimson of the sunset sky,
The last gold lines of day,
Along the mountain’s rose verge
How fast they fade away!”

The scene around me disappears. J. Montgomery. [Christmask.} Pub. in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 488, in 4 st. of 7 l., and headed, "A visit to Bethlehem in Spirit"; and repeated, without alteration, in his Original Hymns, 1833, No. 52. In Holy Song for All Seasons (Bell & Daddy), 1869, it begins "Fair Bethlehem's star again appears," and is limited in use. [J. J.]

The secret of the Lord, From sinners, &c. [Consecrated by Free Grace.] This hymn appeared in the Gospel Mag. for March, 1778, p. 151, in 7 st. of 4 l., headed "Psalm xxxv. 14," and signed "Ingeniosa." In Spepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, st. v-vii. are given as "The covenant of free grace." We have not found this extract elsewhere. [J. J.]

The shadow of th' Almighty's cloud. J. Keble. [Confirmation.] Written on Feb. 21, 1827, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 10 st. of 4 l. The title, "Spirit of might, and a spirit too," in Kennedy, 1863, begins with st. vi. of this poem, the doxology being an addition by Dr. Kennedy. In most other collections, as the Wellington College Chapel Hymns, 1860 and 1880, the doxology is omitted. [J. J.]

The sick man in his chamber. Cecil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [During Sickness.] This poem in 14 st. of 4 l., was contributed to Rutherford's Laos of the Sanctuary and Other Poems, 1859, p. 89, under the title "The Sun of Righteousness." It appeared also in the same year in Mrs. Alexander's Legend of the Golden Prayers, 1858, p. 151. From it the cento "The sick man lieth weary," in Kennedy, 1863, No. 15, is taken. It is composed of st. vii., viii., xi-xiv. [J. J.]

The Son of David bowed to die. J. Anstee. [Easter.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, pub. by his widow in 1836, No. 15, in 4 st. of 6 l. It is sometimes given in its full form, and at other times abbreviated to 3 st. as in Thring's Call, 1882. It is a spirited hymn and worthy of more attention it has received. [J. J.]

The Son of God goes forth to war. Bp. R. Heber. [St. Stephen.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 17, in 8 st. of 4 l. It is usually given in an unaltered form as in the 8. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and is often accompanied by a fine musical setting as in the same hymnal. [J. J.]

The Son of God in mighty love. H. Bonar. [Christmas.] This hymn is given on p. 161, ii., as first appearing in Bonar's Hymn Book of Faith and Hope, 1837, in error. It was pub. in his Songs for the Wilderness, 1st ed., 1845, in 8 st. of 4 l., with the heading "The Word made Flesh." It was repeated in his Hymns of Faith and Hope, 1857, in the same form. In addition to being in C. U. in its original form, it is abbreviated as "In love, the Father's sin-less Child" (st. ii.); and "Jesus, whom angel-hosts adore." [J. J.]

The Spirit breathes upon the word. W. Cooper. [Holy Scripture.] Included in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 62, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Light and Glory of the Word." It is in use in its original form, and also as "A glory gilds the sacred page" (st. iii.). In the latter form it is found in a large number of hymn-books, especially in America. It is also often found as "What glory gilds the sacred page!" [J. J.]

The starry firmament on high. Sir R. Grant. [Ps. xxxvii.] This was given in Lord Glendev's posthumous edition of Grant's Sacred Poems, 1839, p. 28, in 4 st. of 8 l, and headed with the following words: "This is intended as a sequel or counterpart to Addison's hymn, 'The spacious firmament.' It corresponds to the latter portion of the 19th Psalm, as Addison's does to the former.

The use of this paraphrase in its full form is confined to a few American collections. The last stanza, "Almighty Lord, the sun shall fail," is given in Laudes Dominii, N.Y., 1884, as No. 233. [J. J.]

The sun is set, the twilight's o'er. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Holy Communion.] Written in 1860 for the author's Hymns and Other Poems, 1871. Outside of the Hymn Comp. its use is limited. [J. J.]

The Sun of Righteousness appears. S. Wesley, jun. [Easter Day.] 1st pub. in his Poems on Several Occasions, 1736, in 4 st. of 4 l, and again in Nicholl's reprint of the same, 1862. At an early date it appeared in the Ps. & Hymns of J. & C. Wesley, and other collections. It has passed into a limited number of modern hymn-books. The fourth stanza is noteworthy as being that upon which C. Wesley based his st. iii. in "Christ the Lord is risen to-day." The two stanzas are as follows:—

S. Wesley, jun. "In vain the stone, the watch, the seal Forth an early rise To Him Who breaks the gates of hell, And opens paradise."

C. Wesley. "Vain the stone, the watch, the seal; Christ has burst the gates of hell! Death in vain forbids His rise: Christ has opened paradise."

S. Wesley's hymn was given in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 93, as Amon. In a few collections st. iii. iv. are given as "Alone the dreadful race He ran." [J. J.]

The thing my God doth hate. C. Wesley. [Holiness Desired.] This cento was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1760, No. 331, in 3 st. of 8 l, and is composed of No. 1240 as st. i., and 1223 as st. ii., of his Short Hymns on Sel. Passages of Holy Scripture, 1762, vol. ii. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. x., Nos. 1362, and 1354). Several times it has been pointed out that the line (st. iii., 1, 5) "Soul of my soul, remain!" is evidently taken from Sir Richard Blackmore's "Ode to the Divine Being," where we have the same expression thus:—

"Best object of my love intense."

"O Thee my joy, my treasure call."

"My portion, my Reward inmence."

"Soul of my soul, my life, my All." One can hardly think that this is accidental. This hymn is in several collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 168, in 14 st. of 4 l. In the 1863 ed. of the Holy Year, it was divided into two parts, pt. ii. beginning with st. ix. "Taught by St. Mark, the Morians land." To this line the following note is appended in both editions:—

"St. Mark was Bishop of Alexandria in Egypt, and died there as a martyr, and the celebrated Catechetical School which produced Clement, Origen, and other ancient Teachers of Christianity, bore his name."

In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 357 is composed of st. viii. of pt. i., and the whole of pt. ii. It begins "Jesus, we praise Thee for his work." The text is altered. [J. J.]

The voice of one that cries. H. Alford. [Advent.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hgs. 1844, No. 1, in 4 st. of 4 l., for the 1st Sunday in Advent; and again in his Year of Praise, 1857, for the same Sunday. As a s. w. hymn it is an acceptable change of metre in the Advent hymns. [J. J.]

The voice that breathed o'er Eden. J. Keble. [Holy Matrimony.] Written for, and first pub. in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, where it was given as No. 187, in 8 st. of 4 l. In the author's posthumous Miscellaneous Poems, 1869, it is headed "Holy Matrimony. To be sung at the Commencement of the Service," and is dated "July 12, 1857." In Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, it is rendered into Latin by Lord Lyttleton (1866) as Ilius Edenensis qui Patris Deus. The original is in extenso use, and is one of the most beautiful of modern hymns for Holy Matrimony. [J. J.]

The winds of God have changed their note. [Easter.] In a volume of verse consisting of English poems by H. Vaughan and some Latin verses by his brother Thomas, put forth by one "J. W." in 1678 as Thalia Rediviva; the Pastimes and Diversion of a Country Muse, a short poem in 14 l. was given under the motto, "The Revival." In Bell & Denny's ed. of H. Vaughan's Sacred Poems, &c., 1858, it was repeated at p. 226. From it the following lines were taken by the Rev. T. Darling, and, after being elaborated into the hymn, "The winds of God have changed their note," were given in the 1st ed. of his Hgs. for the Church of England, 1855, and continued in later editions:—

"Hark! how the winds have changed their note, And with warm whispers call thee out, The frosts are past, the storms are gone, And backward life at last comes on. The lofty groves in express joys Reply unto the turtle's voice: And here in dust and dirt, O here The labours of His love appear." [J. J.]

The winds [are] howling o'er the deep. Bp. R. Heber. [Epiphany, 4 S.] This hymn in 10 st. of 4 l. was given in the 1828 ed. of Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., as the 5th hymn for the 4th Sunday after the Epiphany, and is based on the stiffing of the tempest, the Gospel for that day (St. Matt. viii. 23). The cento "How long the time since Christ began," in the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, and several others in G. Britain and America is from this hymn. The original in an abbreviated form is in several American hymnals, including the Plymouth Coll., 1855, and others. [W. T. B.]

Thebesius, Adam, a. of Peter Thebes or Thebesius, pastor at Seiffersdorf near Liegnitz in Silesia, was b. at Seiffersdorf, Dec. 6, 1596. After studying at the University of Wittenberg (a.m. 1617) he was instituted, on Nov. 24, 1619, as pastor at Mondschütz, near Wohlian, and in 1627 became pastor at Wohlian. Evidently, in 1632, he was appointed pastor of SS. Peter and Paul, the principal church in Liegnitz, and in 1612 he also became assessor of the consistory. He d. at Liegnitz suddenly, after a double stroke of paralysis, on the evening of Dec. 12, 1652. (Koch, iii. 64: S. J. Ehrhart's Prussianrelogic Schlesiens, 1780-89, vol. iv. p. 263, &c.)

Thebesius was a diligent, faithful and popular preacher. He was much tried by family afflictions (his wife and four children predeceased him), and by the misfortunes of these times of war and pestilence. He was crowned as a poet in 1638. Mützel, 158+ prints two pieces as his. One of these, which, according to Koch, outwights all his other poetical productions, is —

Du grosser Schmerzensmann, Passionide. This appears in Martin Janus's Passionale multae, Görlitz, 1663 (Wernigerode Library, No. 239, in 7 st. of 4 l., marked as "M. Adam Thebesius." Included in Mützel, 1584, No. 218, and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1901, No. 224. "Fr. as Thou Man of Sorrows, hail!"

H. Bonar. [God in all, and all in God.] Pub. in his Hymns of Faith and Hope. 3rd Series, 1867, in 12 st. of 4 l. Repeated in full in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883. [J. J.]

Thee we adore, eternal Name. J. Watts. [Life frail, Eternity unending, or New Year.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707 (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 53), in 7 Thee of 4 l. It is found in a large number of hymn-books in all English-speaking countries. The form of the text which is in the most extensive use is that given in the Ps. & Hymns of J. and C. Wesley in 1738, and continued in the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, in which there are four slight changes from the original. The original came into use in the Church of England through M. Madian's Ps. & Hymns, 1706. In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, it begins with st. ii., "Our wasting lives grow shorter still." [J J.]

Their hearts shall not be moved.
Jane E. Leeson. [Ps cxixe.] Pub. in her Hymns and Scenes of Childhood, 1842, No. 57, in 6 st. of 6 l. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1883, No. 174, st. i.-iii. are given in an altered form, and opening with the same first line. These alterations were made by G. Rowson. This text was repeated in the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1858, and other collections in G Britain and America, and is that in C U. [J. J.]

Theootistos of the Studium. A monk of the great monastery of the Studium at Constantinople, circa a.d. 890. Neale calls him a friend of St. Joseph. [See Greek Hymnody, § xvii. 1.] His only work known to the Church is his "Suppliant Canon to Jesus," which is found at the end of the Paraliturie or Great Octoechos, a volume in eight parts, containing the Ferial Office for eight weeks. From that canon Dr. Neale compiled a canto beginning, ἰποῦ γλαυκάτα, and pub. its translation, "Jesus, Name all names above," in his Hymn of the Eastern Church, 1832, in 6 st. of 8 l. In 1867 it was included in an unaltered form in the People's H., and subsequently repeated in the Hymnary, the Parish H. Bk., and other collections. In the 1889 Suppl. Hym. to H. A. M. there is another tr., "Sweet Saviour, in Thy pitying grace" (Lent). This was contributed thereto by the Rev. R. M. Moorsom. [J. J.]

Theodore, St., of the Studium. One of the Greek hymn-writers. He was b. at Constantinople, circa 759, and educated by his uncle, St. Plato. He was banished by Constantine, for his resolute refusal to acknowledge the Emperor's illicit marriage with Theodora, in 797. On the accession of Irene (798), he was recalled, and enjoyed the favour of the Empress. In 809 he was again banished, for the old cause, refusal to acknowledge the legitimacy of Constantin's marriage. Recalled once more in 811, he was imprisoned and again banished for his defence of the Icons, under Leo the Armenian. He was recalled a third time at the death of Leo, and d. Nov. 11, 826 (Dr. Neale adds, "in banishment"). He succeeded his uncle, St. Plato, as Hegumen of the Monastery of The Studium. See further Greek Hymnody, § xviii. 1, and Ceillier's Auteurs sacrés. [H. L. B.]

Theodosia, the nom de plume of Anne Steele.

Theophrastes, St. The third in rank among the Greek ecclesiastical poets called Melodictes, circa 800-830. He was a son of pious parents, and a native of Jerusalem. He may have been educated, as his elder brother Theodore was, in the Laura of St. Sabas, and thence have imbued his taste for the composition of hymns. He was sent, with his brother, by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, to Constantinople, to remonstrate with the Emperor Leo the Armenian (reg. 813-829), against Iconoclasm. They were scourged and banished from Constantinople. After the murder of Leo they were allowed to return, but were again banished. In the reign of Theophilus (reg. 829-842) they were again at Constantinople, and were then banished on their faces with some opprobrious Iambic verses (from which they were afterwards known as "Grapti"), and a third time banished. After 842 Theophrastes was recalled, on the triumph of the defenders of the Icons at the accession of Theodora, and was made Archbishop of Mida, where he died. The brothers are commemorated in the Greek calendar on Dec. 27. The sketch here given will be found quite different from that predicated to the translations from Theophrastes in Neale's Hymn of the Eastern Church. Dr. Neale mistook the poet for an earlier saint, Theophanes of Syngria, who continued the Chronicle of George Syncellus. The identification of the poet with Theophrases Grapitis is however universally attested by the Greek writers, and the Canon of Theophanes of Syngria is written by Theophras Grapitus on the ascension, Θεοφάνης μέλετε την Θεοφάνην. (See Dict. Greek and Roman Biography; Ceillier's Auteurs sacrés; and Greek Hymnody, § xviii. 2. [H. L. B.]

Emily E. S. Elliott. [Christmas.] 1st pub. in 1846 in Matty's Missionary Box (Loud.; T. Nelson & Son), and since included in Miss Elliott's Chimes for Daily Service, 1880, p. 97, in 4 st. of 8 lines. It has appeared in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1868, Scottish Presbyterian Hymnal, 1876; Allan's Children's Worship, 1878, &c.; and is included in full and unaltered (save st. ii. 1-8) a No. 373 in the Scottish Free Church H. Bk., 1882. Its use is extensive. [J. M.]

There is a blessed home. Sir H. W. Baker, Bart. [Heaven anticipated.] Written in 1801, and pub. in H. A. & M. the same year as No. 182, in 4 st. of 8 l. It has passed into several collections, and is a beautiful and touching hymn. It was sung over the author's grave. In Bigga's Annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, there is a rendering in Latin by Lord Lyttelton (1866) beginning "Est benatorum Domus incolumarum." [J. J.]

There is a book, who runs may read. J. Kebbe. [Septuagesima.] Written in 1819, and pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, as the poem for Septuagesima Sunday, in 12 st. of 4 l. It is in several collections in G. Britain and America, but usually in an abbreviated form. In a few collections it begins with st. ix., "One Name above all glorious names." The original, which is very beautiful, is based upon the words, "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." Rom. i. 20, with a distinct reference to Gen. i., which is the first Lesson for Septuagesima Sunday Morning. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, st. i. v., xi., as in H. A. & M., are rendered into Latin as "Est liber, atque illixum qui currir perlegat, omne." [J. J.]

There is a calm for those who weep. J. Montgomery. [Death and Burial.] This is the opening of Montgomery's poem "The Grave," which first appeared in his Sheffield Newspaper, the Iris, June 20, 1803, in 80 st. of 4 l., and signed "Alessus:" again in his Wanderer of Switzerland and Other Poems, 1806; and again in various editions of his Poetical Works. In the 1834 ed. of his P. Works Montgomery has dated it 1804. Various stanzas from this poem are in C. U. as hymns, and all but one begin with st. i. In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, No. 365 is composed of st. i., ii., xvi., xix., xxv., xxvii., slightly altered; and No. 366 of st. xxviii.-xxx. It must be noted that st. xxviii. is a repetition of st. i. with the third line rewritten. The stanzas in American hymn-books differ from these, and from each other. [J. J.]

There is a Fountain filled with blood. W. Cooper. [Passiontide.] This hymn was probably written in 1771, as it is in Conyers's Coll. of Ps. and Hys., 1772, in 7 st. of 4 l. It was republished in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 79, with the heading "Praise for the Fountain opened." It is based on Zec. xi. 1, "In that day there shall be a Fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanliness; and the Lord shall be known unto the Gentiles." A well-known 19th century alteration, which is usually credited to Calvary's Cross, appeared in Cooke's 1845, in 5 st. of 4 l., much altered. "Amen.

In these two lines, the Ps. has the question as it were made, first in Is. xiii. 1, and then in Bickersteth's Christian Annals, 1835, in 6 st. of 4 l., much altered.

The question as it were made, first in the Ps. and then in Bickersteth's Christian Annals, 1835, was answered in the Rev. example. He said it there: Bickersteth's Christian Annals, 1835, in 6 st. of 4 l., much altered.

We know from the Ps. that it is altered by his Sel. and if have one of these, however, rewritten the in these words: "We should never alter any part of the original, but we should alter it for the better."

It should be altered to: "We should never alter any part of the original, but we should alter it for the better."

In Cotter's version: "We should never alter any part of the original, but we should alter it for the better."

In Bickersteth's version: "We should never alter any part of the original, but we should alter it for the better."

In later versions: "We should never alter any part of the original, but we should alter it for the better."
There is a God, all nature cries.

J. Montgomery. [Nature's witness to the Existence of God.] The vs. of this hymn is dated "January 8, 1838." It was included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 6, in 7 st. of 4 l. and headed "The Guilt and Folly of denying God." It must be distinguished from Miss Steele's "There is a God, all nature speaks," which is also in C. U. [J. J.]

There is a green hill far away. Cecil F. Alexander, see Humphreys. [Good Friday.] 1st published in her Hymns for Little Children, 1818, p. 31, in 5 st. of 4 l. and based upon the words "Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was Crucified, Dead, and Buried," of the Apostle's Creed. It is an exceedingly popular children's hymn, and is in extensive use. [J. J.]

There is a happy land. A. Young. [Heaven.] In 1838 Mr. Young was spending an evening in the house of Mr. Marshall, the mother of some of his pupils. Among other pieces she played was one which caught his attention. On inquiry he found it was an Indian air called "Happy Land." With the air ringing in his ears he composed this hymn to it. It was sung in his classes at Niddry Street School, Edinburgh, and there heard by the Rev. James Gall, who included it in the first series of the Sacred Song Book, 1843 [see Bateman, C. H., p. 116, ii.], from whence it has passed into many hymn-books. It has been tr. into Chinese, many Indian and African dialects, &c., and in those and its original form is now to be heard in Sunday Schools all over the world. In 1876 Mr. Young included it in his The Scottish Highlands and other Poems, p. 117, in 3 st. of 8 lines. Originally st. iii. 1-8 began "We reign," but subsequently, and in his volume of 1876, Mr. Young altered it to "Reign, reign." The text of 1876 is included unaltered in the Hy. Comp., 1876, the Scottish Pite Church H. Bk., 1882, and others. In the Christian Melodies, N. Y., 1859, an imitation beginning "O send the word divine" as a hymn on Sending the Bible to the Heathen is included as No. 545. It may be noted that the Rev. John Inglis, D.D., Presbyterian missionary in the New Hebrides tr. it in 1834 (as his first attempt), into the Aeneiyemese language, beginning "The Hand," p. 31. This version was a great success and continues to be a favourite. Dr. Geddie and Dr. Inglis, assisted to some extent by others, tr. 51 Psalms and Hymns (of which this is No. 23) into Aeneiyemese, included as part of the Nauruadl Itap, pub. by the Religious Tract Society of London in 1880. [Missions Foreign, p. 741, ii. § ii., iii., 2.] [J. M.]

There is a holy sacrifice. Charlotte Elliott. [The Contrite Heart] This hymn is usually attributed to J. Montgomery on the grounds that its first appearance as far as yet traced was in the 1819 ed. of Cotterill's Sel., to which Montgomery largely contributed; and that in the 2nd ed. of W. Oliphant's Son's Sacred Poetry, 1859, pp. 292-1, it is attributed to Montgomery. In 1836 Miss Elliott pub. her Hours of Sorrows, with an Introduction "To the Reader" which begins:

"Not for the gay and thoughtless do I weave These plaintive strains."

These words to our mind clearly entitle the Reader that the entire contents of the book were by Miss Elliott. At p. 10 this hymn is given in 5 st. of 3 l., with the refrain "The contrite heart!" as in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 341. Seeing that in 1819 Miss Elliott was 30 years of age, that it is in her Hours of Sorrows as above, and that in metre it is the same as a large number of her hymns, and that it is not in any known work by Montgomery, we have no hesitation in ascribing it to her. It is a sweet hymn for private use, and is found in several collections. [J. J.]

There is a land of pure delight. I. Watts. [Heaven anticipated.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Sacred Songs, 1707, and again in the 2nd ed., 1709, bk. ii., as No. 66, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the heading "A prospect of Heaven makes Death easy." In the older collections very many variations in the text were introduced, but most of these have gone out of use. Of those which remain the following appeared in Hall's Metre H. Bk., 1836, No. 182:

St. 4. "Infinite day" to "Eternal day."
St. 6. "Never withering" to "Never fading."
St. 5. "This heavenly bliss" to "That heavenly bliss."
St. vi. "We but climb" to "We but stand."

The last alteration was made by Bp. Blomfield, to whom the "proofs" of the Metre H. Bk. were submitted. Other variations are found in the text in some hymn-books: but latterly a strong reaction has taken place in favour of the original as given in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise, 1862-7. The use of this hymn has extended to all English-speaking countries, and it has been translated into many languages. In his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, B. Bingham has rendered four stanzas into Latin as, "Extat terra procul sanctis habitata beatis." This hymn is one of the earliest of Watts's compositions. A tradition exists in Southampton that it was suggested by the view of the Isle of Wight as seen from that town. [J. J.]

There is a path that leads to God. Jane Taylor. [A Child Pilgrim.] 1st pub. in the Hymns for Infant Minds, by A. and J. Taylor, 1816, in 7 st. of 4 l. and entitled "The Little Pilgrim." It is one of the best examples of the writer's clear, simple, nervous style, and excels in popular use all her other compositions. It is found in numerous collections for children in Great Britain and America, but often in an abbreviated form. Orig. text in the Hy. Comp. [J. J.]
There is a safe and secret place.
H. F. Lyte. [Ps. xxi.] Appeared in his Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, as his G. M. version of Ps. 91, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is very simple and tender, and is in somewhat extensive use in G. Britain and America. In the enlarged ed. of the Spirit of the Psalms, 1836, st. ii. ll. 1, 2, are altered from:

"The least, the feeblest there may hide Uninjured and unawed;"

The change of thought from hiding in terror, to abiding in calm repose is a decided poetic improvement; and is certainly more in accord with the Psalmist's declaration "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday." (vers. 5, 6), than the original reading. [Psalms, English, § xvii.]

There is an everlasting home. M. Bridges. [Christ, the Rock of Ages.] Pub. in his Hymn of the Heart. For the use of Catholics, 1848, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Latus Salvatoris." In its full or abbreviated form it is in several collections, including the People's H., 1867, &c. The tune Milford, by T. Woolsey White, was specially composed for this hymn. [J. J.]

There is no night in heaven. F. M. Knollis. [Heaven.] Contributed to the Lays of the Sanctuary, &c., 1859, in 10 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The One Family. Thoughts for the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels." In the edition of 1861 it is given in 5 st. of 8 l. In this form it was included in Kennedy, 1863, No. 1104. Its well-known and popular form appeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, where to st. i., iii., vii., ix. of the original of 1859 are given with alterations, and an additional stanza was added by the Rev. J. Ellerton. In Thring's Coll. the orig. text of these stanzas is restored. [J. J.]

There is no sorrow, Lord, too light [slight]. J. A. Crewelson, see Fox. [Divine Sympathy.] Given in her A Little White and Other Poems, Manchester, n.d. (circa 1860), p. 19. In Kennedy, 1863, it begins, "There is no grief, however light," and in one or two others the words "too light" are changed to "too slight," in the opening line. It is sometimes also given as "There's not a grief however light." [J. J.]

There were ninety and nine that safely lay. Elizabeth C. Clephane. [The Lost Sheep.] This beautiful poem was probably written in 1868 at Melrose, where the author was then residing, and first pub. in 1868, in a small magazine for the young, entitled, The Children's Hour, pt. ii. p. 15, in 5 st. of 6 l. Subsequently it appeared as No. 8 of the series of her hymns entitled Breathing on the Border, in the Family Treasury, 1874, p. 355. There it was copied into the Christian Age, May 13, 1874, where it was seen by Mr. J. D. Sankey, who set it to music and sang it with great effect at his gospel meetings. He included it in 1875 in his Sacred Songs and Solos. It has been sung in the Hymn Comp. of the Baptist, Ps. & H. America in the Cleveland, 1885, and rapidly attains modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

Thee are all gone into the world of light. H. Vaughan. [Death and Burial.] Pub. in his Silex Scintillans, 2nd ed. 1655; in H. F. Lyte’s reprint of the same, 1858; and in Grewart’s Fuller Worthies, 1868. In some collections, as in Martene’s Hymns, &c., 1875, it begins as above; but in the American Unitarian Hymn, for the Church and Home, Boston, 1853, it opens, “Dear, beauteous Death! the jewel of the just.” [J. J.]

They come, God’s messengers of love. R. Campbell. [St. Michael and All Angels.] Written for, and 1st pub. in his Hymns and Anthems, 1850, p. 94, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1852 it was re-published, with alterations, in Murray’s Hymnal, No. 79. This was repeated in several collections, including H. A. & M., 1861, and has become the accepted form of the hymn. Sometimes it is abridged to four stanzas. It is the most widely adopted hymn for St. Michael and All Angels of any in the English language. [J. J.]

They whom the Father giveth. J. Conder. [Communion.] 1st pub. in his Star in the East, 1824, p. 54, in 8 st. of 4 l. and based upon John x. 27, 28, “My sheep hear My voice and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish.” In 1856 it was repeated in his Hymn of Praise, Prayer and Devout Meditation, pp. 55–57. In its original form it is not in common use, but st. v., vi., and vii., beginning, “Christ watches o’er the embers,” were given in Kennedy, 1863. This arrangement is adapted to “Burial,” or a service associated therewith. [J. J.]

They whose course on earth is o’er. J. M. Neale. [Communion of Saints.] 1st pub. in his Hymns for the Young, 1844, No. xv., in 9 st. of 4 l., and based on the article of the Creed “The Communion of Saints.” In 1866, Dr. Neale revised the text on his death-bed, and made alterations in st. iv. and ix. This text was pub. in his posthumous Original Sequences, Hymns, and other Miscellanea, 1866, p. 64, and given there for All Souls at Vespers. The same text was repeated in the People’s H., 1867; and, with a slight variation, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. [J. J.]

Thilo, Valentin, s. of Valentin Thiel or Thilo [b. Jan. 2. 1579, at Zinten, became diac. of the Altstadt Church in 1603, and d. of the past. at Königsberg in 1620], diac. of the Altstadt Church in Königsberg, was b. at Königsberg, April 19, 1603. He matriculated in 1624 at the Univers. of Königsberg as a student of theology, but devoted himself more especially to the study of rhetoric. When the Professor of Rhetoric, Samuel Fuchs, retired in 1632, he recommended Thilo as his successor. The post was, at Thilo’s desire, kept open for two years, during which he pursued his studies at the University of Leyden. On returning to Königsberg, he graduated M.A. there on April 20, 1634, and was thereafter installed as Professor of Rhetoric. During his 28 years’ tenure of office he was five times elected as dean of the Philosophical Faculty, and twice as Rector of the University. He d. at Königsberg, Thilo was a great friend of Heinrich Albert (p. 35, l.) and of Simon Diet (p. 276, l.), and was with them a member of the Königsberg Poetical Union. He was the author of two text-books on Rhetoric, pub. in 1635 and 1647. Some of his separately printed occasional poems are noted by Goedcke as above. His hymns were all printed for various Festivals of the Christian Year. They are a rule short and vigorous, and are somewhat akin to those of Diet. They are all included in the Preussische Fest-Lieder, Elbing, 1642-44 (Berlin Library), and in the New Preussisches vollständiges G. R. Königsberg, 1659 (Hamburg Library). A list of their first lines is printed in the Altpreussische Monatschrift, Königsberg, 1859, p. 306, where evidence is given to show that they are by the younger Thilo, and not, as has sometimes been said, by the father.

The only hymn by Thilo tr. into English is:

Mit Ernst, o Menschenkinder. Adwent. This is a fine hymn founded on St. Luke iii. 4, 5, and was 1st pub. in pt. i., Elbing, 1642, of the Preussische Fest-Lieder, as No. 8, in 4 st. of 8 l., entitled "On the Fourth Sunday of Advent. Parate viam Domino," and marked as by "Valentinus Thilo." Hence in the Königsberg G. B., 1650, as above, p. 27, also marked as by "Valentinus Thilo." In the Hannover G. B., 1657, st. iv. was re-written, and this form, passing through Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, is found in most recent German hymn-books. In the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 15, both forms of st. iv. are given. Laumann, in Koch, viii. 8, considers st. iii. the finest, and thinks that it may have been suggested by the remembrance of his beloved sister (wife of Pastor Kuhn, of the Rosgard Church in Königsberg), who d. of the pestilence on Aug. 16, 1639, and as a picture of her character. Tr. as:

1. O sons of men, your spirits. This is a good tr. of st. i.-iii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 35 in his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

2. Ye sons of men, in earnest. This is a good tr. of the original form, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 84 in her C. B. for England, 1853. It is repeated, omitting st. iii., in the Ohio Luth. Hym., 1889, No. 121. [J. M.]

Thine for ever! thine for ever! C. Wordsworth, Bp. of Lincoln. [Confirmation]. Contributed to the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns. It was originally in 4 st. of 8 l., but in later editions of the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns, it is given in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1871 it reappeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, in 8 st. of 4 l., this last being the authorized text. [J. J.]

Thine, Jesus, Thine. A. Midlane. [Self-Dedication to Jesus.] A birthday hymn written on the author's 36th birthday, Jan. 23, 1861, and pub. in the Things Old and New magazine, in May the same year. It has passed into a large number of what are commonly known as "Gospel hymn-books," including The Enlarged London H. Bk., 1873: The Little Flock, 1880, and others. [J. J.]

Thine, O Lord, our quiet trust. B. H. Kennedy. [Ps. Iv. 1.5. Harvest.] This version of Ps. 63 appeared in Dr. Kennedy's Psalter in 1860, p. 95, in 10 st. of 4 l. From this Dr. Kennedy compiled the hymn, "Thou Who hearest human prayer," and included it in his Hymn. Christ. 1863, No. 1290. The same text was again altered for the Wes. H. Bk., 1873, No. 370, where it is given as "O Thou God, Who hearest to Thee, that livest borrowed from J. C."

When these various forms of the text are taken together, it is found that the hymn is in extensive use.

This is the day of Light. J. Ellerton. [Sunday.] Written in 1857, and 1st pub. in Hymns for Special Services and Festivals in Chester Cathedral, a collection of 100 hymns, compiled by Dean Howson, 1867 (Chester: Philbrick & Golder), No. 51, in 5 st. of 4 l. From this it passed into the 1868 Appendix to H. A. M.; the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882, and several other hymnals both in Great Britain and America. It is a fine hymn, and ranks in popularity with some of the best of Mr. Ellerton's compositions.

[J. J.]

This is the day the Lord hath made. He calls the hours His Own. J. Wadsworth. [Easter-day, or Sunday.] First pub. in his Psalms of David, 1719, p. 309, as a paraphrase of a portion of the 118th Psalm, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Hosanna; the Lord's Day; or, Christ's Resurrection, and our Salvation." It is in several collections and usually unaltered and unabridged. In the Hymnary, 1872, the cento "Behold the tomb its prey restored;" is composed of st. 1 new, ii.-iv. from this by Watts, slightly altered, and v. new. It is a successful hymn for Sunday.

[J. J.]

This is the day the Lord hath made. Let young and old rejoice. J. Montgomery. [Sunday.] Written for the Sheffield Red Hill Sunday School Anniversary, held on March 26, 1820, and printed on a fly sheet for that occasion. It was repeated in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1823, No. 467; and again in his Original Hymns, 1833, No. 95, in 5 st. of 4 l. Its use is limited.

[J. J.]

This is the feast of heavenly wine. W. Carver. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 33, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Welcome to the Table." Sometimes it begins with st. ii., "O bless the Saviour, ye that eat." See also "Bless'd with the presence of their God." [J. J.]

This is the month, and this the happy morn. J. Milton. [Christmas.] This is the opening of Milton's great ode On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, written in his 21st year (1629), and found in all editions of his Works. It has an introduction of 4 st. of 7 l., and then follows the hymn proper in 27 st. of 8 l., beginning, "It was the winter wild." From this the following centos have come into C. U.:

1. It was the winter wild (st. L). This is in a few collections.
2. Re war or battle's sound (st. iv.). This is in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth coll., 1855, and other American hymnals.
3. Ring out ye crystal spheres (st. xiii.). In Hymns for the Use of the University of Oxford in St. Mary's Church, 1872, and others.
4. This is the month, and this the happy morn. From the Introduction to the hymn.

This livelong night we've toiled in vain. [Jebed. [Obdience.] This poem is dated 1821. It appeared in the Christian Year, 1827, for the 5th Sun. after Trinity, and based upon a portion of the Gospel of the day, St. Luke v. 1, &c. In its original form it is unknown to modern hymnals, but a cento compiled from its 15 st. is given in the New Cong., 1859, beginning with st. i.

[J. J.]

This night I lift my heart to Thee. W. Bartholomew. [Evening.] Written in 1854 for Costa's oratorio Elia, and 1st pub. therein, 1854, as one of the songs appropriated to the Prophet Samuel. It is in 3 st. of 4 l., and was repeated in the New Cong. II. Bk., 1859, and subsequently in other collections.

[J. J.]

This place is holy ground. J. Montgomery. [Death and Burial.] This is the opening line of Verses to the Memory of the late Richard Reynolds, of Bristol. London: Longmans, 1816. The Verses were given in three parts: i. "The death of the Righteous": ii. "The Memory of the Just": iii. "A Good Man's Monument." Mr. Reynolds was an eminent Quaker philanthropist; and the "Monument" referred to was the Society for the relief of persons in necessitous circumstances which was founded in Bristol in his memory. The Verses were repeated in all the complete editions of Montgomery's Works. The text given in several American hymn-books, including Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, is composed of st. i., ii., vii.-ix. of pt. i. on "The death of the Righteous." The original is in 9 st. of 6 l.

This stone to Thee in faith we lay. J. Montgomery. [Laying Foundation-stone of a Church.] Written in 1822, for the laying of the Foundation-stone of Christ Church, Attercliffe, Sheffield, and sung at that ceremony on Oct. 30, 1822. It was printed in Montgomery's newspaper, the Sheffield Iris, Nov. 5, 1822, together with a full account of the whole ceremony. Subsequently it was pub. in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1823, No. 474, his Poetical Works of various dates, and his Original Hymns, 1838, No. 30, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is in extensive use in its full or in an abbreviated form, and also as:

1. Here, in Thy Name, eternal God. This form is given in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and others.
2. When in these courts we seek Thy face. In the American "abath H. Bk., Andover, 1856, it begins with an altered form of st. ii.
3. When here, when we seek Thy face. This form of the text, beginning with st. ii., is in the Plymouth Coll., U. S. A., 1855.

Tholuck, Friedrich August Gotttreu, D.D., was b. at Breslau, March 30, 1799. He studied at the Universities of Breslau and Berlin. He became a University lecturer (Privatdocent) at Berlin, in Dec. 1821, and extraordinary professor of Theology there in Apr. 1, 1823 (d. d. from Berlin in 1826). In Nov., 1825, he was appointed ordinary professor of Theology at Halle, and entered on his duties at Easter, 1826. He was also appointed as University preacher, in 1839, and a member of the Magdeburg consistory in 1829. From Michaelmas, 1828, to Easter, 1829, he officiated as chaplain to the German Embassy at Rome, having gone there on sick leave. Otherwise, after 1826, his life was spent almost entirely at Halle. He d. at Halle, June 10, 1877 (Koch, vii. 26; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xxi., 560, &c.).

Tholuck was a celebrated preacher, and a great linguist. He is perhaps best known to English readers by his Commentaries, as e.g., on Romans, i. 24 (5th ed., 1869; Eng. tr., 1833 and 1826); or St. John's Gospel, 1827 (7th ed., 1857; Eng tr., 1858); on the Sermon on the Mount, 1833 (5th ed., 1812; Eng. tr. 1834 and 1837, improved in 1839); on Hebrews, 1836 (3rd ed., 1850; Eng. tr., 1842); on the Psalms, 1843 (2nd ed., 1874; Eng. tr. 1865), &c., and by his De Lehre von der Sünde und dem Verstoßen, oder die Wege des Zweifters, 1823 (enlarged ed., 1825; 6th ed., 1871), a sort of religious novel which has powerfully influenced many. W. C. J. P. Spitta (see p. 1078, &c.), and has been tr. into English (two versions as Guida et Julia, &c., by J. R. Ryland, 1836, and by J. Martin, 1855), French, Danish and Swedish. He was a many sided man, who exercised a great and far-reaching influence over his contemporaries, and who, by the charm of his personal character as well as by his learning, drew crowds of students to Halle, not only from all parts of Germany, but also from Great Britain and America. His hymns appeared in his Stunden christlicher Andacht, Hamburg, 1833-40. This is a volume of Meditations which has passed through many editions in German (5th ed., 1870), and of which at least two versions have appeared in English (as Hours of Christian Devotion), a partial one by the Misses Ann and Catherine H. Dunn, pub. at L. oden in 1853; 2nd ed., 1857, and a nearly complete one by Dr. R. Meintjes, pub. at Edinburgh in 1870 (partly pub. as The Circle of Human Life, Edinburgh, 1841, and completed by The Circle of the Church's Life, London, 1873). In the preface to the Stunden, Tholuck mentions that he had intended to introduce many quotations from German hymns and sacred poems, but could find few that suited his purpose. So he adds "I therefore myself spoke in the language of poetry; only a very few of the verses here interspersed are by other authors." He does not however indicate in any more definite way which are his own compositions. A few pieces from this work have passed into American-German hymn-books, and they have all been tr. by Dr. Menzies, as above. Two which have not been traced earlier, and are probably original, may be here noted, viz.:

1. Einst wird's gewahrt, dass auf der Erde. Second Ad scant in his Stunden, 1840, p. 470, as the conclusion of Med. xxvi., in 2 st., of 8 s., and founded on Rom. viii. 21-30. Tr., as:

A day will dawn when from on high.
In full by Dr. R. Menzies, 1870, as above, p. 561. Included by H. L. Hastings in his Songs of Pilgrimage, Boston, U. S., 1890, No. 193.

2. O wünscher Hirte, unter deinem Stabe. The Good Shepherd. In his Stunden, 1840, p. 151, in 7 st., of 411, as the conclusion of Med. xxvi., and founded on Ps. xxiii. The lit. are (1) "O gentle Shepherd, guided by thy hand, My soul hath found her everlasting rest." By Miss Dunn, 1853, as above, p. 110. (2) "O gentle Shepherd by thy staff directed." By Miss Burlingham in the heraldic herald, Sept., 1865, p. 143, repeated in Reid's Praise Book, 1872. (3) "Beneath Thy gentle care, O Shepherd dear." By Dr. R. Menzies, 1870, as above, p. 175.

Thomas, Joan, of Rhaiaiar, was b. 1730, in the parish of Myddfai, Caernarvonshire. One of the first books he ever read was the Welshman's Candle. He published several books of hymns. The first appeared in 1771, The Golden Treasury, a translation of C. H. von Bogatzky, with some of Dr. Watts's hymns. In the same year appeared Flerayciadhin Grôs, and in 1778, Caniadai Sion. His hymns in all number about 200. He was a minister with the Independent at Carmarthen in 1731.

[Thomai, Joan.]

Thomas, of Newfoundland, was b. 1730, in the parish of Myddfai, Caernarvonshire. One of the first books he ever read was the Welshman's Candle. He published several books of hymns. The first appeared in 1771, The Golden Treasury, a translation of C. H. von Bogatzky, with some of Dr. Watts's hymns. In the same year appeared Flerayciadhin Grôs, and in 1778, Caniadai Sion. His hymns in all number about 200. He was a minister with the Independent at Carmarthen in 1731.
At the time enabled him to attract large congregations to hear St. Thomas preach. In 1248 he was directed to take his degree at Paris; and though his modesty and dislike of honour and distinction made the proposal distasteful to him, he set out and begged his way thither; but it was not until October 23rd, 1257, that he took his degree. The interval was filled with hours of reading, lecturing, and practising, as to enable him by the time he became a doctor to exercise an influence over the men and ideas of his time which we at this time can scarcely realise. So much was this the case that Louis IX. insisted upon St. Thomas becoming a member of his Council of State, and referred every question that came up for deliberation great succour before, that he might reflect on it in solitude.

At this time he was only thirty-two years of age. In 1259 he was appointed, by the Dominican Chapter at Valenciennes, a member of a Commission, in company with Albertus Magnus and Pierre de Tarentaise, to establish unity and uniformity in all schools of the Dominicans. In 1261 the Pope, Urban IV., immediately upon his election to the Pontifical throne, sent for St. Thomas to aid him in his project for uniting into one the Eastern and Western Churches. St. Thomas in that same year came to Rome, and was at once appointed by the Election of his order to the university in the Dominican College in that city, where he obtained a like reputation to that which he had secured already at Paris and Cologne. Pope Urban being anxious to reward his services offered him, first the Patri-archate of Jerusalem, and then a Cardinal's hat, but he refused both. After lecturing, at the request of the Pope, at Viterbo, Orvieto, Perugia, and Fendi, he was sent, in 1263, as "Definitor," in the name of the Roman Province, to the Dominican Chapter held in London. Two years later Clement IV., who succeeded Urban as Pope, appointed him,
by bull, to the archbishopric of Naples, conforming St. Thomas of the common revenues of the convent of St. Peter ad Aram. But this appointment he also declined. In 1269 he was summoned to Rome—his last visit—to act as "Definitor" of the Roman Province at the triennial Chapter of his Order, and he remained there until 1271, when his superiors recalled him to Bologna. In 1272, after visiting Rome on the way, he went to Naples to lecture at the University. His reception in that city was an ovation. All classes came cat to welcome him, while the King, Charles L, as a mark of royal favour bestowed on him a pension. He remained at Naples until he was summoned, in 1274, by Pope Gregory X., by special bull, to attend the Sixth Council of Lyons, but whilst on the journey thither he was called to his rest. His death took place in the Benedictine Abbey of Fossa Nuova in the diocese of Terracina, on the 7th of March 1274, being barely forty-eight years of age.

St. Thomas was a most voluminous writer, his principal work being the celebrated Summa Theologicae, which, although never completed, was accepted as such an authority as to be placed on a table in the council-chamber at the Council of Trent alongside of the Holy Scriptures and the Decrees of the Popes. But it is outside the province of this work to enumerate his prose work, not a prolific writer of hymns, St. Thomas has contributed to the long list of Latin hymns some which have been in use in the service of the Church of Rome from his day to this. They are upon the subject of the Lord's Supper.
The best known are:

Pange lingua gloriosi Cæterum Mysterium: Adea te demum latera levis: Sacra sollemnis juxta sunt gaudia: Lauda Nion Salvatorum: et Verbum supernum proweni. The 1st, 3rd, and 4th of these are found in the Rom. Hymne, the 2nd, 4th, and 5th in "Newman's Hymns Ecclesiae;" the 4th in the Rom.
Missal: all of them appear in Daniel: the 2nd and 4th in "Dominius;" and the 2nd, 4th, and 5th in "Conceyfied." Various other hymns have been attributed to St. Thomas, but in error, as:—O expectatorem, (p. 388, l.); and the St. Jacundas versus usudas (n.v.). See also More,
No. 199, and ii. p. 257.

Of these hymns numerous translations have been made from time to time, and amongst the translators are found Caswall, Neale, Woodford, Morgan, and others. Each of these hymns is annotated in this work under its original first line.

Thomas of Kempen, commonly known as Thomas à Kempe, was b. at Kempen, about fifteen miles north-west of Düsseldorf, in 1379 or 1380. His family name was Hammerken.
His father was a peasant, whilst his mother kept a dame's school for the younger children of Kempen. When about twelve years old he became an inmate of the poor-scholars' house which was connected with a "Brother-House" of the Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer, where he was known as Thomas from Kempen, and hence his well-known name. There he remained for six years, and then, in 1398, he was received into the Brotherhood. A year later he entered the new religious house at Mount St. Agnes, near Zwolle. After due preparation he took the vows in 1407, was priested in 1413, became Subprior in 1425, and d. according to some authorities on July 26 and others on Aug. 8, 1471. Much of his time was occupied in copying Missals, Breviaries, and other ecclesiastic and religious works. His original writings included a chronicle of the monastery of St.
Agnes, several biographies, tracts and hymns, and, but not without some doubt as to his authorship (for a résumé of the controversy see Enc. Brit., 9th ed.) the immortal Initiatio Christi, which has been translated into many languages than any other book, the Bible alone excepted. His collected works have been repeatedly published, the best editions being Nürnberg, 1694, Antwerp in 1607 (Thomas Malledi à Kempe . . . Opera omnia), and Paris in 1649. An exhaustive work on St.
Thomas is Thomas à Kempe and the Brothers of the Common Life, by S. W. Ketlewell, in 2 vols., Lond., 1882. In this work the following of his hymns are tr. by the Rev. S. J. Stone:

Thomson, Alexander Ramsay, D.D., a minister of the American Reformed Dutch Church, was b. at New York, Oct. 22, 1812, and graduated at the New York University, 1842, and the Princeton Seminary, 1845. He was Reformed Dutch Pastor at various places, including East Brooklyn, St. Paul's (R. P. D.),
New York City, North Reformed Church,
Brooklyn (1874), and others. Dr. Thomson was joint editor of the Reformed Dutch Hymns of the Church, N. Y., 1869, and the Hymns of Prayer and Praise, 1871. He has contributed original hymns and music to these collections, to Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and to the Sunday School Time., Philadelphia, 1883, &c. His music will be found in the Index of Authors and Translators. In addition two original hymns:—
1. O Thou Whose lighted and falling eye. Good Friday.
2. Wayfarers in the wilderness. Life a Pilgrimage. are in the Hymns of the Church, 1869, with the signature "A. R. T." [F. M. B.]

Thomson, Henry John, M.A., b. of John Northouf Thomson, was b. at Kings-clere, Hants, 1830: was Tynel Exhibitioner Queen's College, Oxford, 1850: and graduated
B.A. in 1853, M.A. in 1856. On taking Holy Orders, he became curate of St. Mary's, Warwick. In 1859 he was instituted to the vicarage of Dodington, near Wealden, Northants.
In 1878 he became chaplain to the R.A. garrison at Wealden, and in 1879 was appointed rural dean of Wealden. Mr. Thomson has written, "Christ, we come before Thee" (Holy Matrimony), to be sung at the commencement of the office of Holy Matrimony. It was 1st printed, with music by the Rev. T. R. Matthews, by Novello & Co.: and again, together with the same music, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 238, in 4 double st. of 8. 1.
Mr. Thomson has also written a few hymns for "Harvest," "Confirmation," and other occasions, and some carols. These, with other poetical pieces, were pub. in his Hymns and other Verses, and form a pleasing volume.

THOU BOUNDLESS SOURCE

Thou boundless Source of every good. [Divine Guidance desired.] This hymn is a cento, and as such it appeared in T. Cotterill’s Sel. of Ps. & Hys. 1st ed. 1810, in 6 st. of 4 l. and headed “For the right improvement of the dispensations of Providence.” It was repeated in Cotterill’s Sel. 1818 and 1839; in Bickersteth’s Christian Psalmody, 1833; and in many modern hymn-books, including the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys. &c. It is sometimes abbreviated to 4 st. Of the original cento st. ii., iv., vi. are from O. Higginbotham’s (p. 506, i.) “Father of mercies, God of love,” which was No. 9 of his Hymns, &c., Sudbury, 1794, but in an altered form; and st. i. and v. are probably by T. Cotterill. [J. J.]

THOU GOD OF GLORIOUS

Thou God art a consuming fire. J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] Written in 1818, and first printed on a broadsheet with Montgomery’s “Prayer is the soul’s sincere desire,” and “What shall we ask of God in prayer?” for use in the Nonconformist Sunday schools in Sheffield. It was included in Cotterill’s Sel. 1819, No. 279, in 4 st. of 8 l.; in Montgomery’s Christian Psalms, 1825, No. 481, with alterations, and in 8 st. of 4 l.; and again in his Original Hymns, 1856, No. 68, without further alteration. This last is the text usually given in the hymnals. [D. J.]

THOU CHILD OF MAN, FALL DOWN.

Alford. [Adult Baptism.] 1st pub. in G. Stevenson de M. Rutherford’s Lays of the Secantory, and Other Poems, 1859, p. 7, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed “Lines for an Adult Baptism.” In 1868 it was included by the author in the revised ed. of his Poetical Works, p. 236, with the simple heading “1846,” the date of its composition, and probably of a special Baptism for which it seems to have been composed. In Kennedy 1863, No. 771, “Servant of God, go forth,” is composed of st. iv.—viii. It is a hymn of some merit, and might be divided with ease into two parts; the first to be sung before, and the second after, the administration of the Holy Rite. [J. J.]

THOU DEAR [GREAT] REDEEMER, DYING.

Lamb. J. Cennick. [The Holy Name Jesus.] Published in his Sacred Hymns, &c., Pt. iii., 1743–44, p. 143. It was included in the 1875 ed. of the Wes. H. Bk. as “Thou great Redeemer, dying Lamb.” In the English Moravian H. Bk. 1886, it is given in 3 st., and begins with the original first line. [J. J.]

THOU DIDST LEAVE THY THRONE AND THY KINGLY CROWN.

Emily E. S. Elliott. [Christmas.] 1st privately printed, 1864, for the use of the choir and schools of St. Mark’s Church, Brighton, and first pub. by the author in the Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor, 1870, p. 188; and again in her Chimes for Daily Service, 1880, p. 99, in 5 st. of 6 l. It was repeated in Wilson’s Service of Praise, 1865; Allon’s Children’s Worship, 1874; Mrs. Brock’s Children’s H. Bk., 1881; Church Praise, 1889, &c., and is given in full, and almost in the 1880 text as No. 374 in the Scottish Free Church H. Bk., 1882. [J. M.]

THOU GLORIOUS SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Charlotte Elliott. [Sunday Morning.] This hymn is in C. U. in two forms, and both are by Miss Elliott. The former form is in 3 st. of 4 l., beginning as above, and appeared in the “Third Thousand” of H. V. Elliott’s Ps. & Hys., 1839, No. 291. This text is repeated in the Leeds H. Bk., 1855, and others. The second form is that given in Miss Elliott’s Morning and Evening Hys. for a Week, 1839, p. 3, in 1 st. of 4 l. Of this form of the text st. ii., and xi. are the preceding stanzas being new. This form is repeated, sometimes abbreviated, in Brownlie’s Select Hys., &c., 1871; the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Soper’s Songs of Grace and Glory, 1872; Thring’s Coll., 1882, and others. [J. J.]

THOU GOD OF RUIN.

And we to Righteousness, and with a long note, thus introduced:—

I am glad of an Opportunity to rescue this significant Word (Fate) out of the Hands of the Infidels, who use it together with Luck, Fortune, Chance, Destiny, to promote their favourite Scheme, of excluding the particular Providence of the Wise Disposer of all Events from the Government of the Affairs of Man.

He then proceeds to justify the use of the word by first giving its derivation from the Latin, Fatum, and then quoting classical authorities for its use in the same sense as that in which it is used by Wesley. Fate is that which God has spoken concerning man. In this verse of the hymn that word is, “Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.” Hence its truth.

Concerning the second stanza, "Lo! on a narrow neck of land," much controversy has arisen as to whether or not it was written "on a narrow neck of land" at the Land’s End, Cornwall. Mr. T. Jackson, in his Life of C. Wesley, asserts that there is no proof of its having been written under these circumstances; and Dr. Osborn, the learned editor of the Poetical Works of J. & C. Wesley, is silent on the subject. Failing to find elsewhere any evidence of value in favour of the common belief, we must join the above authorities in pronouncing against it.

The literary merits of this hymn won the praise of Montgomery:—

"Thou God of glorious majesty!" is a sublime conception in another vein; solemn, collected, unimpassioned thought, but thought occupied with that which is of everlasting import to a dying man, standing on the lapse of a moment between ‘two eternities.’

An abbreviated form of this hymn is found in a few collections including Major’s Book of Praise, &c., No. 65. It is composed of st. ii.—vi., beginning “O God, mine inmost soul convert.” The same stanzas, considerably altered, are given as “O God, Thy saving grace impart,” in Kennedy, 1863. [J. J.]
Thou knowest, Lord, that they.

Thou, Lord, delights Thy saints to own. J. Allen. [Holy Baptism.] This imperfect line is the opening of a hymn out of which a fairly good lyric has been made. The original, by J. Allen, appeared in A Collection of Hymns for the use of those that seek, and those that have Redemption in the Blood of Christ. Kendal: Printed by Thomas Ashburner, MDCCLVII, No. 114, as follows:

"At Baptism.
1. Thou, Lord, delights Thy saints to own
In Thy appointed ways;
This ordinance with blessings crown,
And tokens of Thy grace.
2. Jointly we raise our hearts to Thee,
Thy pow'rful spirit breathe;
And let the little infant be Baptized into Thy death.
3. O let Thy unction on him rest,
With grace his heart beseech;
And write within his tender breast
Thy name and nature too.
4. If Thou shouldst quickly end his race
His place with Thee prepare;
Or if Thou lengthen out his days,
Continue still Thy care.
5. Thy faithful soldier may be prove,
Begirt with truth divine;
A sharer of Thy dying love,
A follower of Thine."

In 1782 Thomas Beck included it in an altered form in his Hymns Calculated for the Purposes of Public, Social, and Private Worship, &c., Rochester, 1782, as No. 105, thus:

"Dedicating the Child to God in Baptism.
1. Thou, Lord, art pleased Thy saints to own;
And will their children bless;
This ordinance now with mercy crown,
And tokens of Thy grace.
2. Jesus, we raise our souls to Thee
[And, as in orig. above.]
3. O let Thy unctuation on him rest,
Thy grace his soul beneath;
[And, as in orig. above.]
4. [As above with l. 1 "race" to "days"; and l. 2, "days" to "race".] 5. [As above with l. 2 "hep's" to "ground," and l. 3 "sharer of" to "sharer in." ] 6. A new stanza, being:
"Plant us into His death,
That we His life may prove;
Partakers of His cross beneath, from Hymns, on The Lord's Supper, by J. and C. Wesley, 1745, No. 97, rewritten in c.m. as:
And of His crown above."

"Lord, plant us all into Thy death,
That we Thy life may prove;
Partakers of Thy cross beneath,
And of Thy crown above."

In 1833, this cento took the form in which it is known in modern hymn-books, appearing in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, No. 351, as "Jesus, we lift our souls to Thee," in 5 st., beginning with the second stanza altered, by Allen, and concluding with the stanza, also altered as above, by Wesley. In the Irish Church Hymnals, st. 4, as in Bickersteth, is omitted. The cento should therefore be subscribed "J. Allen, C. Wesley, T. Beck, and E. Bickersteth." [W. T. B.]

THOUGH HOLY, HOLY, HOLY

T. Randell. [Love.] First appeared as No. 11 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of 1 Cor. xiii., in 14 st. of 4 lines. In the Draft of 1781, No. 12, and again in 1783. In the Draft of 1781 to W. Cameron. In the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hymns, 1807, the text of 1781 was included as No. 282-283, No. 282 beginning "Love suffers long, love envieth not" (st. v.), and No. 2823 beginning with st. x., "Here all our gifts in perfect are. It is also found in the following forms:

1. Though every grace my speech adorns, beginning with st. i. altered in the Springfield Coll., 1836, No. 247 (American).
2. Love still shall hold an endless reign, st. ix., xii.-xiv. in Byron's Hymns, 1800, No. 162.
3. 'Tis Love shall hold an endless reign, st. ix., xii.-xiv., in Trench's Chapel Coll., 1845, p. 64.
4. Faith, hope, and love, new dwell on earth, st. xiii., xiv. in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1872, No. 109, and in America in Adams & Chaplin's Coll., 1846, No. 387. (Compare Watts's Hymns, BK. i., Nos. 133, 134.)

[J. M.]

THOUGH holy, holy, holy, Lord J. Montgomery. [Holy Trinity.] This appeared in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 12, in 7 st. of 4 l., and based on Isaiah vi. 3. It is given in a few modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, but is not found in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853. [J. J.]

THOUGH troubles assail, And dangers affright. J. Newton. [Security in God.] Written in February, 1775, for the service at the Grand House at Olney (Ball's Life of Newton, 1868, p. 208), and first pub. in the Gospel Magazine, Jan. 1777, p. 42, in 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "Jehovah-Jireh, i.e. The Lord will provide, Gen. xxii. 14." It was included in the Olney Hymns, 1779, BK. i., No. 7, with the title "The Lord will provide." It is usually given in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

THOUGHT on thought in solemn train. E. Caswall. [Man Perfect, Fallen, Redeemed.] This poem of 222 lines appeared in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 292, as "Musing in a solemn train," in 7 parts as follow:—
1. Nature in Paradise; i. Nature Fallen; ii. Nature Comforted; iv. Nature Redeemed; v. Nature Warned; vi. Nature Restored; vii. Nature Glorified. In his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 259, it was repeated in full with the same divisions, and the general heading "Human Nature before and since the fall." In the Hymnary, 1872, two verses were given from it as (1) "Hail, O Thou of grace divine;" (2) "If thou wouldst life attain:"
The latter of these has been repeated elsewhere. [J. J.]

THOUSANDS, O Lord of hosts, this day. J. Montgomery. [During Sickness.] Pub. in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 129, and again in the Westminster H. Bk., compiled by the Misses Barrison of Sheffield, 1834, No. 198. It was republished in Montgomery's Poe's Portfolio, 1835, p. 255, with the title "The Prisoner of the Lord." A Sabbath Hymn for a Sick Chamber; and the addition of two stanzas ("I, of such fellowship benight," and "O make Thy love on me beginning") This text was repeated in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 183. It is in C. U. in Great Britain and America usually in an abbreviated form; and also as follows:

THRELFALL, JEANETTE 1171

2. Thousands, O Lord, of souls this day. In the American Unitarian Hymns of the Spirit, Boston, 1844, in 3 st.
3. The dew lies thick upon the ground. In the American Church Pastoral, 1864, st. viii. [J. J.]

Three in One, and One in three. G. Rorison. [Holy Trinity.] The ms. of this hymn was sent in 1849, with seven others, to R. Campbell for insertion in his St. Andrew's Hymnal, but they were not included therein, although the ms. were retained and now form part of the c. ms. The heading of this special ms. is "Trinity Sunday. An imitation and combination from the Roman Breviary 'Tu Trinitatis Unitas,' and 'Jam sol recedit igneus.'" The hymn was first pub. in Dr. Rorison's Hymns and Anthems, 1851 (Preface dated "All Saints Day, 1850"), p. 97, as follows:

"Three in One and One in Three: Rule of the earth and sea! Hear us while we lift to Thee Holy chant and psalm.
1. Three in One and One in Three: Light of lights! with morning-shine Lift on us Thy light divine; And let charity be shed A vesper calm.
2. Three in One, and One in Three! Darkling here we worship Thee: With the Saints hereafter we Hope to bear the palm."

In Murray's Hymnal, 1832, it was repeated with "Dimly here," &c., for "Darkling here," &c., in st. iv., l. 2. This text was given in H. A. & M., 1861, with the additional change of "Shed a vesper calm," to "shed a holy calm." Other, but slight, alterations have been introduced in modern hymn-books, including:

1. Ever blessed Trinity. In the 1890 Appendix to the Hap. Ps. & Hymns.
2. Holy Godhead, One in Three. In the Roman Catholic Hymn, for the Year 1877.
3. Lord of love! as deep and free. In J. Hunter's Hymns of Faith and Life, Glasgow, 1889.

It must be noted that most editors of hymnals have misquoted at st. ii. by putting the compound substantive "morning-shine" as two words, followed by a colon, an oversight which destroys the whole point and meaning of the stanza, and goes far towards spoiling the entire hymn. The text, usually as in H. A. & M., is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. The H. A. & M. text is also tr. into Latin by G. S. Hodges, and is given in his County Palatine, 1876, as, "Una Trina Deitas." [J. J.]

Threlfall, Jeannette. This sweet singer of hymns and other sacred songs, was born in the town of Blackburn, Lancashire, on 24th March, 1821. She was the daughter of Henry Threlfall, wine merchant, and Catherine Eccles, the latter a somewhat noticeable local family, who disapproved of the marriage. She was early left an orphan, and became the "beloved inmate" (as a memorial card bears) of the households successively of her uncle and aunt. Damister and Mary Jane Eccles, at Park Place, Blackburn, and Golden Hill, Leyland; and later of their daughter, the late Sarah Alice Aston, and her husband, of Dean's Yard, Westminster. Latterly she met with a sad accident that lambed and mutilated her for life, and a second rendered her a helpless invalid. She bore her long slow sufferings brightly, and to the end retained a gentle, loving, sympathetic heart, and always a pleasant word and smile, forgetful of herself. Throughout she was a great reader, and at "idle moments" threw off with ease her sacred poems and hymns. These were sent anonymously to various periodicals. They were first collected and issued in a small volume, entitled Woodseer; or, Leaves from a Retired Home. By J. T., Lond.: J. Nisbet, 1856. There are thirty-five poems in all. They do not appear to have won any notice except among friends. Years later she selected 15 pieces from Woodseer and added 55 others, and pub. them as Sunshine and Shadow. Poems by Jeannette Threlfall. With Introduction by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln [Wordsworth]. Lond.: (Hmt), 1873. A 3rd ed. (1880) is entitled New Edition. With In Memoriam from the Sermons of the Dean of Westminster and Canon Farrar. The two memorial tributes are very tender and sweet. A few words from each will be acceptable.

Dean Stanley, amongst other things, nicely put, says:-

"If I may speak of one who has been taken from these precincts within the last week: when a life, bright and lovely in itself, is suddenly darkened by some terrible accident; when it has been changed from the enjoyment of everything to the enjoyment of nothing; when year by year, and week by week, the suffering, the weakness, have increased; and when yet, in spite of this, the patient suffers the centre of the household, the adviser and counsellor of each; when there has been a constant stream of cheerfulness under the severest pain; when there has been a flow of gratitude for any act of kindness, however slight; when we recall the eager hope of such an one, that progress and improvement, not stagnation or repose, will be the destiny of the newly-awakened soul; then, when the end has come, we feel more than ever that the future is greater than the present."

So Canon Farrar:—

"A few days ago there passed away a resident of this parish, a member of this congregation, whose name many of the poor well know; who was their friend and their benefactor: who had the liberal hand and the large heart; who helped the charities of this parish with a spontaneous generosity which is extremely rare; whose purse was ever open, unmasked, to every good work of which he heard; whose delicate mind was alive with Christian sympathy; who had pre-eminently

"The faith, through constant watching wise,
And the heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathise."

Bp. Wordsworth praises her poems, and observes:—

"It is an occasion for thankfulness to be able to point to poems, such as many of those in the present volume, in which con-liderable mental powers and graces of composition are blended with pure religious feeling, and hallowed by sound doctrine and devout devotion."

The title Woodseer was chosen from its name in Italian, "Alleluia," and because Fra Angelico paints it, with daisies at foot of the Cross in one of his most lovely paintings.
THRING, GODFREY

THRING, Godfrey, B.A., S. of the Rev. J. G. D. Thring, of Alford, Somerset, and brother of the Rev. E. Thring (see above), was b. at Alford, March 25, 1823, and educated at Shrewsbury School, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he was graduated in 1845. On taking Holy Orders he was curate of Stratfield-Turnig, 1846–50; of Stratfieldsaye, 1850–53; and of other parishes to 1858, when he became rector of Alford-with-Hornblotton, Somerset. R.D. 1867–70. In 1876 he was preferred as prebend of East Harptree in Wells cathedral.

Prebendary Thring's chief works are—Hymns Congregational and Other, 1854; Hymns and Verses, 1866; and Hymns and Sacred Lyrics, 1874. In 1880 he pub. A Church of England Hymn-book Adapted to the Daily Services of the Church throughout the Year; and in 1882, a revised and much improved edition of the same as The Church of England Hymn Book, 4c. (for details see Hibbert's). Several English, Hymnody, Church of, p. 331, § vi.). A great many of Prebendary Thring's hymns are annotated under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators); the rest in C. U. include:—

1. Beneath the Church's hallowed shade. Consolation, E. Ryland Ground. Written in 1750. This is one of four hymns in two verses by Dr. Dykes, and first pub. by Noveilo & Co., 1873. It was also included (but without music) in the author's Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and in his Coll., 1882.

2. Blessed Saviour. Thou hast taught us. Quinguaexta. Written in 1866, and first pub. in the author's Hymns: Congregational and Other, 1874. It was republished in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and again in his Coll., 1882.

3. Bestow our sins of old. Written in 1862, and first pub. in Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and his Coll., 1882. It is in several collections in the U. States, and America, and has been especially set to music by H. H. Pierson (Novello & Co.), and in other hymnals.

4. Bowed down with sorrow, sin, and shame. Lent. Written in 1866, and first pub. in his Coll., 1882, as a Processional during Lent. It is of more than usual merit.

5. Bulwarks of Church and Conferences. Ec. Written in 1870, and first pub. with music by the Rev. S. M. Barkworth (Novello), 1871, and in many other collections, 1872.

6. Dead to life, yet loath to die. Invitation to the Wedding Supper. Written in 1862, and first pub. in Morrell & How's P., 1864; and again in the author's Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; and in his Coll., 1882, and in other hymnals.

7. For mercy, Lord, I cry. Lent. Written in 1862, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866, and his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874.

8. From the eastern mountains. Epiphany. Written in 1873, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and others, 1866, and his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874.

9. Give me the food of heaven, the bread eternal. Litany for Close of Service. Written in 1871, and first pub. in his Hymns, Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882, and in other hymnals.

10. Grant us O our heavenly Father. Growth in Grace and Grace. Written in 1861; in the request of the Rev. W. B. Michell, Diocesan Inspector of Schools for Boys and Wells, to set forth the growth of religion through the Visitation, the Incarnation, and the Church, and first pub. in the author's Coll., 1873.

11. Great Architect of worlds unknown. Holy Trinity, Monmouth. Written in 1853, at the request of the Rev. W. B. Michell, Diocesan Inspector of Schools for Boys and Wells, to set forth the growth of religion through the Visitation, the Incarnation, and the Church, and first pub. in the author's Coll., 1873.

12. Hall of day of light, that bringest light. And joy to me. "Hail! quiet spirit, bringing peace. And joy to me." Although the altered form is in the author's Coll., 1882, originally it is his authorized text.

13. Hark! hear ye not the angel-song. Christmas Carol. Written in 1868. In the author's Coll., 1882, and in the author's Hymns, 1874; and his Coll., 1882, also in other hymnals.

14. Hark: the vault of heaven is ringing. Ascension. Written in 1873, and first pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; again in his Coll., 1882; and in other hymnals.

17. Heal me, O my Saviour, heal. Lent. Written in 1866, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866, in 5 st. of 4 l., and, enlarged to 8 st., in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and his Coll., 1882, also in other hymnals. It has been specially set to music by H. H. Pierson in his Hymn Tunes, 2nd series, 1872. Its use has extended to America.

18. Hear us, Thou who broodest. Processional for Whittensale. Written in 1873, and first pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882, also in other hymnals. The latter is his authorized text.

19. In the Name of God the Father. Holy Baptism. Written in 1867, and first pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and again in his Coll., 1882. The second stanza begins, "Washed beneath the mystic waters."

20. Jesus, heavenly Shepherd. The Good Shepherd. Written in 1872, and first pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and again in his Coll., 1882; also in other hymnals, but omitted from the 1882 ed. of the same, although it is by no means an indifferent hymn.

22. Lord of Power, Lord of Might. Collect, 7th S. After Easter. Written in 1865, and first pub. in Chope's Hymnal the same year. It was repeated in the author's Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and his Coll., 1882. It is also in a large number of collections, and ranks in popularity with most of the author's best hymns. It has been specially set to music by H. P. Monck and by H. H. Pierson.

23. Make me holy, O my Saviour. Holiness desired. Written in 1865, and first pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and again in his Coll., 1882 (Private Use).

24. Most holy, most blessed are ye. Blessing, 15th. Written in 1862, and pub. in Chope's Hymnal the same year. It was repeated in the author's Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and his Coll., 1882. It has been specially set to music by H. H. Pierson and W. H. Best.

25. O faithful for the faith that knows no doubt. Unfailing Faith desired. Written in 1864, and first pub. in his Hymns, Verses, and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882; but omitted from the ed. of 1882.

27. O God, the King of glory. Who. Collect, S. after the Ascension. Written in May, 1863, and pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and his Coll., 1882; but omitted from the ed. of 1882.

29. O sing to the Lord with a psalm of thanksgiving. Church Conference. Written in 1871, and pub. in Four Hymns, set to music by Dr. Dykes, 1873, in the author's Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and his Coll., 1882. A fine Processional hymn for Christ's gatherings of various kinds.

31. O Thou Who every change of human life. St. Thomas. Written in 1874, and first pub. in his Coll., 1869, and also in the 1882 ed. of the same.

32. O Thou, Who from one blood didst make. For Unity. First pub. in his Coll., 1880; again in 1882, and in other hymnals.
34. O Thou Who madest land and sea. For Orphans. Written in 1881, and included in his Coll., 1882.
35. O Thou Who sitst enthroned above all worlds both great and small. Consolation of Church. Written in 1887, and pub. with music by Dr. Bykes in Four Hymns, 1872, and used at the consecration of Hornblotton Church, Feb. 19, 1874. Also specially set to music by H. S. Ives (Novello), 1874. It was repeated in the author's Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and his Coll., 1882, also in other hymnals.
36. See the Sun high heaven ascending. Mid-day. Written in 1864, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882.
37. The ocean hath no danger. For Use at Sea. Written in 1862, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882.
38. Thou that sendest sun and rain. Boys. Written in 1862, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866, as a hymn for a "Bad Harvest." It was repeated in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; his Coll., 1882, and in several hymnals.
39. Thou to Whom the sick and dying. On behalf of Hospitals. Written in 1870, at the request of Rev. Hutton of Lincoln, and first pub. in his Supplement, Lincoln, 1871; and again with music by H. H. Pierson in Hymn Times (Simpkin & Marshall), 1872. It is also in the author's Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; his Coll., 1882, and several other hymn-books.
40. Those happy bliss whose tranquil mind. Contentment. Written in 1863, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; and his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874. It is given in one or two American hymn-books.
41. Thy love for all Thy creatures. Mid-day. Written in 1864, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; again in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; his Coll., 1882, and several hymn-books.
42. To Thee, O God, we render thanks. Holy Scripture. Written in 1860, and pub. in his Coll., 1882.
43. Watch now, ye Christians. Watch and pray. Advent. Written in 1861, and first pub. in Chope's Hymnals, 1882. Afterwards repeated in the author's Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and his Coll., 1882, also in other hymnals.
44. We know not. O we know not. how far a prayer may go. Prayer. Written in 1866, and first pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; and again, abbreviated, in his Coll., 1882 (Private Use).
45. With tears and hearts bowed down with sorrow. Death of a Child. Written by request in 1881 for the funeral of a little boy, William Holmes Orr, son of the Rev. W. H. Orr, Rector of West Lydford, Somerset, who was killed by the fall of a shed, under which he with five other boys had taken refuge during the great storm on Oct. 14, 1881. It was included in the author's Coll., 1882. The special metre was adopted that the hymn might be sung to Neumark's Chorale, "Wer nur den lieben Gott liest wissen." (See p. 796, lii.)
46. Work is sweet for God has blest. Work. Written in 1863, and first pub. in his Hymns, Cong. and Others, 1866; his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874; his Coll., 1882, and other hymn-books. In addition to the above, and those annotated under their respective first lines, Prebendary Thring wrote in 1868 a series of "Hymns on the Creation," as set forth in the first chapter of Genesis, and pub. the same in his Hymns & Sacred Lyrics, 1874, and in his Coll., 1880 and 1882. These hymns have also passed into other collections. They are all in the same metre (8.8.8.8.8.0), and are certainly very fine. The first lines are:-
47. When o'er the water's misty deep. Sunday.
49. With azure girdle circled round. Tuesday.
50. So grass, and berti, and fruitful tree. Wednesday.
51. Four days had come and gone to rest. Thursday.
52. The last great day of work had come. Friday.
53. And now, amid myriad worlds enthroned. Saturday.
Although, as is natural, Prebendary Thring's hymns are more fully represented in his own Coll. than elsewhere, yet a fair proportion are found in a large number of hymn-books in Great Britain and America. His hymns are mainly objective, and are all of them of a strong and decided character. The poetical,

Through endless years Thou art the same. [Ps. ciii.] This cento is found in several English and American hymn-books; sometimes in four and at other times in five stanzas; and in most cases differing somewhat in the text. The earliest date to which we have traced it is the English Bap. New Sel. of Hys., 1828, No. 17, in 5 st., the first of which is taken from Watts’s version of Ps. ciii., and the rest from the New Version, 1826; and in both instances with alterations. This text, with alterations and the omission of st. v., was given in the American Congregational Church Psalmody, by Mason & Goodnow, Boston, 1831, No. 102. In some later American hymn-books, st. v., as in the English Bap. New Sel., 1828, or altered, is restored. The text of the 1880 Suppl. to the English Bap. Ps. & Hys., is from the New Sel., slightly altered. [J. J.]

Through the day Thy love has spared us. T. Kelly. [Evening.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1806, in 2 st. of 6 l., (ed. of 1800). It has come into extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and has been tr. into several languages. R. Bingham’s tr. in Latin is his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, begins:—Per hunc diem trium- pidum. [J. J.]

Throw away Thy rod. G. Herbert. [Discipline.] 1st pub. in his posthumous work The Temple, 1633, under the title “Discipline,” thus:

Then let wrath remove; Love will do the deed; For with love Stony hearts will be blest; Love is swift, and sure, Love’s man of war, And can shoot, And can hit from far; Who can scarce escape his bow? That which wrought on Thee, Brought Thee low, Needs must work on me; Throw away Thy rod; Thon art great; Thou art Thy rod; The rod of Thy wrath.

The earliest attempt known to us to adapt this poem for congregational use was made by John Wesley. In his Coll. of Ps. & Hys. printed at Charleston, America, 1736–7, it was altered from its 5.5.3. metre to 5.7.7. and given as No. vi. of the “Ps. & Hys. for Wednesday and Friday.” The first stanza begins:

O throw away Thy rod! O throw away Thy wrath! My gracious Saviour and my God, Take the gentle path.

The original poem, usually in an abbreviated form, is found in several modern hymn-books, including the People’s H., 1867; the Cong. Ch. Hymnal, 1887, and others. [J. J.]

Thrupp, Dorothy Ann, daughter of Joseph Thrupp, of Paddington Green, was b. at London, June 20, 1779, and d. there on Dec. 14, 1847. Her hymns, a few of which have come into extensive use, were contributed to the Rev. W. Carus Wilson’s Friendly Visitor and his Children’s Friend, under the en de: A Volume of Love: to Mrs. Herbert Mayo’s Sel. of Hys. and Poetry for the use of Infant Schools and Nurseries, 1838 (3rd ed. 1846, with change of title to A Sel. ... of Infant and Juvenile Schools and Families), in which her signature is “D. A. T.”; and also to the Hys. for the Young, which she herself edited for the R. T. S. circa 1830, 4th ed., 1836. In 1836 and 1837 she also pub. Thoughts for the Day (2nd series), in which she embodied many hymns which previously appeared in the Friendly Visitor. In addition to her hymns, which are annotated under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators), there are also in C. U.:

2. God loves the little child that prays. God’s love for Children. Given in Miss Thrupp’s Hys. for the Young, 4th ed., 1846; and again in Mrs. Mayo’s Sel. of Hys., &c., 2nd ed., 1846, and signed “D. A. T.” It is sometimes given as “God loves the child that humbly prays.”

3. Have you read the wondrous story! Lift and Feast of Jesus. This appeared anonymously in Miss Thrupp’s Hys. for the Young, T. S., 1830, No. 12, in 5 st. of 4 l. In Miss Thrupp’s last publication this hymn is omitted, a fact which suggests that it was not her composition, but possibly that of a friend. It is in the Leeds S. S. Union H. Bk., 1835–6.

4. Let us sing with one accord. Praise of Jesus. This hymn is usually associated with Miss Thrupp’s name, but on insufficient evidence. We find it in the 4th ed. of her Hys. for the Young, 1836, and again in the 3rd ed. of Mrs. H. Mayo’s Sel. of Hys. and Poetry for the Use of Infant and Juvenile Schools, &c., 1846, and in both instances without signature. We know of no evidence which justifies us in ascribing the authorship with certainty to Miss Thrupp. The hymn is in the Leeds S. S. Union H. Bk., 1835–6, and several others.

5. Poor and needy though I be. Divine Providence. Appeared in Miss Thrupp’s Hys. for the Young, 4th ed., 1836, No. 22; and again in Mrs. Mayo’s Sel. of Hys., &c., 2nd ed., 1840, and signed “D. A. T.”

7. Thou Guardian of my earliest days. Jesus the Children’s Friend. This hymn we have traced to her Hys. for the Young, 4th ed., 1836. It is sometimes given as “Thou Guardian of our earliest days.”

8. What a strange and wondrous story. Life and Death of Jesus. This hymn is found without signature in her Hys. for the Young, 4th ed., 1836, and again in Mrs. Mayo’s Sel., 1836, No. 173, in 4 st. of 4 l. We have found no authority for ascribing it to Miss Thrupp. In the Ch. S. S. H. Bk., n.d., 8 lines have been added as a concluding stanza by an unknown hand.

9. What led the Son of God! Love of God in Christ. This appeared anonymously in her Hys. for the Young, 1836, and again in the Leeds S. S. Union H. Bk., 1836. In modern collections it is attributed to Miss Thrupp, on the ground that it is found in the Hys. for the Young, which she edited.

10. Who are they in heaven who stand! All Saints. Pub. in Mrs. Mayo’s Sel., 3rd ed., 1846, No. 64, in 5 st. of 4 l., and signed “A. D. T.” It is in the Prisc. Methoist S. S. H. Bk., 1879, and others.

Several additional hymns to those named above have also been contributed to Miss Thrupp on insufficient authority. This has probably arisen out of the fact that all the hymns in the Hys. for the Young, including her own, were given anonymously. [J. J.]

Thrupp, Joseph Francis, M.A., s. of a solicitor, was b. May 20, 1827, and educated at Winchester School and Trinity College, Cambridge. At Winchester he gained the Heathcote and Duncan prizes, and the Queen’s gold medal for an English poem, and was Head Prefect during his last year. He graduated in 1849 as 7th Wrangler, and 11th in the 1st class of the Classical Tripos. In 1830 he was [Safely in God.] 1st printed on a broadsheet for use at the Anniversary Sermons, on behalf of the Red Hill Sunday School, Sheffield, March 28, 1819, in 4 st. of 6 l., and signed “J. M.” In Montgomery’s Greenland and Other Poems, 1819, p. 171, it was given in 6 st. of 6 l., the new stanzae being st. iv. and v. of the text as included in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 479, and his Original Hys., 1853, No. 55. The 1819 text was altered in 1825; and again, but very slightly, in 1853. In modern collections the text is usually abridged. [J. J.]

Thus speaks the heathen: How shall man. J. Logan. [Mercy rather than Sacrifice.] 1st pub. in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, No. xxxi., in 6 st. of 4 l., on Micah vi. 6-9. It is nearly found outside of that work. This paraphrase is ascribed to J. Logan, on evidence given in the memoir of M. Bruce (p. 118, ii.). [J. J.]

TILL HE COME

1861 and first pub. in his work The Blessed Dead, 1862, and subsequently in his Supp. to Psalms and Hymns, No. 41; The Two Brothers, 1871; and the 1870, 1876, and 1890 eds. of the Hymnal Companion. The author says that it is given in his Hymnal Comp. as presenting "one aspect of the Lord's Supper which is passed over in many hymnals. 'Ye do show forth the Lord's death till He come'; and also our communion with those of whom we say 'We have this holy Name for all Thy servants departed this life in Thy faith and fear.'" (Note in the annotated ed. of Hy. Comp.) It is in several hymn-books. [J. J.]

Time is earnest, passing by. [Old and New Year.] This p-pular Sunday School hymn appeared in three publications in the same year, and in each case anonymously. (1) It is found in Sidney Dyer's American South-western Psalmsist, 1851 (p. 317, ii.), and signed "Anon." (2) Again in an American paper called Independent, 1851; (3) and again, in England, in The Bible Class Magazine, 1851, with the signature "Independent," the name of the American paper from which it was taken. It was in 4 st. of 4 l. Subsequently it was reprinted in The Bible Class Magazine, with music by Mr. Joseph Dyer, the Schoolmaster of the Wesleyan School, Cockington. Miller says (Singers & Songs, etc. 1853, p. 551) that "it also appeared in Select Music for the Young (Sunday School Union), where it is headed, "All Things Earnest; composed by Joseph Dyer." This curious association of two men of the name of Dyer with the hymn, the first in America, and the second in England, has led to its authorship being attributed at one time to Sidney Dyer, and at another to Joseph Dyer, and in each case without authority of any weight. Usually the hymn is given in an abbreviated form of 5 st. as in the Universal H. Bk., 1885, the Cong. Church Hyl., 1887, and others. [J. J.]

Tis a point I long to know. J. Newton. [In Doubt and Fear.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i. No. 119, in 9 st. of 4 l. It is in C. U. in an abbreviated form, and opening with the first line as above. In some collections it begins, "Lord, my God, I long to know"; and in others, "Could my heart so hard remain" (st. iii.). These altered forms of the text are in use principally in America. [J. J.]

Tis enough, the hour is come. J. Merrick. [Nunc Dimittis.] This paraphrase of the Nunc Dimittis was pub. in his Poems on Sacred Subjects, 1763, p. 13, in 22 lines. As given in Kennedy, 1863, No. 185, some of the lines are transposed, and the whole are expanded into 3 st. of 8 l. [J. J.]

Tis finished, the Messias dies, Cut off for sins, &c. C. Wesley. [Good Fri-
In 1762 this hymn, in 2 st. of 8 L, appeared in C. Wesley’s Short Hymns, vol. ii. p. 234. These stanzas are:

"Tis finished! the Messiah dies,
Cut off for sins, but not His own!
Accomplish’d is the sacrifice,
The great redeeming work is done;
Finish’d the first transgression is,
And purg’d the guilt of actual sin,
And everlasting righteousness
Is now to all the world brought in.

"Tis finish’d, all my guilt and pain,
I want no sacrifice beside,
For me, for me, the Lamb is slain,
And I am more than justified;
Sin, death, and hell are now subdued,
All grace is now to sinners given,
And, lo! I pleads th’atoning blood.
For pardon, holiness, and heaven."

It is from the first four lines of this hymn that Blair formed st. iv. of his cento, “Behold the Saviour on the cross,” p. 130, i. The original, as above, was given in A. M. Toplady’s Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 223, and thus came into use in the Church of England. Charles Wesley, however, was not satisfied with those stanzas, and at his death left in ms. another hymn on the same text, “It is finished!” in 8 st. of 4 L, of which st. i. and viii. are st. i. ll. 1–4, and st. ii. ll. 5–8 (slightly altered) respectively of the 1762 text, and st. ii. – vii. are new. This text was given in the 1830 Suppl. to the Wes. H. Bk., and again in the F. Works, 1868–72, vol. xii. p. 99. [J. J.]

"Tis gone, that bright and orbed blaze. J. Keble. [Evening.]* Date: Nov. 25, 1820, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 14 st. of 4 L, and headed with the text “Abide with us, for it is toward evening,” and the day is far spent. St. Luke xxiv. 29.”

The centos from this poem in C. U. are:

1. Sum of my soul. Thou Saviour dear. This cento was given in three stanzas in Elliott’s Ps. & Hys., 1835. This was repeated in numerous hymnals, sometimes in the same form, but usually with additional stanzas, until it has become one of the foremost hymns in the English language. It has been tr. into several languages. Those in Latin include, “Sol animae vitaeque meae, praecipua Jean” (4 st.); by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1771; and “Sol mens: Omnis Salvator!” (4 st.), by H. M. Macquill, in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876.

2. The Rulers of this Christian land. This cento, For those in Authority, is in limited use.

3. Thou Frame of the light and dark. This cento “For the High Court of Parliament” is in the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys.; the Hy. Comp., and others, and is admirably suited for the purpose.

4. When the soft dews of kindly sleep. This cento for Evening was given in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; the Starum Hg., 1866, and others. [J. J.]

Tis my happiness below. W. Cowper. [In Affliction.] Appeared in Lady Huntingdon’s Coll., 1774, No 143, in 3 st. of 8 L, and in the Old Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 16. In the Lady Huntingdon Coll. it preceded, and in the Old Hymns it follows Cowper’s “God moves in a mysterious way” (see p. 433, i.), and seems to have been written at, or about the same time, and under the same circumstances. Its modern use is mainly confined to America where, in its full, or in an abridged form, it is somewhat popular. [J. J.]

"Tis pure delight without alloy. J. Watts. [Divine Love Desired.]* Pub. in his Hymn. Lyric. 1706, Bk. i., in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed, “Ascending to Him in Heaven.” In the American Meth. Episc. Hymns, 1849, and in their Hymnal, 1878, it is given with the omission of alloy.” It was put to the heart with

English,
This is a hymn of penitence before Holy Communion, and was 1st pub. in 1663, as above, as No. ii., in 8 st. of 4 l., entitled “Hymn of Consolation.” Included in Crüger’s Psalms, 1675, the Nürnberg G. B., 1676, Freylinghausen’s G. B., 1704, the Berlin G. L. S., 1863, No. 856, and many others, sometimes printed as 5 st. of 8.

Lawrence (Kock, viii. 488) that C. A. Dann, chief of Front St., wrote this, but it is entirely different from this hymn.

The 4th in C. U., is in my anglois lane. This is a good tr., omitting st. vi., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Gec., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 201; repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 146. Included in full in the Ohio Luth. Hym., 1880, and abridged in the St. Aidan’s College H. B., 1864.

Other trans. are:

(1) “Yes, I am to man appear.” This is a tr. of st. ii., as st. v. of No. 1662, in the Septp. of 1668 to the Moreno H. B., 1841 (1896, No. 593). (2) “Deem me sometimes, spirit-shaken.” In L. Rheinhard’s Church at Sea, 1868, p. 44, only st. i., vi. being from this hymn.

I. O du Schöpfer aller Dinge. Holy Communion. This is a hymn of penitence before Holy Communion, and was 1st pub. in 1663, as above, as No. ii., in 8 st. of 4 l., Reprinted in Crüger’s Psalms, 1675, No. 133; but recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, and erroneously ascribed to Johann Heinrich Keilbach or Calvisius [D. 1633, at Wahlau, in Silesia; d. March 30, 1696, as chief pastor and superintendent at Gauelford, in Württemberg]. This possibly arose from the fact that in Calvisius’s Hauskirsche, Nürnberg, 1676, p. 388, there is a hymn beginning “Mein Schöpfer aller Dinge,” Dem bei dieser Morgen-Zeit,” in 7 st., but it is entirely different from this hymn. Tr. as “Bow Thine ear, I now implore Thee.” By Dr. H. Mills, 1843, p. 38.

ii. Sollt es gleich biawellen scheinen. Cross and Consolidation. His most popular hymn, 1st pub. in 1663, as No. vi., in 10 st. of 4 l., entitled “Hymn of Consolation.” Included in Crüger’s Psalms, 1675, the Nürnberg G. B., 1676, Freylinghausen’s G. B., 1704, the Berlin G. L. S., 1863, No. 856, and many others, sometimes printed as 5 st. of 8.

with a tr. into Latin, in Daniel, iii. p. 225. It appeared in the People’s H., 1867, with the signature “F.”

J. J.

To day we're bidden to a feast.

J. Conrnick. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in his Sacred Hys. for the Children of God, &c., 1741, No. vi., in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled, “Before the Sanriment.” In a few hymn-books a cent from thereon is given as “Together with these symbols, Lord” (st. vi.).

J. J.

To God belongs the eternal sway.

J. Merrick. [Ps. xvi.] 1st pub. in his Psalms Translated or Paraphrased in English Verse, 1765, p. 239, in 48 lines. In 1797 Merrick’s Psalms were republished by W. D. Tatterseil “divided into stanzas for Parochial Use,” and this version was given therein in 18 st. of 4 l., two lines being added to st. vi., and two lines to st. x. to make up the required number of stanzas. In this form it is unknown to modern hymn-books. In Cotterill’s Sel., 1819, Ps. 57, it is given in an abbreviated and rewritten form as, “The Lord is King! let earth obey.” This is given in some modern hymnals, including Kenneth’s 1863, with alterations and the omission of st. ii., iii.

J. J.

To God most awful and most high.

J. Montgomery. [In time of Sorrow.] Written for the laying of the foundation stone of a Corn Mill at Sheffield, on Nov. 3, 1755, which was “built for the common use and benefit of the people.” It was printed in Montgomery’s Sheffield Iris newspaper the same day, and signed “Paul Positon,” a nom de plume of the author. It subsequently appeared in Cotterill’s Sel., 1819, No. 269; Montgomery’s Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 552; and his Original Hymns, 1833, No. 276. In the last two it is headed, “The poor praying for bread in the time of scarcity.” It is found in a few modern hymn-books.

J. J.

To God the only wise, Our Saviour and our King.

J. Watts. [Preserving Grace.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707 (2nd ed. 1709, bk. i., No. 51), in 5 st. of 4 l. It is found in most of the early hymn-books, especially those of a Calvinistic type, as the collections of G. Whitefield, M. Madan, and others, but to modern hymnals, except in America, it is not so well known, although still found in several books.

J. J.

To God the only wise, Who keeps us by His word.

[Doxology.] This doxology, which is in somewhat extensive use in America, is usually ascribed to J. Watts. One stanza only—the second, “Hosannah to the Word”—is from his works, and this is altered from his c. m. doxology in Hys. and S. Songs, 1707. Stanzas i. and iii. we have not traced. The latter is 2 Cor. xiii. 14 turned into metre.

J. J.

To God with mournful voice.

Tate & Brady. [Psalm csix.] In the New Version, 1836, in 7 st. of 4 l. In 1836 it was re-written by J. Hall or E. Osler, probably the latter and included in the Mitre H. Bk., as,

“... in deep distress to God I poured my care and grief,” in 4 st. of 4 l., and from thence passed, without alteration, into the Wes. H. Bk., 1875,

TO HIM THAT LOVED

No. 634. The version of Ps. ex. in the Mithraic H. Bk., in 3 st. of 4 l., beginning,

"In deep distress to God I cried,
And He aveng'd my wrongs."

was by E. Odel, and is also found in his Church and King, 1836-37, p. 137, for the 2nd Sun. after Trinity. [J. J.]

To Him that loved us for Himself, J. Mason. [Praise.] This is No. xxxiii. of his Songs of Praise, 1853, in 4 st. of 8 l. and entitled, "A Song of Praise collected from the Doxologies in the Revelation of St. John." It is very unequal in merit, some lines being very fine, whilst others are of little worth. It has, however, the elements of a splendid hymn of Praise. In modern hymnody it is known as the hymn to which Watts is supposed to have been indebted for his "Now to the Lord that makes us know" (q.v.), a supposition which cannot be maintained. Orig. text in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Mason's Songs, 1839, p. 65. [J. J.]

To keep the lamp alive. W. Cooper. [In Trial and Despondency.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 74, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Dependence." In its original form it is in limited use. The extract from it beginning with st. iii., "Beware of Peter's word," is much more popular, and especially in America, where it appeared in Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824. [J. J.]

To me a sinner, chief of all. H. Alfred. [Lent.] Written for and pub. in his Year of Praise, 1857, No. 191, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in his Poetical Works, 3rd ed., 1868. It has passed into Dale's English H. Bk., 1874; Thring's Coll., 1882, &c. [J. J.]

To me to live, let it be Christ. J. Montgomery. [The Image of Christ.] This is dated in the ms. "Aug. 30, 1833," We have not traced it in print earlier than his Original Hymns, 1833, No. 122, where it is given in 3 st. of 4 l.; but probably it was published before that date. [J. J.]

Το μέγα μυστήριον. St. Andrew of Crete. [Passiontide.] This is the 3rd Ode of a Canon, containing 3 odes, found in the Compline for Great Thursday (the Thursday of Holy Week) in the Triodion, and is in 8 stanzas. It dates about 700, and was first rendered into English by Dr. Neale, and pub. in The Ecclesiastical and Theological, 1854, p. 44, and again in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 6 st. of 6 l. as, "O the mystery, passing wonder." In this tr. st. iv. is omitted, and st. vi. and vii. are fused together. In 1863 it was included in Lyra Eucharistica, and the Parish H. Bk., and subsequently in numerous collections. [J. J.]

Το παντανακτός. [Exsultet.] Το προ των αιώνων. [Χριστὸς γενν. vāt.]

To the hills I lift mine eyes. C. Wesley. [Ps. cxv. 1.] Pub. in Ps. & Hys., 1743, in 6 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. viii., p. 232). In A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, st. i., ii. and iv. were given with alternations, as No. 227. This cento has gone out of use. The text are in a

TO US THE VOICE

English H. Bk., 1874. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, the original, with the omission of st. v., is rendered into Latin as, "Sacram Domini dominum." [J. J.]

To us the voice of wisdom cries. J. Montgomery. [Invitation to Wisdom.] Appeared in Cotterill's Selection, 1819, No. 147, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "The voice of Wisdom." In 1825, on its republication in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, No. 501, it was partly rewritten, and given in 7 st. of 4 l., the title being also changed to "The Invitation of Wisdom." This latter text and title were repeated in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 20. It is the text in C. U. [J. J.]

To Whom but Thee, O God of grace. W. J. Irons. [Seven Words from the Cross.] In his His. for Use in Church, 1866, Dr. Irons included seven hymns on the words on the Cross, and repeated them in his Ps. & Hys., 1873–75, as follows:—

1. To whom but Thee, O God of grace. St. Luke xxiii. 34.
2. Thy presence, Lord, is heaven to those. St. Matt. xxi. 38.

Most of these hymns have passed into other collections, but their use is limited. [J. J.]

To whom, my Saviour, shall I go? [Clinging to Christ.] This hymn is found in the Pansophia, 1815, where it is signed "Carp.* It was repeated in Nettleton's Village Hymns, &c., 1824, No. 408, in 4 st. of 4 l., and without signature. Subsequently it appeared in several collections, and amongst modern hymnals it is found in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and several others. [F. M. B.]

To-day the Lord our Shepherd leads. J. Montgomery. [The Good Shepherd.] Printed on a broadsheet for the use of Shilfield Sunday School Whit-Mondays, gathering, June 11, 1821, in 6 st. of 4 l., and signed "J. M." There is also a copy in the m. ms. in Montgomery's handwriting, dated "Sep. 14, 1832." The text in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 161, is slightly altered from the broadsheet of 1821. In a few collections it begins "Now may the Lord our Shepherd lead." [J. J.]

To-day Thy mercy calls me [us]. O. Allen. [Invitation.] Appeared in his Hys. of Christian Life, 1862, p. 102, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "To-day." It is found in several collections in Great Britain and America, and sometimes altered to "To-day Thy mercy calls us," as in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1871. It is the most widely used of the author's hymns. [J. J.]

Toke, Emma, née Leslie, daughter of John Leslie, b. D., Bishop of Kilmore, was b. at Holywood, Belfast, Aug. 9, 1812: married to the Rev. Nicholas Toke, Godlington Park, Ashford, Kent, in 1837; and d. in 1872. Mrs. Toke's early hymns were written in 1851, "at the request of a friend who was collecting for the Committee of the S. P. C. K." (Miller, p. 578), and they appeared in the S. P. C. K. Hymns for Pub. Worship, 1852, as follows:—

1. Glory to Thee, O Lord (see p. 429, ii.).
2. Lord, of Thy mercy, hear our cry. National Thanksgiving.
4. O Lord, Thou knowest all the snares. Lent.
5. O Thou, to Whose all seeing eye. Annunciation.
7. Thou art gone up on high. Ascension.

The most popular of these hymns are, "Glory to Thee, O Lord," "O Lord, Thou knowest all the snares"; and "Thou art gone up on high." These hymns as a whole are simple and pleasing. They seldom rise into passionate fervour, and are weakened in several instances by faulty construction. They have been widely adopted in G. Britain and America. Another series of hymns by Mrs. Toke was contributed to the Sunday School Literary... and Hymn Book, arranged by the Rev. J. Judah, B.A., Incumbent of St. Mary's, Halifox. Halifax. F. King, 1870. These hymns have failed to attract attention, although in literary merit they fall short little of her earlier efforts. They are:—

9. Lord God, the strength and stay of all. General.
10. Lord of all power and might. General.
15. O God, the strength and stay of all. General.
16. O God, upon this solemn day. St. Matthias.
17. O Thou, Who didst through heavens, &c. Purification B. V. M.
18. The joyfull day at last is come. Easter.
19. This is the day when Jesus Christ. Christmas.
20. Upon this sad and solemn day. G. Friday.
21. We bleue Thee, Lord, for that clear light. Conversion St. Paul.

In addition to these hymns Mrs. Toke rewrote and expanded some of her earlier compositions. In their new form, however, they are almost unknown. [J. J.]

Tov ἁμαρτίαν μοι τὴν παρθένον. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [Lent.] This is the opening line of a cento taken from a long Canon for the Monday of the First Tone in the Parascevice. It is virtually, as compiled by Dr. Neale, a new poem, representing neither the form nor the idea of the original. Dr. Neale's tr., beginning, "And wilt Thou pardon, Lord?" was pub. in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 5 st. of 4 l. In a slightly altered form as, "O wilt Thou pardon, Lord?" it was also given in the Parish H. Bk., 1863, and repeated subsequently in various collections. The Hymnary text opens, "And wilt Thou hear, O Lord?" The original dates from the middle of the ninth cent. [J. J.]

Τὸν ἐν προφηταὶς. St. Andrew of Crete. [St. John Baptist.] Three Hymnals from the Vespera of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, by St. Andrew of Crete (q. v.). The poems are in the form of an address to St. John, each of them closing with an appeal. It is found in the Menæa. The tr., "The first of all Apostles," by Dr. Littledale, was made for and 1st pub. in the People's Hymnal, 1867, signed "L," and appointed for the Festival of St. John Baptist. St. i.-v. represent the 1st idiomel, st. 6 the 2nd, and verses 7, 8 the 3rd. The doxology added by the translator. [H. L. B.]

Τὸν ἰέρων ἄθλοφόρον. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [ Martyrs.] The original from which this cento is taken is the Canon (see Greek Hymnody) for the Deacon St. Timothy and his wife St. Maura, whose martyrdom is commemorated by the Church of Constantinople on May 3. The Office for that day is included in the service-books of the Greek Church. The tr. of this cento was made by J. M. Neale, and first pub. in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 4 st. of 8 l., and beginning, "Let our Choir new anthems raise." As a hymn for congregational use it was included in the People's H., 1867, the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., and many others, and usually with the omission of st. iii., and sometimes altered, as, "Let the Church new anthems raise," and "Let the Church new anthems sing." The martyrdom of St. Timothy and Maura has been popularized for the English reader by Canon Kingsley, in his poem "St. Maura," and Dr. Neale's tr. of the cento from the Canon ranks with the most popular and widely used of the trs. from the Greek. Stanzas i., ii. represent Ode i.; the remaining stanzas give rather the spirit than the letter of the original. [J. J.]

Τὸν πρὸ χλιον χλιων δύσαντα ποτέ ἐν τάφῳ. [Easter.] This is an Odeos, or short hymn, in honour of the holy women who brought spices to anoint the body of Jesus, and follows in the Greek Office for Easter Day, a κοστομία (another short hymn), by St. Romanus (q. v.), to whom, possibly because of this close association, it is sometimes ascribed. It dates probably about 500, and is found inserted between Odes vi. and vii. of the Golden Canon of St. John of Damascus in the Pentecostarion. The original text, together with a blank verse tr., are given in Dr. Littlehale's Offices, &c., of the Holy Eastern Church, 1863, p. 92 and p. 216, and the same tr. rendered into 8. 7s. measure by W. Chaterton Dix, in Lyra Mechanica, 1864, p. 292. The two translations begin:—

Seeking as those who seek the day. R. F. Littlehale.
As those who seek the break of day. W. C. Dix.

[T. J.]

Tonns, Charlotte Elizabeth, née Browne, commonly known as "Charlotte Browne," was the only daughter of Michael Browne, Rector of St. Giles, Norwich, and was b. in Norwich, Oct. 1, 1790. She was first married to Captain George Thedin, of the 60th Rifles (who d. in 1837), and secondly to the Rev. Lewis H. Tonns. Her death took place at Ramsgate, July 12, 1846. Under the name of "Charlotte Elizabeth" she pub. several works, including Chapters on Flowers, Derby, a Tale of the Revolution, Personal Recollections, &c. Her hymns in C. U. include:—

1. Holy Father, heavenly King (1832). God Man's only refuge.
2. O God of Israel, deign to smile. For Resignation.
3. 0 Thou Who didst prepare. For Use at Sea.
4. Sinner, what hast thou to show Christians' Joy.
5. Soldier go, but not to claim. The Good Fight of Faith.

TOPLADY, AUGUSTUS M.

a song of grace that has given him a deeper and more inward place in millions of human hearts, from generation to generation than almost any other hymnologist of our country, not excepting Charles Wesley. Besides the "Rock of Ages" must be named, for power, intensity, and higher afflatus and nicer workmanship, "Object of my first desire," and "Deathless principle arise." It is to be regretted that the latter has not been more widely accepted. It is strong, firm, stirring, and masterful. Regarded critically, it must be stated that the affectionateness with which Toplady is named, and the glow and passion of his faith and life, and yearning after holiness, have led to an over-exaltation of him as a hymn-writer. Many of his hymns have been widely used, and especially in America, and in the Evangelical hymn-books of the Church of England. Year by year, however, the number in use is becoming less. The reason is soon found. He is no poet or inspired singer. He climbs no heights. He sounds no depths. He has nowhere vanished gleams of imaginative light. His greatness is the greatness of goodness. He is a fervent preacher, not a bard.

[A. B. G.]

Toplady's hymns and poetical pieces were published in his:—

(4) In Hymns and Sacred Poems on a variety of Divine Subjects, &c. D. Seligwick's reprint, 1868.
His Works, with a Memoir by W. Row, were pub. in 5 vols. in 1738.
Walter Row was also the editor of the 2nd and some later editions of the Ps. and Hymns. He was a most careless editor, and attributed several hymns by C. Wesley and others to Toplady.

A large number of Toplady's hymns are annotated in this Dictionary under their respective first lines. (See Index of Authors and Translators.) The following additional hymns in C. U., together with cantos indicated in the sub-lines, are from:—

1. His Poems on Sacred Subjects, 1759.
   2. Come from on high, my King and God. Holiness desired.
      (1.) O might this worthless heart of mine.
      (3.) From Thy supreme tribunal, Lord. Christ's Righteousness was a Refuge.
      (1.) The spoilt Saviour lived for me.
      (2.) Great God, Whom heaven, and earth, and sea.
      (3.) Saw, and le: a countless throng. Saints' Days.
      Revised Form in the Gospel Magazine, 1774, p. 449.
   3. Immeasurable our hope remains. Divine Pathfulness.
   5. "Prayer can mercy's door unlock."
   6. Jesus, Thy power I faint would feel. Lent.
   8. My yielding heart dissolves as wax. On behalf of Jesus.
      (1.) O Jesus, manifest Thy grace.
      (2.) Not to myself I owe. Praise for Omission.
      (3.) Not to ourselves we owe.
      (4.) The Father's grace is mine.
      (5.) If my heart was right with Thee. Dedication
   9. O Thou Who art nearest the prayer of faith. Christ's
   10. That is the prayer that beateth down Christ's
   11. O Thou Who didst Thy glory leave. Thanksgiving
   12. O when wilt Thou my Saviour be. Trust in Jesus.
      (1.) Jesus, the sinners' Rest Thou art.

   Revised text in Gospel Magazine, 1774, p. 945.
   (1.) Weary sinner, keep thine eyes.
   (2.) Weeping soul, no longer mourn.
   ii. From the Gospel Magazine.
   14. Compared with Corset, in all besides. Christ All in All. Feb. 1772.
   15. Eternal Hallelujah Be to the Father given. Holy Trinity, Dec. 1774.
   16. From whence this fear and unbelief. Reviving 1774. From this "Not for the works which we have done" is taken.
   18. Whom have I in heaven but Thee? Christ All reveal" is taken.

   19. Jesus, immutably the same. Jesus, the True
      Vine. June, 1771.

All these hymns, together with "O precious blood, O glorious death" (Death of Christ), are in D. Seligwick's reprint of Toplady's Hymns, &c., 1860. We have met with several other hymns to which Toplady's name is appended, but for this we can find no authority whatever.

Toss'd with rough winds, and faint with fear. Elizabeth Charles, née Rundle. [Consortation in Affliction.] Appeared in her Three Wakings, &c., 1855, p. 190. It was given in an abbreviated form of st. of 3. I., and the refrain, "Tis I, be not afraid," in the Hy. Comp., 1870, and again in other collections. The slight change in the text of st. iii. was made by Mrs. Charles.

Tourneaux, Nicolas le, was born of poor parents at Rouen, April 30, 1640. The uncommon ability he displayed at an early age attracted the notice of M. du Fossé, Maître des Comptes at Rouen, who sent him to the Jesuits' college at Paris, where he made remarkable progress in his studies. He then retired to Touraine, where he passed some time with a pious ecclesiastic in the practice of prayer and penitential exercises. His friend, observing that he had a gift for preaching, advised him to return to Rouen. This he did, and adopted the clerical profession, and was in 1662 admitted to priests' orders by special dispensation, though still under canonical age. He subsequently removed to Paris, where he employed his time in study, and in 1675 obtained the prize given by the French Academy for prose composition. He was appointed to a canony in the Sainte-Chapelle, and later became prior of Villers sur Fere in the diocese of Soissons, and d. suddenly on the 28th Nov., 1686. He was the author of several theological and religious works, and wrote some hymns [see Index of Authors and Translators], which were inserted in the Clunise Breuiary of 1680, and the Paris Breuiary of 1698. In the Clunise Breui. 1686, his signature is "N.T.P."

Tract. Veres of Holy Scripture, originally always of the Psalms, sung after the Gradual instead of the Alleluia, in all masses, from Septuagesima till Easter Eve in the Roman liturgy. The Tract was so called either because it was sung "tractum" by the cantor or cantors, without the interruption of other voices, or because, according to Durandus, it was sung in a slow, sad voice. In some of the later English Missals the Tract assumed a metrical form, as e.g. the following:—

"Duce nomem Jesu Christi,
Felix omne ferox triarius
Jucundus mentem jubilo;
Tolit inunctum, affect fractum,
Ed absolvent sanctum
Purgat cor a nudio,
Tam peccatum quam reatum
Consequentia, expurgatum.
Reddite minet, lenient
Hostes fert, mores serit,
Mala serit, gravis serit,
Pianum est presidium:
Nos defendit, nos ascendit,
Nos intendit, et extendit
Hic nomen in gaudium.
Nominatim, invocatim,
Honoratim, praedicatim Semper sonat dulcis.

This Tract in the Missae of the Name of Jesus is found in three ms. Missals now in the Bodleian, viz., a Sumr (Barlow 5), a York (Univ. Coll.), and a Hereford (Univ. Coll.) each dating about the end of the 14th cent. [F. E. W.]

Tregelles, Samuel Prideaux, LL.D., &c., of a Quaker, was b. at Wodehouse Place, Falmouth, Cornwall, Jan. 20 (sometimes dated Jan. 30), 1813, and educated at the Falmouth Grammar School. From 1838 to 1844, he was employed in the Neath Abbey Iron Works. In 1866 he became a private tutor in Falmouth. His deep interest in biblical studies developed in an earnest desire to produce the most perfect edition of the Greek Testament it was possible to publish. The first specimens of his work were pub. in 1838, and the first instalments of his task for public use, in 1844. His Greek Testament thus begun was pub. in parts, Pt. vi. appearing in 1872. The work was hindered by his two attacks of paralysis (1861 and 1870); and the Prolegomena had to be added by Dr. Hort and A. W. Strane in 1879. Dr. Tregelles received a Civil List Pension for some years. He was one of the Revisers of the New Testament, but ill-health prevented him from taking an active part in the work. He d. at Plymouth April 24, 1875. His hymn-writing began, so far as we can gather, before 1837, and extended to 1861 or later. The earliest were pub. in the Plymouth Brethren's Hymns for the Poor of the Flock, 1838; their Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, 1842; and their Few Hymns and some Spiritual Songs, selected, 1856. Some also were contributed to Dr. P. Maurice's Ch. of England Choral Hymn-Book, 1861, in which they are marked as having been supplied in "ms." Some of those so marked were, however, in print before. His hymns now in C. U. include the following: the date of each as given being that of the collection named in which it appeared:—

1. Father, we Thy children bless Thee. Thanksgiving for Divine Mercies; and the Second Advent (1838). In the Few Hymns of 1856, st. iv., v. were given as No. 310, "Father, O how vast the blessing."

2. Holy Saviour, we adore Thee. The Second Advent desired (1838).

3. Lord Jesus, we believing. Peace in Jesus (1861).

6. The gloomy night will [shall] soon be past. Heaven anticipated (1842).

7. Thou God of grace, our Father. Praise for Election Grace (1839).

8. Thou, Lord of all, on high (1841).

9. Thou, O God, Thy be Jesus (1841).

10. Thy Name alone, O Strength and Safety (1841).

11. Thy Name we be Name over all (1865).

TRENCH, RICHARD C.

EI lid as to his calling, Law rather than Divinity colouring his thoughts and plans. He left Cambridge on February 1st, 1829, and rejoined his widowed father at Elton Lodge, near Newark, and in 1832 he married Emma, daughter of the Rev. John Bate, of the Church, Bath, on May 31st, 1832, his own cousin, Frances Mary Trench, daughter of his uncle, Francis Trench (2nd son of Frederick Trench, of Woodlawn, co. Galway, Ireland, and next brother to the 1st Lord Ashtown). On October 7th, 1832, he received Deacon's Ord-} ication in the Church of England, and enthroned in the lands of the aged Bishop Barthurt of Norwich. His first curacy was at Hasting, Norfolk, with H. J. Rose. He was ordained priest early in July, 1833, by Bishop Sumner, of Winchester. He pub. in 1835 The Story of Justin Martyr, and other Poems (Moxon.) This was (practically) his first book. In 1838 followed Sal-} utation, Honor Neale, and other Poems, with Notes. In 1840 he published his first prose work, Notes on the Parables of our Lord, subsequently companioned with Notes on the Miracles of our Lord (1845). In 1841 “the loving discipline of pain” visited his heart and heath by the death of his eldest born, a steep sorrow his wife gave his subtlest and finest ins-} piration to his Elegiac Poems. A third volume of poetry, Poems from Eastern Sources, the Steadfast Prince, and other Poems, was pub. early in 1842: and a fourth, Genewen, later in the same year. Early in 1843 he delivered his Five Sermons before the University of Cambridge, and a Study of Words. In 1846 he was appointed Professor of Divinity at King's College, London, later changed into “Professor of the Exegesis of the New Testament,” which he held u. til 1858. The friendship between Trench and Maurice here was very beautiful. In 1846 also came the Hulsean Lectures, their subject being Christ “the Desire of all Nations.” In 1849 appeared his Sacred Latin Poetry. This is an inestimable book. In 1852, Lessons on Psalms and Study of Words, and in 1855 English Past and Present appeared. His Synonym of the New Testament (1854) was a permanent contribution and inspiration to Philology and Theology. Life's Dream: a Great Text from the Spanish of Calderon, with an Essay on his Life and Genius, was pub. in 1856; 2nd ed. in 1860. The Crimean war drew him from his first verse, Poems written during the Russian War (1854-55). In 1856 he was appointed Dean of Westminster. In 1861 was pub. his Commentary on the Epistles to the Seven Churches in Asia. On New Year's Day, 1864, he was consecrated Archbishop of Dublin in Christ Church Cathedral. He instantly took a foremost place in the regard of the entire community. His pub. Sermons, including his Studies on the Gospels (1867), are amongst the most thoughtful and quietly eloquent in our language; as are his Lectures on Plutarch (1875), and others. Timothee (1881) was his last poem. His final confirmation was in St. Bartholomew's Church on May 16th, 1884. On November 26th, 1884, he resigned his Archbish. He d. in London, March 28, 1886. Few have left behind them a more stainless, a more lovely legacy to the memory. He was sweetness and light embodied.

In the strict sense of the word Archbishop Trench, although a poet, was not a hymn-} writer. Some of his practical pieces are used as hymns, but their use is limited. These include:-

Tresstrail, Elizabeth Ryland, née Dent, was b. at Milton, near Northampton, March 24, 1813, and is great-granddaughter of the Rev. John Collet Ryland, a.m., grand-} niece of the Rev. John Ryland, d.d. (v. Ryiland, John), and sister of Miss Caroline Dent (p. 446, i.) Her first husband was John Roby, banker, of Redehale. In 1858 she was married to the Rev. F. Tresstrail, d.d., an eminent minister of the Baptist Denomination. Mrs. Tresstrail contrived a few pieces to the Thoughts and Sketches in Verse, pub. by her cort. She also wrote the Sketch of the Life & Character of John Roby, prefixed to his Legendary & Poetical Remains (Longmans, 1864). She was also joint author of her sister of a small vol. of consolatory verses printed for private circulation, and entitled Our Darling (1861). Only one of Mrs. Tresstrail's hymns is in C. L. — Hasteljlah! Praise the Lord! (Pratse). It was written in 1864, in celebration of the Jubilee of the Baptist mission in Jamaica, and is No. 5 in the Baptist Hymn Book for School and Home, 1892.

Tritton, Joseph, was b. at Battersea, Surrey, Sept. 21, 1819, educated at Charterhouse and other schools, and was for upwards of 40 years a partner in the banking-house of Barclay, Bevan, Tritton & Co., Lombard Street. He was a member of the Baptist Denomination, and for many years Treasurer of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, and of a number of other important philanthropic and religious institutions. During the latter part of life his residence was Bloomefield, Norwood. He d. May 1, 1887. Mr. Tritton was for many years an occasional writer of hymns and poems. Two of the hymns sung at the opening of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in 1881, were composed by him for that occasion, and afterwards incorporated by Mr. Spurgeon in O. O. H. Bk., 1886. These are:

1. Sing to the Lord with heart and voice. Opening of a Place of Worship.
2. Spirit of glory and of grace. Opening of a Place of Worship.

A third hymn in the same book,
3. Behold He comes! the glorious King (Second Advent), was composed in 1856. In the 1880 Supplement to the Bap. Ps. and Hys. are two hymns prepared for use at meetings of the Baptist Missionary Society in 1880. These are:
4. Head of the Church and Lord of all. Missions.
5. Lord God of our salvation. Missions.

Other hymns of merit by Mr. Tritton have appeared from time to time in The Missionary Herald.

Troparia. [Τροπαρια.] [Greek Hymnody, § xvi. 10.]

Troparium. The Tropary was a medieval service-book, of which specimens exist from the 9th century onwards. It contained the Troparia or fables prefixed to or inserted into the Introit, Kyrie, and other choral parts of the service. It also contained the Sequences or Prosse ad Sequentiam, an extension of the last syllable of the Alleluia preceding the Gospel. These non-scriptural and complicated additions to the Ordinary and Canon of the Mass mostly fell out of use in the thirteenth century. Those which survived became incorporated in the Gradual or Missal. But the word Troparium still appears from the 13-16th century, with an altered meaning, as a book merely containing the Sequences. A 15th cent. ms. Troparium in the Bodleian Library (Rawl.
1882, it begins "O Christ, Thou art our joy alone."

2. O Christ, our joy, gone up on high. D. T. Morgau, in H. A. & M., 1873, and his Hymn, and Other Poetry of the Latin Church, 1880.

Other trs. are:

2. O Christ, the Source of our delight. J. C. Earle, in O. Shippee's Annales Anglican., 1854. [J. J.]

Tu qui velatus facie. [Passiontide.]

Mone, Nos. 87-91, gives this from a 14th-cent. Reichenau ms. where it bears the title "Hours of St. John the Baptist, compiled from the Prophe'ta and the New Testament by the blessed Pope Urban." [The pope meant may possibly be Urban the 4th, pope 1261-1264; more probably Urban the 5th, b. 1302, d. 1370.] It is in five parts, viz.: i. "Tu qui velatus facie," for Prime; ii. "Hora qui ductus tertiarii," for Terce; iii. "Crucem pro nobis subit," for Sext; iv. "Beata Christi passio," for None; v. "Qui jacuisti mortuus," for Compline. Mone's text is repeated by Daniel iv. p. 220, who adds that an office with this hymn was in use in Halberstadt till the beginning of this century. [W. A. S.]

The trs. of this hymn into English, and as divided for divine service, are:

1. Tu qui velatus facie. Prime.

2. Sun of Righteousness, blest face. By F. Oakley, in his Devotions Commemorative of the Most Adorable Passion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 1842.

3. Tu qui velatus facie. Terce.
   1. Thou Who at this third hour of dread. By J. D. Chambers, as above, p. 165, with the opening line given as "Tu qui lac horae tertia.
   2. Thou Who at the third hour wast led. By Mrs. E. Charles, as above, p. 177.
   3. Who to die, along the road. By F. Oakley, as above.

3. Suffering Christ, we pray to Thee. By F. Oakley, as above.
   1. Quia jacuisti mortuus. Compline.
   1. Thou sinius King, Who stalk and dead. By J. D. Chambers, as above, p. 178.
   2. O Thou Who layest dead, the King. By Mrs. E. Charles, as above, p. 178.
   3. Who in the grave. By F. Oakley, as above. Of these trs., these by Mrs. Charles are in Turgin's 'Colloq.,' 1882; and those by Canon F. Oakley, in Skinner's 'Daily Service Hym.' 1884. [J. J.]

The Compline hymn "Qui jacuisti mortuus" has also been rendered into English through the German as follows:

Der du Herr Jesu, Ruh und Rast. Included in the Königsegg G. R., 1650 (preface 1643), p. 197, in 3 st., marked as by Georg Weer, is also in Crüger's 'Praxis,' 1648, No. 125, the 'Lett. d. M.,' 1651, No. 32, &c. The trs. in C. U. are:

Tu Trinitatis Unitas. St. Gregory the Great. [Friday, Morning.] (St. li. is "Juan [Nam] lectoris censure, cumus."") Mone, No. 279, and i. p. 372, gives this as probably by St. Gregory (it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors), and cites it as in a ms. of the 8th cent. at Trier, one of the 9th cent., also at Trier, &c. By Hinemar in his De und et non trinit Delate, 857, it is ascribed to St. Ambrose; but it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors nor by Breitinger in Ein Maiereri e Carmen de Senti Ambrogi, 1682. Daniel gives the text at i. No. 25, and at iv. 38 cites it as in a Rheinman ms. of the 10th cent. ranking it as one of the hymns of the 7th or 8th cent. Among the British Museum's ms. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. XIII. 22; Jul. A. vi. f. 28 b; Horl. 2961 f. 221 ; in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Hymnarium *Add. 3085 f. 174 b, an 11th cent. Mozarabic Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 78 b), &c. It is in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 226); in two ms. of the 11th cent., at St. Gall, Nos. 257, 414, and in the Latin Hymns of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Sarre Ross Society) 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 8 b). It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and the revision of 1629), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, and other Breviaries, as a hymn on Friday at Matins and Nocturns. The text is also in Wurtembergi No. 32, Hymnarium Saris., 1851, p. 54; in Card. Newman's 'Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1858 and 1868; and G. M. Dreyer's 'Hymnaria Missarum,' 1888, from a 10th cent. ms. See also note on following hymn. [J. M.]

Tu Trinitatis Unitas. [Trinity Sunday.]

This cento was added to the Roman Breviary at the revision of 1568, and is found at p. 436 of the ed. pub. at Rome in 1550, as the hymn at Lauds on Trinity Sunday. It consists of st. i. of the hymn noted above, and of st. ii. of the hymn "Aeternus coeli gloria" ("Ortus refugit lucere"); with an added doxology. This form is repeated in the 1628 and later eds. of the Roman Breviary, and in Carol. 4 G 2
Newman's Hymns Ecclesiastic, 1888 and 1889.

1. Thou great mysteries Three and One. Primer 1748.

Tuba Domini, Paule, maxima. Peter Abelard. [Conversion of St. Paul.] Cousin in his ed. of Abelard's Opera, Paris, 1849, vol. 1, p. 320, gives this from a ms. in the Royal Library at Brussels. This ms. is of the 12th cent. and is probably the collection of hymns which Abelard prepared for the use of the Abbey of the Paraclete, of which Heloise was abbess. The text is given with full notes in Trench, ed. 1864, p. 207. Also in Neal's Sequel, 1852, p. 98, Daniel p. 224, and K. Meriv No. 305. It is tr. as "Mightiest of our militant Lord," in the Monthly Packet, 1829. The tr. which in some copies of the Hy. Noted is marked as from this hymn, is really from the "Paule doctor egregiae"; p. 877, i.

Turner, Daniel, M.A., was b. at Blackburne Park, near St. Albans, March 1, 1710. Having received a good classical education, he for some years kept a boarding-school at Hemel Hempstead, but in 1741 he became pastor of the Baptist church, Reading. Thence he removed, in 1748, to Abington, and continued pastor of the Baptist church there until his death on Sept. 3, 1738. He was much respected throughout his denomination, and was the friend and correspondent of Robert Robinson, Dr. Rippon, and other eminent men of that day. He probably received the honorary degree of M.A. from the Baptist College, Providence, Rhode Island. Turner was the author of works on Open Communion and Social Religion; also of Short Meditations on Select Portions of Scripture, Divine Songs, Hymns and other poems were pub. in 1747, and his work, Poems Devotional and Moral, was printed for private circulation in 1794. Four of his hymns are in the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans (1769), and eight (including the four already named), in Rippon's Bap. Sel. 1787. Only the following are now in C. U.:

2. Jesus, full of all compassion (1749). Sinner's appeal to Christ.
4. Altered in Baptist Ps. and Hymns, 1818, as "Lord of hosts, how bright, how fair!"

The well-known hymn "Beyond the glittering starry skies," in its enlarged form of 28 stanzas, was the joint production of Turner and his brother-in-law, the Rev. J. Faucl, for details of which see p. 139, ii. [W. R. S.]

hymns are annotated under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators), the most popular of which are, "Father, let me dedicate": "Go forward, Christian soldier"; and "O quickly come, dearest Judge of all."

Mr. Tuttle's hymns are characterised by smoothness of rhythm, directness of aim, and simplicity of language, and deep earnestness. Those for special services and seasons are of great merit.

"Twas on that night when doomed to know. John Morison. [Holy Communion."

First appeared as No. 35 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, in 6 st. of 4 l., as a version of Matt. xxvi. 26-29. Here st. iv. ii. 1, 2, read:—

"Then taking in his hands the cup,
To Hear' n again he thanks sent up."

The rewriting of these lines was the only change made in the public worship ed. issued in that year to the Church of Scotland, and still in use. The hymn bears a close resemblance to a Latin hymn, beginning "Nunc quippe Chriarterum," in the Roman Porters' Prayers, p. 405, Parker Society, 1851, quoted in full in the notes to the larger ed. of the Free Church H. Bk., 1882, by Andrew Ellinger, who was b. 1526 at Orlaundi, on the Saale, a little above Jena, and d. March 12, 1592, at Jena, where he had become Professor of Medicine in 1560. Mr. William Benar, of London, considered it a tr. from Ellinger by William Archibald (ordained parish minister of Unst, Shetland, in 1735, d. there March 7, 1785), and that Archibald's text was altered by Morison for the Translations and Paraphrases. In th: markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 300, i.), it is ascribed to Morison. It is very generally used in Scotland as a Communion hymn. Included in Burgess & Money's Ps. & Hys., 1857; Common Praise, 1879; Church Praise, 1888, and other collections; and in full and unaltered, as No. 35 in the Free Church H. Bk., 1882. Its resemblance to Watts's "Twixt day and dark and doleful night," in his Hymns, 1709, Bk. iii., No. 1, often referred to, is but slight.

"Twas silence in Thy temple, Lord. J. Keble. [Ordination.]

Dated March 28, 1828, and pub. in the 4th ed. of his Christian Year, 1828, in 13 st. of 4 l. The following centres therefrom are in C. U.:—

2. Spirit of Christ, be earthen vessel (st. viii.). In the Comp. Church Hymnal, 1887.
3. Spirit of Light and Truth, to Thee (st. x.). In the Ps. & Hys., 1854; the New Comp. H. Bk., 1869, and others.

It is somewhat curious to note that whilst this poem has been thus made use of by Nonconformists, the Church of England, upon whose Office for Ordination it is based, has utterly ignored it in her hymnody for public worship.

"Twells, Henry, M.A., was b. in 1823, and educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, B.A. 1848, M.A. 1851. Taking Holy Orders in 1849, he was successively Curate of Great Berkhamsted, 1849-51; Sub-Visitor of Stratford-on-Avon, 1851-54; Master of St. Andrew's House School, Melk, Somerset, 1854-56; and Head Master of Godolphin School, Hammondsmit, 1856-70. In 1870 he was preferred to the Rectory of Baldock, Hertis, and in 1871 to that of Wallham-on-the-Wolds. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1873-74, and became an Honorary Canon of Peterborough Cathedral in 1884. Canon Twells is best known by his beautiful evening hymn, "At even ere the sun was set" (p. 88, ii.). He also contributed the following hymns to the 1889 Suppl. Hys. to H. A. & M.:—

1. Glorious is Thy Name, O Lord. The Name of God.
2. Know ye the Lord hath borne away! Ascension.

"Two brothers freely cast their lot. Card. Newman. [SS. James and John.]

Written at sea, June 22, 1833, and printed anonymously in the British Magazine, 1835, vol. vii. p. 661, in 4 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in Ezra Apostolica, 1836, p. 31, and again in Card. Newman's Verses on Various Occasions, 1844. Usually in modern collections it is appropriated to St. James, and a doxology is usually added, as in the Wellington College H. Bk., 1836, or as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymnus, 1871.

"Two clouds before the summer gale. J. Keble. [St. Luke. Written April 6, 1822, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 20 st. of 4 l. It is also given in all subsequent editions of the same work. In 1844 a revised form of this poem, consisting of st. ix.-xii. xix. and xx. were given with slight alterations, in Hys. for the Christian Seasons, pub. at Gainsbur-gh, No. 143, as, "Behold and see Christ's chosen saint." This cento is also given in the same form in Chope's Hymnal, 1862.

"Tyers, John, b. at Wynestow, in Leicestershire, Oct. 14, 1748. For a number of years in the earlier part of his life he lived at Loughborough, where he was in business as a lace manufacturer. In 1805 he removed to Leicester, where he d. Sept. 11, 1848. Mr. Tyers was a General Baptist, widely known and much respected, and though never the pastor of a church, was often engaged in preaching. Seven of his hymns are in the 1830 Appendix to the General Baptist Hymn-book, and two as below in the Baptist Hymnal, 1879:—

2. Great God, avow this house Thine own. (opening a Place of Worship.

Besides these Mr. Tyers wrote a number of hymns for Sunday Schools, which appeared in the school hymn-books of his day, but are no longer in use. He was also the author of Tymms, Thomas Vincent, was b. in Westminster, Jan. 5, 1822. After being educated for the Baptist ministry in Regent's Park College, London, he became, in 1851, pastor at Berkswell-upon-Tweed, Thirls, in 1852, he removed to Accrington, and in 1857 to London, where he now ministers in an influential congregation in the Bow Church, Clapton. In 1855 Mr. Tymms published an altered and adapted The Mystery of God; a compendium of some intellectual conclusions to Psalms 2nd ed. 1889; a 3rd ed. 1887. Mr. Tymms has written several hymns, which have been printed in the 1885 Supplement to the Bap. Psalms and Hymns, and in the Bap. Ps. and Hymns for School and Home, 1882:—

1. Another salutary theme: 1841 Sunday Evening.
2. In answer, where These are was altered 1851. Prayers in the Lord's Supper.

Of these hymns, No. 4, originally in 7 st. of 4 l. was altered and abridged to 5 st. in the Bap. Ps. and Hymns for School and Home. The original st. viii. are:—

1. But I have wanted for 4. Now no longer with some nearer take from Thy waiting for a more

UNITARIAN HYMNODY

Hym. for Pub. Worship, Boston, 1845, in 4 st. of 4 1. It was repeated in Hedge & Hunt- ington's Hym. for the Church of Christ, 1853, and later American editions; and in Mat- theus' Hymnus, &c. 1873. In Stapfort A. Brooke's Christian Hymns, 1881, No. 177, it is slightly altered, and another stanza (iv.) is added. This text is repeated in Horder's Cong. Hym., 1884, No. 438.

UNITARIAN HYMNODY.—For the right understanding of English Unitarian Hymnody a few words of historical introduction are needed.

1. The English Presbyterians, after close fellowship with the Independents during the early decades of last century, gradually moved into a system of parties through the force of circumstances they had become as much congregational in their system of church government as their neighbours, but after the Salters' Hall controversy of 1719 they were more and more confirmed in the principle of non-subscription to any formalized statement of belief, the Bible only being their standard of authority in matters of doctrine. The consequence was that while the Independents at the close of the century occupied much the same doctrinal position as at the beginning, the Presbyterians had passed through various changes. Their original Calvinism had been abandoned for a form of Arminian doctrine, and then, through the influence of such men as Locke and Dr. Samuel Clarke (their teachers, though not of their fellowship), they gradually adopted the scheme of Arianism. This was held in various degrees of precision, until it passed into Unitarianism, as in the person of Dr. Priestley and those who thought with him, towards the close of the century. A similar change had taken place in a portion of the General Baptist churches, especially in the south of England, and these two groups of non-subscribing congregations were naturally drawn together by their common sympathies.

Then there was the congregation of Unitarians organized in Essex Street Chapel, London, by Theophilus Lindsey on his leaving the Church of England, as early as 1774; and to these have been added during the present century other congregations, either through doctrinal development (as with certain Methodist Societies under Joseph Coke, early in the century, or later through the influence of Joseph Priestley), or through the missionary effort on the part of established societies of Unitarians. (Cf. Rev. J. J. Taylor's Retrospec of the Religious Life of England, chap. 3 and 5, and Rev. Brooke Herford's Story of Religion in England, chap. 30, 32 and 33.)

In Wales and Ireland there are also similar groups of non-subscribing churches, in which Unitarianism is now the prevailing doctrine. Taken together, all these are popularly known as the Unitarian body of this country, but it is a body which has not always been Unitarian, and is in fact a group of Free Churches, which hold to the fundamental principle of the liberty of prophesying, and impose no restraint of form or discipline on theological development. It is of the hymn-books and hymn-writers of this group of churches, various in their origin, but united in their broad principles, that the present article is to speak. [See also references to special articles on p. 1, 1191.]

2. The marked individualism which from early times has characterized the members of these churches appears also in their hymn-books. From the time when the various departures from the use of Dr. Watts began, about the middle of the last century, to our own day, there has been a long succession of books, often two or three appearing in a single year; and although occasionally a book has made its way into very general use, there has never been any one recognised hymnal of the whole body of churches. The Psalms and Hymns of Dr. Watts were as popular for some time with the Presbyterians as with the Independents. The Psalms, through appearance, quickly superseded the books previously used, and in many congregations remained in use even to the close of last century, when various other books had already been provided. These others had their origin at first in the needs of special congregations. As the doctrinal movement into Arminianism became more decided, and as Watts himself did not live to make that revision of his work, which his own reported change of opinions would have required, ministers of Presbyterian congregations in various parts of the country took in hand to supply the want. They either made a selection from Watts, with the necessary alterations, or compiled a supplement to the Psalms from his hymns and other sources, or made an entirely new collection, in which, while Watts remained predominant, his psalms and hymns were mingled with those of other writers. This last was the course most frequently adopted.

3. Thus in 1757 there appeared

A Collection of Psalms and Hymns for Divine Worship, London; Printed and sold by J. Noon, at the White Hart, in Cheapside, near the Poultry; James Waugh, at the Turk's Head, Lombard Street; and Lewis Burd, at Exeter. This was a collection of 218 psalms and hymns, the authors in addition to Watts being Addison, Tate & Brady, Browne & Doddridge. It is said to have been edited by Rev. Micah Tomgood, Arian Minister of James' Meeting, Exeter, and was certainly used by his congregation. A second edition, enlarged to 365 psalms and hymns, was printed in 1779, by W. Grigg, at Exeter. In the year following the first appearance of this book, it was reprinted with alterations and additions for the Presbyterian congregation of Lewin's Mead, Bristol.

In 1760 the Rev. Michael Pope, minister of the Leather Lane Meeting, in London, followed the same example, though in more independent fashion. His book is entitled Psalms and Hymns for Divine Worship. London: Printed for J. Waugh, at Lombard Street; J. Ward, in Cordhill; J. Buckland, at the Turk; T. Longman, at the Ship; W. Penner, at the Angel and Bible, in Paternoster Row; and R. Dilly, in the Poultry, 1760, and is known as Pope's Old. It is divided into two parts, 1st. 273 psalms, of which 176 are by Watts, 28 by Tate & Brady, others by Patrick, Addison, Doddridge, Hymnman, &c. 2nd. 263 hymns, nearly half being by Watts, other authors being Doddridge, Addison, A. Pope, Browne, Grove, Appley, Flesman, and Ansona. (For. This collection was the first in which the hymns of the four last authors (all Presbyterian ministers) appeared. The alterations and omissions from the psalms and hymns of Watts and others, due to the editor's Arianism, or to his poetical taste, are considerable.

A similar, though smaller collection, appeared in Liverpool in 1764, edited by Revs. John Breckell and W. Enfield, ministers of the Key Street and Bell's Garden chapels respectively:

A New Collection of Psalms proper for Christian Worship, in Three Parts. I. Psalms of David, &c. II. Psalms of Praise to God. III. Psalms on Various Subjects. Liverpool. Printed in the Year 1764. There are 242 psalms, more than half by Watts, and in addition to names mentioned above, Gibbons, Carter, Rowe, Cotton, Ogilvie, Heginbotham, and Steele, are represented. There were later editions in 1767 and 1779; in 1771 a new edition was printed (for J. Gore), with 60 psalms added to the third part, including some by Mrs. Barisand and T. Scott. This edition, entitled merely A Collection of Psalms, &c., was reprinted in 1786 and 1806. A few years after it was superseded by new collections separately for each of the two congregations.

4. Different in character from the above collections was Dr. Enfield's second book:

Hymns for Public Worship, selected from Various Authors, and intended as a Supplement to Dr. Watts's Psalms. Warrington. Printed for the Editor, 1772. Later editions 1781 and 1789. Its character is indicated by the title. There are 160 hymns, more than a third being selected from Watts's hymns, while after Doddridge, Mrs. Barisand and Thomas Scott hold the chief place. Some of their hymns appeared for the first time in this collection.

5. Different again was a book issued without date, but probably in 1780, by two Presbyterian ministers, Revs. W. Wood and Benj. Carpenter:

An Abridgment of Dr. Watts's Psalms and Hymns, with some alterations. To which is added an appendix containing some hymns, selected from other authors, Birmingham. Printed by Pierce and Jones, and sold by them and by the editors at Dudley and Stourbridge. This collection is notable for the very slight alterations of Watts, when compared with what he has undergone at other hands. It contains 162 psalms and ten 110 hymns. Only the last 14 hymns form the appendix, by Addison, Doddridge, Kipps, and T. Scott. A third edition considerably enlarged, with an entirely new title-page, was issued in 1802 as A Selection of Sacred Poetry, adapted to Public and Private Worship, in Three Parts. Stourbridge. Printed and sold by J. Hening. The former appendix of 14 hymns is enlarged to a third part, and includes hymns by Wesley, Cowper, Beddome, Steele, Hyer, &c.

6. These are examples of various departures from the exclusive use of Dr. Watts in the old Presbyterian congregations. The collection of Theophilus Lindsay was of other origin. To the second edition of his Book of Common Prayer Reformed according to the Plan of the late Dr. Samuel Clarke, prepared in 1774 for use in Essex Street Chapel, he appended:

It contains only 127 hymns and psalms, of which more than half are by Watts. In subsequent editions, 1784, 1793, 1805, 1822 (the last two by Rev. T. Bisham), it was gradually enlarged. In the editions of 1835 and 1849, by the Rev. T. Madge, it became practically a new collection.

7. The method of appending hymns to the forms of liturgical service had already been adopted in Liverpool in 1763 by the congregation which met for a few years in the Octagon Chapel. To their "Form of Prayer" was added A New Collection of Psalms, for the use of a Congregation of Protestant Dissenters in Liverpool. It contains only 150 psalms, and is quite distinct from Watts, and includes many which have disappeared from his book. A new edition of the "Form of Prayer" was published in 1794, and a "Book of Common Prayer" in 1803. An edition of the latter was published in 1812, and a "Book of Common Prayer" in 1820. The latter was more popular, but the earlier was more extensively used.

8. There is something of the same character in the "New Testament" of 1777, which was compiled by Rev. T. Bisham, and was reprinted in 1791. It was intended to be a useful companion to the "Form of Prayer," and was printed in a large format. It was revised in 1803, and a new edition was published in 1820. The latter was more popular, and was reprinted in 1835 and 1849. The "New Testament" was reprinted in 1787, and a new edition was published in 1803. It was revised in 1835, and a new edition was published in 1849. The latter was more popular, and was reprinted in 1862. The "New Testament" was reprinted in 1787, and a new edition was published in 1803. It was revised in 1835, and a new edition was published in 1849. The latter was more popular, and was reprinted in 1862.
The alterations are very freely made in accordance with Priestley's theological views, but often apparently only from difference of taste, not always to the advantage of the poetry.

In 1791 the larger number of the new books perished in the fire by which the mob destroyed not only Priestley's house but both the Old and the New. Part of the issue had been provided for the congregation of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester, and remained in use there until 1800. With the introduction of Kippis in Birmingham congregation, joining for a time in common worship with their friends of the Old Meeting, returned to the use of Watt's Psalms and Hymns. But the latter congregation had not yet relinquished. Afterwards a fresh collection was made for the New Meeting, issued in three books successively in 1794, 1796, and 1830. The Old Meeting adopted Kippis.

9. Among the Presbyterians in the North of Ireland the Scottish Psalms and Paraphrases occupied the same place as Watt's Psalms and Hymns with their brethren in England. The first book of their own seems to have been the Hymnody of the Presbyterian Congregation in Lisburn, Belfast, 1757, a collection of 100 hymns taken from much the same sources as the English books, altered in the same way. A somewhat larger collection, but of similar character, was A Collection of Psalms and Hymns proper for Christian Worship. In the part to T. Watts of T. Watts, London-Derry, 1756. Second ed. 1794. This book was afterwards discarded by the congregation as not sufficiently orthodox.

10. The collection known variously as Kippi or Rees, from two of its editors, was the first of the Unitarian books to attain to any very extended circulation. It went through many editions and was reprinted and reprinted, even out of the way, until quite recently. It may be taken as typical of the kind of Unitarianism most prevalent in England at the beginning of the present century, before the deeper spiritual influence of Channing made itself felt on this side of the Atlantic. The title of the book is:

A Collection of Hymns and Psalms for Public and Private Worship; selected and prepared by Andrew Kippis, D.D., F.R.S., & F.S.A.; Abraham Rees, D.D., F.R.S., & F.L.S.; The Rev. Thomas Jerries, and the late Thomas Morgan, L.L.D. London, 1785. The editors were all Presbyterian ministers resident at that time in London. The preface states that although the Presbyterian societies in the Metropolis and its vicinity have been accustomed with Dr. Watts's Psalms, with the exception of one congregation, which has a book of its own (Pope's Coll., 1760, at the Leather Lane Meeting), to remedy this defect the present compilation is made on the same principles as the earlier Presbyterian collections. Alteration and adaptation are freely resorted to, in order to avoid whatever might "clash with the sentiments, or hurt the feelings of any sincere Christian." There are 600 hymns by more than 50 authors, including Watts, Mrs. Steele, Doddridge, Merrick, Jervis, Mrs. Barraud, Thomas Scott, other well-known names are Milton, Dryden, Addison, Pope, Cowper, Barnes, besides many less remarkable, common to the early Presbyterian books. In 1797 a supplement of 94 hymns was added, and in 1824 a much enlarged supplement, edited by Rev. Edmund Kell.

The general impression made by Kippis is of a somewhat cold and external piety. Though very excellent in moral tone and exhortation, too often somewhat cold, it introduces virtually God and the greatness of His works touches no spring of living emotion, and the redemptive work of Christ seems to be viewed rather from outside than expressed in the kindling words of actual experience. It must be added however that the hymns of Cowper, J. Wesley's

"Commit thou all thy griefs, and others which spring from the deeper sources of inspiration, are included in the volume.

11. In spite of the considerable popularity attained by Kippis, it is not too much to say that during the 45 years between its appearance and the publication of Martineau's Hymns for the Christian Church and Home, on an average only 500 copies of Kippis, large or small, was issued every year. It was a period of considerable activity in Unitarian propagandism, and several of the books are of importance. Only a few can be so much as named here, e.g.:

Dr. Enfield's Norwich Coll. of 1792; the Exeter Coll., 1801; Dr. Watson's Bristol Worps, Rev. With presed (Newcastle), 1806, Norwalk, 1814; Liverpool, Paradise Street, 1815; Samuel Dobell's, 1816; Liverpool, Renshaw Street, 1816, and again 1836; Warrington, 1819 (the curious book in which the editors object to "the introduction of the term soul, in connections where it necessarily implies an immortal and separable principle in man."); Dukinfield, 1822 (still in use); K. Wallace, 1822; Rev. J. J. Taylor's (Mosley Street, Manchester), 1829; Dr. Carpenter's (Derby), 1831; Rev. Benj. Carpenter's (Nottingham), 1838.

In Ireland appeared the Psalms, Hymns and Spiritual Songs; selected for the First Congregation of Presbyterians in Belfast, 1801, which in that congregation superseded the use of the Psalms and Paraphrases, and was itself superseded by A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for the use of the Presbyterian and the Congregation of Strand Street, Dublin, Belfast, 1818, really a new ed. of the earlier book. There was also Rev. A. G. Malcom's Neery Coll., 1811.

12. In 1810 Rev. Robert Aspland of Hackney published A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Unitarian Worship, Revised through several editions, and to which in 1824 a supplement was added. This is said to be the first instance of the term Unitarian appearing on the title-page of a hymn-book. To hold such doctrine was still a penal offence. This collection contains 500 hymns for private and domestic as well as public worship, by more than 60 authors. There is greater variety and freshness of devotional expression than in Kippis.

13. The two books between Kippis and Martineau which had the widest circulation were those known as the Exeter Coll. and Churchman's Coll. The collection of Psalms and Hymns for Social and Private Worship, Exeter, 1812, edited chiefly by Dr. Lant Carpenter, at that time minister of the George's Meeting. Many editions were printed, not only at Exeter, but also at Glasgow and London, the 12th ed. being London, 1835. It is a collection of 313 hymns, and while strictly Unitarian in doctrine, it contains the number of suitable hymns especially referring to Christian privileges and acquisitions. The same may be said of A Selection of Hymns and Psalms for Christian Worship. By H. E. Howse, jun. Bath, 1830. Of this nine editions were printed, and it was extensively used by the congregations of the Baptists, who had become Unitarians, as well as by others, in some cases until quite recently. There are 528 hymns by about 80 authors.

14. One other book of this period must be named:

A Collection of Hymns for Public and Private Wor-
The peculiarity of this collection was that only hymns by Unitarian writers were admitted. The result was a collection of 580 hymns, by 57 authors, the chief contributors being: John Bowring, William Gaskell, J. G. Wallace, J. R. Wreford, John Johns, S. G. Bulstitch, J. Brettell, and Mrs. Barbauld. Only a few of these hymns have passed into general use in Great Britain, and the principle of selection has not found favour among the Unitarians of the English non-subscribing churches. Many of these hymns have however passed into American Unitarian collections.

15. In 1810 appeared the book which has made the most striking epoch in the history of Unitarian hymnody. As Kippis fairly represents the condition of English Unitarians at the end of last century, so the Hymns for the Christian Church and Home. Collected and edited by James Martineau. London, 1840, may be taken as the best expression of the new spirit of devotion which, largely through the influence of Channing, had for some time been making its way in their societies. When the new hymn-book appeared Dr. Martineau was minister at Paradise Street Chapel, Liverpool. It was to some extent only a prospectus of what was to be, for the book was received at first with objection in some quarters; but quickly made its way, and, far more generally than Kippis at the beginning of the century, superseded all earlier collections. It is now the book most widely used among Unitarians in England. It was a collection of 650 hymns, Mrs. Adams's "Nearer, my God, to Thee" being added as hymn 651 to the 10th ed. of 1853. The preface develops the thought of worship as being the natural expression of emotion, awakened in the mind "possessed with the religious or mysterious conception of God, of life and death, of duty, of futurity," and shows how the substance of the devotion of the various writers, whose hymns are adopted, is preserved, while the special dialect of their dogmatic theology is changed into a more universal language.

Of the 161 authors from whom selection is made not a third could be rightly classed as Unitarians; the chief of these being Adams, Barbauld, Bowring, Bryant, Butcher, Emfield, Estlin, Furness, Gaskell, Johns, Norton, Pierpoint, the Roscoes, J. E. Smith, John and Emily Taylor, Ware and Wreford. But the chief contributors are members of other Churches, Catholic, Lutheran, Anglican, Wesleyan, Baptist, Independent, and others; Dr. Watts standing first with 77 hymns, and after him Montgomery with 57, Doddridge 53, Charles Wesley 43, Heber 28, Cowper 14, Newton 14, Conder 12, Hymns 11, South 8, Millman 16. The hymns are divided into six books according to their subjects.

16. From 1840 until the appearance of Dr. Martineau's last collection in 1873, was a period not so prolific as the preceding in Unitarian hymn-books. This was natural, since the need of the churches had been so well supplied. Various books for individual congregations were however issued. Among these may be named:

(1) W. J. Fox's Hymns and Anthems, London, 1841, to which were first contributed the hymns of Sarah Adams; (2) the Plymouth Hymns for Public and Private Worship, 1854; (3) the Liverpool Remshaw Street Hymns, Chants, and Anthems; selected and arranged by John Hamilton Thom, 1854; (4) a new Keeler Collection, 1863, edited by Rev. T. W. Chignell; (5) the Rev. Charles Clarke's Book of Prayer and Praise, Birmingham, 1877. Public Worship, the (7) Presbyterian, Worship, Helf's new edition of the Christian Worship, selected editions in 1867 a

17. This period greatly to the new religious attitude which particular his earlier hymn he published:-

There had coalesced to the extent of incidents were formerly, and given to the Christianity with its pure and permanent this collection that "chiefly to the poet the old hymns of subjective incident or in the apocryphal collection to be made from new hymns, 417 being added and 380 added. Given there are 253 in the former collection every quarter of the Catholic to the Unitarian, Faber, Neeley, Whittier, D. Longfellow, J. H. In amount of content, pre-eminence, Montg. 67 hymns, then Chur. 49, Doddridge 41, Hymn. 15, Barbauld 13, Lyttelton 11, Gill 11. The last is adhered to as in the apocrypha of the collection of a "Nonconformist" Brown was designed, shows the condition of the new Unitarians. After H. Church and Home it societies more than any.

18. Of subsequent notable are the Hymns of Hope, Manchester, 1851, selection edited by Rev. S. Farrington; Hymns, for Public Worship, by C. Hopps, Leicester, 1857, congregations; and the Unitarian Hymn, London, congregation by Rev. S. his leaving the Church.

19. From the above hymn-books it will be seen how many of these books have been drawn from writers belonging to the Christian Church, that the editors have been more adaptation from common sources than a collecting of new material. There are however a considerable number of original writers among Unitarians in England as well as America, some of whom are well known beyond the borders of their own immediate circle.

20. In the old Arian days there were several liberal ministers whose hymns occur repeatedly in the earlier collections and less uniformly in the modern books, who stand naturally in the line of development which has resulted in modern Unitarianism. Such were Henry Gove, Thomas Scott, Roger Flaxman, John Binns, and somewhat later, Beni Williams, Henry Moore, and the editors Kippis, Jervis, Walker and Enfield. Among Unitarian hymn-writers in the latter part of last century the first place must be given to Mrs. Barbauld, with whom are naturally associated the Norwich group of the Taylors and Sir J. E. Smith, William Rouse of Liverpool, and his gifted children. Other contemporaries, passing gradually on to a new generation, were Dr. Estlin, Pendlebury Houghton, Edmund Butcher, William Lampaert, John Rowe, George Dyer, Helen Maria Williams, and in Ireland Dr. Drumm and William H. Drummond, whose hymns were born in the last century were John G. Relf, John Bateman, W. J. Fox, J. C. Wallace, Jacob Brettell, Hugh Hutton, and in Ireland David Whyte and A. G. Malcolm. Belonging entirely to the present century are the Martines. Sarah Adams, John Johns, Dr. Wreford, William Gaskell, Samuel Greg, Thomas Hincks, John Page Hoppes, and others.

Of the chief of these further notices will be found elsewhere in this Dictionary. In the alphabetical list given below brief notes are added concerning the rest.

Akin, John, M.B., 1747-1822. The brother of Mrs. Barbauld, son of Dr. Akin of the Warrington Academy. As physician he practised at Warrington and Warrington and Macclesfield, and died at Stoke Newington. Author (with his sister), of Averages and Comparisons, editor of the General Biographical Dictionary, and for some time of the Pulpit Monthly. His hymn In time of war, “While [what] sounds of war are heard around,” was very popular. It is in M. and M. 1.

Aspland, Robert, 1782-1845. Minister at Hackney, founder and for many years editor of the Monthly Repository and the Christian Repository. In his Psalms and Hymns for Unitarian Worship, 1818, are three hymns signed “A.”

1. Almighty Father of mankind! Jehovah, self-existent Lord, To the one God. 2. Sons of Adam! Join to raise. Creation, Redemption, Restoration.

3. Welcome, the hope of Israel’s race! The glory of the Man Jesus.

1. Best is the man whose pining eye. Of Charity.
2. Thou Cause unknown! whose secret word. God the Creator.

Atkins, Hugh, b. 1838. Of Hinckley, manufacturer. He includes his hymn of the pure in heart, “Jesus, anoints the footprint of Olivet.” This, with two others, is in J. G. Leman’s Leicester Coll., 1850.

Bache, Sarah, 1771-1844. A relative of the Carpen ters, who kept a school for many years in Birmingham. Her hymn, “See how he loved,” exclaimed the Love of Christ, was contributed to the Exeter Coll., 1812. It is in M. 1 and B. and most of the early books after its appearance.

Barnby, Goodwin, 1820-1861. Minister at Wakefield, author of the Return of the Prodigals, and other poems, 1861, &c. H. gives a hymn of his own, The following of Christ, “Beside the shore of Galilee.”

Barnes, Thomas, D.D., 1747-1816, b. at Warrington and educated for the ministry at the Warrington Academy. Settled first at Cockye Moor, near Bolton, in 1780 at Cross Street Chapel, Manchester. In 1786 he became first Principal of the newly founded Manchester Academy, now Manchester New College. Two hymns of his on The Christian’s Hope, are in the Duchess Coll., 1822.

1. I hope ere long to leave behind. 2. While darkness reigns beneath the pole.

Breckell, John, 1696-1749. Minister of Key Street Chapel, Liverpool, and co-editor with Dr. Estholf of the old Liverpool Coll., 1746, which gives his hymn for a Fast Day, “O Lord of hosts, Almighty King!” Capp’s York Coll., 1746, gives a translation of Psalm 29 as his, “The glory of their father, God.”

Bright, Henry Arthur, 1830-1884. A Liverpool merchant and man of letters. A friend of Nathanial Hawthorne, and a contributor to the Athenaeum, &c. and in his Remembrance, 1851, contains his hymn, “To the Father through the Son.”

Carpenter, L. A., L.L.D., 1781-1840. Minister at Exeter and Bristol, a distinguished writer and translator among the Unitarians of his day. To his Exeter Coll., 1812, he contributed the hymn of reverence and love for Jesus, “Father of Jesus, God of Love,” which contains the signature “L.” In his Collection of Hymns for the use of Unitarian Christians, Bristol, 1831, —

2. O God, all holy and all just. The mercy of God in Christ Jesus.
3. The hour must come, the closest ties. Parting here, reunion hereafter.

Carpenter, Mary, 1797-1877. Daughter of Dr. Laut Carpenter, of Bristol, best known for her works of philanthropy, but also a devotional writer in prose and verse. Her Morning and Evening Meditations (1845) has passed through several editions. It contains her hymn of Dedication, given in B., "To thee, my God, to thee.” Another hymn by Miss Carpenter is in the Supp. to Mortimer’s Hymn, for use at Lea’s Mere Chapel, Bristol, 1849 and 1859. It begins “Father, here Thy glory proclaims.” (Sunday Evening.)

Chignell, T. W., b. 1794. Minister of the Meeting, Exeter, and editor of the Exeter Coll., 1863 and 1874, which contains several of his own hymns, and various translations from foreign authors. The South Place enlargement of W. J. Fox’s Coll., 1875, gives five of his —

1. Morning breaketh on thee. Morning aspiration.
2. Hail the whoop of victory. Progress.

Conway, Moncreif Dana, b. 1832. For many years minister at South Place Chapel, Finsbury, and editor of the enlarged edition of W. J. Fox’s Hymns & Anthems, 1873, which contains his hymn of Christ, "All out of the storm, ‘A storm spoilt over sea and land.”

Cox, James, d. 1825. An Exeter layman, who contributed several hymns to the Exeter Coll., 1812, 12 of these B. and H. give —

1. Homage pay to God above. Thanksgiving. 2. See from on high a light divine. The baptism of Jesus.

Cross, John, d. 1830. An Exeter layman, who contributed three hymns to the Exeter Coll., 1812, also in the Duchess Coll., 1822, and Bristol Coll., 1823. —

1. The morn of life, how fair and gay. The word of God the guide of youth.
3. With warm delight and grateful love. The character of Christ.

Darwin, Erasmus, M.D., 1733-1802. Physician and poet, of Lambeth, author of The Botanic Garden, 1741, &c. He was a friend of Dr. Priestley’s, and in sympathy with many of his views, although not permanently connected with any church. His hymn on God, the disposer of events, "The Lord, the bender of his love’s, is in K., M. 1 & 2. II. gives another hymn on Immortal Nature, "Roll on, ye stars, reliant in youthful pride.”

1. The heaven of heavens cannot contain. God presides in sacred worship.
2. In this fair globe with ocean round. The love of God.
4. All nature feels attractive power. The love of love.
5. O sweeter than the fragrant flower. The luxury of devotedness.
7. Why does the will of heaven ordain. The use of affliction.

Some of these are still in C. U.

Dyer, George, R.A., 1755–1841. Educated at Christ's Hospital and Emmanuel College, Cambridge. The friend of Charles Lamb, of Priestley and Wakefield, and biographer of Robert Robinson of Cambridge. In 1782 he moved to London, to chambers in Clifford's Inn, Fleet Street, supporting himself by private tuition and literary work. He was a contributor to the Gentleman's and the Monthly Magazine, for which he wrote the introductory Ode in 1794. From 1809 to 1810 engaged upon Valpy's edition of the Classics, in 140 vols. Author of a History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge, 1814, and of several volumes of verse. Three of his hymns are in K. & R., and in frequent use in other books.

2. Greater of beings, source of life. The same continued.

Estlin, John Frier, b. 1747–1817, b. at Hinckley, and educated at the Warrenton Academy. For many years minister at Lewin's Meadow, Bristol; author of Familiar Lectures on Moral Philosophy, &c.; editor of the Psalms & Hymns, adapted to Public and Private Worship, Collected for the use of the Society of Lewin's Meadow, Bristol, 1808, to which he contributed two hymns, also in M. 1 & 2.

1. Gracious source of every blessing. For the close of Evening Service.
2. Then art the First, and thou the Last. Aversion of Praise.

Flaxman, Roger. b. 1758–1759, b. at Great Tarrant on, Devon. Educated for the ministry at Tiverton by Rev. John Moore, ordained at Modbury, 1730, and from 1730 to 1743 was minister at Rothley. In 1776 appointed one of the compilers of the Index of the Collected Hymns. He contributed 4 hymns to Pope's Cents., 1764.

1. Great God, to thee my grateful tongue. God the Benefactor.
2. In realms of everlasting light. Saint's Conflict and Record.
4. To God my grateful soul ascend. Ps. 24, 25.

Forkeston, Thomas Wesley, b. 1827. Minister of Unity Church, Islington. His hymn, "The toil of brain, or heart, or hand" (Christian Service), is in H. and in Horder's Cents. Hymnal, 1841.

Gretton, Samuel, 1804–1876. Member of a family closely associated with Manchester industries, and social work of various kinds. Selections from his papers, in prose and verse, with a memoir and a prefatory letter by Isaac Stainly, were published posthumously as A Layman's Legacy, 1877. The best known of his hymns are:

2. Stay, Master, stay upon this heavenly hill. Worship preparing for work.
3. My soul in death was sleeping. Strong in his strength.

Grove, Henry, 1685–1739. Presbyterian minister at Taunton, his birth-place, and conductor of a Dissenting Academy there, a contributor to Addison's Spectator

(Nos. 588, 601, towards A Demoral Philosophy. Thoughts concern Reason, 1739; also in the Monthly Repository. 1741–1742.)

Upham, Thomas Cogswell, D.D., was born at Duxbury, New Haven, Jan. 30, 1799, and educated at Dartmouth College (1818), and at Andover (1821). Having entered the Congregational Ministry he became Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy at Bowdoin College, in 1825, and retained the same until 1867. He died at New York, April 2, 1872. His publications were numerous and included Mental Philosophy (which was long and widely used); American Cottage Life; a volume of Poems, 1852, &c. Five of his hymns are given, with accompanying dates, in Hymns and Songs of Praise, &c., N. Y., 1874, as follows:

2. Happy is the man who knows. Obligence (1872).
3. Oh thou great Ruler of the sky. Morning (1872).
4. Oh thou great Teacher from the skies. Following Christ (1872).
5. "Tis thus in solitude I roam. Omnipresence (1853).

These hymns are limited in their use. In 1847 Upham pub. the Life and Religious Opinions and Experiences of Madam de la Mothe Guyon. Two vols., N. Y. This work the anonymous tr.s from Madam Guyon's hymns given at p. 476, ii. are found, viz.:

- By sufferings only can we know.
- "I would love Thee, God and Father."
- "Tis not [by] the skill of human art.

There are also additional tr.s of two of her hymns in the same work.

Rubem Romuleam quis furor incitat. Jean Baptiste de Sainteill. [St. John at the Latin Gate.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1838, p. 32. In 1796 it was included in the revised Paris Brev., for the Feast of St. John at the Latin Gate. It was repeated in later French Brevs., and also in Cardinal Newman's Hymnæ Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. Urbs Beata Hierusalem

This text is given in full in J. Chandler's Hym. of the Primitive Church, 1837. Nos. 105, 106.

4. Another form of the text is given in the Brevarium Metropolitanae urbis Romanae, 'Sacerdotalis', 1856. Pars Hesiriæ, p. Lxxviii. as follows:—

"Urbs, vera pacis Visio, Jerusalem, Quanta surgit! celsa saxis Conditur viventibus: Quae pulvis, haec coeptum obliviscens viventur. Aether oblitus, ut Filius, Pater Spiritus, Laudae iura numen Terque sanctum concinit. Undecaqua sunt aperta Civitatis ostia: Quidquid ambit huc venire, Inserire toto mundi; Ante suris hic probari Debit laboris. Sit pervenit laus Parenti, Sit pervenit Filio: Laus tibi, qui nescis ambas, Sit pervenit Spiritus; Chrism a cujus non scimus tu, Filius a paradisco."

This is the text to which Dr. Neale refers in his Mediaeval Hym., 1851 and 1867, as:

"There is in the Paris Breviary, a riformamento of this hymn; very inferior, it is true, to the original, but much superior to the Roman form."

It is however an error to call this the Paris Brev. text, as it is neither in the Paris Brev. of 1643, 1736, nor 1778. This form has been ascribed to Sebastian Besnault (p. 138, ii.), many of whose hymns are included in the Sens Brev. of 1726.

The translations of the various forms of this hymn are:

1. Original Text: (i.) Urbe Beata Hierusalem; (ii.) Anglicar su-damentum.
2. (a.) Blessed city, heavenly Salem, Vision dear of peace and love, &c. Pt. i.

(5.) Christ is made the sure Foundation. Pt. ii. By J. M. Neale. This was given as one hymn in Mediaeval Hymns, 1851, but in the H. Noted, 1852, it was revised and divided into two parts as above (Nos. 43, 44). The tr. thus divided was given in the Salisbury B. Bk., 1857, and in H. A. & M., 1861, with alterations in each case. Dr. Neale's comment on some of these alterations in the 3rd ed. of his Mediaeval Hymns, 1867, p. 22, is:

"This hymn, divided as in the Breviary, after the fourth verse, was inserted, with some corrections, in the Hymnal Noted. Thence, with a good many alterations, it was copied in the Sarum Hymnal (Salisbury B. Bk., 1857); one of these changes seems true and happy: v. 27—"

Who, the two walls underlying. Bound in each, bind both in one.

In Hymns Ancient and Modern it is very slightly altered: and some of the changes can hardly be thought improvements. E.g. "Thither faithful souls may soar."

"Neale: 'Thither faithful souls may soar.' It is curious to observe how both one and the other soften the second line of the second verse: [Neale: 'Ready for the nuptial bed'] the Sarum has—"

"Grace and glory round her shed:"

Hymns Ancient and Modern (much better) —

"Bread and glory round her shed."

The second part of the translation, 'Christ is made the sure Foundation,' has been adopted as a dedication hymn with so much general favor, that it would be unthankful not to mention the fact."

Amongst those collections which include both parts of this tr. as in the H. Noted, but giving in almost every instance variations, chiefly from H. A. & M., are Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861; Kennedy, 1863; People's H., 1867; Sarum, 1868;
the Hymnary, 1872; Thrings Coll., 1882, and several others in G. Britain and America. There are also a few collections which take only Pt. i., and others, greater in number, Pt. ii. There are centos also from both parts in C. U., beginning with the opening line of Pt. i., as in the Parish H. Bk., 1863-75; the H. Comp., and others. The position taken by Dr. Neale's tr. of this hymn is thus prominent and important. In popularity and extensiveness of use it is unapproached by any other.

The ascrip has been upheld by Father Ragey of the Marist Order, who in 1884 pub. an ed. of the full text as Sancti Anselmi Cantuariensis Archi-episcopi Mariæ, &c. (London, Burns & Oates), with a preface and introduction dated April 21, 1883. This ed. is out of print, but Father Ragey kindly presented the present writer with a copy of the work, and also with translations of the articles on the Mariæ in the Annales de Philosophie Christienne (Paris), May and June 1883, and in the Controverse et Contemporain (Lyons), Nov. 1887. There, in the Requites des Questions historiques (Paris), Oct. 1886 and July 1887, and in the works referred to in these articles, the subject may be studied in detail.
Here we can only give a brief outline of the subject, dealing (i) with the MSS., (ii) with the Authorship, and (iii) with the Centos and Translations.

(i) MSS. The Mariæ exists in at least five MSS., not later than 1200. Two of these are in the Bibliothèque Nationale, viz., the Add. 211927, and the Harl. 2882.

The form of these (a Poeter apparently written for a Benedictine monastery in the province of York) contains a very fragment of the text, beginning at line 4, 6, with the words ‘Omnis dicat Maris.’ and is entitled ‘Lamb et oratio de sa Maria.’ This MS. has sometimes been assumed to belong to the end of the 11th cent., but the British Museum authors, on being requested by Father Ragey to re-examine it, agree in considering that it is not earlier than 1173. The Harl. MS. (a complete and excellent one, apparently written in England), is quoted in the Catalogue as of the 12th cent., but the similarly elicited opinion of the British Museum authorities is that it is not earlier than 1200.

The other three MSS. are in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, viz., Lat. 2445 A., Lat. 10522, and Lat. 16565.

M. Leopold Dibelius, the Principal Librarian, has kindly re-examined these, and has come to the conclusion that none of them is as early as 1146. The 2445 A. is the earliest, and may possibly date soon after 1150.

The Mariæ is also found in a considerable variety of MSS. of later date, in the Brit. Mus., and in various French and German libraries, but these are not mentioned in detail.

The verse form, a variety of the trochaic catalectic tetrameter, is not earlier than about 1050.

(ii) Authorship.—These facts, and the other evidence adduced in the works noted above, clearly point to the conclusion that the poem was written, either in France or in England, not earlier than 1050, and not later than 1150. The possible authors are thus M. I. L. C. H. M., viz.: St. Anselm of Canterbury, St. Bernard of Clairvaux, Bernard of Cluny, and Hildebert of Tours. St. Thomas of Aquino (to whom it is ascribed in a 14th cent. MS. cited by More, ii. p. 258) was only born in 1225.

(iii) Hildebert.—For Hildebert there is only the ascription in a miscellaneous MS. volume of the 13th or 14th cent., formerly belonging to the monastery of St. James at Le Puy, in the Bibliothèque Nationale. The text of this MS., which is apparently the oldest MSS. of the text, is printed by F. W. E. Roth, in his Hymnen, 1867, No. 203. The text of this MS. is the same as that of the Harl. MS., and so the name of the Hildebert is printed by F. W. E. Roth, in his Hymnen, 1867, No. 203. The text of this MS. is the same as that of the Harl. MS., and so the name of the MS. is not contained in the Bibliothèque Nationale edition of the Hildebert's Opera (Paris, 1819), and M. Hauréau, who has recently interested himself in the history of Hildebert, assigns it not to him, but to Bernard of Cluny.

(b) St. Bernard of Clairvaux. The ascription to St. Bernard, which also rests on a very slight foundation. The

The author to whom the work is ascribed in the Harl. MS. was clearly not the abbot of Clairvaux, but the monk of St. Bernard, M. Hauréau in his articles in the Journal des Savants for 1862, reprinted in the Poèmes Latins attribués à Saint Bernard, Paris, 1862.

(c) St. Bernard of Cluny. The principal specific reasons (beyond the general contention that it harmonises in sentiment and expression with St. Anselm's character, and with his works), which led Ragey to think that it was by him are:

1. The fact of its being in very early MSS. But, as shown above, no such MSS. of the early 11th cent. can be inferred from its character, nor consequently it cannot be adjudged from Bernard of Cluny on that ground. (2) The fervour of its devotion to the Virgin. But St. Bernard in the Harl. MS. is not exclusively addressed to her. (3) The frequent resemblances to passages in the works undoubtedly of St. Anselm. In the first ed. of the Mariæ these were not noticed, and the second ed. of the Harl. MS. is the second part of the pages containing the corresponding portions of the text. But the parallels are not very close, and even if they were closer than those between the works of St. Bernard, it would not be considered, for it is tolerably certain that Bernard had access, in the library at Cluny, to at least a fairly complete set of the works of the well-learned and ecclesiastic and theologian at St. Anselm. (4) The fact that in the Harl. MS. 2882 it occurs in a section which otherwise contains nothing but pieces which are undoubtedly by St. Anselm. This is not a very conclusive argument, especially as the other pieces are all in prose. (5) Certain allusions which

Ragey thinks were meant to refer to circumstances in England, under the rule of William Rufus (1087-1100). The allusions are however not distinct enough to found an argument.

To the present writer the great difficulties in the way of ascribing the Mariæ to St. Anselm are firstly that F.

Ragey relies too much on subjective evidence, and secondly that the other poems ascribed to him are of such small importance, and nowhere show any evidence of poetical talent or of the power to compose such a long poem in so difficult a metre.

The Mariæ had indeed been ascribed to St. Anselm much earlier than by Father Ragey. Before 1150, and of about the end of the 12th cent., now in the Bibl. Nat. at Paris (Lat. 16499, f. 343), where it is entitled ‘Meditations interius et exterius’ the literary form of the Mariæ is quite different from that in the Harl. MS. The whole fact of its apparence with that title in this solitary, and not very ancient, MS., has not convinced M. Hauréau (1899, p. 57) that it is really by Anselm, nor is the present writer inclined to regard it as conclusive evidence of his authorship.

(4) Bernard of Cluny. The earliest MS. of the poem now known is the Lat. 2445 A. at Paris, written circa 1150. Here it is entitled ‘Invocatio divinae Sapientiae facta a Bernardo in laudem sanctam Virginim.’ The epithet ‘monarchus’ is evidently meant to point to Bernard of Cluny, for long before 1150 St. Bernard, from a simple monk, had become Abbot of Clair-vaux. The ascription to Bernard is found in various MSS. of the early 12th cent., written in France, and in the Brit. Mus. (Reg. A 7, viii., and Reg. B 1, l.), the former is styled ‘Bernardius doctor,’ and in a MS. of the 12th cent., now also in the Brit. Mus. (Addl. 7360, f. 3636), the poems are styled ‘Oratones sancti Bernardi de doctoris,’” and appointed for the octave of the Assumption of the H. V. M.

To show the structure of the poems we print here the opening of its best-known part:

omnium dicat Mariæ, nullæ, lances, animae

Eius naturae, eius gentis colomnae,

Contemplae, et miture eius celestiusam;

Die felicius Gentircum, die Beatam Virginem.

On comparing this with the De contemptu mundi (pp. 137, ii. and 335, iii.), which is the undisputed work of Bernard of Cluny, we see in both an equal mastery of a difficult and somewhat similar material. The poet who could write the one was certainly capable of writing the other. Whatever may be the theological prepossessions of critics it is only just and unfair to deny that the De contemptu and the Mariæ are both the work of a private poet, and it is idle to deprecate the De contemptu in order to exalt the De contemptu. The De

contemptu indeed contains much that might well have been left out, but the first part, for hundreds of lines, has in its way nothing to equal its beauty in the whole range of Latin sacred poetry. If the De contemptu is not accused of want of progress and of eddying round its subject, then this is precisely what may justly be said of the Mariæ.

Therefore, on the grounds of the early ascription to

Bernard of Cluny, of the fact that no one can find which are sufficiently remote to deny the works of

Bernard Cluny, and of his talents as a poet and master of Latin language as incline to regard the Mariæ as his. St. Anselm was indeed a distinguished ecclesiastic, but we have really no reason to regard him as a poet of any merit.

(iii.) Centos and Translations. The complete text of the poem is, in Ragey’s edition, arranged in 15 parts, viz. a Prævia, a Praevid, and 13 Hymns. It is not necessary here, to print the first lines of these as Ragey’s 2nd ed. (Tournay: Descée, Lefebvre & Co., 1885) is easily accessible, as well as cheap, and very prettily printed. Here we give only the beginnings of the different forms or centos which we have noticed, adding the page references to Ragey’s 1885 ed. These forms and centos are:—

2. Jesu Christe, per quem iste. p. 123.
4. Lingua mea, dic trophaea. p. 18
5. Lux sanctorum, placet lauram. n. 71.
7. O Maria, vita tue. p. 137.
10. Splendor Paritis, factor Matria. p. 44.
11. xii. ut jucundas cervus undas. p. 23.

Of these Nos. i., ii., iii., v., vii., x. are given by Mone (Nos. 569-571) from various ms. of the 14th and 15th cent., and seem to have been meant for use at private devotions. The other forms may be here noted somewhat more fully, viz.:

4. Lingua mea, dic trophaea virginis puerores. A cento beginning thus was tr. as:

O my tongue, the praise and honours. By T. I. Ball for the 1663 Appex. to the H. Nated. No. 205. This is repeated in the Office H. Bk., 1899. In the St. Margaret’s Hyl. (East Grinstead), 1875, it is in two parts, the second beginning “O thou ever pure, yet fruitful.”

vi. O felicem gentem, ejus sacra viscera. This is the only portion of the poem which seems to have come into public use in Pre-Reformation times. It is included in various Missals of the 15th and 16th cent., such as the Lübeck, c. 1480; the Trier, c. 1490; the Prag of 1507; the Naumburg, 1517, and others. Also in Wacker-nagel, i. p. 192; Daniel, ii., p. 205; Kebrin, No. 315, &c. It is tr. as:

Blessed Mother e’er all other. By A. D. Wacker-bure in his Lyra Ecclesiastica, 1842, p. 27.

vii. Omnii die, die Mariæ, mea, laudes, anima. The popular form of this is the cento made from the poem by St. Casimir of Poland (b. 1458, d. 1484). A ms. copy of this arrangement is said to have been found in his grave when that was opened in 1604; and in the 17th cent., and indeed till recently, he was generally thought to be its author. It is given in his life in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum (1688), for March 4; in the Parnasus Marianus, Donay, 1824, p. 364.; in J. M. Horst’s Paradosium animae Christianae, Cologne, 1630, p. 500 (1644, p. 462); in Daniel, ii. p. 372. &c. Various trs. of it are included in German Roman Catholic hymn-books from 1613 on, it was tr. into French at least as early as 1630, and there are also trs. in Italian, Spanish, Polish, Hungarian, &c. It has also been tr. into English as:

1. Each day, my soul, Tell Mary’s praise. By Canon F. Oakley, in his tr. of Horst’s Paradisus, 1850, p. 593, and divided, as in Horst, into six decades.
2. Daily, daily, sing to Mary, Sing, my soul, her praises due. This is in the Oratory Hyl., 1854, and the Catholic Examinist, 1858, p. 141. It is repeated in the Catholic part of No. 63; and, in the Book of the Queen of Heaven.

ix. Pulchra tota, sinea
This is really part of Casimir. It is tr. as:

Holy Queen! we beseech thee purity divine. By E. C. May, 1858, p. 312, a p. 176; repeated in the and the and the Poetical H. B. Hyl., 1860, No. 63, p. 176; in the Mary, we implore thee and this form is repeated H. Bk., 1862.

xi. Ut jucundas cervus
This is found also in a Trench’s Sac. Latin Poet is tr. as:

The thirty hast panting against Morgan, in his Hyl. of i. p. 94.

Vain are the hopes the sons of men.

I. Watts. [Justification by Faith.] Pub. in his Hys. and Songs, 1709, Bk. i. No. 94, in 4 st. of 4 l. and headed “Justification by Faith, not by Works; or, The Law condemns Grace justifies, Rom. ii. 19-22.” In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, it was given unaltered; in that of 1751 it was slightly changed; and in the authorised issue of the Tr. and Paraph., 1781, No. xii., st. i., ii. were rewritten, but began with the original first line as above; st. iii. was taken from the Draft of 1751; and st. iv. unaltered from Watts. In the markings by the oldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 300, ii.) these alterations are attributed to him. The use of the 1781 form of the text is far more extensive than that of the original.

[V. J.]

Van Alstyne, Frances Jane, née Crosby, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was b. at South East, Putnam County, New York, March 24, 1823. When six weeks old she lost her sight. About 1835 she entered the New York City Institution for the Blind. On completing her training she became a teacher therein from 1847 to 1858. In 1858 she was married to Alexander Van Alstyne, a musician, who was also blind. Her first poem was pub. in 1831; and her first volumes of verse as A Blind Girl and Other Poems, 1844; Monterey, and Other Poems, 1849; and A Wreath of Columbia’s Flowers, 1856. Her first hymn was “We are going, we are going” (Death and Burial), which was written for Mr. Bradford and pub. in the "Golden Censer," 1864. From 1858 to 1869 she wrote 20 songs, which were set to music by G. F. Root. Her songs and hymns number some 2,000 or more, and have been published mainly in several of the popular American Sunday school collections, and often under a nom de plume. About 50 have come into C. U. in G. Britain. The majority of these are taken from the following American collections: —

i. From The Shining Star, 1864.

ii. From Fresh Laurels, 1867.

VAUGHAN, Henry, M.D., commonly called "The Silurist," was one of twin-brothers born of a titled family at Newton, Llanfairfechan, in 1621. After studying under the Rev. Matthew Herbert, Rector of Llanngattock, he proceeded to Jesus College, Oxford, in 1638; but through the national troubles of those days, his studies, in common with those of his brother, were interrupted, and they had to leave the University. Subsequently he entered the medical profession, and practised at Brecon and at Newton. He d. April 23, 1695. His published works include, Poems with the Tenth Satire of Juvenal Englished, 1646; Olor Humantis, 1651; The Silurist's加入, 1652, &c. As a religious poet he followed very closely the peculiarities of George Herbert, of whose writings he was a great admirer. His best and most devotional poems were written during a severe affliction, and were pub. in his Silex Scintillans. After being almost forgotten for more than 200 years, his quaint, thoughtful, devotional, and, in many instances, beautiful poems, are receiving attention at the hands of hymnal compilers and others. The title of the work in which these pieces appeared is:—

From the Silex Scintillans several pieces have been taken as hymns for public worship. In addition to those which occur in their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators), the following, all from the 1st ed. of 1650, are in C. U.:—
1. As travellers when the twilight's come. Life a Pilgrimage.
2. Bright shadows of true rest! some shoots of bliss.
4. King of mercy, King of love. God our King.
5. Lord, with what courage and delight. Readiness.
7. Since in a land not barren still. Love and Discipline.
8. Up to those bright and gladsome hills. Ps. xxxi.
11. Zion's true glorious God! on Thee. Praise.

Of Vaughan's hymns the most widely used are:—"Bright Queen of heaven," "My soul, there is a country," and "Up to these bright and gladsome hills." [J. J.]

Vaughan, Rowland, was a member of an ancient Welsh family in Merionethshire. He received his University education at Jesus College, Oxford. His name stands pre-eminent among the contemporary gentry of Wales, for devoting his talents to the improvement of his poorer countrymen. He translated several excellent works; and besides being a good prose writer, he was also a good poet. His tr. of the Veni Creator Spiritus, "Tyr'd Yabryd Glan," and his Galarnad Pechadur are still in great favour in Wales. His mansion at Caergai was burnt to the ground by the Republican forces from Montgomeryshire, and part of his estates confiscated. His attachment to the King's cause brought upon him great sufferings.

[We. G. T.]

Vene's Jéan, mon salutaire. Antoinette Bourignon. [Renouncing all for Christ.]

This hymn was written, circa 1640, and expressed her determination to live for Christ alone, a resolution which she came to whilst suffering from her father's anger because she refused to marry a man whom he had chosen for her. It is given in her Works, Amsterdam, 1686, in 5 st. of 8 l. Tr. as:—

Come Saviour, Jesus, from above. Dr. Osborn, in The Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley, 1808-11, vol. i. p. 110, says in a note to this tr., which is given there from the Wesley Hys. and Soc. Poems, 1739, p. 123, in 10 st. of 4 l. This, and the "Farewell to the World," p. 17, were probably furnished to the compilers by Mr. Byron, of Manchester (see 'Byron and the Wesleys,' by the Rev. Dr. Hooke [1841], pp. 17, 27), and translated by him from the French of Madam de Bourignon. The copy of A Hymn to Jesus, which is found in his Miscellaneous Poems (Manchester, 1773), vol. ii. p. 211, differs from that given above only in the title ('Renouncing all for Christ'), and in such verbal alterations as a superior taste and judgment of the Wesleys would dictate. The 9th and 10th verses, in both Byrom's and Wesley's copies are daged with that mysticism to which the preface (to the Hys. and Soc. Poems, 1739) refers; and Wesley has improved on himself as well as on Byrom in the last edition of v. 9 (that in the Large Hymn-Book, 1780) where, instead of 'Nor heaven nor earth,' we read 'Neither heaven nor earth.'

The references to Byrom and the Wesleys are these:—

(1) p. 17. Under date "Manchester, March 2nd, 1736," Byron writes to C. Wesley, and in his letter says:—"As your brother [J. Wesley] has brought so many hymns translated from the French, you will have a sufficient number, and no occasion to increase them by the small addition of Mademoiselle Bourignon's two little pieces. I desire you to favour my present weakness, if I judge wrong, and not to publish them,"

(2) p. 27. Under date written to his son:—"Thou together printed a book of 1739, amongst which th' Bourignon's, one of which World,' translated from a book for the Wesleyan, Who, they say, write another, for whom the veneration, but think'd to acknowledge their merit, like which they do see the reason of."
VENI CREATOR SPIRITUS

VI.

Hostem repellas longius,
Da gaudiarum praemia,
Veni cum spirital.

vi.

Te sciens, da,
Da gratiarum munera,
Veni, et rasce in animo.

These six stanzas clearly form the original text, and in some of the ms. cited (e.g. Add. 30648, and Patal. 30), in the Add. 18301, f. 1286 (a Collectarius and Hymnal of the 12th cent.), and in some of the early printed Breviaries, e.g. the Augsburg MS. of 1493, Basel, 1498, &c., &c. nothing more is added. Many ms. indeed contain a doxology, the most usual being:

"Sit Iaue Patri cum Filio, Sancto spiritu Paracleti,
Christi sancta Spiritus."

The extraneous character of the doxology is however betrayed by the quantity of the penultimate of Paracleti, and by the great variety of such doxologies, almost every church having its own special one. The doxology in the Venice Hymnal is:

"Sit Iaue Patri cum Genito, Amortum et Paracleti,
Protes ut hunc promiserat,
Assunta modigina.

In the Roman Brev. of 1570 and 1632 the doxology reads:

"Deo Patri sit gloria,
Ex Filio, qui a mortuis
Surrexit, ac Paracleti,
In sempiterna (ascullorum) aculia."

But whatever the form was it was, as a rule, merely a general doxology common to all the Penitential hymns, as indeed is often indicated by a rubric such as "Sic terminatur Hymnus mone ad Vesperas Sabattis sequentias" (Brev. Rom.). In the Aurelian MS. 153, only the words "Sit Iaue Patri." are added; and in the Vesp. D. xii., "Deo Patri sit gloria."

The variations in the six stanzas of the text proper are few and of small importance, viz. in st. iii. 3, 4, some ms. give "proimissum," and "ditannas," and in st. iv. 1, 4, some ms. give "paternissimam." In the Roman Brev. of 1632 the variations introduced are:

il. 1.

Qui dicerit Paracleti.

il. 2.

Attestatus domum Dei.

il. 3.

Spiritus Paternae destinat.

vi. 3.

Te uiui et te trinque Spiritum.

These variations however rest on no ms. authority, but are merely due to the tasteless revision of the Breviary hymns made in 1628-31, under Urban VIII., and are simply some what clumsy attempts to improve the rhythm and scanlon. That in st. ii. 1, is specially to be regretted, as it destroys one of the most characteristic features of the hymn, viz. the way in which it preserves the correct quantity of the penultimate of Paracleti, contrary to the general practice in Latin.

(8) Additions to the Original Text. In some ms. as additional stanzas is given between st. v. and vi. as follows:

"Da gaudiorum praemia,
Da gratiarum munera,
Veni et rasce in animo tempore."

This is contained e.g. in two ms. in the 12th cent., and Liturg. Misc. 370, f. 117, circa 1490, and is one of the early printed books, e.g. the Basel Brev. of 1498. But it is wanting in the earliest ms. (e. g. it is not in the Durham Hymnal; Vesp. D. xii.; Jul. A. vi.; Liturg. Misc. 320; Patal. 30; C. C. C. 391), and the true ending of the hymn is st. vi., which forms the real conclusion of the hymn being needed.

Another extraneous stanza is sometimes inserted after st. vi., viz.:

"Dudum sacra pectora,
Tua replesi gratia,
Dispita nunc picaremo,
Et da quieta tempora."

This is found in the Durham Hymnal, but it has no business in the text, and really belongs to the "Beata nobis gaudia" (p. 180, l.). In the Sarum Brev. it is attached, along with the doxology, "Sit Iaue Patri cum Filio," to other Pentecostal hymns.

There is thus no doubt that the hymn should really consist of the 24 lines printed together as above, ending with the stanza "Per te sciens, da, Patrem." We may add that in a ms. circa 1100, in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 18802, f. 24), a rubric regarding the "Venice Hymnal" is followed by a hymn in four st., viz.:

i. Te nunc Deus pessime.
ii. Dudum sacra pectora.
iii. Ille, Christe nunc Paracleti.
iv. Sit Iaue Patri cum Filio.

Of these st. ii., iv. are noted above, st. i. is from the "Beata nobis gaudia," and st. iii. is given in the Durham Hymnal as part of the "Jam Christus ascendit descendit" (p. 476, l.).

ii. Authorship and Date. It is curious how very little is known of the authorship of this hymn, which has taken deeper hold of the Western Church than any other mediaeval hymn, the Te Deum alone excepted. The real author is as yet unknown, but it has been ascribed (a) to the Emperor Charles the Great (Charlemagne), (b) to St. Ambrose, (c) to Gregory the Great, and to (d) Rhabanus Maurus. We may discuss these in order.

(a) Charlemagne. The best known and most widely accepted opinion is that which ascribes it to the Emperor Charles the Great. Even Dom Gueranger (Institutionum Liturgicarum vol. i, p. 233) says that he thought it unlikely that such a hymn, which has taken deeper hold of the Western Church than any other mediaeval hymn, the Te Deum alone excepted. The real author is as yet unknown, but it has been ascribed (a) to the Emperor Charles the Great (Charlemagne), (b) to St. Ambrose, (c) to Gregory the Great, and to (d) Rhabanus Maurus. We may discuss these in order.

"It is told of the blessed man [Notker] that one day when he went through the dormitory he listened, for there was hard by a mill, whose wheel was revolving slowly for lack of water, and he found it sounding something like words. And the man of God, hearing this, straightway was in the spirit, and produced that most beautiful hymn, and gave utterance to the honey-sweet melody from the same kind spirit which possessed him: I mean the Sequence on the Holy Spirit 'Sankti Spiritus' which he had completed it he sent it as a present to the Emperor Charles the Great, who was then already at Rome. And the Christian Emperor sent back to him the messenger that with which the same Spirit had inspired him, viz., the hymn 'Venii, Creator Spiritus.'"

Here we have the original story which has spread so widely, and has been so generally accepted. The words in italics were really found in Eckehard's autograph ms. at St. Gall (No. 556, p. 342), but are a manifest blunder, for Charles the Great (Charlemagne) died in 814, and Notker was born about 816 after, circa 846. The Charles to whom the St. Gall tradition really referred was probably Charles the Fat, and such an interchange of courtesies is not at all unlikely to have taken place between Notker and that Emperor. Charles the Fat paid Notker special attention during his visit to St. Gall in 855, and the incident which Eckehard relates may well have taken place soon after. I that the hymn was actually composed by Charles the Fat does not seem probable. If however this tradition has any foundation of fact it implies that the hymn was at that time newly composed, or at least had lately come into the Emperor's hand. This suggests that it was written in the last quarter of the 9th cent., and by a person who was in some way connected with the Emperor of Germany.

(2) St. Ambrose. Like most other important Latin hymns this also has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, e.g. by Garaviti. It appears as his in some early printed books, e.g. in the "Aurelianum Christianum," Leipzig, 1675, and is included in some of the earlier editions of his works, e.g. Paris, 1614. It is not however claimed for him by the Benedictine editors of his works, nor by Burghii in his "Juni sacrorum cenarit di Saint Ambrogio," 1852, and there is really no evidence whatever of his authorship. It is true that it bears traces of his influence. The lines:

"Accende lumen sensibus, Infunde amorem cordibus," recall the words "Infunde lumen cordibus" of the very ancient hymn "Gloria Patri Trinitatis," (p. 842, iii.), which is probably his work; while II. 3, 4 of st. iv. are borrowed directly from the "Veni Redemptor gentium" (p. 1211, ii.), which is certainly his. But the mere fact that it borrows two lines from a well-known hymn of his is no evidence whatever that as a whole it is his work. The hymns of St. Ambrose soon became the common property of the Church, and later writers had no scruples about making free use of them in their own compositions. The "Veni Creator" is ascribed to St. Ambrose by no ancient writer, and the ascription to him may be set aside without hesitation.

(3) Gregory the Great. None 1. p. 242 (followed by Klotz, p. 17, p. 74), ascribes it to Gregory the Great, on the following grounds:—(1) Its correspondence with his known hymns and his other works. (2) Its classical metre, with occasional rhymes. (3) The correct quantity of the penultimate of Paradisiacum, showing a knowledge of Greek. These arguments have a certain value, and Gregory is in himself not an unlikely person to have written the hymn. But had it been the work of a writer of such repute as Gregory in the 6th cent. we might fairly have expected to come across some early notices of it. It is however attributed to him by no early writers. It is wanting in the earliest hymnals which we possess, and is not alluded to by Bede (d. 735) in his "De arte metrica," where many early hymns are mentioned. It is quite preposterous to assign it, on purely subjective grounds, and in the absence of any external testimony, to so early and so celebrated a writer as Gregory.

(4) Rhabanus Maurus, sometime Archbishop of Mainz (b. circa 776, d. 856). Christopher Brower, a learned Jesuit, included the "Veni Creator" in his edition of Rhabanus's Novella (Mainz, 1617, p. 74). He was evidently not at all certain that it was really by Rhabanus, and does not print the text in full. He gives no definite information regarding the ms. which he used, and it does not seem to have been of any great antiquity.

Some of the hymns in this ms. are certainly not by Rhabanus, and his claim to the rest is very shadowy. The ms. contained 29 hymns, but of these Professor E. D. Hinck, in his critical edition of the Corpus of Rhabanus (Poetae Latini aevi Carolini, vol. ii., Berlin, 1844), has only seen reason enough to accept two, both of which he gives among the pieces "incertae origines," and he did not find sufficient ground to include the "Veni Creator" among the poems doubtfully ascribed to Rhabanus. It is indeed true that in Rhabanus's prose work De Universo, Bk. i., chapter iii. (Migne's PP. Lat. colls. 23-26) there are some phrases which resemble portions of this hymn; but None, 1. p. 251, and A. Trench, in his Sac. Lat. Poetry (ed. 1864, pp. 175, 185) give quite as close parallels from the writings of St. Augustin and others.

Here we are compelled to leave the question. The evidence is too scanty to draw a positive conclusion. The hymn is clearly not the work of St. Ambrose nor of Charles the Great. Nor is there sufficient evidence to allow us to ascribe it either to Gregory the Great, to Rhabanus Maurus, or to any of the ecclesiastics connected with the court of Charles the Fat. The references to the hymn do not help us much in determining the authorship, as the following facts will show.

The earliest definite allusion to it (apart from the statement of Eickhardt), is that it was used at a Synod at Helms in 1049 (see C. J. Helffe's Gemeinergeschichte). Vol. iv. 2nd ed. 1655, p. 209) it gives a quotation from the Annalis Ord. Benedicti, ed. (vol. vi.) p. 53, account of the (Marouli) at Sias, but in i. in 1054 in the Mone, l. p. 24 ms. earlier than this. It is probably in Thomasius, 1. 304, and he includes the in this case it together, for T early ms. as

A tr. which seems to be a variation of this text (but regarded by some as an older tr.) is found in The whole Psalter, translated into English metre, &c., John Daye, London, N.D. (Brit. Mus., Lincoln Cathedral Library, &c.). [Psalters, English, p. 917, § II.] This is known as Archbp Parker's Parker's Psalter, and was written by him whilst in exile, 1553-1558 (Absolute Psalterium versum metrico lingua vulgari, Parker's Diary, 1557). The tr. seems to be the preceding rendered into more even feet. It is in 18 st. of 4 l., of which st. i., ii., and xvi. are as follows:

(1) "Come holy ghost: eternal God,
Which dost from God proceed,
The father first: and eke the sonne,
One God as we do reade.

(3) "Oh visit thou our minds and harts,
Thy heavenly grace inspire:
That we in truth and godlinsse,
May rest our whole desire.

(15) "Be laude to God: the father dye,

One God in Trinity.

(16) "Praye we that Christ: the saviour.
Vouchsafe his spirte to sende,
To all which true: proffesse his name,

The next form of this tr. is that in "The Ordering of Priests" in The Book of Common Prayer, and given therein in 1662. This is also in 18 st. of 4 l., of which st. i., ii., and xvi. are as read as in modern copies of the Prayer Book:

(1) "Come, Holy Ghost, eternal God,
Which dost from God proceed,
Both from the Father and the Son,
The God of peace and love;

(2) "Visit our minds, into our hearts.
Thy heavenly grace inspire;
That truth and godliness we may possess with full desire.

(15) To God the Father land and praise,

VENI CREATOR SPIRITUS 1209

From this text two or three centuries, all beginning with st. i., have been adopted by a few hymnal compilers.

2. Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire. By Bp. John Cosin. This is in his Collection of Private Devotions in the Practice of the Ancient Church, called the Hours of Prayer, &c., 1827. This book was modelled on the Primers which were extensively used during the reigns of Henry vii. and Elizabeth. It contains devotions and a hymn for each of the Canonical Hours, together with other devotions, hymns, and prayers (see Reprint by J. G. & F. Rivington, London, 1838). This tr. is appointed for the “Third Hour,” and is given in 18 lines. It was also given in an unaltered form in “The Ordering of Priests” and “The Consecration of Bishops” in The Book of Common Prayer, 1862. This and the c.m. tr. above were the only metrical hymns which have been legally sanctioned in the Church of England by both Church and State. In the hymn books of the last century Bp. Cosin’s tr. is rarely found; but in modern collections it is largely used, and in almost every instance in an unaltered form. In the Gospel Magazine for 1774, p. 449, it is given as a “Hymn to the Holy Spirit, modernized from the Office for Ordination.” The opening lines are:—

“Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire, And with uncreated fire.”

The signature “Minimus” is that of A. M. Toplady. This “modernized” form of the text has never come into use, and was excluded, even by Toplady himself, from his Ps. & Hys., 1776.

3. Creator Spiritu, by Whose aid. By J. Dryden. This appeared in his Miscellaneous Poems, pt. iii., 1693, and the Primer of 1706 and 1732, in 7 st. of unequal length, numbering 39 lines in all. It is found in numerous collections, both of the past and the present centuries, but always in an altered and abbreviated form. One of the first to adapt it for congregational purposes was J. Wesley, who included it in his Ps. & Hys., 1741, in an abbreviated form. He was followed by G. Whitefield, 1753, A. M. Toplady, 1776, and others, until the adoption of the hymn became general. The variations which have been introduced into the text are so many and various that it is almost impossible to set them forth in an intelligible manner. The text of given hymnal which may be consulted should be compared with the original in the Lyra Brit., 1857, p. 209. In some American collections it begins “O Source of uncreated light.”

This is in L.M. in 28 l. It is given in the Scottish Hys., 1870, as a tr. by Miss Winckworth, in error. It is also in J. Chandler’s Hys. of the Church, mostly Primitive, 1841, No. 50.

5. Come, Holy Ghost, Creator, come, Inspire the [these] souls of Thine. Tate and Brady. This is the c.m. version in the Supplement as above, circa 1700 (3rd ed., 1702). It also appears in J. Chandler’s Hys. of p. 91, with alteration and again in his li. Primiire, 1841, No. 54 without any indication is usually attributed.

We have also seen two or three additional references to American trs., but have been unable to verify them.

The great similarity which is founded in the majority of these trs. suggests that many of the later translators were very much indebted to their predecessors for the tarsences and vigour of their renderings. This suggestive- ness is most apparent in the more striking passages of the hymn. [J. J.]

VENI, JAM VENI, benignissimae. [Whit-lines from a 12th cent. ms. at Mainz. It is almost identical with a portion of the Oratio also found as No. 1 in the Medieval compilation called the Meditationes of St.

Augustine (Venice, 1553, f. 11). The passage in St. Anselm is:

VENI Redemptor gentium (omnia). St.

Ambrose. [Christmas.] This is one of the twelve hymns assigned to St. Ambrose by the Benedictine editors. It is plainly referred to the work of St. Ambrose by St. Augustine

(Sermo 372), and is definitely cited as his by

Pope Celestine, at a Council held at Rome, 460;

by Faustus, who in 455 became Bp. of Rhetia

(Riez in France), in his Epistolad a Gratiam donatum; by M. A. Cassiodorus (d. 575), in other commentary on the Psalms; and by other early writers. The text in 7 st. is in Daniel, i. No. 16, with other notes at iv. pp. 4, 353

(quoting at length the references to St.

Augustine, Pope Celestine, Faustus and Cassirodorus, and citing it as in a 9th cent. ms. at Bern); in None, No. 30, and others. Sometimes a stanza is prefixed, as follows:—

"Intende qui regis Israel,

Super chcrubin qui sedes

Appare Ephraem, coram excelsa

Potentiam tuam, et veni."

Celestine and Cassiodorus however cite the hymn as beginning "Veni Redemptor gentium"; and this stanza does not appear to be found in any ms. earlier than the 14th cent., and has obtained no currency save in the Cistercian Brevariaries. In any case these lines are not by St. Ambrose, for they are simply the Vulgate of Ps.

lxx., which begins: "Qui regis Israel intende; qui deducis velut omen, Joseph. Quo sedes super chersin.

manifestare coram Ephrem, benjamin et Manasse excelsa potentiam tuam, et veni, ut salvas facias nos."

The hymn is found in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Mozarabie of 1502, and other Breviriaries; generally in so many Christmas Eve or Christmas Day. But it is not in the Roman Romanuor, and can hardly be said to be in use at the present day, a somewhat unfortu- nate ecclesiastical prudery having set aside this noble composition. It must however be confessed that a strictly literal English version is hardly defensible for modern congregational use. The imagery is partly borrowed from Ps. xix.

[W. A. S.]

None. No. 30, gives the "Veni Redemptor" text from a Richenian ms. of the 9th cent, or a Trier of the 8th or 9th, a Munich of the 10th cent., &c. (prefixing the st. "Intende qui regis" from ms. of the 14th cent. at Karlsruhe and Liechenthal). Thomasius, ii. p. 371, cites it as in two Vatican mss. of the 8th cent. It is in five mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, viz. in three of the early Ely Church (Vesp. D. xi. f. 32b; Jul. A. vi. f. 38, and Harl. 2961, f. 226), and two of the early Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 24; Add. 30851, f. 120). Also in the Bern ms., No. 458, of the 10th cent., and in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p.
239. In the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Suttese Society), 1851, p. 43, it is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 13). The text is also in Bässler, No. 26; Wueckernagel, i., No. 12; Hymn. Sarisb., 1851, p. 71; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 87; Migne’s PP. Lat. Lxxvi., col. 114; G. M. Droysen’s Hym. Mnissiacen., 1888, from a 10th cent. ms.; Card. Newman’s Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, and others.

This hymn has been rendered through the German into English, as follows:—

1. Nun komm der Heidenhailand. A full and faithful tr. by M. Luther, 1st pub. in Eyn Enchiridion, Erfurt, 1524. Thence in Wueckernagel, iii. p. 12, in Schirck’s ed. of Luther’s Geistl. Lieder, 1834, p. 4, and the Ue. L. S., 1851, No. 17. Tr. as:—

VENI SANCTE SPIRITUS

Every third line, we may add, ends in iun, and this seems to be the third line of the Sequence. In the hands of any but a first-rate writer such a verse-scheme would certainly have produced a sense of coldness and artificiality, but here "art conceals art," and the glow of devotion so transfigures and transfigures all that one is content to admire the beauty and the skill that hatch it out, I MSS. The ms. also show that this Sequence does not date from the earliest period of Sequence-writing. It is indeed found in four mss., at St. Gall, which, for the most part, date from the 11th century. (Nos. 376, p. 434; 378, p. 232; 380, p. 28; 382, p. 250); but Herr Idelmos, the librarian, having kindly examined the mss., informs me that in no case is this Sequence in a hand earlier than the 13th century. He adds that it is "everywhere a piece inserted by another, later, hand than that of the ms. volume in general." This agrees with what we have otherwise observed. Up to the present time this sequence has not been found in any of the 1200 mss.

For example, it is not in any of the early ms. indexed under the article Sequences (p. 1042), nor is it included in any of the 16 Tractaries of Limoges, written prior to 1200, or in any of the 55 per cent. of which are printed by Dreesen, in his Prosimium Luminis, 1889. It is found in two mss. of the 13th century, now in the Brit. Mus., one writing in the style of the beginning of the 13th century (Add. 21639, f. 62); the other written in France about the end of the century (Add. 23933, f. 426). It is also in two early 14th century Paris mss., now in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 15905, f. 1810; Harl. 2931, f. 3490); in a Hereford Missal, circa 1390, and a York Missal, circa 1390, now in the Bodleian, of which it is not in the fine Sarum Missal, of circa 1370, now in the Bodleian (Barber 5); but it is in the London ed. of 1496, f. 241. In the Lincoln Missal of circa 1460, now in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 11411, f. 3036) it is not found in the offices for Whitmonica, but is in an appendix of Sequences, the use of which we ascertained, but not of obligation ("ad plactus"). Also in an early ms. in the University Library at Cambridge (L. t. 100), but in a section of that manuscript, which was written about the beginning of the 13th century. The printed text is given in Mone, No. 164, from the St. Gall ms., No. 378, and later sources: Daniel, ii, pp. 35, 384, iii. p. 267, v. p. 89, from a Ribemont ms. of the 13th century, &c., Vaccarangell, i, No. 160; Bischof, No. 89; Rehrin, No. 125; Card. Newman's Hymni Ephemerides, p. 476; F. A. Marchand, n. y., 1753, p. 92, &c. In regard to the statements of Mr. Duffield (see below) that it is contained in the older primate and episcopal mss., we are informed that Mone does not seem to have found it in any of the Pechelbronn mss., now at Karlsruhe, and that the earliest Einstein Missal (which Moré, 1865, p. 522, ascribes to the monastic of St. Gall), there, cites it containing it, is of the 13th century.

iii. Authorship. Here critics are very far from being at one. The French tradition as a rule has not attempted to affirm any author's name to the sequence, and so e.g. M. Leon Gantier, in his Les Tropes, 1880, p. 210, and his Poésie Religieuse, 1887, pp. 17, 130, speaks of it as an anonymous sequence of the second period, written not earlier than the beginning of the 13th century. It has, however, by others been ascribed to a variety of authors, e.g. (1) to Robert ii. of France, (2) to Hermanus Contractus, (3) to Archbishop Stephen Longfellow, (4) to Pope Innocent iii., (5) to Pope Innocent iv.

(1) Robert ii. of France. During the last fifty years the ascription to King Robert has been the usual one. It rests however on no foundation whatever, except the statement of one unknown editor of the section "De prosa sequentia" (see p. 967, lii.), that section contains less than a dozen lines, but in these successions of words hardly of any value. The time, however, is when the confusion and the unessential information. Thus Robert ascribes not only the "Veni Sancte Spiritus," but also the "Chorus nova Jerusalem" (p. 294, ii.), which is much more likely to be by Fulbert of Chartres. Then by a strange perjury it adjoins the "Salve regina" from Hermannus Contractus, and in compensation ascribes to him the "Sancti Spiritus" only, which is certainly not the case. As will be seen by referring to p. 967, li., Durandus is the only ancient author who ascribes the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" to King Robert. Neither other ancient chroniclers cited there do so, nor does the Chronicon Taronense (to 1236, see Robert ii. In various); and while with Malchqvist (p. 531) Duffield claims to Robert the "Sanciti Spiritus adit," he does not mention the "Veni Sancte Spiritus." (Ed. Stubbs in the Rolls Series, 1877, p. 186). Added, and as much in form is much later than Robert's time. It is possible that Durandus, when he said that Robert composed "sequiniam ilam Veni Sancte Spiritus" pronounced from 1213, or 1214, to the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" (Reple).' (vii.), whether or not these can be no doubt that the ascription of the "Veni Sancte Spiritus," to emitte coelitus" to Robert is without any sufficient reason.

(2) Hermanus Contractus (b. 1013, d. 1064). Equally little, or even less, reason exists as for ascribing this sequence to Hermannus Contractus. Cardinal Forno, in his Rema Liturgicarum, Rome, 1871, p. 336, says that it "has been by some attributed to Hermannus Contractus." This attribution has recently been warmly espoused by W. S. Duffield, in the New English, vol. iv., 1886, pp. 613-622, and in his Int, Hyg. 1889, pp. 149-156. Mr. Duffield took great pains to make out a good case, but his all-guts fail to produce anything of any sort that can be called proof of the authorship.

(3) Stephen Langfellow. The same attribution to Archbishop of Canterbury by Innocent iii., on June 17, 1267; performed his first episcopal act in England at Winchester on July 26, 1213; d. July 9, 1215. Several ascriptions are found in a commentary on the Clavis de Hominaud of Meilo of Sardis (d. circa 176), pub. by Cardinal J. B. Pitra in his Scripticeni Episcopaci, vol. III, 1855, p. 130, "Nevertheless it is not sufficient to advance as testimony, what Magister Stephanus de Lange التن in a man venerable in life and doctrine, by the grace of God Archbishops of Canterbury, says in the praise of the Holy Spirit, in that excellent sequence which he composed concerning the Holy Spirit, thus." (then are quoted lines 7, 12-19, 24, beginning "Consolator optimus"). Pitra regards this commentary as the work of an English Cistercian of the 13th century, and says that this statement, "of a contemporary and a fellow-countryman," who was clearly a careful writer, and skilled in literary matters, one of the first to write upon the Holy Spirit, is of great weight. It is to the present writer certainly a valuable testimony, but hardly conclusive in the absence of further evidence.

(4) Pope Innocent iii. The ascription to Innocent iii., is found in chapter xviii. of the Vita sancti Notkeri, by Eckhard von St. Gotthardt, as follows: There may freely be added here a conversation which, in our times, took place with the Roman See ("sedem Romana") concerning the blessed man (Notker). The venerable Abbot of St. Gall, Ulric, of pious memory, the sixth of this name (Ulrich v. d. 1199, and Ulrich vi. d. 1219), came to Rome to Pope Innocent iii., having been sent on an embassy by King Frederick the Second, afterwards Emperor (crowned as King at Mainz, Dec. 9, 1212; crowned as Emperor at Acre, on July 13, 1215). After they had talked together of many matters, and conferred in turn on various matters, it happened that Mass, concerning the Holy Spirit, with the Sequence "Sancti Spiritus in aditus nobis grata," the abbot had composed before the Pope (Apostolicum), the abbot also being present. That Pope had also composed a Sequence on the Holy Spirit, viz., "Sanctus Spiritus.

When the Mass and the prayers were over, they met again for conversation, and among other things the Pope asked the abbot as follows: 'We hear, Father Notker, and in what way do you keep his anniversary? For there were at that time certain things written of him in the books of Sequences, which the Pope had read. The abbot replied that he was a simple monk, though certainly learned and holy. To whom the Pope rejoined, 'Jo you not keep his festival.'" (Notker was not however beatified till 1512. See p.
This passage, with the words in italics, is contained in Ekkhard's autograph copy, written about 1220, and now at St. Gall (MS. No. 556, p. 342). From other sources we know that Ulrich vi. was sent to Rome by the Emperor Frederick to attend the Lateran Council (1215), and the conversation recorded above probably took place either then or at Whitsuntide, 1216, for Innocent iii. died July 16, 1216 (see the Mittheilungen zur katholischen Geschichte, St. Gall, vols. xi. p. 130, and xvii. [178], p. 114). Doubt has been cast on Ekkhard's statement on the ground that he blundered in ascribing the "Veni Creator" to Charlemagne. But in the present case it must be remembered that he was a monk at St. Gall at the time of which he speaks, and there is every reason to believe that he heard the story from the lips of Ulrich himself on his return from Rome. The facts above stated concerning the St. Gall manuscript afford a strong presumption that the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" was unknown at St. Gall till Ulrich brought it back with him from Rome, and that it was at his instigation that it was inserted in the early sequentiaries at St. Gall. And finally Innocent iii. was undoubtedly a man of great ability, and much more competent to have written such a poem than any of the others to whom it has been ascribed (see also pp. 1081-1088).

The whole evidence as to authorship may be summed up thus. The Sequence is clearly not earlier than about the beginning of the 13th cent. It is certainly neither by Robert nor by Hermannus Contractus. The most probable author is Innocent iii.

iv. Use. As already stated the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" is not found in any of the very early Missales or Sequentiarii. When it began to come into use it did not at once displace the older Whitsuntide sequence, i.e. the "Sancti Spiritus adsit," for that continued, as to be used on Whitsunday up till the revision of the Roman Missal in 1568-70. Consequently the "Veni Sancte," though occasionally used on Whitsunday (as in the Breslau Missal of 1483), was almost universally appointed for use on one or more of the immediately succeeding week days.

So e.g. the Langres Missal, circa 1491, assigns it to the Monday; the Angers of 1469 to Tuesday; the Münster of 1469 to Tuesday; the Liege circa 1485 to Tuesday and Saturday; the Roman of 1469 to Tuesday; the Augsburg of 1489 to Tuesday; the Paris circa 1485 to Saturday; the Paris of 1481 to Saturday. In other Missals it is also found under the title of the Missa (De antiqua ecclesiastica disciplina) says that in some places such as Limoges and Chalon sur Slyone, it was sung as a carol in the Cathedral close after Vespers or Compline on Ascension Day.

Finally it had the honour of being chosen as one of the four (see p. 1042, i.) sequences which were alone retained in the Roman Missal of 1570, and is there appointed for use on Whitsunday also throughout the week, the text happily being left unaltered both at that time and at the subsequent revision undertaken by Urban vii. (1364). We may add that the text, with a full historical and theological commentary, is given in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchengesangen, vol. ii., 1886, pp. 61-76.

The Veni Sancte Spiritus, Et, has frequently been tr. into German. Through two of these versions it has passed into English as follows:

i. Heiliger Geist, du Träster mein. This is a full and good tr. by Martin Müller, in his Meditationes sanctiorum patronum, Görlitz, 1584, where it is entitled "A very beautiful prayer to God the Holy Ghost;" and thence in Wachermagel, v.

VENI SANCTE SPIRITUS: Reple. [Whitsuntide]. The text of this antiphon is printed at p. 631, ii. It is found in a ms. of the 11th cent., now in the British Mus. (Harl. 2961, f. 102), appointed for use at Vespers on the Vigil of Pentecost, and reading "in unitatem." Also in another Brit. Mus. ms. of circa 1100 (Add. 18302, f. 14, and f. 25). In many ms. only the first part ("Veni ... accede") is given, as in a ms. of the 11th cent., now in the Brit. Mus. (Harl. 6151, f. 240), and this form is found in the Sarum Missal of 1498, appointed for the Tuesday and Saturday after Whitsunday, and in the present Roman Missal for Whitsunday and also throughout that week. When Durandus and the earlier writers on Hermannus Contractus ascribed the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" respectively to Robert ii. and to Hermannus Contractus, it is not unlikely that they really meant to refer to this antiphon and not to the "Veni Sanete Spiritus, Et eminite"; and the Add. 18302, which was apparently written in Swabia, is also one of the earliest sources of the "Salve regina" (p. 981, ii.) which is most probably by Hermannus Contractus. But there is not yet sufficient evidence to allow us to assign the antiphon definitely to either of these authors.

This antiphon has passed into English through the German (see p. 631, ii.), and also directly. Among the versions directly from the Latin may be mentioned:-

VENI superne spiritus: Purgati Christi sanguis. C. Cofin. [Whitsuntide.]. Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1736 and in Cofin's Hymni Sacri the same year, p. 55. In the Paris and later French Brev., it is the hymn for the 1st Vespers of Whitsunday. Text in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. 1. Come, Heavenly Spirit, come. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hg. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, Ember, 9, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

Veni, veni, Rex gloriae. [Advent.]
Mr. Crippen says he tr. this "from a ms. of the 15th century (with music) at Karlsruhe." This text is in More, No. 35. Mr. Crippen's tr. appeared in his Ancient Hymns and Poems, &c., 1868, in 23 st. of 4 l. as "O come, O come, Thou glorious King." In Martinius's Hymns, &c., 1875, st. xii., xiii., xvii., xviii., and xix., are given as "Give us, O Fount of Purity." These stanzas form a most acceptable hymn on Desiring Holiness. Also tr. by Dr. H. Bonar as "Come, O come, Thou King of glory." [J. J.]

Venit et coelo Mediator alto. [Passion-tide.] This is the hymn at Lauds in the office of the Prayer of our Lord Jesus Christ on the Mount of Olives. See a note on this office under Aspice at Verbum Patris (p. 87, ii.). This office appears to be of very recent date, viz. since 1830. It is found in the eds. of the Roman Breviary, pub. at Lyons, 1852, and Tournay, 1879, but not among the offices for universal use. Tr. as:

1. Daughter of Sion, cease thy bitter tears. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 61, and his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 34. It passed, with slight alterations, into the Hymnary, 1872, and others.

2. Sion's daughter, weep no more. By Sir H. W. Baker, in the trial copy of H. A. & M., 1859, and the ed. of 1861. It was revised for the ed. of 1875. Also in Kennedy, 1863, &c.

Another tr. is:

From high heaven, the Mediator. J. Wallace. 1874. [W. A. S.]

Vernborgne Gottesliebe du. G. Tersteegen. [The Love of God.] First pub. in his Geistliches Blumengärlein, 1729, Bk. iii., No. 26, in 10 st. of 7 l., entitled, "The longing of the soul quietly to maintain the secret drawings of the Love of God." Although a fine hymn and much used in English, its German use has been almost confined to the early Moravian collections. Included in full in the 3rd ed. 1741, of the Sammlung geist- und lieblicher Lieder, and omitting st. iv., v., as No. 542, in the Herrnhut G. B., 1735; but not repeated in the Briöder G. B., 1778, or the Kleiné Briöder G. B., 1870. Tr. as:

1. Thou hidden love of God, whose height. A spirited tr. by J. Wesley, omitting st. iv., v. [trs. of these sts. by S. Jackson were incorporated when he reprinted Wesley's tr. in his Life of Tersteegen, 1832 (1837, p. 409)], in Ps. & Hymn., 1738, and Hymn. & Sacred Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 71). Written while at Savannah, and in 4-line st. Included, somewhat altered, as No. 3 in the Wesley Hymn. & Spr. Songs, 1753; as No. 375 in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780 (1875, No. 344); and in the Meth.

22. Noe pro diokev.

The second, written about 1516, has 1, 3, 21, 22, 23, 9, 13, 14, 19, 156, 8.

23. Vater corn. No. 337, has a form in 29 stanzas from ms. of the 15th. cent. at Venice, and the same form is in a ms. in the Bodleian, Paris, and another ms. in the 14th. cent. In the Paris ms. it is given as by Jacobus de Bendumelius. The text, as Mone prints it, has stanza 1, 3, 4, 7, 13, 14, 15, 12, 13, 24, 16, 26, as above. The remaining 12 st. of this text need not here be noted.

Verbum Dei, Deco natum. [St. John the Evangelist.] Archbishop Trench remarks, "This sublime hymn, though not As of St. Victor's, is all altogether worthy of him." It is found in a ms. of the end of the 12th. cent. in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc. 341, f. 42), and another circa 1200 (Liturg. Misc., 340, f. 141); also in a ms. of the 13th. cent. in the British Museum (Armeli, 156, f. 93). Among the St. Gall ms. in No. 376, 381 of the 11th. cent., No. 66 of the 12th. cent. and others. It is included in the Magdelburg Missal, 1480, and many later German missals, generally assigned to the festival of St. John at the Lateran Gate. Pl. ii. begins with st. ix. Volat avis sine meta. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 709, Daniel, i, p. 166; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 73; and Krehm, No. 408. Tr. as:—

2. Word of God, so long awaited, Pl. i. Higher soars his eagle, higher, Pl. ii. By E. A. Dayman, in the Sarum Hymns, 1866. In Pl. ii. at st. iii. the words by Mr. Dayman.

5. Be the Word of God, the fated, Pl. i. As an eagle un molested, Pl. ii. By W. M. Dufield, in his Latin Hymn Writers, 1859.

Verbum quod ante saecula. [Ephiphany.] Given in the Sens Brez, 1726, and the Paris Brez, 1736, as the hymn for 1st Vespers for the Sundays after the Epiphany. It is in the T. Chandler's Hymn of the Primitive Church, 1837: Card. Newman's Hymn Ecclesiastic, 1838 and 1865: and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

1. The Word, who dwelt above the skies. By J. Chandler, in his Hymns of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 56. In the 1st ed. of H. A. & M., 1861, it was extensively altered by the Compliers, and was included as "The Word, with God the Father One." This was omitted from the revised ed. of 1875. The original tr., with slight alterations, is in the Hymnary, 1872, &c.

3. Word of God, Eternal Son. From Thy throne. By B. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anteants, 1850, p. 57. This is based upon the tr. by I. Williams as above, and several lines are taken from that tr. It is in O. Shipley's Annum Sanctum, 1884.

Other tr. are:—

1. Word that ere creation's morn. W. J. Bree. 1832-55.

2. Word! from the Father's bosom born. J. D. Chambers. 1857. [J. J.]

Verbum Supernum prodiens, A Patre olim exiens. [Advent.] This hymn, a short and good summary of the leading ideas of Advent, is given as No. 33 in Mone, with the remark that it is probably of the second half of the 5th. cent. Daniel gives the text at i. No. 74, and at iv. p. 144 cites it as in a Rhinens ms. of the 11th. cent. It is considered as a hymn of the 11th. cent. Among the British Museum ms. it is found in three 11th. cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 29; Jul. A. vi. f. 31b; Harl. 2961, f. 225b); in an 11th. cent. Mozarabie Hymnarium (Add. 30851, f. 112); an 11th. cent. Mozarabie Breve (Add. 30848, f. 73), &c. It is in G. M. Dreyer's Hymn. Mozarabiae, 1888, from a 10th. cent. ms.; in a ms. of the 11th. cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p. 239); in a ms. of the 11th. cent. at St. Gall, No. 413; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th. cent. ms. at Durham (D. iii. 32, f. 11). It is included in the older Romans (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Brevaries, the Sarum use being at Matins on the 1st S. in Advent, and daily up to Christmas Eve. The text is also in Wackenregel, i. No. 55; the Hymnarium Sarb., 1851, p. 4; L. C. Biggs's annotated Hymn. A. & M., 1867, &c. In the Roman Brez, 1862, it is considerably altered, and begins, Verbum Supernum prodiens, E Patria aeterna sinu. This text is in recent eds. of that Breveary; in Daniel, i. No. 74; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 39; and Card. Newman's Hymn Ecclesiastic, 1838 and 1863. [J. M.]

Both forms of this hymn have been tr. as follows:—

i. The Original Text.

1. To earth descending, Word sublime. By J. M. Neale, in the H. Noted, 1852, No. 11, the Hymnary, 1882, &c.

Other tr. are:—

ii. The Roman Breviary Text.

2. O Thou, Who Thinse own Father's breast. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholicæ, 1849, p. 45, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 25. It is repeated in a few modern collections, sometimes as "Eternal Word, Who dost reside," as in the English Hyl., 1852–61, where it is changed from C. M. to L. M.; and again as "Thou Who didst leave Thy Father's breast."

4. O Heavenly Word, Eternal Light. By the Compilers of H. A. & M. It was given in the trial copy of that collection in 1859, the 1st ed., 1861, and the revised ed., 1875. It is also in other hymn-books. The first stanza is based upon Copeland's tr. as above.

Other trs. are:

1. The Period's done; and lo, to Day. Primer, 1706.
4. The Father's from Whom Thou didst leave. J. Chandle, 1837.
5. Dread Word, Who erst, when time was not. Hymnarium Anglicanum, 1844.
7. To the Word from God proceedeth. W. Bright, 1858.
8. O Thou, the Word, Supreme and blest. F. Trappes, 1855.

Verbum Supernum prodierit, Nec Patris lingues doxeteram. St. Thomas of Aquino. [Holy Communion.] Written about 1263 for the office for use on Corpus Christi (see Fange lingua gloriosi Corporis). It is found in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and, unaltered, in 1632), Mozarabic of 1502, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1736, and other Breviaries, its primary use being at Lauds on Corpus Christi.

"Most appropriately, says Daniel (i. No. 241), has St. Thomas made his hymn like the well-known hymn for the Nativity of the Lord (Verbum Supernum prodierit), A Patre omni extensa, for as to the Festival of the Eucharist, by which the Word made Flesh still dwell with us for ever, what need is there to explain at length the relationship that exists between it and the Nativity of the Lord?"

The text, in 5 st. and a doxology, is in Daniel, i. No. 241; Hymnarium Sarbri, 1851, p. 123, and others. St. iv. is a fine instance of perfect form and condensed meaning:—

"Se nascens dedit sacram, Convexus in edulium,
Se moriens in pretium,
Se regnans dat in praemium."

The last stanza, in salutaris hostia, has often been used along with the doxology as a separate hymn, e.g., at the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. Th of the 13th cen 1255, f. 175}; it cent. Add. 229 Sarum Brev. (i. British Museum Gall, 563, I, an i. No 222; K6 man's Hymns others.

Vere, Thomas Aubrey de, third of the late Sir Aubrey de Vere, Bart., was b in 1814, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. Whilst Dr. Newman was Rector of the Roman Catholic University, Dublin, he was one of the Professors there. His first volume of Poems appeared in 1842, and since then he has also pub. more than thirty distinct works, many of which are in verse, including Poems, 1855; May Carols, 1857; Poetical Works, 1884; and others. A few pieces from his po

Very, Jones, was b at Salem, Massachusetts, Aug. 28, 1813, his father, Jones Very, being a shipmaster. He graduated at Harvard College in 1836. He remained at his College, as tutor in Greek, for two years, and then entered the Unitarian Ministry (1843).
He has been engaged in the work of a preacher with a pastorate from the first, a great part of his time being devoted to literary pursuits.
In 1839 he pub. a volume of Essays and Poems, from which several pieces have been taken as hymns, including:—
1. Father! I wait Thy word. The sun doth stand, Waiting upon God.
2. Father, there is no chance to live with Thee.
Peter in the Father's Cure.
3. Father, Thy wonders do not singly stand. The Spirit-Land.
4. Whom Thou not visit me? The Divine Presence desires me.
These hymns were included in Longfellow and Johnson's Unitarian Book of Hymns, 1846.
In the same collection also appeared:—
1. I saw on earth another light. The Light Within.
The bud will soon become a flower. Sowing and Reaping.
2. Turn not from him who asks of thee. Kind Words.
In addition the following hymns appeared in Longfellow and Johnson's Hymns of the Spirit, 1864:—
3. One saint to another I heard say, "How long?"
The Future anticipated.
4. There is a world eye hath not seen. The Spirit World.
Most of these hymns are in the Lyra Sac.

for some time, he entred Harvard College, and graduated there in 1843. Subsequently he conducted a private school in Salem, where he was. April 28, 1853. Putnam gives three of Very's poetical pieces in his Singers and Songs,
&c., 1874, one of which, "There cometh o'er Theodolphus of Orleans, to Sedulius, &c. But it is found in all the mss. of the works of Fortunatus, as well as in all the printed editions, and there is no ground whatever for questioning his authorship. In further annotation it will be most convenient to treat

(1) of its Text, then (2) of its Origin and some of the allusions contained in it, and lastly
(3) of the variations in its Use.

This text Leo prints from a St. Petersburg ms. of the 9th cent., a Laudium ms. of the 9th and 9th cent., a Vatican ms. of the 9th cent. (Regiae, 329), and others. It agrees with the original readings of a 9th cent. ms. of Fortunatus, In the earliest Hymnaries, &c., it is found in much the same text, e. g.:

In the so-called Durham Ritual, an ancient ms. in the Chapter Library at Durham (A. iv. 19, f. 85), written in England in a hand of the 10th cent., in two Hymnaries, written in England in the 11th cent., and now in the Brit. Mus. (Vesp. D., xil. f. 64, and Harl., 2941, f. 2389). During the 11th cent. it began to be customary to omit st. ii., vii., viii. and so in the Vesp. D., xil. st. ii. was subsequently scratched through, st. vii., viii. being erased (in the Vesp. D., xil., the Latin text of almost all the hymns is repeated along with an Anglo-Saxon interlinear gloss, the Latin being arranged to suit the order of the gloss. In this form, at f. 635, the original st. ii., vii., viii. are still found, and there is neither original nor gloss of st. ix., x.), and the two following stanzas, not by Fortunatus, inserted in their place:—

ix. o crux ave, spes unica, hoc passionis tempore, acque pli6 justittiam, reique domi veniam.

Among other uses, which omit st. vii., viii. and give ix., x., are the Add. 30404., f. 109, a Breveiy written in Spain in the 11th cent., and now in the Brit. Mus.; the Arundel, 155, f. 154b, a Hymnarium written in England in the 12th cent., and now in the Brit. Mus.; Ac) also the Hymnario Missale Francorum, a ms. written in France in the 10th cent., and ed. by G. M. Drewes in 1885, p. 45. In the Harl. 2961, as above, the hymn is divided into two parts, p. 1. being st. i.–iv., viii., and pt. ii., beginning "Arbor decorata et fulida," being st. v., vi., vii. in a ms. of the 11th cent. now at Corpus Christi Colle, Cambridge (391, p. 246), st. iv. also immediately precedes st. viii. Other early uses which contain this hymn, include one of the 11th cent. now in the Brit. Mus. (Jul. A., vi., f. 460); one of the 11th cent. at Durham (B., iii., 32, f. 23); one of the 16th cent. at St. Gall, No. 196, Ac. The variations in the text are somewhat numerous, but we need only mention two, viz. st. i., l. 3, where the Add. 24133, reads "fuscula," and st. x., 1., 2, where the Arundel, 155, reads "collauct." Daniel, i, No. 139, ii. p. 382, iii. p. 254, iv. p. 79, prints the text with readings from a Fleury ms. of circa 900, a Rheims ms. of the 11th cent., &c. The printed text is also in Wackenroder, l. No. 80; the Hymn. Suriiburiac, 1851, p. 79; F. A. March's Lat. Hymn., 1878, p. 66; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiast., 1836 and 1845, Ac. In the revised Roman Breve of 1832 the text is of st. i., iii., vii., ix., x., slightly altered.

ii. Origin and Allusions. To appreciate this hymn we must bear in mind the circumstances under which it was written. The details are of more than usual interest, as a short summary will show:—

Fortunatus was then living at Poictiers, where his friend, Queen Rhedegund, founded a nunnery. Before the consecration of the nunnery church she desired to present certain relics to it, and among these she obtained from the Emperor Justin II. a fragment of the so-called True Cross, from which circumstance the nunnery received its name of the Holy Cross. This relic was sent in the first instance to Tours, and was left in charge of the Bishop, in order that he might convey it to Poictiers. (See the Historia Francorum, by Gregory of Tours [v. 394], Bk. ix., Chapter 40.) In the Aabo E. Idrisanda Sainte Radegonde, Poictiers, 1887, pp. 123–130, its journey to Poictiers is thus described: "Euncerted by a numerous body of clergy and of the faithful holding lighted torches, the Bishop started in the midst of liturgical chanting, which ceased not to resound in honour of the hallowed wood of the Redemption. A league from Poictiers the priests carried found the delegates of Rhedegund, Fortunatus at their head, rejoicing in the honour which had fallen to them; some carrying censers with perfumed incense, others torches of white wax. The meeting took place at Migné, at the place where, twelve centuries and a half later, the cross appeared in the air. It was on this occasion that the hymn "Vexilla Regis" was heard for the first time, chant of triumph composed by Fortunatus to salute the arrival of the True Cross. . . . It was the 19th November, 569."

The hymn was thus primarily a Processional hymn, written for use at the solemn reception of a relic of the Holy Cross. Inspired by the occasion the poet composed this poem of the Crucified King, one of the grandest hymns of the Latin church, in which glowing accents he invites us to contemplate the mystery of love accomplished on the Cross. The occasion thus gives the key to his choice of...
Peter de Gayston, the favourite of Edward II. of England. (Wright, at p. 259, pub. a second song on the same subject, "Raining Fange, like a thunder burrt insurance Angilum," which is a parody on the "Range lingus globerd Praeulm").

We may add that the text of Fortunatus, with a full critical and theological commentary, will be found in the Abbé S. G. Pimонт's Hymnes du Breveixie Romain, vol. ii., pt. ii., p. 30, Paris, 1844; and in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenhymnen, vol. 1, Paderborn, 1881, pp. 393-411. [J. M.]

The text into English of the Vexilla Regis include:

1. A Broad the Regal Banners are. This fine refrain begins in The Office of the Blessed Virgin Mary in English, &c., 1867 (Brod. Mus.), an account of which is given in the Churchman's Shilling Mag. for July, 1876. Hymn No. 169 in Thring's Coll., 1882, is taken from this tr., the text being slightly altered. It is based on the tr. of 1585 noted below, and is by far the best rendering of the Vexilla Regis in English.

2. The royal banner is unfurled. By J. Chandler, in his Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 74, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in his Hymns of the Church, mostly Primitive, 1841, No. 42. It is given in a limited number of hymnals only.

3. Now onward move the standards of our King. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hymns for the West, &c., 1848, p. 79, in 7 st. of 4 l. Its use is limited.

4. Forth flames the standard of our King. By Bp. J. Williams, in his Ancient Hymn, 1845, p. 61. This is repeated in a limited number of collections, including Schaff's Christ in Song, 1899, and others.

5. Forth comes the standard of the King: All hail! The mystery adored. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 89, and his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 59, in 7 st. of 4 l. It is given in several Roman Catholic hymn-books for schools and missions.

6. Forth goes the standard of the King. The sign of signs, the radiant Cross. This tr. appeared as No. 39 in Stretton's Church Hymn, 1850, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the Index it is said to be by Chandler, but its similarity to Chandler's tr. is so faint that the most which can be said of it is that it is Chandler's tr. re-written. It is a most successful rendering of the hymn. In its full, or in an abridged form it is found in later collections, Mr. Kennedy's Hymnals, 1852, Lowe's Gainesborough Coll., 1854, and several others.

7. The King of Kings His banner rears. By R. Campbell, in his Hymns and Anthems, 1850, p. 65, in 6 st. of 4 l.

8. See the royal banner streaming. By G. Reison, in his Hymns and Anthems, 1851, No. 59, in 6 st. of 4 l.

9. The royal banners forward go. By J. M. Neale, in his Medieval Hymn, 1851, p. 6, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in the Hymn, Noted, 1862, with the omission of st. vii. It is in C. U. both in its full and in several altered forms. Amongst the latter are (1) H. A. & M., altered by the Compiler, 1861, and repeated in other collections; (2) F. Pott's Hymns, &c., altered by the Editor, 1865; (3) Nicholson's Appendix Hymn, 1866, beginning st. xliii., ii. "Fulfilled is all that David told"; (4) The Hymnary, altered by the Editors, 1872, and others. When these various forms of Dr. Neale's tr. are taken into account, it is found that his rendering of the Vexilla Regis is more widely used than all others put together.

10. The royal banner forward goes. The Cross's mystery shines to view. By J. A. Johnston in his English Hymn, 1852. In the 1860 ed. he altered it to "See forward the King's banners go," and in the 1861 ed. to "Before us King's banner goes."

11. The royal banner is unfurled. This, in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, is a canto of which st. i. is from J. Chandler as above, and st. ii.—v. are from Stretton's Church Hymn, 1850, somewhat altered.

12. Forth goes the standard of our King. The sacred banner gleams on high. This rendering, which appeared in Chope's Hymnal, 1857, and again in other collections, is an arrangement made from older collections, the principal source being Stretton's Church Hymn, 1850, as above.

13. The King's bright banner forward go. This in Kennedy, 1865, No. 601, is J. A. Johnston's 1856 text as above, in a slightly altered form.

14. The royal banner is unfurled. And lo! the Cross is reared on high. This rendering in Murrell and How's Ps. & Hymn, 1864, in 4 st. of 4 l., is an altered and abbreviated form of the text in Stretton's Church Hymn, 1850, as above, with a slight resemblance to Chope's text of 1857. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, No. 118 is a canto beginning with st. i. of this text, and concerning which Mr. Ellerton says in his Notes to the Church Hymn, 1881, p. xl.:

"Hymn 118. . . . Free imitation, written for Church Hymns in 1871 by Bishop Wm. Walsingham, Bishop of the Latin hymn Vexilla Regis protestate, by Venantius Fortunatus. ... In the present imitation, little except the first two verses of Fortunatus's hymn remains. The original consists eight verses, the last four being an impassioned appeal to the material world, an alleged fragment of which was amongst the relics for the reception of which the hymn was written. These verses being considered by the Editors of Church Hymns wholly unsuitable for the use of the congregations for which their book was prepared, have been replaced by others.

The text of this Church Hymn cento is thus composed: st. i. from Murrell & How, 1864, unaltered; st. ii. from Stretton's Church Hymn, unaltered; st. iii., Murrell & How, 1864, st. iii. rewritten: st. iv., v. new by Bp. How."

16. The King's bright banners forward go. By E. A. Dayman, in the Sarum Hymn, 1868. The opening lines (1 and 2) are from Kennedy's 1863 text, hence the first line of st. ii., "With outstretched hands, transfixed and torn," must be noted.

Other trs. are:

1. The banners of the King come forth, The misterie, &c. Primer (Antwerp), 1599.
2. Now forth the Kingly banners goe. Primer (Mechlin), 1615.
3. Ah lord! the Royal Banners fly, Now shewes the Crosses mystery. Primer (Antwerp), 1665.
7. Is this the standard of a King? J. Williams, 1839.
8. The great King's banner shines above. F. C. Humeheath, 1841.
10. See, see the royal banners fly. J. R. Beste, 1849.
12. The banners of the King go forth outsides the mystery of the Ros. W. J. Hulse, 1852 and 1855.
14. Behold the royal ensigns fly, which bear the Cross's mystery. By T. J. Potter in the Catholic Pressland, 1858.
15. The Banner of the King goes forth, The Cross, the radiant mystery. Elizabeth Charles, 1858.
17. The Kingly banners proudly fly. F. Trupper, 1865.
18. The King's bright banners onward bear. H. M. Macgill, in The Juvenile Miss. Magazine of the C. Prob. Church, April, 1866, and his Songs of the Christian Creded and Life, 1876.
19. The banners of our King advance. J. Wallace, 1871.
20. Banners of our King are streaming. C. Kent, in O. Shipley's Annals Sanctus, 1884.
21. The royal banners forward fly; The cross upon them cheers the sky. S. W. Duffield, in his Latin Hymn-Writers, &c., 1889.

This extensive list of tres. marks in a striking manner the strong hold this hymn has upon many men. In translating the stanza which has called forth the greatest diversity and skill is the fourth as above.

The finest rendering of these lines which we have seen is that in the Service Book of 1687 (see above), which reads:—

"That which the Prophet-King of old Hath in mysterious Verse foretold,
Is now accomplished, whilst we see God Ruling Nations from a Tree."

The nearest approach to this in dignity and force is Dr. Neale's tr. of 1851. [J. J.]

Victima Paschali. Wipo (?). [Easter.] This Sequence is an excellent example of the transition from the rhythmical, irregular, unhymned Notkerian sequences to the regular rhyming sequences of Adam of St. Victor and later writers. It presents several points of interest, and demands a somewhat detailed examination. We shall treat (1) of the Text and MSS., (2) of the Authorship, and (3) of the Uses made of this Sequence.

i. Text and MSS. To show its structure we print the full text, which reads:

1. Victima Paschall, Laudes immaculat Christi.
2. Agnus redemit ossa
3. More et vita dulce Confidere mirando
4. "Ec nobis, Maria, Quid visdidit in via?"
5. "Seputricum Christi vetens," Et gloriam vidit resurrectum; Angelicos testes, Sodarum et verso, Surrivant Christus speciosa, Pracent suos in Gallicia."
6. v. Credendum est magis soli Mariæ veraci Quam Judaeorum turbae falsaci. Scimus Christum resurrectisse
7. Ex mortuis vere. Tu nobis, victor rex, misereor.

The text as above is printed from the following MSS., all now in the British Museum.

(a) Add. 1798, f. 22b, written in the 12th cent., mainly at St. Gall; (b) Reg. 2 R. 1, f. 210b, written in England, circa 1149; (c) Calif. A. xiv. f. 57b, written in England, circa 1199; (d) Add. 22898, f. 436b, written in France, circa 1275; (e) Add. 11669, f. 51, written in Germany, circa 1099; (f) Arundel, 186, f. 92b, written in Germany in the 13th cent. The variations are: a, 1, 1, Paschall in a; b, 1, 1, 1, 2, immacula in a; c, 1, 2, con-ordinary church services during the period of Easter.

Of the Mass, from which the text as above is taken, it marks as simply as "a sentence on the Resurrection;" and on Easter Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, "the Mass in G. to Thursday in Easter week; while ã, ã, and ã do indicate its use.

Next in order, York, nor Hertford Missals used on Easter Sunday of Low Sunday; the Sarum appointing it for Friday in Easter week, and for the 2nd and 5th Sunday up to the Ascension, and for the 3rd and York for Wednesday in Easter week, as also on the and the last Sundays. In the Angers Missal of 1499 it is scheduled for Easter Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, in Easter week; in the Hamburg Missal of 1469 for Easter Sunday and Monday in Easter week; and in the Lahr Missal of 1495 for the B. V. M. at Lorraine, &c. Other Missals present various combinations or modulations of these uses, which need not be mentioned in detail. In the Roman Missal of 1570 it is one of the four sequences which were alone retained in that revision, and ã appointed for use on Easter Sunday and daily up to Low Sunday inclusive, but not for the last Sundays. In the Paris H. C. of 1605 it forms part of the service for Vespers on Easter Sunday.

The dramatic possibilities of this Sequence also carry at least one attempt in it. It formed a striking feature in many of the Easter Miracle or Mystery Plays, but these we have not space to recount in detail.

(For its use see e.g. F. J. More's "Schauspiele des Mittelalters," Karlsruhe, 1846, pp. 17, 17-128, &c.; Re-liquiae Antiquae, ed. T. Wright and J. O. Halliwell, 1842, pp. 255-256; Kirchenlogien des Moyen Age, Rennes, 1869; G. Michael's Osterund Passionspiele, Wolfenbüttel, 1886, &c.)

It was also frequently employed at Mattins on Easter Sunday, in the ceremony of the Easter Sepulchre, which was intended in the service between the Third Lesson and the "Te Deum." Various forms of this function are found both in England, and on the continent. Dr. Carl Lange, in his Die Lateinischen Osterfeiern, Munich, 1887, gives the results of his examination of 224 MSS. and printed service books (Breviaries, Antiphonaries, Processionals, Tractates, &c.), ranging from the 10th to the 18th cent., and used in France, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and England, all of which contain longer or shorter forms of this function, and 68 of which embody the "Victimae Paschali," either in full or in a beginning with "Dic nobis, Maria." The earliest forms in which he has found the "Vitimae Paschali" included date from the 13th century. At p. 62 Lange prints from a 13th cent. Ritual for use at Chalons-sur-Marne. There, after the Third Re-response, two vesps were placed in white took their places one on the right and the other on the left of the high altar, to represent the angels at the Holy Sepulchre; followed by trois descents in white damasks, coming from the right side and standing before the altar, to represent the Three Marys. The Angel ask the Three Marys "Whom seek ye in the sepulchre?" and they answer "Jesus of Nazareth." The Angels, taking off the white altar-cloth, representing the grave clothes, reply "He is not here." The Marys, turning to the choir, sing "Aliens.
The Lord has risen." Then, passing down towards the choir, the First Mary sings "Victimae" (st. 1), the Second sings "Angelus habet," and the Third sings "Mons et vitis" (st. III). Then the successor, coming to the first step of the altar, asks the First Mary
"Dic nobis" (st. IV, i. 1, 2), to which she replies
"Sepulchrum" (st. IV, i, 1, 2), the Second replies
"Angels testis," (st. IV, i, 2, 6), and the Third sings "Mors aliquis venit," and the second successor coming to the choir, and pointing to the First Mary, sings
"Credidum" (st. IV, i, 1-3), and the whole choir sings "Vidimus hominem" (st. IV, ii, 4-6). Having returned to the vestry, and the ceremony ends by the bishop or the successor beginning the "Te Deum." This is one of the many varieties in which the complete sequence is included. Even in the use of the "Victimae Paschali" there were great variations. So in a Nürnberg Antiphonary of the 13th cent. (Lange, p. 140), Mary Magdalene sings an 1. 2, 3 to which she replies
"Dic nobis" (st. IV, i, 1, 2), to which she replies
"Sepulchrum" (st. IV, i, 3-5). Then the choir sings
"Credidum" (st. IV, i, 6), and the whole choir sings "Tu nobis" (st. IV, i, 1-6). In the later service books the choir and the alter form the sequence of the verse "Sed unum" (Lange, p. 142), and the choir sings "Tu nobis" (st. IV, i, 1-6). In the Prag Antiphonar of 1572 (Lange, p. 122) the rubrics provide for a proper Easter seuphure and for two Marys.
There the Bishop asks Mary Magdalen "Dic nobis, Maria!" the choir singing "Quid vidisti in via?" and Mary replying "Sepulchrum" (st. IV, i, 1-6), and the choir then singing "Credidum" (st. IV, i, 1-6). As Dr. Lange requires 171 large octavo pages to print and describe the varieties of these service-books, we must beg our readers who wish for further information to refer to his interesting work.

As a final proof of the popularity of the "Victimae Paschali," we may mention some of the numerous imitations of it.

Thus M. Leon Gaultier, in his 1858 ed. of Adam of St. Victor, prints two sequences, one on St. Victor ("Myrtaria Victoriae laurea resplendens Christianorum Morte et") at II, p. 94, and the other for the B. V. M. at Easter ("Virginiae Mariæ inoletos interstant Christiani! Eva tribris") at II, p. 348. Both of these are in some service imitations of and indeed borrow a good deal directly from the, "Vitimae Paschali," and in his 1881 ed. of Adam of St. Victor (pp. 326, 326/40, 114, &c.) the

Translations in C. U.:

1. Forth to the paschal Victim, Christians, bring Your sacrifice of praise. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholic, 1849, p. 233; and his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 122. In a few collections only.

2. The holy Paschal work is wrought. By R.
Campbell, in his Hymns and Anthems, 1850, p. 72.
It is mainly from a Ms. tr. by Dr. Neale (so the Campbell ms.). It is in O. Shipley's Annals Sancti, 1884. In Dr. Ronson's Hymns and Anthems, 1851, No. 76, it was altered to "The Paschal work is wrought.

3. Christ the Lord is risen to-day: Christians, burst your vows to pay. By Jane E. Leeson, in the Rev. H. Formby's Roman Catholic Hymns, 1851, No. 10, in 4 4, of 8 4, and signed in the Index "M. L." This tr. has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America, including H. A. & M., 1861, &c. Usually Miss Leeson's third stanza is omitted. Subsequently Miss Leeson retitled the hymn in two forms, and included the same in her Par. and Hymns, 1855, asc:

(1) Sacrifices of Thanksgiving. The hymn begins with the "Dic nobis" in the fervent Hymn for the Use of the Churches, 1864 and 1871 as "Tr. by J. E. L., 1844." We have here a slight error in the date, but a certain indication that the anonymous Paraphrases and Hymns of 1863 were by Miss Leeson.

(2) Sacrifice ye praises meet. This we have not found elsewhere.

4. To the Paschal Victim, Christians, bring the sacrifice of praise. By J. M. Neale, in the Hy. Noted, 1852, No. 28. This is a prose tr. in the Hymnary, 1872, it is given in a metrical form as "Unto the Paschal Victim bring." Line 3,
"The Lamb, the sheep," &c.

5. To the Paschal Victim, raise Gift and sacrifice of praise. By W. J. Aclis, in his H. and Tune

Bk. 1852-55; and again in the Parish H. Bk. 1862 and 1875.

Other trs. are:
1. Bring, all ye dear-bought nations, bring. W. K. Blewitt, 1870; the Divine Office, 1873; and O. Shipley's Annual Sanctus, 1944.
3. The Paschal Victim calls for praise. J. R. Bate, 1849.

VICTIS SIBI COGNOMINA. [Circumcision.]
This anonymous hymn was given in the Paris Bree., 1756, for the Fast of the Circumcision at 2d Vespers, and beyond that date we have been unable to trace it. The text is in J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 9; Carol Newman's Hymns Ecclesiae, 1839 and 1865; and L. C. Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as—

1. Tis for conquering kings to gain. By J. Chandler, in his Hym. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 55, and his Hymn of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 30. It is given in a great many hymn-books, sometimes in full, and at other times in an abbreviated form.

2. Tyrants their empty titles take. By J. D. Chambers, in his Psalm Syon, 1857, p. 102. This is given in the Hymnary, 1872, as "Warrior kings their titles gain."

3. Conquering kings their titles take. This cento appeared in a trial ed. of H. A. & M., 1859, and the eds. of 1861 and 1875, and has passed into several other collections. It is composed of St. i, v, vi, by the Compilers, and St. ii, iii, iv from J. Chandler as above, slightly altered. Three or four lines in st. vi, are also from Chandler. This cento is given in Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861, as "Earthly kings their titles take," and in the Sarum Hym., 1868, as, "Warrior kings fresh glory gain."

Other trs. are:
1. Let earthly tyrants title claim. J. Williams, 1839.
2. From conquered realms let tyrants claim. W. J. Blewitt, 1852-55.
4. To earthly kings fresh names accure. Lord Byron, in O. Shipley's Annual Sanctus, 1864. [J. J.]

Vinete, Alexandre Rodolphe, b. June 12th, 1789, at Oschy, near Lamoine. His father, a man of somewhat stern religion, was schoolmaster of the village, and held a small appointment in the Canton du Vaud. Alexandre was appointed Professor of the French language at the gymnasium of Basle, at the age of 20, and occupied this office, with some work for the University, for twenty years.

In 1819 married of the R. of Delémont, a daughter of a noble H. de L'Eglise more pious than the Abbé came. In 1837, he occupied the Aca, he takes names in a prom for Canton largely to his office. He gives a few freedom an humility, and

Virgins castae virgins summae decus praeclarentes. [Common of Virgins.]

Morel, in his Latin Hymns, 1888, p. 180, gives a part of this sequence with the note, "This is the only beginning of a rambling and somewhat barbarous sequence in the ms. collection of P. Brauier [St. Gall ms. No. 546, written in 1507], where it bears the title 'a proxim sequence of some monk of St. Gall.'" Neale, in his Sequentiae, 1852, p. 237, ascribes it to Godescalus or Gottschalk (d. 1050); but the earliest source he quotes is the Roman Missal of 1510, and there does not seem to be any reason for accepting this ascription, which is evidently a conjecture. The earliest text known is in the St. Gall ms., No. 383, of the 13th or 14th cent. The printed text is also in Daniel, v. p. 344, and Kehrein, No. 473. Tr. as "To-day let Christian maidens." In the People's H., 1887, No. 221, and signed "S. M." [i.e. Sister Marion.] [J. M.]

Virgins Proles, Officium matris. [Common of Virgin.] This is found in all the MSS of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Jul. A. 39, fol. 167b; Vesv. D. 150, fol. 2961, f. 249 b; Add. 30851, f. 155); and in the Latin Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 40b); and in the ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi Coll., Cambridge (391, p. 274), and the Bern ms. 435 of the 10th cent. It is in two ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall., Nos. 387 and 413. Also in the Monastic, Roman, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, the Sarum use being for one virgin and martyr at 1st Vespers and at Matins. Daniel, i. No. 238, gives the original, and the form in the Roman Breviary, 1629, citing it at Vespers and Matins, as in a 10th cent. ms. at Bern, a 10th cent. Rheims ms., &c. The printed text is also in Wackernagel, i., No. 138; G. M. Drues's Hymn. Missionum, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms., &c. [J. M.]

3. 0 Virgin born. That Mother's Fram'er Thou. J. D. Chambers, 1866.
4. 0 Virgin's Offspring, Whom Thy M'ther didst create. J. Wallace, 1874.

The foregoing trs. are of the text for a "Virgin and Martyr." There are also trs. of an arrangement of lines to the text of a "Virgin not a Martyr." These include one in the Primer, 1706, and a second by J. Wallace, 1874, each beginning with the same first line as above. In the Rom. Brev., viii, of the Latin text, Hujus oratus Deus alme nosis is given, together with a doxology, for "Holy Women." This tr. is.: (1) "Permit, great God, this Saint with Pray'rs may free" in the Primer, 1706; and (2) "O God, for this Thy servant's sake, we humbly Thee implore," by J. Wallace, 1874. In the Marquess of Bute's Roman Breviary into English, 1879, Wallace's tr. is given as: "When she pleads for us at herawanand, &c."

Virgo vernans velut rosa, Agni sponsa speciosa. [St. Winifred.] This is the Sequence on St. Winifred of Wales, in the Sarum Missal, Venice, 1494, f. 255. It does not appear to be in any other ed. of the Sarum Missal, nor has it been received into other English or Continental Missale. It will be found in a note at col. 660 of the Burntisland reprint of the Sarum Missal, 1861.

More fair than all the vernal flowers. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1888, p. 237; and his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 202. It was repeated in Dr. Bawes's Hymn. for the Year, 1867, &c.

Vischer, Christoph, s. of Jakob Vischer or Fischer, burgess at Joachimsthal, in Bohemia, was b. at Joachimsthal in 1529. He matriculated at the University of Wittenberg in Nov. 1540 (M.A. 1541), and was ordained at Wittenberg on Feb. 10, 1544, as pastor and probst at Jüterbog, near Wittenberg. He was then appointed (in 1552) cathedral preacher and superintendent at Schmalkalden; in 1571 pastor and general superintendent at Müningen; in 1574 court preacher and assistant superintendent at Coile (Zelle); and in 1577 chief pastor at St. Martin's Church at Halberstadt. He returned to Celle in 1583, as general superintendent of Lüneburg, and d. at Celle in October, 1597 (Koch, ii., 265; Wetzel, i. p. 238, and J. H. i., pt. v. p. 288; Rotermund's Geburts, 120, p. 49; J. K. F. Schlegel's Kirchen- und Reformationsgeschichte Hannover, vol. ii., 1829, pp. 399-402; ms. from Dr. Ebeling, Celle, &c.)

Vischer was a somewhat voluminous writer. Rotermund gives the titles of 29 works by him. Only one hymn is known as his, viz.:-

Wir danken dir, Herr Jesu Christ, Dass du für uns gestorben hast. [in L.] This is included in pt. ii. of the Dresden c., B., 1597 (hence in Wackernagel, v., p. 245), marked as by M. C. F. and in 4 st. of 4, v. i., 179, as above, and ii. Und bitten dich, war Mensch und Gott, iii. Belßt uns auch für Sünd und Schand, iv. Und draus schöpfen die Zuversicht. The only portion we have been able to find in any work of Vischer's is in ii. This occurs in his kritislicke wand eingefüllte und gewichtige historische Aufsätzen und eigenthümliche Heimatspezereien unserer lieben Herrn Jesu Christi, doch der verdienste des heiligen Geistes, 1829; also in Burning's Sarum x. these of the Resurrection (Auferstehung) as follows:-

Ach Herr Christe, war Mensch und Gott. " Durch dein heilig Pfaff Wunden rot, Erles mich von dem ewigen Tod, Und tröst mich in meiner letzen Not."

The same stanza is found in the ed. Schmalkalden, 1568 (Berlin Library). The sermons on the Aufsehens seem to have appeared at Frankfurt am Main in 1564 (preface 1562, title 1563, colophon 1564). So the copy in the Vatican Library at Rome.

First, No. 314, prints the four stanzas from the text given by J. C. Olearius, Jena, 1710, as a reprint of the original, and as entitled "A children's hymn composed by M. Christoph Vaser for the Christian community at Schmalkalden, upon the strengthening use of the bitter sufferings and death of Christ Jesus our Saviour." It is also in the Ver. l. 8. 1641, No. 122. The text arc:

1. We bless Thee, Jesus Christ our Lord: For ever be Thy name adored. This is a good and full tr. by Dr. Kennedy, in No. 662 in his HYMN. CHRIST., 1663.

2. With thanks we glory in Thy Cross. This is No. 331 in pt. i. of the MORAVIAN H. BK., 1754. [J. M.]

Vital Spark of heavenly flame. A Pope. [The Soul Immortal.] In the Spectator for Nov. 10, 1712, Steele gives a letter sent to him by Pope on the words spoken by Hadrian on his death-bed. This letter, in The Works of Alexander Pope, Esq. . . . Printed verbattin from the Octavo edition of Mr. Warburton, London, C. Bathurst, 1788. Vol. v. p. 185, is dated Nov. 7, 1712, and begins:

"I was the other day in company with five or six men of some learning; where chanceing to mention the famous verses which the Emperor Adrian spoke on his death-bed; they were all agreed that 'twas a piece of great unworthy of that prince in those circumstances.
I could not but differ from this opinion; methinks it was by no means gay, but a very serious soliloquy to his soul at the point of his departure; in which sense I naturally took the verses at my first reading them, when I was very young, and before I knew what interpretation the world generally put upon them.

Animula vagula, bianula,
Hospes comusque corporis,
Quae nunc abibis in loca?
Fallidula, rigida, nudula,
Nec (at solis) dabis joca?"

The letter then proceeds with a prose translation of these lines, and a vindication of the same. At the foot of the letter, and after his signature, Pope added the following metrical rendering:

"Adriani morientis ad Animam TRAENSIFF.

Ah fleeting Spirit! wand'ring fire,
That long hast warm'd my tender breast,
Must thou no more this frame inspire?
No more a pleasing cheerful guest?

Whither, oh whither art thou flying?
To what dark, undiscover'd shore?
Thou seem'dst all trembling, shivering, dying,
And Wit and Honnour are no more.

In the Spectator, Nov. 10, 1712, Steele gives this letter verbattim, with the exception of the metrical version at the end. On Nov. 29, 1712, Pope wrote to Steele expressing regret that as this letter was given in his name he had it not an opportunity of setting forth his ideas more fully and accurately. This letter did not appear in the Spectator. On Dec. 4, 1712, Steele wrote to Pope:

"This is to desire of you that you would please to make an ode as of a cheerful dying spirit, that is to say, the Emperor Adrian's 'Animula vagula' put into two or three stanzas for music. If you comply with this, and send me word so, you will very particularly oblige.
Yours, &c." (Works, v. p. 188.)

To this Pope gave answer in the following letter, which is undated in his Works, vol. v. p.
190, but was probably sent within a post or with the signature “Mrs. Vokes,” in W. B. Collyer’s Coll., 1812. Of her hymns the following, all pub. in 1797, are still in C. U. —

1. Behold the expected time draws near. Missions. This begins with st. ii. of No. 1.
2. Proud Babydon yet waits her doom. Full of Hallelujahs. The angels, etc.

Vom Himmel hoch da komm ich her. M. Luther. [Christmas.] This beautiful Christmas hymn first appeared in the Geistliche Lieder, Wittenberg, 1525, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 23. Also in Schircks’s ed. of Luther’s Geistliche Lieder, 1856, p. 12. In the Unr. L. S., 1851, No. 55, &c.

In King’s G. B., 1543, it is entitled “A Children’s Hymn for Christmas Eve on the Child Jesus, taken from the Second Chapter of the Gospel of St. Luke.” It has sometimes been said to be derived, at least in part, from the Latin. To the “Parvulus nona mactatur” its resemblance is very slight; and this Latin hymn has not been traced earlier than the 1579 ed. of Lucas Lossius’s Psalmode (1st ed., 1553). To the “Nuntium vobis ferre de supernus” [Brit. Mus. ms. of the 12th cent. Harl. 2928 f. 114], it has no relationship whatever.

With the exception of the German hymn, Lauxmann, in Rock, viii. 21, thus speaks—

A tuneful and unceasing year to prepare for his family a happy Christmas Eve’s entertainment: and for this festival of his children he wrote this Christmas hymn. If opening lines are modelled on a song, “Aus fremden Landen” I, 2, “Ich korn aus fremden Landen ich,” and throughout he successfully catches the ring of the popular sacred song. It is said that Luther celebrated the festival in his own house in this native fashion. By his verses the first seven verses of this hymn were sung by a man dressed as an angel, who in the children greeted with the eighth and following verses.

We may add that Luther took the first stanza almost entirely from the song, which begins—

“Ich korn aus fremden Landen ich,”
Und bruch euch viel der neuen Miihn,
Der neuen Miihr bring ich so viel.

Mehr dan ich etch hier sagen will.

From the rest of the song Luther did not borrow anything.

In King’s G. B., 1543, it is set to the melody of “Aus fremden Landen,” or rather, as P. Ehmoe, in his Alte Deutsche Lieder, 1871, No. 271, gives it “Ich korn aus fremden Landen ich.” In the Geistliche Lieder, Leipzig, V. Schumann, 1539, this was superseded by the beautiful melody still in use, which is sometimes ascribed to Luther, and is set to this hymn in the C. B. for England, 1863 (set also to No. 57 in H. A. & M., 1853). Tr. as—

1. From highest heaven good news I bring.

By A. T. Russell, as No. 17 in the Dalton Hospital H. B., 1848. There st. i. is condensed from l., ii.; and st. ii.—v. are from iii., iv., v., vi., v., vi., v., vi., in his own Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 43. Mr. Russell omitted the tr. of st. vii. and added a tr. of st. vii.

2. From yonder world I come to earth.

In full, by Dr. J. Hunt in his Spirit, Songs of Martin Luther, 1853, p. 30. From this st. vi.—ix., xii., xiii., beginning “Oh! let us all be glad to day,” were included in the Manchester S. H. B., 1855, from his Bk. of Praise for Children, 1881, and the Cong. G. B., 1887.

3. From heaven’s height I come to earth.

This is a good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Germanica, 1st Ser., 1855, p. 22, and in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 30. Repeated in full in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880. Varying centos, beginning with st. vii., “Give heed, my heart, lift up thine eyes,” are in Bp. Bickersteth’s Ps. & Hys., 1858, and his Hyl. Comp., 1876, in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1875, and others.

4. Good news from heaven the angels bring.

This is No. 131 in the Maryland Luth. Church Bk., 1868, in 7 st. (answering to st. vii., viii., x., xii., xiii.,) of which st. i.—ix., vii. are altered from A. T. Russell, and vi., vi. from Miss Winkworth. Repeated in Schaff’s Christ in Song, 1863, p. 54. St. i.—vii., vi., of this form are in the Hys. and Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, and the Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1882.

Other trs. are—

1. “I come from heaven to declare,” as No. 300 in p. l. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1874. From this st. vii., viii., x., xiii., were given in the Bible H. Bk., 1845, beginning “Awake, my heart, my soul, my eyes.” (2) “I come from heaven, on joyous wings.” By H. M. Fair, 1851, p. 3. (3) “I come from heaven, on wings of love.” By J. Anderson, 1846, p. 3.

2. From highest heaven on joyous wings. By H. M. Fair, 1851, p. 3. (4) “I come from heaven high I’ve wandered forth.” By Dr. H. W. Ducklen in his Bk. of German Songs, 1856, p. 304.

We may note that in J. C. Jacobs’s Pral. Ser., 1722, p. 19, there is a hymn in 5 st. set to the same tune, “The Lord our Saviour reigns,” which is set to the melody of 1839. It is not however a tr. from Luther, but is merely a selection of stanzas from Isaac Watts’s version of Ps. xcvii.

Vom Himmel kam der Engel Schaar. M. Luther. [Christmas.] This is founded on St. Luke ii. 10, 11, and St. Matt. ii. 6; and was apparently written in 1543, and meant for use when his other Christmas hymn (“Vom Himmel hoch”) was thought to be too long. It was set to the melody of the Geistliche Lieder, Wittenberg, 1543, in 6 st. of 6, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 25. Also in Schirck’s ed. of Luther’s Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 15, and in the Unr. L. S., 1851. Tr. as—

1. From yon ethereal heavens.

This is a paraphrase, in 5 lines, by Miss Fr., in her Hys. of the Reformation, 1845, p. 20. From this a cento in 5 st. of 8, recur and begin, “Let all our hearts rejoice,” is No. 5 in Whittmores’s Supp. to All H. Bks., 1860.

2. To shepherds as they watched by night.

In full, by R. Massie in his Martin Luther’s Spirit, Songs, 1854, p. 7. Included in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, and by Dr. Bacon in his Hys. of Martin Luther, 1884, p. 96.

Other trs. are—

Vom Himmel kommt der starke Held. [Christmas.] This hymn appears in the Neues Hildburghausisches G. B., 1807 (ed. 1808, No. 170), in 10 st. of 4 l. The two opening lines, but not much more, are taken from a hymn by Dr. Johann Christoph Stockhansen (b. October 29, 1725, at Badenau, near Kassel; d. at Hanau, Sept. 4, 1784), found in the Neue Hanau Münzerbergsche G. B., 1779, and included in the Württemberg G. B., 1791, in 6 st. The rest is a paraphrase, apparently by J. C. Wagner (q.v.) of the same passage of Holy Scripture as that used by Luther in his "Vom Himmel kam der Engel Schaar," but it has very little resemblance to Luther. The trs. from the text of Bumens's Versuch, 1833, No. 118, in 9 st., are:—

VOX CLARESCAT

2. Hark, an awful voice is sounding. By E. Caswall, in his Lora Cathedra, 1849, p. 46, and his Hymns, and Poems, 1873, p. 26. It is in a large number of hymn-books. In Kennedy, 1863, it is given in a recast form as "Voice of mercy, voice of terror."

3. Hark, a gladsome voice is thrilling. By W. J. Blew, in his Church HY. and Tune Bk, 1852-55, and Rice's Sel, from the same, 1870, No. 1. It is based upon Card. Newman's tr. as above.

4. Hark to the voice that loudly cries. By J. A. Johnston, in his English HY., 1852, 1856, 1861.

5. Hark, a thrilling voice is sounding. This, which appeared in Murray's Hy. Mndal, 1852, No. 2, is an altered form of Caswall's tr. as above. It was repeated with variations in the Salsbury H. Bk, 1857; H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, and many others. The text in the S. P. C. K. Church HY., 1871, beginning with the same line as H. A. & M., is a nearer approach to the original than that collection. Thriving text, also beginning with the same line, is Caswall with an adaptation of the best emendations of various editors.

6. Voice of mercy, voice of terror. By B. H. Kennedy, in his Hymno Christian, 1863, No. 47, is a recast of E. Caswall's tr. as above.

8. Hark, the Baptist's voice is sounding. In The Hymnary, 1872, is an altered version of Caswall's tr. as above.

Other tr. are:—

8. Hark, hark, the voice of chanted prayer. J. Wallace, 1874.

[J. J.]

Vox sonora nostri chori Adam of St. Victor. [St. Catherine]. A graceful sequence relating the history of St. Catherine of Alexandria, to be used on her festival, Nov. 25. Gaudeir, in his 1858 ed. of Adam's Oeuvres Politiques, vol. ii., p. 320, gives it among the genuine pieces of Adam, but in his ed. 1881, p. 236, he ranks it as doubtful for rhythmical reasons, and so does not print the text, but cites it as a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 11452), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (Bibl. Nat. Paris, 1858) and other sources. Among Missals it is found in an early 14th cent. Paris in the British Museum (Add. 10905, f. 392), the Saintes, 1491; the Sensa, 1529, and others. The printed text is also in Neale's Sequentiar, 1852, p. 203; Daniel, v. p. 324; Kehrken, No. 812; and D. S. Wrangham's Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881. Tr. as:—

Repeated in the Criger-Range G. B., 1853, No. 1, and recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1152. It is one of the finest and most popular of German morning hymns, and soon passed into universal use, st. vii. being a special favourite. Tr. as:—

My soul, awake and tender. In full, by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalmologia Germanica, 1720, p. 33 (1722, p. 104), repeated as No. 477 in pt. I. of the Moravian H. Bk, 1754. In the Moravian H. Bk, 1789, No. 744 (1886, Nos. 1158, 1159), begins "My soul awake and render," st. i., ii., iv., v. being from i., ii., iii., 4; vi. ii., 1; 2; x; viii.; while st. iii. ("Bless me this day, Lord Jesus," 1866, No. 1159), is st. iii. of No. 189, in pt. i. of the 1754 (a tr. by J. Gambol in the early German hymn, säh ich nemlich in Columbia, ed. Blivoy, et al. ii., p. 1154).) From this 1754 text st. i., ii., iii., 1, 2; iv. ii., 3, 4; were given in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833.

Other tr. are: (1) "Thy Thanks, my soul, be raising," by H. J. Rockell, 1842, p. 24. (2) "Wake, my heart, and sing His praises," by E. Massey, 1847. (3) "Awake, my heart, be singing," by J. Kelly, 1867. (4) "Wake up, my heart, alater," by N. L. Frothingham, 1876.

Wach' auf, wach' auf, du sich're Welt. J. Riet. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in his Neuer Himmlischer Lieder sonderbahres Buch, Lüneburg, 1851, p. 248, in 13 st. of 8 1, entitled, "True hearted Exhortation and Warning to the careless world that with genuine repentance she may prepare and secure herself against the near approaching Last Day."

Found in the Gospel for the 2nd S. in Advent (St. Luke xxi. 23-36), and is one of the finest of Rits's hymns. Repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 14 (8 st.); and in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 493 (Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 426), omitting st. ii. Tr. as:—

1. Awake, thou careless world, awake! The day shall, &c. By A. T. Russell, in 3 st. The tr. of st. i. appeared as No. 108 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk. 1848; the trs. of st. vi., xliii, were added in his Ps. & Hgs. 1851, No. 39.

2. Awake, thou careless world, awake! The final day, &c. A good tr. of st. i., vii, xii, xiii, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra German. 1st Ser., 1855, p. 4.

From this the trs. of st. vi., ix, xiii, altered and beginning, "The Lord in love delayeth long," were included as No. 113 in the Irvingite Hgs. for the Use of the Churches, 1864. A cento in 5 st. of L.W. from the trs. of vii., ix, xiii, beginning, "Lo, He, on whom all power is laid," is in H. L. Hastings's Hymnal, 1880.

Wackernagel, Carl Eduard Philipp, D. D., was b. at Berlin, June 28, 1800. He studied and graduated Ph. D. at the University of Berlin. In 1829 he became a master in the technical school (Gewerbeschule) at Berlin, and in 1839 master in a private school at Stetten in Württemberg. He was then (1845) appointed professor in the Realgymnasium at Wiesbaden, and in 1849 director of the Realgymnasium at Elberfeld. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Breslau in 1861, and in the same year retired to Düsseldorf, where he d. June 20, 1877 (Herzog's Real Encyklopädie, xvi. 588; Dr. Ludwig Schulze's Philipp Wackernagel, Leipzig, 1879, &c.).

Wackernagel was an enthusiastic and successful teacher, and the author of various works on mathematics, on crystallography, on German literature, &c. His claim to notice here is through his editions of German hymn-writers (J. Gerhardt, 1843; M. Luther, 1848; J. Heermann, 1858), his work on Dutch Hymnody (Bertrage zur niederländischen Hymnologie), Frankfurt, 1867, but more especially through his works on German hymnody up to 1600. His Deutsche Kirchenspiele first appeared at Stuttgart in 1841, and was supplemented by his Bibliographie zur Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenwesens des XVI. Jahrhunderts, Frankfurt am Main, 1855, in which the original works were described. The permanent edition appeared in 6 vols., at Leipzig, 1866-77, as das deutsche Kirchenwesel von der ältesten Zeit bis zur Anfang des XVI. Jahrhunderts, the preface to the last volume being that he did not live to complete.

Volume I. contains 856 Latin hymns, and a Supplement to the Bibliographie of 1855; II. (1867) has 1448 pieces, which are (14 excepted) by German writers prior to the Reformation; III. (1870) has 1487 pieces of the Reformation period; IV. (1874) has 1587 pieces, all (3 excepted) by German writers from 1554 to 1584; and V. has 1608 pieces by German writers from 1578 to 1633. This work is a monument of care and research, and is indispensable to the student of early German hymnology. The present writer has gladly availed himself of it, and it is only in a very few cases that he has been able to supplement or correct its results.
Walker, George, D.D., s. of Arthur Walker, a farmer at Hilton of Pitbladdo, near Cupar, Fife, was b. at Hilton, Jan. 6, 1783. He studied at the Universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh; and after being licensed by the Presbytery of Cupar, in 1806, was appointed in 1815 parish minister of Kinclun, near Arbroath. In 1827 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He d. at Kinclun Sept. 11, 1868. He was a scholarly and devout man, with great taste and modest and retiring manners. Pub.:—

(1) *Hymns translated or imitated from the German: London, 1806. This contains hymns from the German, with a tr. of the "Dies Irae," in all 96. Many are given in abridged form, and Dr. Walker did not bind himself to reproduce the metre, or even uniformly the forms, of his originals. By the kindness of his representatives his b. copy has been used to identify his true copies of which are included throughout this Dictionary, though none are in C. U. (2) *Prayers and Hymns: Edin., W. F. Nimmo, 1866. Besides 73 Prayers, Rec., this contains the original hymns and 14 versions of the "Gloria Patri." A number of the prayers and 42 of the hymns had appeared in his Prayers and Hymns for the Mornings and Evenings of a Week, 1862.

Wallin, Benjamin, s. of Edward Wallin, pastor of the Baptist Church, Maze Pond, Southwark, was b. in London in 1711. He received a good education under the care of the Rev. John Needham, of Hitchen (father of the hymn-writer of that name), and was for a time engaged in business. But in 1740 he responded to an earnest request to become pastor of the church over which his father had presided, and this position he retained until his death on Feb. 19, 1782. Mr. B. Wallin published nearly forty sermons, charges, and other small religious books and pamphlets. In 1750 he pub. a volume entitled,

Evangelical Hymns and Songs, in Two Parts: Published for the Comfort and Entertainment of true Christians; with authorities at large from the Scriptures. The hymns in this vol. are 100 in number, and the texts of scripture illustrated in each stanza are quoted in full in the lower part of the page. The versification is homely and the rhymes are often faulty.

Two hymns from the work are in C. U.—

2. When I the holy grave survey. Easter.

These, with others, appeared in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776. They are usually given with alterations, chiefly introduced by Toplady.

Walther, Johann, was b. in 1496 at a village near Coia (perhaps Kahlau, or else Cöllede, near Sachsenburg) in Thuringia. In 1524 we find him at Torgau, as bassist at the court of Friedrich the Wise, Elector of Saxony. The Elector Johann of Saxony made him "Sangermeister" (choirmaster) in 1526. When the Electoral orchestra (Kapelle) at Torgau was disbanded in 1530, it was reconstultified by the town, and in 1534 Walther was also appointed cantor (singing-master) to the school at Torgau. On the accession of the Elector Moritz of Saxony, in 1548, Walther went with him to Dresden as his Kapellmeister. He was pensioned by decree of Aug. 7, 1554, and soon after returned to Torgau, still retaining the title of "Sangermeister." He d. at Torgau, perhaps on March 25, or at least before April 21, 1570. (Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte, 1871, p. 8, and 1878, p. 85; Archiv für Literaturgeschichte, vol. xii., 1884, p. 185; Dr. Otto Taubert's "Pflege der Musik in Torgau," 1868, and his Gymnasial Singe-Chor zu Torgau, N.D., 1870, &c.)

Walther was more distinguished as a musician than as a hymn-writer. In 1524 he spent three weeks in Luther's house at Wittenberg, helping to adapt the old church music to the Lutheran services, and harmonizing the tunes in five parts for the "geistliche Gesangbuch," pub. at Wittenberg in 1524 (p. 700, ii.). He was also present in the Stadtkirche at Wittenberg, when, on Oct. 29, 1525, the service for the Holy Communion, as rearranged by Luther and himself, was first used in German. His hymns appeared mostly in his "Inas christlich Kinderlied D. Martin Lutheri, Erhalt uns Herr, &c." Auft als neue in sechs Stimmen gesetzt, und mit de-

ii. Herzlich that mich erfreuen. Eternal Life. 1st pub. separately, in 33 st., at Wittenberg, in 1552, entitled "A beautiful spiritual and Christian new miner's song, of the Last Day and Eternal Life" [Königstein Library]. Thence in Wackenagel, iii. p. 187, in 34 st., st. 33 being added from the Dresden reprint of 1557. It is set to the melody of a popular song on the Joys of Summer. It is a fresh and beautiful hymn, but is only partially available on account of its length. Wackenagel, in his "Keinens G. B.," 1890, selects 21 st. as No. 219. The most popular form is that in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1530, beginning "Der Bräutgum wird bald rufen." This form has in order st. 31, 8, 9, 16, 18, 17, 13, and appeared in Melchior Franck's "Resedulmus musicum," 1628; in Freylinghausen's "G. B.," 1705, No. 749, &c. Tr. as:

1. Now fain my joyous heart would sing. This is a tr. of st. 1, 4, 5, 17, 33, 34, by Miss Winkworth, in her "Lyra Ger.," 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 223. Her trs. of st. 1, 4, 5, were included in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hymns, 1867, No. 325.

2. Soon will the heavenly Bridgroom come. This is by Dr. Kennedy, in his "Hymn, Christz.," 1833, No. 1099, and follows the text of the G. L. S., omitting st. 16, 18, 13. It is repeated in the "Lauda Domini," N. Y., 1884, &c.

3. The Bridgroom soon will call us. By Dr. M. Loy, from the G. L. S. text, but omitting st. 18, 13, as No. 24 in the Ohio Luth. Hym., 1880.

Another tr. from the G. L. S. text, is "Soon shall that voice resound," by Miss Fry in her Hymn. of the Reformation, 1818, p. 36. Her second part, altered at the beginning. "Rejoice, the Lord doth guide us," is in J. Whittemore's "Hymn. to all H. Bks.," 1890. [J. M.]

Of Dr. Wardlaw's hymns the following are still in C. U.:

1. Glad when they saw the Lord. Easter.
2. Hail, morning known amongst the blest [saints]. Sunday Morning.
3. Lift up to God the voice of praise. Praise to the Father.
4. O Lord our God, arise. Missions.
6. See the Sun of Truth arise. Christ the Light.

Of these Nos. 3-5 appeared in the Tuber-Gnacle Coll. (noted above), 1800. [J. J.]

Ware, Henry, D.D., s. of Dr. H. Ware, pastor of the Unitarian congregation at Hingham, Massachusetts, and afterward Hollis Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, U.S.A., was b. at Hingham, April 21, 1794. Before going to Harvard and Harvard College, he was under the care of Dr. Allyn, at Duxbury, and then of Judge Ware, at Cambridge. He graduated at Harvard in high honors, in 1812; and was then for two years an assistant teacher in Exeter Academy. He was licensed to preach by the Boston Unitarian Association, July 31, 1815; and ordained pastor of the Second Church of that city, Jan. 1, 1817. In 1829, in consequence of his ill health, he received the assistance of a co-pastor in the person of Ralph Waldo Emerson. In the same year Ware was appointed Professor of Pulpit Eloquence and Pastoral Care in the Cambridge Theological School. He entered upon his duties in 1830, and resigned in 1843. He removed to Framingham, and d. there, Sept. 25, 1843. His D.D. degree was conferred upon him by Harvard College in 1834. Dr. Ware's publications are set forth in his Memoir, pub. by his brother John Ware, m.d., were numerous, and on a variety of topics. He edited the Christian Disciple, which was established in 1813, and altered in title to the Christian Examiner in 1824, for some years before the change of title, and gave it his assistance subsequently. The Rev. Chandler Robbins collected his works and pub. them in four volumes, in 1847. His hymns, many of which are of more than usual excellence, are given in vol. i. Of these the following are in C. U.:

1. All nature's works His praise declare. Opening of an Organ. Dated Nov. 9, 1822. It is in Horder's Eng. Comp. Hymns, 1894.
4. God, the gentle chastisement. In Sickness. Dated March, 1836; and in Lyra Sec. Americana, 1846.
5. Great God, the followers of Thy Son. Ordination. Written for the Ordination of Jared Sparks, the historian, as pastor of the Unitarian Church, Baltimore, 1819. Given in Lyra Sec. Americana, 1839, and in Philalethes, 1843.

7. Lift thy glad voices in triumph on high. Easter. Dated 1817, and was published a portion of that year, in 2 st. of 8 l. It is in Lyra Sec. Americana, 1846; Philalethes, 1843, and numerous hymn-books. Sometimes it is given separately, as "Glory to God, in fullest anthems of joy.

11. Opposition shall not always reign. Against Slavery. "This was Mr. Ware's last composition in verse. It bears date March 15, 1843. In its original form it is longer than as presented here [in 3 st. of 8 l.], and is unsuited to a church-book. The following stanza, taken from one of the Collections [st. 1, ii. are in Longfellows's and Johnson's Book of Hts., 1845], is a part of the original, altered and adapted, and is here adopted to sacred worship." (Philalethes, 1843, p. 113.)

12. To prayer, to prayer: for the morning breaks. Prayer. This poem is of 10 st. of 8 l. and is given in Lyra Sec. Americana, 1846, and Philalethes, 1843. Two centos therof are in C. U. The first begins with st. 1., adapting it for Morning Prayer, and the second, with st. ii., as "To prayer, for the glorious sun is gone," for Evening.

13. We fear not a temple, like Judah of old. Dedication of a Place of Worship. This is dated 1839, and is given in Philalethes, 1843.

With American Unitarians Dr. Ware ranks very high, and by them his hymns are widely used.

Waring, Anna Lenticia, daughter of Elijah Waring, and niece of Samuel Miller Waring, was b. at Neath, Glamorganshire, in 1820. In 1850 she pub. her Hymns and Meditations, by A. L. W., a small book of 19 hymns. The 4th ed. was pub. in 1854. The 10th ed., 1863, is enlarged to 38 hymns. She also pub. Additional Hymns, 1858, and contributed some of her pieces to the Sunday Magazine, 1871. Her most widely known hymns are: "Father, I know that all my life," p. 267, ii.; "Go not far from me, O my Strength and my Shield," p. 438, ii.; and "My heart is resting, O my God," p. 781, i. The rest in C. U. include:

1. Dear Saviour of a dying world. Resurrection. (1854.)
2. In heavenly love abiding. Safety in God. (1850.)
3. Jesus, Lord of heaven above. Love to Jesus desired. (1848.)
4. Lord, a happy child of Thine. Evening. (1850.)
5. My Saviour, on the [Thy] words of truth. Hope in the Word of God. (1850.) Sometimes st. iv., as "It is not as Thou wilt with me," is given separately.
6. O this is blessing, this is rest. Rest in the Love of Jesus. (1843.)
7. O Thou Lord of heaven above. The Resurrection. (1845.)
8. Source of my life's refreshing springs. Rest in God. (1850.)
9. Sunlight of the heavenly day. New Year (1854.)
10. Sweet is the solace of Thy love. Safety and Comfort in God. (1853.)
11. Tender mercies on my way. Praise of Divine Mercies. (1850.)
12. Thanksgiving and the voice of melody. New Year (1854.)
13. Though some good things of lower worth. Love of God in Christ. (1850.)

These hymns are marked by great simplicity, concentration of thought, and elegance of diction. They are popular, and deserve to be so.

Waring, Samuel Miller, s. of Jeremiah Waring, of Alton, Hampshire, and uncle of Anna L. Waring, was b. at Alton, in March, 1792, and d. at Bath, Sept. 19, 1827. His hymns appeared in his Sacred Melodies, 1826, and from that work the following, which are in C. U., were taken:—

1. Now to Him Who loved us, gave us. Praise to Jesus. Sometimes, "unto Him Who loved us."

2. Plead Thou, O plead my cause. Jesus, the Advocate Implored.

Waring, Anna, daughter of Henry W. Waring, and sister of Sarah Waring, author of Queechy, and other novels, was b. near New York city about 1822. She is the author of the novel, Say and Seal, 1859, and others of a like kind. She also edited Hymns of the Church Militant, 1858; and pub. Wayfaring Hymns, Original and Translated, 1869. Her original hymns in C. U. include:

1. Jesus loves me, this I know. The Love of Jesus. In Say and Seal. 1859.

2. O little child, lie still and sleep. A Mother's Evening Hymn.

3. One more day's work for Jesus. Evening. From Wayfaring Hymns. 1869.

For her translations see Index of Authors and Translators.

Warren, William Fairfield, d.d., was b. at Williamsburg, Massachusetts, in 1833, and graduated at the Wesleyan University in 1853. After spending some time in Germany, he was appointed Professor of Systematic Theology in the Methodist Episcopal Mission Institute at Bremen, in 1861. Returning to America in 1866, he held some important appointments there, ultimately becoming President of Boston University, in 1873. His hymn, "I worship Thee, O Holy Ghost" (Whitsun tide), was contributed to the American Meth. Episcopal Hymnal, at the request of the editorial committee, in 1877, and was pub. therein in 1878 (Nutter's Hymn Studies, 1884, p. 111). It has passed into other collections.

Warum betrübest du dich, mein Herz. [Cross and Consolation.] Wacker-nagel, iv. pp. 128-130, gives three forms of the text of this anonymous hymn: No. 190 as the first of Zwei schöne neue geistliche Lieder, Nürnberg, n. d., c. 1560; No. 191, from Einckirchent mm printed at Hamburg, 1565; No. 192, from the Paulin und Leder, Lübeck, 1567. In his Bibliographie, 1855, p. 279, he had cited it as in Neun schöne geistliche Lieder, Nürnberg, n. d., which he then dated 1556—probably too early. According to Koch, v., 653, it had already appeared as "Czesu sic troczyszz," in a Polish hymn-book ed. by Pastor Seklecyan, and pub. at Königsberg in 1559.

This hymn has often been ascribed to Hans Sachs. So Ambrosius Hammann in his Prodomus Hymnologicz, Wittenberg, 1633, Second 10, No. 8, entitles it "Consolation against Tearfulness, Hans Sachs"; and in Jermannus Weber's G. R., Leipzig, 1678, p. 574, it is entitled, "On Famine, A good family hymn. Written for the use of heads of households and their families, by Hans Sachs, of Nürnberg, 1565."

2. What God does is done aright. By Mrs. H. Chester, as No. 471 in the Hymnary, 1872, from the text of Biggs, with an original doxology. Repeated in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883.

Other trs. are: (1) "Whatever God does is done aright," by Miss Warner, 1868, p. 255, repeated in Bp. Ryle's Cdl., 1860. (2) "What God hath done is done aright," by Miss Cost, 1864, p. 125. (J. M.)

Washburn, Edward Abiel, d.d., was b. April 16, 1819: graduated at Harvard, 1838: studied theology at Andover and New Haven, and entered the Congregational ministry. In 1841, having been ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church, he became Rector of St. Paul's, Newburyport, Mass., where he remained till 1851. Spending 1851-52 in Europe, on his return he became Rector of St. John's, Hartford, 1853-62, and Professor of Church Polity in Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Connecticut; also Rector of St. Mark's, Philadelphia, 1862-65; and Calvary, New York, 1865-81. He d. Feb. 2, 1881. His works include Social Law of God, 1874, and tra. of Latin hymns. A selection from his poems was published in New York in 1881. Some of his tra. are given in Putnam's Christ in Song, 1885, and other collections. For these tra. see Index of Authors and Translators.

Washburn, Henry S., was b. at Providence, Rhode Island, June 10, 1813; spent his boyhood at Kingston, Massachusetts, and was educated at Worcester and Brown University. Subsequently he was a manufacturer at Worcester and Boston. Since 1875 he has been the President of the United Mutual Life Insurance Co. Mr. Washburn has held some prominent posts, and has been active in public matters. He has written various hymns and songs, the best known of which is:

- Let every heart rejoice and sing. National Hymn. This was written for a celebration in Boston, July 4, 1843, and sung by the Sunday School Children of the city. It was set to music by Garcia, and often subsequently used at home and abroad. The author altered it for The Psalmist, 1842, No. 1600; and in that form it has been generally known. (F. M. B.)

Waterbury, Jared Bell, d.d., was b. in New York city, Aug. 11, 1799, and graduated at Yale College, 1822. He was for some time pastor of a Congregational church at Hudson, N. Y., and then of Bowdoin Street Congregational church, Boston. He d. at Brooklyn, Dec. 31, 1876. He pub. Advice to a Young Christian; The Officer on Duty, and other works. To the Rev. J. Leavitt's Christian Lyre, vol. i., 1836, he contributed the following hymns, each of which was headed, "Written for the Lyre," and signed "J. B. W.:

1. My Jesus, Thou hast taught. The Love of Jesus.
3. O by, mourning sinner, saith Jesus to me. Promise of Pardon.
5. Sinner, is thy heart at rest? The Voice of Conscience.
7. When, O my Saviour, shall this heart? Desiring Jesus.

In vol. ii. of the same work, 1830, also:

8. I have fought the good fight; I have finished my race. Martyr's Song.

Another of his hymns is given in the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, as:

Of these hymns, Nos. 5, 6, and 9 are the best known. (F. M. B.)

Waterston, Robert Cassie, m.a., s. of Robert Waterston, was b. at Keanubunk, in 1812, but has resided in his infancy at Boston, Massachusetts. He studied Theology at Cambridge; had for five years the charge of a Sunday school for the children of seamen; was associated for several years with the Pitts Street Unitarian Chapel, Boston; and then pastor for seven years of the Unitarian Church of the Saviour in the same city. Much of his time has been given to literature, and a long list of his papers of various kinds is given in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1874. He also interested himself largely in educational matters. He contributed one hymn to the American Unitarian Cheshire Pastoral Association Christian Hymnus, 1844; 8 to his own popular Supplement to Greenwood's Psalms and Hymns, 1845, and others to various works. Putnam gives 20 poetical pieces in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1874, amongst which are the following, which are in C. U. at the present time:

1. In darkest hours I hear a voice. Looking unto Jesus. Contributed to Putnam's Singers and Songs, &c., 1874, and found in a few collections.

4. In each breeze that was to me Nature and the Soul. Pub. before 1863, and again in Putnam, 1874. The hymn "Nature, with eternal youth," in Hedge and Huntington's Hymn. for the Ch. of Christ, 1853, No. 145, is composed of st. iv-vii. of this piece.

3. One sweet (bright) flower has drooped and faded. Death of a Child. Appeared in the American Unitarian Cheshire Pastoral Association Christian Hymnus, 1844, No. 606, and again in Putnam, 1874, as "One bright flower, &c." It is in several collections. In the Christian Hymnus, the heading is "Death of a Pupil;" and Putnam, "On the Death of a Child. Sung by her classmates."

In Putnam there are other pieces by him which are worthy of attention. (F. M. B.)

Watson, George, s. of F. Watson, b. at Birmingham, 1813, and until the year 1836 was in business in London as a printer. From his office and with his co-operation originated the well-known publications, the Band of Hope Review, in 1851; and The British Workman, 1855, which were the pioneers of cheap illustrated publications. Mr. Watson's hymn-writing has been limited. Two (see below) appeared in Paxton Hood's Our Hymn Book, 4 K 2.
1868: the rest have been issued as fly-leaves, or are still in ms. Those in C. U. are:

1. O the deep mystery of that love. The Love of Jesus. 1st ed. in H. Bk. 1848, No. 736, in 4 at. of 4.

2. With the sweet word of peace. Parting. Written in 1867 to be sung at a meeting held in Brighton to say Farewell to the Rev. Paxton Hood on his leaving his church for a considerable time for change and rest. On his return Mr. Hood included it in his Our H. Bk. 1868, No. 572, in 6 at. of 4. 1. It was given with considerable alterations in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. This text was repeated in the Scottish Evangelical Union Hymnal, 1878, and is the usually accepted form of the hymn. It has much tenderness and beauty, and is worthy of wide circulation.

Watts, Alaric Alexander, was born in London, Mar. 19, 1797, and educated at the collegiate school of Wye, Kent. After a short engagement as a private tutor, he devoted himself to literary pursuits. He was for some time editor of The Leeds Intelligencer, and then of the Manchester Courier. Subsequently returning to London, he edited 10 vols. of The Literary Souvenir, and 3 vols. of The Cabinet of Modern Art. He was also engaged for some time as editor of the United Service Gazette, and contributed to the Standard, and other newspapers. In 1833 he received a royal pension of £100 a year, and an appointment in Somerset House. H. d. at Kensington, April 5, 1864. His hymns appeared in his Poetical Sketches, 1822. 3rd ed. 1824. Of these, "When shall we meet again," is found in a few collections.

Watts, Isaac, D.D. The father of Dr. Watts was a respected Nonconformist, and at the birth of the child, and during its infancy, twice suffered imprisonment for his religious convictions. In his later years he kept a flourishing boarding school at Southampton. Isaac, the eldest of his nine children, was b. in that town July 17, 1674. His taste for verse showed itself in early childhood. He was taught Greek, Latin, and Hebrew by Mr. Pinhorn, rector of All Saints, and headmaster of the Grammar School, in Southampton. The splendid promise of the boy induced a physician of the town and other friends to offer him an education at one of the Universities for eventual ordination in the Church of England; but this he refused; and entered a Nonconformist Academy at Stoke Newington in 1690, under the care of Mr. Thomas Rowe, the pastor of the Independent congregation at Girdler’s Hall. Of this congregation he became a member in 1693. Leaving the Academy at the age of twenty, he spent two years at home; and it was then that the bulk of the Hymns and Spiritual Songs (pub. 1707–9) were written, and sung from miss in the Southampston Chapel. The hymn “Behold the glories of the Lamb” is said to have been the first he composed, and written as an attempt to raise the standard of praise. In answer to requests, others succeeded. The hymn “There is a land of pure delight” is said to have been suggested by the view across Southampton Water. The next six years of Watts’s life were again spent at Stoke Newington, in the post of tutor to the son of an eminent Puritan, Sir John Hartopp; and to the intense study of these years must be traced the accumulation of the theological and philosophical materials which he pub-

These 454 Hymns and Versions of the Psalms, in addition to the contexts which are indicated by the sublines, are all in C. U. at the present time. The more important and best known of Dr. Watts’s Hymns and versions of the Psalms have separate annotations under their respective first lines. [See Index of Authors and Translators.]

Watts, Benjamin, was b. at Settle, in Yorkshire, Feb. 20, 1839, and educated for the Congregational Ministry at Airedale College, Bradford. He has held pastorate at Prestbury, Berkshrie, Greenway, and New Southgate. He has been for several years editor of The Sunday Magazine, and a large contributor to its pages. He has pub. (1) The Good Cradle, Who rocks it; (2) Sunday Evenings with my Children; (3) The Children’s Sunday Hour; (4) The Child of the English Savage; (5) Imperial Legislation and Street Children. Mr. Waugh’s hymns have appeared from time to time in The Sunday Magazine, and have not been separately published. Those which have come into C. U. include:—

1. Jesus, the Friend of friendless men. Jesus the Sinner’s Friend, 1784.
3. 0 let me see Thy beauty, Lord. Thou art the Beauty of the Lord. This is given in revised form as ‘0 let me see Thy beauty, Lord,’ in Border’s Cong. Hymns, 1884.

Mr. Waugh’s hymns are for children’s use, and are exceedingly fresh and unconventional. Several others of merit might be selected from the Sunday Magazine with advantage to children’s hymnody.

We all had sinned and gone astray. G. Thring. [The Good Shepherd.] This was the author’s first hymn, and was written to the tune “Cambridge New,” at his mother’s request, in 1801. It was pub. in Morrell & How’s Ps. & Hymn., 1864; and in his own Hym. Cong. and Others, 1866, p. 11, in 4 st. of 6 l., and entitled, “The Love of Christ.” Also given in his Hym. & Sac. Lyrics, 1874, p. 86, and in his Coll., 1882.

We all, O Lord, have gone astray. [The Shepherd and His wandering Sheep.] This is based upon J. Merrick’s version of the last part (Tat) of Ps. cxiii., pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1875. It was repeated in a few collections in G. Britain and America. It was arranged from Merrick by Cotterill. [J. J.]
It is found in many collections, but usually in an abbreviated form.

We bow before Thy gracious Throne.
This, in the American Unitarian Hymns for the Church of Christ, 1853, No. 518, is a cento from two hymns by C. Wesley, st. I., iv. being from "Thou Son of God, Whose flaming eye"; and st. ii., iii. from "Come, O Thou almighty Victor" (p. 340, ii.), as in the West. H. Bk. 1750.

[J. J.]

We come, Lord, to Thy feet.
Opening of Sunday School. This hymn, together with the companion hymn for the Closing of a Sunday School, "O Lord, our hearts would give Thee praise," appeared on a card printed for Sunday-school use by Bp. Pelham, when Incumbent of Christ Church, Hampstead. Both hymns were adapted by him from another and now unknown source. The Rev. E. H. Bickersteth included both hymns, with slight alterations, in his Ps. & Hys., &c., 1858, from thence they have passed into several collections. W. F. Stevenson attributes the former in his Hymn, for Church and Home, 1873, to Lady Lucy Whitmore, 1824, but we have failed to find it in her Family Prayers, &c., 1824 (see p. 1085, ii.), and know of no authority for the ascription.

[J. J.]

We give Thee but Thine own. Bp. W. W. Howe.
Offering. Written about 1858, and 1st pub. in the enlarged ed. of Morrell & How's Psalms & Hymns, 1864, No. 197, in 6th of 41. From thence it has passed into numerous collections, and now ranks in popularity with some of the best of modern hymns. Of the author's compositions in extensiveness of use it is exceeded only by his "For all Thy Saints who from their labours rest," Orig. text, Church Hymns, 1871. The doxology in H. A. & M. and others is an addition.

[J. J.]

We have not seen Thy footsteps tread. Anne Richter, née Rigby.
Faith. The complicated nature of the various forms of this hymn in C. U. requires the reproduction of the original poem, and the texts of some of the hymns adapted therefrom.

1. The earliest date to which we have traced the original poem is 1894. In that year it appeared anonymously in Songs from the Valley: A Collection of Sacred Poetry, Kirkby Lonsdale, 18mo. This volume was compiled by the elder daughters of the Rev. W. Carus Wilson. [E. Mss.] At page 130 it reads:—

"FAITH.

Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed.

"We have not seen Thy footsteps tread
This wild and sinfull earth of ours,
Nor heard Thy voice restore the dead
Again to life's reviving powers;
But we believe—for all things are The gifts of Thine Almighty care."

"We have not seen the blithous sea
Grow calm and still at Thy command,
Nor the dim orbs again to see,
Beneath the healing of Thine hand:
But we believe—the Fount of Light Again could give those eyeballs sight."

"We did not see Thee tread the wave
We did not hear the voice from heaven,
Which once with awful warning gave
That God's own Son for us was given.
But we believe—oh! strengthen Thou
The faith which to Thy Name we owe."

"We were not with the faithful few,
Nor stood they round the tomb,
Nor heard the prayer those who slew,
Nor felt that earthquake rock the ground:
We saw no scene of Thy side;
Yet we believe that Thou hast died.

"No angel's message met our ear,
On that first glorious Easter-day,
'The Lord is risen, He is not here.'
Come see the place where Jesus lay!
But we believe that Thou didst dwell
The banded powers of Death and Hell.

"We saw Thee not return on high,
And now our longing sight to bless,
No ray of glory from the sky
Shines down upon our wilderness:
Yet we believe that Thou art there,
And seek Thee, Lord, in praise and prayer."

4. The next form of this text appeared in J. H. Gurney's Ps. & Hymns, for Public Worship, Selected for some of the Churches in Marylebone, Lond. 1851, No. 269, and reads:

1. "We saw Thee not when Thou didst come
To this poor world of sin and death,
Nor e'er beheld Thy cottage-home
In that despised Nazareth;
But we believe Thy footsteps trod
Its streets and plains, Thou Son of God.

2. We did not see Thee lifted high Amid the wild and savage crew,
Nor heard Thy voice, compelling cry,
"Forgive, they know not what they do!"
Yet we believe the deed was done,
That shook the earth, and veiled the sun.

3. We saw not by the empty tomb,
Where late Thy sacred body lay,
Nor sat within that upper room,
With nor met Thee in open way;
But we believe that angels said,
'Why seek the living with the dead?'

4. We did not mark the chosen few,
When Thou didst through the clouds ascend,
First lift to heaven their wondering view
Then to the earth all prostrate bend;
Yet we believe that mortal crew
Beheld that journey to the skies.

5. And now that Thou dost reign on high,
And thence Thy waiting people's-keen,
No ray of glory from the sky
Doth shine upon our wilderness:
But we believe Thy faithful word,
And trust in our Redeeming Lord."

It will be noted that st. iv., v. are from the Lutterworth Coll., 1838. In a note to this hymn in the "Table of first lines" to the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., Gurney says concerning it:

"The hymn, and the last hymn in the book, 'Yes God is good,' were suggested by two poems in a small American volume, which were well conceived, but very imperfectly executed. Successive scribes have left nothing of the original compositions remaining but the first four words, and the repeated words, in each hymn. With this acknowledgment, the writer has not scrupled to put his name to them—J. H. G.

The "small American volume" here referred to has not been identified. In the American Sabath H. Bk., 1858, No. 361 begins with st. ii. of this text, "We did not see Thee lifted high."

5. On the death of Buckoll in 1871, a ms. in his handwriting, but undated, was found which contained the Lutterworth text of 1838 expanded into 14 stanzas. With the aid of this ms. we are enabled to say with tolerable certainty that of the Lutterworth text st. i., ii. were by Buckoll, and st. iii., iv. were by Gurney; the Rugby text, 1850, was by Buckoll; and the Marylebone text, 1851, by Gurney.

vi. After the publication of Gurney's text in the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., 1851, compilations soon arose mainly in the form of centos. Some of these are:—

(1) In the Hys. for the Chapel of Harrow School, 1844, No. 90 is thus composed:

"The Lord is risen, He is not here;
Come see the place where Jesus lay;
But we believe that Thou didst dwell
The banded powers of Death and Hell.

(2) In the American Unitarian H. Bk., 1851, and other comp., is composed of st. ii.-v. of Gurney's 1851 text, and begins "We did not see Thee lifted high."

(3) In Poole's Hymns fitted to the order of Common Prayer, &c., 1861, No. 102, we have st. ii., iv., Gurney, from the Marylebone; st. ii., III., Buckoll, from the Lutterworth Coll.; st. iii., Buckoll, from the Rugby Hymns; st. iv., Gurney, from the Marylebone text.

(4) The text of the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, No. 541, is st. i., ii., Buckoll, from the Lutterworth Coll.; st. iii., Buckoll, from the Rugby Hymns; st. iv., Gurney, from the Lutterworth Coll.

(5) In the American Unitarian H. (and Tune) Bk., 1848, No. 428, is composed of st. iii.-v. of Buckoll's Rugby text alone, and begins "We were not with the faithful few."

The text by Gurney, as in the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., 1851, is the most popular form of the hymn. It is found in H. A. & M., 1875; the Hg. Comp., 1876; Thring's Coll., 1882, and many others.

We in the lower parts. [Holy Communion.] This cento appeared in the 1874 Suppl. to the New Cong. H. Bk., No. 1242. It is thus composed: st. i. and iii. are from No. 97 of C. Wesley's Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1743; st. ii. from No. 81 of the same; and st. iv. and v. from another source. [J. J.]

We limit not the truth of God. G. Rawson. [Profound Depth of Holy Scripture.] This hymn was given in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 409, in 5 st. of 8 l., and headed with the following extract upon which it was based:

"He charged us before God, and His blessed angels, if God should reveal anything to us by any other instrument of His, to be as ready to receive it as any truth by his univoy; for he was very confident the Lord had more light and truth yet to break forth out of His holy word." Narrative of Pastor Robinson's Address to the Pilgrim Fathers.

This note, together with the hymn, also appeared in Mr. Rawson's Hys., Verses, and Chants, 1876.

We love the place, O Lord (God). W. Bullock and Sir H. W. Baker. [The House of God.] In its original form this hymn appeared in Dean Bullock's Songs of the Church, Halifax, N. Scotia, 1854, pp. 57, 38, as follows:

"Third Sunday after Epiphany.
Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house.
Psalm xlv. 8.
We love the place, O Lord,
Wherein Thine honour dwells;
The Joy of Thy abode
All other joy excels.
We love the house of prayer,
Wherein Thine servants meet;
For Thou, O Lord, art there,
Thy chosen ones to greet.
We love the sacred spot
Wherein the Holy Dove
Pour's out, as He is wont.
The influence from above,
We love our Father's board,
Its altar steps are dear;
For there in faith adored,
We find Thy Presence near.
We love Thy saints who come
Thy mercy to proclaim,
To call the wandering homes,
And magnify Thy name.
Our first and latest love
To Zion shall be given—
The House of God above,
On earth the Gate of Heaven."

2. This text, which has many features of excellence, underwent the following changes.
at the hands of Sir H. W. Baker, in 1860, and was pub. in H. A. & M., 1861, as follows, the italics being Sir H. W. Baker's alterations and additions:

"We love the place, O God, Wherein Thine honour dwells; The joy of Thine abide All earthly joy excels."

"It is the House of prayer, Wherein Thy servants meet; And Thou, O Lord, art there Thy chosen flock to greet."

"We love the sacred Font; For there the Holy Dove To pour is ever wont His blessing from above."

"We love Thine Altar, Lord: Oh what on earth so dear? For there, in faith adored, We find Thy Presence near."

"We love the Word of Life, The Word that tells of peace, Of comfort in the strife, And joys that never cease."

"We love to sing below For mercies freely given; But O! we long to know The triumph-song of heaven."

"Lord Jesus, give us grace On earth to love Thee more, In heaven to see Thy Face, And with Thy saints adore."

This form of the hymn has passed into most extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into several languages.

3. A third form appeared in Harland's Church Psalter and Hymn., enlarged ed. 1887, the opening stanza of which begins:

"O Lord, we love the place Wherein Thine honour dwells; The sweetness of Thy grace All other joy excels."

This is based upon the H. A. & M. text; but is very inferior as a piece of literary workmanship.

4. A fourth form is given in Thring's Coll., 1882. Of this st. i., ii. are by Bullock, with "God" for "Lord," in st. i., 1: st. iii., 1, 2, Bullock, 1, 3, Bullock altered by Thring, 1, 4, Bullock altered by Baker; st. v. by Thring; st. vi. ll., 1-3, by Thring, 1, 4, Bullock altered by Baker. This is a good cento and worthy of more extensive use. [J. J.]

We love Thee, Lord! yet not alone.

Julia A. Elliott, née Marshall. [Love for Christ.] This appeared in her husband's Ps. & Hys., 1835, in 6 st. of 4 double lines. Although not separately numbered as such, it is really a hymn in two parts, Pt. ii. beginning with st. iv., "We love Thee, Lord! because when we, &c." It has passed into a few collections. [J. J.]

We plan foundations for the dead.

J. Montgomery. [Foundation Stone of a Cemetery Chapel.] The ms. of this hymn is dated "May 5, 1848." The hymn was written for the laying of the foundation-stone of the chapel for the Church of England portion of the Sheffield General Cemetery. Montgomery's hymn, "Father of glory, God of grace," was written for the Opening of the same, and is dated "June 27, 1850." Montgomery d. on April 30, 1854, and was buried under the shadow of the spire of this chapel. [J. J.]
WEARY OF EARTH

Day, 1887." It is No. 236 in the 1890 ed. of the H. Comp.

[3. J.]

Weary of earth, and laden with my cross,
To St. J. Stone. [Leut.] Written in 1880, and 1st pub. in the same year in his Lyra Iidelium, p. 44, in 8 st. of 4 1. It is based on a Art. 10 of the Apostles' Creed, "The Forgiveness of Sins," and was written, originally, for a parochial mission. In 1888 Mr. Stone revised it for the Appendix to H. A. d. M. "Hymns," p. 7. It has passed into numerous collections in G. Britain and America. It is one of the most tender and plaintive of Mr. Stone's hymns. In the American Lades Domini, 1884, it is divided into two parts, pt. 1. being st. 1-v.; and pt. ii. st. vi.-viii., altered to "O Jesus Christ the righteous! live in me."

[3. J.]

Weary of this worldly strife. C. Wesley. [For Unity.] 1st pub. in 7 st. of 6 1. at the end of J. Wesley's Sermon on 2 Kings x. 15, in 1755. (J. Works, 1868-72, vol. vi. 71.) Two centos are in C. U. (1) "Weary of this worldly strife," in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883; and (2) "My brethren, friends, and kinsmen these," in the American Church Praise Book, N. Y., 1882.

Webb, Benjamin, M.A., was b. in London in 1820, and was educated at St. Paul's School, where he afterwards entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1838, b.a. 1842, M.A. 1815. Ordained by the Bishop [Monk] of Gloucester and Bristol he was Assistant Curate of Keneston in Gloucestershire, 1843-44; of Christ Church, St. Pancras, 1847-49; and of Brasted, Kent, 1849-51; at which date he was presented to the P.C. of Sheen in Staffordshire, which he held until 1862, when he became Vicar of St. Andrews, Wells Street, London. In 1881 the Bishop [Jackson] of London collated him to the Prelend of Portpool in St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Webb was one of the Founders of the Cambridge Camden, afterwards the Ecclesiastical Society; and the Editor of the Ecclesiologist from 1842 to 1868, as well as the General Editor of the Society's publications. His first appearance in print was as joint editor of Bp. Montague's Articles of Inquiry in 1841; in 1843 he was joined with Mr. J. M. Neale in An Essay on Schoolmen, and A Translation of the Roman Catechism; in 1847 he published his valuable work on Continental Ecclesiology; in 1848 he was joint editor with Dr. Mill of Frank's Sermons, for the Anglico-Catholic Library, and with the Rev. J. Fuller-Russell of Hieroglyphs Anglicana. After the decease of his father-in-law (Dr. Mill), he edited Dr. Mill's Catechistic Lectures, 1851, a second edition of Dr. Mill's Christian Advocate's Publications on the Mythical Interpretation of the Gospels, 1861; and of Dr. Mill's Sermons on our Lord's Temptation, 1873. He was also one of the editors of the Brompton reprint of the Sarum Missal. One of the most valuable works is Instructions and Prayers for Candidates for Ordination, of which the third edition was pub. in 1852. Mr. Webb was one of the original editors of the Hymnals, and of the sub-committee of the Ecclesiastical Society, appointed to arrange the words and the music of that book; and was also the translator of some of the hymns. In conjunction with the Rev. Canon W. Cooke he was editor of the Hymnary, 1872, for the purpose of the musical reconstruction and composition of the words of the anthems used at St. Andrew's, Wells Street, as well as his connection with the Hymnal Noted, eminently qualified him. His original hymns contributed to the Hymnary, 1871 and 1872, were:

2. Behold he comes, thy King most holy. Advent. Originally written to be sung in St. Andrew's, Wells Street, as an anthem to the music of Schumann's Advent-tune, and afterwards pub. in the Hymnary, 1872.

3. Praise God, the Holy Trinity. Hymn of Praise. Originally written for St. Andrew's, Wells Street, and subsequently in the Hymnary, 1872.

5. Ye angels hosts above. Universal Praise to God. In the Hymnary, 1872.

Mr. Webb's trs. are annotated elsewhere. [See Index of Authors and Translators.] He d. in London, Nov. 27, 1885. [WM. C.]

Wedderburn, James, John and Robert, were the three sons of James Wedderburn, a Dundee merchant. James, the eldest, entered the University of St. Andrews in 1514. He afterwards went to France, and on his return produced a second edition of the Scotch which roused the rage of the ecclesiastics, who forced him to flee, in 1540, to France, where he d., probably at Dieppe, about 1550. John, the second son, graduated M.A. at St. Andrews in 1528. Having entered the priesthood and officiated at Dundee, he fell under suspicion of heresy, and fled in 1539 to Wittenberg, where he associated with Luther, Melancthon, and other Reformers. There in his exile, doubtless under Luther's influence, he wrote and translated many of the psalms, hymns and ballads commonly known as The Guile and Godlie Ballatites. After the death of James v. (Dec. 13, 1542), he returned to Scotland, but was forced in 1549 again to flee. He d. in England in 1556. Robert, the youngest son, graduated M.A. at St. Andrews in 1530. He entered the priesthood, and was Vicar of Dundee in 1553. He seems to have written a number of the "Ballatis" proper. To him Dr. Laing ascribes the remarkable Complaint of Scotland, a satirical poem first pub. at St. Andrews in 1549. [See Scottish Hymnody, § 3; and the works by Dr. Laing and Dr. Mitchell mentioned in the Appendix to that article.]

Weep, mourner, for the joys that fade. W. Knox. [Heaven.] 1st pub. in his Harp of Zion, 1823, in 2 st. of 11 1., and entitled "Heaven." It is based on Job xix. 26. It was also included in his Poems, &c., 1847, p. 181, but is unknown to the hymnals in that form. As early as 1814 it was given in an altered form as: "O weep not for the joys that fade," in the American Unitarian Christian Hymns, of the Cheshire Pastoral Association, and, later, in other American collections, in most of which it is ascribed to Knox, in error.

Wegelin, Josua, d.d., s. of Johann Wegelin, or Wegelein, then superintendent Weigele, CHRISTOPH (Ephorus) of the Evangelical college at Augsburg, was b. at Augsburg Jan. 11, 1604. After studying at the University of Tübingen (M. A. 1626), he was for a short time pastor at Budweiler, and was appointed in 1627 fourth diaconus of the Franciscan (Barfüsser) church at Augsburg. In 1629, along with 13 other Evangelical pastors, he was compelled to leave Augsburg by the decree of Restitution (see p. 1009, d.) enacted by the Emperor Ferdinand iii. After Gustavus Adolphus had become master of the city, in 1632, Wegelin was recalled to the Barfüsser Kirche as archi diaconus. In 1633 he was appointed preacher at the Hospital Church of the Holy Ghost, but in 1635, as a result of the battle of Nördlingen (Sept, 1634), he was again forced to flee from Augsburg. He found refuge at Pressburg, in Hungary, where he became pastor, and afterwards Senior, Inspector, and Doctor of Theology. He d. at Pressburg, Sept. 14, 1640 (Koch, iii. 169; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii. 1887, p. 161, &c.):

Wegelin's hymns are simple and natural, and are the productions of an earnset, true-hearted and good pastor rather than of a skilful poet. Goedeke, as above, gives lists of their first lines from his (1) Augspurger Bet Hieklein, Nürnberg, 1636 [copy in possession of Pastor E. Krause of Greifswald. There are also eds. which have the engraved title dated 1636, and the written title dated 1649, a copy of the sv ed. being in the Göttingen Library, and a copy of the 12mo in the Library of the Prebiger Seminary at Hamburg], and from his (2) Hamb. Land- und Stand-Bet Hieklein, Nürnberg, 1637 [Göttingen Library]. Some 20 of his hymns were included in J. M. Dillen's G. R., Nürnberg, 1646 (p. 301, II), and other collections of the 17th cent.

The only hymn by Wegelin which has passed into English is:

Allein auf Christi Himmelfahrt. Ascension. This is his most popular hymn. 1st pub. 1636, as above, p. 409 (Göttingen copy p. 522, Hannover copy p. 581), in 3 st of 7 lines, entitled, "iv. Short Psalm of Praise on the Ascension of Christ;" repeated in Dillen's G. R., 1646, p. 394. In the Lüneburg G. R., 1661, No. 112, it is recast and begins, "Auf Christi Himmelf-Hart allein;" this recast being probably made by the compiler Ernst Sommermann (1655 corrector of the Latin school at Celle, 1651 pastor of St. Alexander's Church at Einbeck, in Hannover; or at Einbeck, in Hannover; d. at Einbeck, Nov. 17, 1670). Both forms are given in the Leipzig Forrath, 1673, Nos. 358 and 360, and in the G. R., ii. 1691, Tr. as:

1. Raise your Devotion, mortal Tongues. By J. G. Jacob, in his Psal. Ger., 1724, p. 24, repeated, altered, in his 2nd ed., 1732, p. 41. In 1722 it is marked as tr. from the second form of Wegelin's hymn, in 1722 from J. Zwick's Auf diesen Tag bedenken wir. It may be a very free tr. from Wegelin; with the first stanza taken from st. v, vi. of Isaac Watts's "Adoration of the Prince of Light." The 2nd text was included as No. 443 in pt. 1. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, with a new tr. of st. i. added. This tr. of st. iii. was omitted in the 1749 and later eds. In the edition of 1866, No. 176, only st. i., ii. of Jacob are retained.

2. Since Christ is gone to heaven, his Home. This is a good tr. from the second form, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd ser., 1858, p. 47; and in Schub. Christ in Song, 1869, p. 314. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 64, it is altered in metre. [J. M.]

Weigleiter, Christoph, s. of Leonhard Wegleiter, book-keeper at Nürnberg, was b. at Nürnberg, April 22, 1659. In 1676 he matriculated at the University of Altdorf, and so distinguished himself by his poetic gifts that he was, in 1679, received by S. von Birken as a member of the Pogintz Shepherd and Flower order, and in 1680 was at once capp’d M.A. and laureated as a poet. After studying at other German universities, and making a lengthened tour (1683-88) in Ger-

Other trs. are: (1) "Oberburden'd J. Bockel, 1822, p. 183, cares dismiss," by L. "Now, heavy heart, lay off thy cares," by In burden'd heart, cast off Wedel's Praters Bk., 1833.

Weisse, Michael (Weiss, Wiss, Wegs, Wyes, Weyss), was b. circa 1480, in Neisse, Silissia, took priest's orders, and was for some time a monk at Bruslum. When the early writings of Luther came into his hands, Weisse, with two other monks, abandoned the convent, and sought refuge in the Bohemian Brethren's House at Leutonischl in Bohemia. He became German preacher (and apparently founder of the German communities) to the Bohemian Brethren in Bohemia, and Fulnek, in Moravia, and at Landskron in 1534 (Koch, ii. 115-120; Wackernagel's D. Kirchenlied, i. p. 727; Fontes rerum Austriacorum, Scriptores, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 227, Vienna, 1863, &c.).

Weisse was admitted as a priest among the Brethren at the Synod of Brendas, in 1531, and in 1532 was appointed a member of their Select Council, but he had previously performed important missions for the Brethren. He was, e.g., sent by Bishop Lucas, in 1522, along with J. Roh or Horn, to explain the views of the Bohemian Brethren to Luther; and again, in 1534, when they were expelled from Bohemia; he was especially called upon to report on the schism and holiness of life of the followers of the German Reformers. He was also entrusted with the editing of the first German hymn-book of the Bohemian Brethren, which appeared as Ein Neues Gesangbucchen bei Jungem Bunzel (Jung Bunzl) in Bohemia in 1531 (see pp. 158, i. and 167). This contained 165 hymns, all apparently either translations or else originals by himself. The proportion of trs. is not very clear. In the preface to the 1531, Weisse addressing the German Communities at Fulnek and Landskron says, "I have also, according to my power, put forth all my ability, your old hymn-book as well as the Bohemian hymn-book (Concetal) being before me, and have brought the same sense, according with Holy Scripture, into German rhyme." So John von Roh or Horn, in his own self as correcting "hymns which he (i.e. Weisse) transferred from Bohemian into German"; and the 1639 ed. speaks of "himself as having "begun to translate the (Bohemian) Concetal, and rendered 143 hymns into German." Mr. Müller, however (see p. 167), has only been able to list 112 trs. from the Bohemian.

Luther called Weisse "a good poet, with somewhat erroneous views on the Sacrament" (i.e. Holy Communion); and, after the sacramental hymns had been revised by Roh (1544), included 12 of his hymns in V. Babt's G. H., 1546. Many of his hymns possess considerable merit. The style is flowing and musical, the religious tone is earnest and manly, but yet tender and truly devout, and the best of them are distinguished by a certain charming simplicity of thought and expression. At least 119 passed into the German Lutheran hymnbooks of the 16th and 17th centuries, and many are still in use. The trs. are amply listed in this Dictionary at pp. 393, ii. 582, i., and 886, i.

The following hymns by Weisse have also passed into English:

1. Christus ist erstanden. Von dem Todes Banden. Easter. 1st pub. 1531 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 273, in 7 st. of 4 l. It is suggested by the older hymn, "Christ ist erstanden" (p. 258, i.), in the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 129. The tr. in C. U. is:

Christ the Lord is risen again! This is a full and very good tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 37, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 58. It has been included in many recent English and American hymnals; generally omitting st. ii., as in H. A. & M., 1881; Hymnary, 1872; Thring's Coll., 1880-82; Cong. Ch. Hym., 1887, and in America in the Epis. Hym., 1871; Bapt. Service of Song, 1871, &c. Further abridged forms are in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1871; and in the Lawes Domini, N. Y., 1884, and many others, especially in America.

Other trs. are:

(1) "In God the Lord most just," by Thring, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1874. (2) "Christ our Lord is risen," by Dr. H. MILLS, 1882, p. 322.

2. O gebe daher dem Tages Schein. Morning. 1531 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 318, in 7 st. of 4 l. In the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 455. The trs. in C. U. are:

2. Once more the day-light shines abroad. This is a full and very good tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 69, and in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 18. Repeated in Thring's Coll., 1880-82.

iii. Gebet sei Gott im höchsten Thron. Easter. 1531 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 295, in 20 st. of 3 l, with Alleluia. In the Ps. & Hymns, 1880, No. 19, five st. are given, and in Layris' H. Bk., there are six st. At p. 157 it is marked as from the Bohemian (1st pub, 1501), the Bohemian being suggested by the "Surrexit Christus Hodie" (p. 1104, i.), and the German being based on both. The trs. in C. U. are:

1. Praise God upon His heavenly throne. This is a free tr. of st. 1, 4, 10, 19, 20, by A. T. Russell, as No. 112, in his Ps. & Hymns, 1851.

2. Glory to God upon His throne. By Mrs. H. R. Speath, in the Southern Lutheran Service and Hymns, for Sunday Schools, Philadelphia, 1883.

iv. Gott sah zu seiner Zeit. Christmas. 1531 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 244, in 10 st. of 9 l. The tr. in C. U. is:

When the days of Weisse were. By C. Kinchen, omitting st. v., as No. 169 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742 (1849, No. 20). In the ed. of 1886, No. 954 consists of st. x., beginning "Ah come, Lord Jesus, hear our prayer." The trs. are:

1. Praise be to that Almighty God. Advent. 1531 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 230, in 14 st. of 4 l. Included in V. Babt's G. H., 1545, and recently as No. 12 in the Univ. L. S., 1851. In the larger ed. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1886, it is marked as a tr. from a Bohemian hymn, beginning "Cirkev Kristova Boha chval." The trs. are:

2. O come, th' Almighty's praise declare. By A. T. Russell, of st. i.-iii., v., as No. 26 in his Ps. & Hymns, 1851.

vi. O Herre Jesu Christ, der du ersehniest bist. For Children. On Christ's Example in His early years on earth. 1531 as above, and in Wackernagel, iii. p. 326, in 7 st. of 7 l. The first three st. are tr. as "Christ Jesus, Lord most dear," in the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, pt 1, No. 278. The form in C. U. is that in Knapp's Ev. L. S. 1837, No. 2531 (1855, No. 2601), which begins "Nun hilt uns, o Herr Jesu Christ," and is in 3 st. of 4 l. entirely recast. This is tr. as:

Lord Jesus Christ, we come to Thee. In full from Knapp, by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 179.

Hymns not in English C. U.:

x. Komm, heiliger, wahrer Gott, Witten- tide. 1531, and in Wackernagel, iii. p. 282, in 9 st. of 5 l. From the Bohemian as noted at p. 157, and partly suggested by the "Veni sancte Spiritus reges." (q.v.). The trs. are: (1) "Come, Holy Ghost, Lord God indeed." This is No. 289 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. (2) "Thou great Teacher, Who instructest." This is a tr. of st. vii., as No. 231 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1791 (1849, No. 267).

xii. O Jesus Christ, der Heiden Licht. Ephiphany. 1531, and in Wackernagel, iii. p. 248, in 2 st. of 14 l. Tr. as: "O Jesus Christ, the Gentiles' Light." This is No. 223 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk. 1754. In the Bruder G. B., 1778, No. 1467, st. 2, was rewritten. This form begins, "Erschein alle Auserwählten," and is in 4 st. of 4 l. Tr. as: "Lord, to Thy chosen ones appear," by Miss Winkworth, 1869, No. 139.

xiii. Singet lieben Lied. Redemption by Christ. 1531, and in Wackernagel, iii. p. 243, in 16 st. of 4 l. Tr. as: "Sing, be glad, the happy sheep." This is in a new ed. of st. xive, by C. G. Clemens, as No. 299 in the Moravian H. Bk. 1798. In the 1801 and later eds. (1849, No. 403) it begins, "O rejoice, Christ's happy sheep."

Besides the above the following in the pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, are also from Weisse (the numbers in brackets being references to the complete hymns in vol. iii. of Wackernagel, in cases where the tr. does not begin with st. i. of the original), viz. Nos. 217, 248, 250, 255, 260 (iii. 291), 257, 261, 270, 271 (iii., 351), 272, 273 (iii., 401), 280 (iii., 351), 284, 288 (see p. 137. Trs. from the Bohemian, No. 2), 289 (iii., 378), 292. [J. M.]

Weissel, Georg, s. of Johann Weissel, judge and afterwards burgomaster at Domnau, near Königsberg, was b at Domnau in 1590. He studied at the University of Königsberg, from 1608 to 1611, and thereafter, for short periods, at Wittenberg, Leipzig, Jena, Strassburg, Basel and Marburg. In 1614 he was appointed rector of the school at Friedland near Domnau, but resigned this post after three years, and returned to Königsberg to resume his studies in theology. Finally, in 1623, he became pastor of the newly erected Altroggart church at Königsberg, where he remained till his death, on August 1, 1635 (Koch, iii. 180; Allpreussische Monatsschrift, 1867, p. 430; Goddeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 122, &c.).

Weissel was one of the most important of the earlier hymn-writers of Prussia. His hymns, about 20 in all, are good in style, moderate in length, and varied in metre. The earliest seem to have been written for use at the consecration of the Altroggart church on the 2nd of August, 1623. The majority are for the greater festivals of the Christian year. The best are Nos. 101, below, and those for the dying. They appeared mostly in the Königsberg hymn-books, 1639-1656, and in the Weissensee, Philipp Heinrich, was born Feb. 6, 1673, at Viechberg, near Gaidorf, Württemberg, where his father was pastor and consistorialbrather. He studied law at the University of Tübingen, and, after acting as assistant to several clergymen, became, in 1697, a tutor to a wealthy student at Stuttgart. In 1703 he was appointed a tutor in the clergy training school at Maulbronn, and in 1708 in that at Blaubeuren. He was then appointed, in 1722, prelate at Blaubeuren, and in 1727 took up residence at Stuttgart as prelate of Hirschau and member of the Württemberg consistory. For political considerations he was removed, in 1740, to Denkendorf near Esslingen, as Probat and General Superintendent. He died at Denkendorf, Jan. 6, 1767, being then the Father and Senior of the Lutheran Church in Württemberg (Koch, v. 79; B. Haug's Lieberdichter des württembergischen Landesangebots, 1789, p. 42, and Appx. ii., &c.).

Weissensee was one of the earliest friends of foreign Missionaries, being specially interested in that to Malabar. He was a good poet, and in 1718 pub. a German metrical version of Thomas à Kempis' Imitations. The most important of his hymns were contributed to the 2nd ed. of J. A. Gramlich's Viertig Betrachtungen von Christi Leidet und Tod, auf die Vierteljahr, 1717 (Berlin Library. The 1st ed., 1722, has no hymns).

Those of Weissensee's hymns which have passed into English are:—

1. Der Tod kommt an: da soll ich singen. For the Dying. 1st pub. 1727, as above, p. 144, in 4 st. of 6 l., as the companion to Meditation on St. Luke xxi. 44. Included in Knox's Ps. LXX. 1637 and 1685. In Hurnse's Versa, 1853, No. 886, it begins "Kommt an der Tod, da ich soll singen." The tr. in C. U. is:—

When the last agony draws nigh. This is a good tr. of st. 1, as it does not move the hearts, and incites to reflection. "For prayer. 1st pub. 1727 as above, p. 124, in 4 st. of 6 l., as the companion to Meditation on St. Luke xxi. 46. Included in the Württemberg G. R., 1742, No. 74 (1842, No. 265). Tr. as "Help me to pray, Lord! and make supplication," by J. D. Burns in his Memoirs and Recollections, 1846, p. 222. [J. M.]

Welsh Hymnody. No reasonable doubt can exist as to hymns being sung in the early British Churches. People whose language was the praises of men, whether kings, warriors, or patriots, would scarcely fail to pour forth their feelings of devotion, and to give the highest scope possible to their muse in the form of hymns or sacred lyrics. In the works of Taliesin, who is supposed to be a bard of the sixth century, reference is made to the hymnology of that period, "Nid cadorr celfyd ni molwy Dwafydd; ni ewr wino inioiad ni molwy Tad"; that is, "No musician is skilful unless he extols the Lord, and no singer is correct unless he praises the Father."

In the works of Llawnedd, a bard who took a prominent part in the reformation of Welsh poetry in the year 1451, some reference is also made to the hymnology of the medival period:—

"Mi luniaf fun lawanwy, Gwydydd nao Salwaeth; A new emyn o newydd, A phawb gair i Fairwydd."

Fudur Aled also, says that in heaven it will be a part of the saints' supreme joy to sing the Virgin's praises:—

"Cawn y nefoli, Cawn y nefoli, Cawn y nefoli, Cawn y nefoli,"

In the year 1340, Davydd Ddu o Hiraethog, Vicar of Tremeirchion, and Canon of St. Asaph, composed some hymns, perhaps the first Welsh hymns, since the early Church hymns were lost. He also translated the Te Deum, in the Welsh metre known as Hyppyt or Cyffyllydd, to St. Matthew 11th. An edition, Delysdod Ddu o Gorch, is printed in the Myriang Archæology of Wales. Also a very poetical translation of the Officium B. Mariae, from Latin into Welsh by him, fills thirty columns of the first volume of the Myriang Archæology.

At the time of the Protestant Reformation the Welsh appeared to have lost the spirit of sacred song. On the Continent the Reformation fired the signal for an outburst of vernacular hymnology. Luther's hymns and psalms fired the hearts of his followers, so that his opponents feared his hymns more than his sermons, and England and Wales caught the fire.

i. Established Church.—In the years 1549-62, Stuenshild and Hopkins gave to the English people the Metrical Psalms; but Wales had to wait many years for the appearance of a poet whose name is now familiar to all Welshmen, as well as the task he so admirably performed—Saloaw Edmond Pryce.

1. Vicar Prichard, commonly known as Vicar Evans Prichard (p. 906 i.), did good service as a hymnologist. It appears that his book called Carmyll y Gymry; or, the Welshman's Candle, was at one time much used, and some of its quaint verses sung as hymns, probably for the want of something better, for in his days the voice of sacred song and praise was scarcely heard in Wales. His compositions were in use before Archdeacon Pryse's Psalms were published. On the decay of religion in Wales, according to one author, when the recognised teachers of the people neglected their duty, The Welshman's Candle appeared and was extensively circulated. Much of it was sung, for it served as a kind of Welsh hymn-book. It was the beginning of a new era. The following is one of his hymns, that was much used before and after Archdeacon Pryse's Psalms appeared. The title is:—Mawgan am farw Crist i y byd (or, Praise for Christ's life and work for the world).

"Rhagfodd lawr garad Mah Dwaw r y byd, Pan deaeth o'r Nefoedd i'n pywyn mor ddrud; Myrywun i gofio am garad Mah Dwaw, A i fol'n waddol tra byddon ni byw, Cyfiauodd y Gyfraith, baddolodd el Ddol, Fe brymdd o'i pardawn, fe'i seolodd i'w waed; Fe'n dysodl ni ni eiddo o'i bedwch a Dwaw, Meliauwn yr iawn tra byddon ni byw, Fe ddug ar y Crossbren ein pechob bob un, Fe'n golched o'i bai a'i wair waed ei hun; Fe'n gwaenydd ym frenhinol oifffertaid i Dwaw, Meliauwn yr iawn tra byddon ni byw, Gogoniant a gallu a ddiwch bob prydd, A fo'r Gafn Drindod o'n pywyn mor ddrud; Am ac amawn i fwywat o'i Phrynwy a'n Pen, A dweuedd pob Cystem ym waddol, Amen."

This may be taken as a specimen of his style, and of the early hymns that were heard from every mouth in the Principality before the time of Archdeacon Pryse.

"It is scarcely credible," says Canon Williams, "with what avidity and pleasure the work was received, read, repeated, and it may be said, sung by the people."
2 Archdeacon Pry (p. 915, ii.), however, is the connecting link between our Hymnology and the Reforma10n period. It was in the year 1621 that he translated the Psalms into a metrical shape, in order, as he quaintly puts it, "that the Welsh people might be enabled to praise God from their hearts."

It was a glorious task. His version of the Psalms is still used. Some have thought it dry and stiff, but on the whole the task was admirably performed. The Ven. Archdeacon Pry was a man of deep learning and piety. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree. He assisted Dr. Morgan in the translation of the Welsh Bible; and from his Metrical Psalms, Englymon, Cyngeddu, and other things composed by him, we have abundant evidence that he was a man of culture, taste and capacity, and that he possessed the religious spirit that could enter into sympathetic relations with the authors of the Psalms, and interpret them from his inmost soul. In some cases, indeed, his rendering of the Psalms, and his recasting them as in his own mould, sheds a flood of light on their meaning. His version of the latter part of the 110th Psalm has been pointed out as an illustration of this: "He shall drink of the brook in the way, therefore shall he lift up the head."

"O wir frys l'r gyfalaf bon,
Fe ffl'r afon newy
A gaffo, ar et florod yn rhwydd Yr Arglwydd a'i ddyrchaf."

That of itself is a sufficient commentary on the Psalm, and its reference to the sufferings and exaltation of the Messiah. It has been said that the Archdeacon's translation of the Psalms is dry and rugged, and that in several places he is guilty of breaking the fixed rules of poetry, and of frequently ignoring the principle of metres so thoroughly developed in Welsh poetry. This, I believe, is a mistake. The old poet, if fairly dealt with, shows that he understood and recognised the principles of rhyme and metre, and the various ways of measuring and adorning Welsh poetry, and their employment into a system and rules of art. I do not say that his metrical Psalms are faultless, but I hold that he is not so guilty of the fault called camaseined, as some have accused him of being. I believe he has respected the rules of rhyme and rhythm, and where he is thought guilty of trampling on those of metre, he is skilfully avoiding doing so by changing the metrical feet and autometers [rythyfeddu o'r corffannau]. The ninety-second Psalm, in which occurs the famous stanza:

"Y tha i blannwys yn hyd Dduw, Yn gochigw. Yf y tyfam:
Ac yn nghynteddan ein Dduw ni
Y rheini a fideon."

is an excellent translation.

3. Next to the Archdeacon's comes the name of Rowland Vaughan (p. 1906, i.), a gentleman, a scholar, and an excellent poet, although his chief mark was made as a translator of hymns, &c. His translation of that beautiful hymn, "Veni Creator Spiritus," is well-known. Whether he translated the original Latin or the English of Bishop Cosin we are not able to decide. The English and Welsh metres, however, differ, the shorter than the English stanzas of each, toge

Several hymn-books have appeared for use in the Established Church in Wales, from time to time, since the days of the Rev. James Davies, in 1662. He composed and collected a number of hymns for one or two or more parishes. This seems to have been the state of things during the greater part of the seventeenth century. After that larger collections were published, but with no efforts to secure for the Welsh Church one general hymn-book. The hymns sung by the Church were much the same as those sung by Nonconformists throughout Wales.

7. The Rev. Robert Davies, M.A., published a collection of hymns which proved useful in parts of North Wales. It was called:—

Hymnaw ar Wylan ac Twmpydian Eglwys Leong, serch y defnydd addfu a fann an warch gcanrhyddwyd am yng nglyndry amwyw rat nawdysau; that is, "Hymns on the Feasts and Fasts of the Church of England, collected from the works of different authors, with several New Hymns, by the Rev. Robert Davies, M.A., of Cambridge, and Curate of Rhuddlan, in Flintshire."

Singularly the book has no date. It was published at Denbigh. Several of its hymns are found in the collections of the present day.

Another hymn-book which was in use in many churches, was called Daniel Jones's Book. The Rev. Daniel Jones was a celebrated clergyman in South Wales. He was Vicar of St. Dogmells in Pembroke-shire. His book is still used in some parts of Wales. Another collection was called The Bishops' Hymn-book. This was collected and published under the direction of the four Bishops, and was an attempt to provide a book for the general use of the Church in Wales. The attempt was not successful; for some reason or other the work failed to commend itself to the universal favour of the Welsh Church.

8. There are three collections which have had a large circulation, and are now used throughout the Principality. (1) *Hymnaw Hên a Nesydd, or "Hymns Ancien and Modern," London, Hadden, 1868, 555 H.; enlarged in 1875 to 596 H., not to be confounded with the English hymn-book of the same name, though the Intros are added, and it is of a similar school. (2) The Rev. Canon Daniel Evans's book, Hymnaw a Thomas, London, Novello, 1862, 504 H.; and the (3) Emynnydd by the late Rev. T. Williams, Rectory of St. George, dedicated to the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph.

These three books contain many of the same hymns, being selections from the works of Williams of Pantycelyn, Morgan Rhys, Ann Griffiths, Rev. E. Evans, and translations from English collections. These hymns as yet belong to no party in the Church, but are hymns that may be sung by all. Complaints are made by some clergymen that these hymns are of too subjective a cast, and that they should be replaced by hymns more objective in character, and there is also a demand for more Sacramental Hymns. There is now [1886] in course of preparation, by the Rev. Elise Roberts, Vicar of Llangyn, and the Rev. W. G. Thomas, Vicar of St. Asaph, a new hymnal which is intended, in accordance with the Bishop of St. Asaph's desire, to be a good and acceptable hymnal for the use of the Church in Wales.

2. Calvinistic Methodists.

1. During the latter part of the eighteenth century a complete change came over the country. The cold negligent spirit which had characterised the first half, disappeared, the people were shaken from a long deep sleep, and with the revival came a love of hymns and spiritual songs. The Methodist revival is a starting point from which has been unfolded a rich and pure literature that will bear comparison with anything of the same nature produced by the most cultured nations. Foremost in the rank of religious poets stands the Rev. W. Williams (b. 1717, d. 1791) of Pantycelyn. He was a most prolific writer. It is a matter of history that his sacred songs and hymns did more than anything else to arouse the people and create a taste for reading in all parts of Wales. The extensive circulation and the universal reception given to his hymns published at different times between the years 1744 and 1758, must lead us to believe that they carried a mighty influence, and were a great factor in the education of the people of Wales. People who could not themselves read soon learnt the hymns, and thousands of people knew a great many of them by heart. All his works appeared in one volume in 1758, and contained upwards of 800 hymns. They are still in general use in the Established Church, and among the different denominations.

2. Morgan Rhys, of Llanfrynwyd (d. 1776), worked well to build up Welsh hymnody. There are about two hundred of his hymns now extant. Many of them are the favourite hymns of Welsh congregations. The following:—

- "O ager fy lygaid i weled"
- "Dyna Gieddau'r Welsh Clirg"
- "O garadi, o garadi, anfeishi o fraint, &c., have found their way into every collection of hymns by Churchmen and Nonconformists. He was a contemporary of Williams of Pantycelyn, and belonged to the same religious body.

3. The Rev. David Morris, David Charles, and Thomas Charles, have contributed to the hymnology of Wales. The well-known hymn, "O ffrwyn Caersalem ei o gweld," by the Rev. D. Charles, of Caernarthen, is to be found in all Welsh hymnals. The Rev. Thomas Charles, of Bala, the eminent divine, and one of the founders of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and organizer of the Sunday School as it now exists in Wales, has left behind him only one hymn, but of such a beautiful character as to make Welsh people wish he had done more in that direction. This hymn is in the Calvinistic Hymn-book, now in use among that body throughout the country. It begins, "Dyfais fawr trag' wlydolog garadid," and in that book it is dispersed over five parts with five verses in each part. The Rev. D. Charles, jun., is the translator of "Jerusalem, my happy home," as "O Salem, fy anwyll garaddif."

4. The Calvinistic Hymn-book that we have just referred to, was published by the authority of the General Assembly of the Calvinistic Methodists, and is perhaps the most perfect hymnal in Wales. It is the only hymn-book used among the congregations of that body throughout the Principality. A list of the authors from whose works the hymns are selected is given in the beginning of the book, and the number of authors is over fifty, but by far the greatest number of hymns is taken from W. Williams of Pantycelyn. The book was prepared by a committee appointed by the General Assembly, and bears the date of 1869.

iii. Congregational.

1. One of the first editions of hymns, if not the first ever published, for the Congregationalists in Wales, was by the Rev. T. Buddy, in 1703, about 14 years before Williams of Pantycelyn was born, and about 82 years after the appearance of Archdeacon Pryse's Psalms. Buddy published an edition of hymns under the title of Sacramental Hymns, and also a translation of Thomas Doolittle's Christian Psalms, to which were added six hymns to be sung after receiving Holy Communion.

2. In the year 1714, the Rev. D. Lewis, Newport, published Heavenly Songs and Spiritual Hymns. Nothing is known of him beyond the fact that he was a minister of the gospel in South Wales.

3. In 1742, the Rev. Herbert Jenkins issued his Hymnau Duwed. Mr. Jenkins was a minister at Maidstone, where he d. in 1772, after a ministry of more than 24 years.

4. David Jones, of Caio, is known as the translator of Dr. Watts's works. He published his translation of Watts's Psalms in 1753, and soon afterwards a translation of Watts's Divine Songs.

5. The Rev. Ioan Thomas, of Rhaiadr, published many editions of hymns between the years 1776 and 1788, under the titles of Conindau Sion, and Hymnau yn perthyn â'r Drysorfa Eurosidd (or, "Hymns relating to the Golden Treasury" [a Magazine]). There are extant about 187 of his hymns, many of which are still used in many congregations.

6. The Rev. Thomas Williams (q.v.), of Bethesda'r Frö, was a prolific hymn-writer. He published his first collection of hymns in 1812. They became very popular among the Independents, and other denominations in Wales.

7. The Congregationalists have had several collections of hymns since the publication of Watts's Hymns, &c. In 1840, Mr. Evan Edwards, of Mold, brought out a collection, and Dr. Rees published the Perganiedydd (or, "The Sweet Singer") in 1847. Another collection by the Rev. E. Griffiths, of Swansea, appeared in 1857; and Caledfryn's Collection, in 1861. Their best collection is Aberth Moliant, pub. in Liverpool (?), chief ed. Dr. W. Rees.

8. The collection known as S. R., published in 1841, is still used by some congregations.

9. The collection of hymns and tunes in general use among the Congregationalists at present, is Jones & Stephens, published in 1868; and a 2nd ed. by Stephens in 1869. This last book contains the principal hymns of Williams of Pantycelyn; D. Jones, Ann Griffiths, Edward & others.

iv. Baptists.

1. The first collection to the Baptist denomination was the Rev. Joseph Harris's, which was their only book of hymns it contained well, but it contained also "Gomer" himself and Ddu, also by the Rev. Lewis, and D. Saunders, 880 hymns.

2. Later the Rev. pool, made a large adopted by several c in contained many c old, it never reached that, the Rev. Robert collection containing others. This is among the and is still in use i

1. The first book to be used in their congregations appears to have been the translation of Watt's Psalms, by David Jones, of Caer, 1733.

2. Its Rev. Josiah Rees, of Gellionen, pub. a collection of hymns, and the year following a selection from Watt's Psalms. The bulk of these are D. Jones' translations, but hymns are added from other authors, the editor himself, his father, Owen Rees, Sol. Harris, of Swansea, who contributed a translation, according to Addison's "Spacious furnish," Jenkin Jones, D. Lloyd, David Davis, &c. A new ed. was pub. in 1834 with considerable additions.

3. The great hymn-writer of the Unitarians is Edward Williams (Iolo Morganwy), (1743-1826). He pub. in 1812 a collection of 204 original Psalms, and in 1814 his son brought out a further collection, 211 in number. There was a new ed. 1857. Iolo has also left a collection of about 2000 hymns in ms. besides those published.

4. In 1857, Rev. John Jones, of Aberclare, brought out a collection of hymns, 208 being by Edward Williams, 68 by Thomas Evans, and many by the editor and his brother Rees Jones.

5. But this and other earlier collections are now superseded in congregational use by the collection of his son, Rev. R. J. Jones, minister at Aberclare.

This collection of 379 hymns is excellent, and is modelled on the plan of Dr. Martinell's "Hymns of Praise and Prayer." It contains hymns from many sources, including translations of several in C. U. The translations of Dr. Newman's "Lead, kindly light": "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and of "For ever with the Lord," are specially good. The names of the 64 authors from whom the hymns are taken, and a very useful glossary, form a part of the book. The bulk of the hymns are by Edward Williams. Other noted contributors are: Rees, Dr. Jenkins Howell, Owen Rees, Josiah Rees, Jenkins Jones, David Davis, Rees Jones (Ammon), William Thomas, the Editor, &c. In style, order and peculiarity, it is second to no book of the kind ever published in Wales.

vii. General Survey.—Passing from the Collections to the Hymns, we find that Welsh hymnody in all its great extent, is due in some production, and is almost, but not entirely, confined to home use. There are a dozen or two of Welsh hymns which have become the favourite hymns of English congregations, most of which are by Williams of Pantycelyn. We give the first lines in Welsh and English. Some were composed in English, and have not been translated into Welsh, such as:

(1) "Hark! the voice of my beloved"
(2) "Jesus, lead us with Thy power."
(3) "0 for a strong foundation" (Author unknown).
(4) "Jesus is all my hope."

The last is one of Williams' English hymns. The following Welsh and English hymns are also by Williams:

(5) "Jesus, Jesus, 'twixt life and death."

"Jesus, Thou art all-sufficient."

(6) "Argwyydd, arwain trwy'r anialwch"
   "Guide me, O Thou Great Jehovah."
(7) "O lacer ychydigaid iddi" (author unknown)
(8) "Great Redeemer, friend of sinners.
(9) "Good people, ye that dwell beyond the sea."
(10) "Fix, O Lord, a tent in Goshen."
(11) "Why should cruel beasts be suffered."
(12) "Dros y bryniau tywyll niwlog."
(13) "O'er the gloomy hills of darkness.

This last hymn is famous in the Missionary fields, and has been translated into many languages. In the Calabar Mission in Brazil, the most successful Mission work is carried on under the care of Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Missionaries. The "Khasi Hymnal," 1877, consists of 242 hymns, some original, but mostly translations from the latest collection of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, is the official hymn-book of the Khasis.

Ewald says that Hebrew poetry has a simplicity and transparency that can scarcely be found anywhere else, and a natural sublimity that knows but little of fixed forms of art; that even when art comes into play, it ever remains unconscious and careless of it. Compared with the poetry of other nations and ancient peoples, it appears to belong to a simple and child-like age of mankind, over-flowing with an internal fulness and grace that troubles itself but little with external ornament and nice artistic law. Much of this is applicable to Welsh religious poetry. In spirit, character, figures of speech, and emotional language, it may be aptly compared with the Hebrew. Williams of Pantycelyn, Morgan Rhys, D. Williams, and Glangevinnyd, and Islwyn, especially turned to the world of nature, attentively regarded it and used it; and entered into deep fellowship with it in its various phases, not for itself alone, but (like the Hebrew prophet), on account of its relation to their own souls. Nature to them spoke the language of heaven; all forces—animal, vegetable, and physical, attracted them to God. Williams of Pantycelyn, in some of his hymns, makes the most beautiful use of the floral world, as well as of the physical. Nothing could excel the freshness to nature, the vividness and the graphic powers of these hymns:

"Plannwr aegyddon hynny,
   Yn fy nghanol bwb yr un,
A gydi megis peragociyn
  Yn dy natur di i'awn;
  Boddau hafredyd, &c.

Pon dysgwrn dwne a dafon
  "Rw'yyn caru'r peredwn
Ar y creigiau sicr y sy,
Ar en trased ac ar en dwlwa;
  'N ceilfor drigion fy fry'i,
Ar fy neulun,
  Minaw ddef bwn y hyn."

Williams' true and intense admiration of the beauties of nature, and his reverence for its sublimities, may be noted of him be made of it to express his own experience, which indeed has been the experience of humanity in all ages of the world.

Next to Williams of Pantycelyn comes another Williams, almost his equal as a poet—David Williams, of Llanbedr-y-Fro. Many of his hymns are popular, and several are very beautiful. Morgan Rhys, as a hymn-writer, stands almost without those with whom he has named. Several of his hymns have a sacred interest for thousands of Welshmen; and many have a grand martial sound which is most inspiring. T. Williams, Bethesda'r-Fn, is another writer of great merit; often in his hymns we have the utterances of penitence and prayer, the breathing of a weary pilgrim, and the "yearning plaintive music of earth's sadder minstrelsy," followed by jubilant strains and peals of victory, as in:

"Mae pren wedi 'i gael
Mewn dyrys anad dir,
Y plwyg i frig, ei symudicet pawb
I feyta 'i frawthau pur."

Welsh hymn-writers, in common with others, differ in style, but meet on the wide field of subjects suggested by the Gospel. Their works are rich in narrative and scriptural allusion, in praises for redemption, in utterances of penitence and self-abasement, and in vivid description of the Christian warfare. Williams of Pantycelyn surpasses all in the expression of the yearnings of the heavenly home-sickness; in devout tenderness, often rising into rapture, wherewith his faith clings the crucified Saviour, when wrapt in contemplation of the glory of Jesus as the Head of the Church militant and triumphant; and also in the depth and maturity of his theological thoughts. He then received Holy Orders and took a curfew of £28 a year. Having held this cure for a year, he obtained a naval chaplaincy, and then took another curfew in London. About the year 1690 he married Susanna, daughter of Dr. Annesley, a famous Nonconformist minister, and a niece of the noble house of Anglesey. The wife, like the husband, had been brought up as a dissenter, but at the early age of 13 she had come over to the Church of England, and was afterwards a Jacobite in politics. In 1693 Mr. Wesley was presented to the living of South Ormsby in Lincolnshire.
He was also chaplain to the Marquis of Normandy, afterwards Duke of Buckingham. In 1697 he was appointed by the Crown to the Rectory of Epworth, and there he spent the remainder of his life, nearly forty years.
The first part of his residence at Epworth was marked by a series of troubles arising partly from his pecuniary embarrassments, which increased with his increasing family, partly from the animosity of his parishioners, who resented the part which he felt it his duty to take, as a staunch churchman, in politics, and partly from unfortunate accidents. These troubles reached their climax in 1705, when he was thrown into Lincoln gaol, and they are graphically described by his own pen.

"I have been thrown behind," he writes to his good friends at Oxford, "by a series of misfortunes. My Parsonage Barn was blown down ere I had recovered the Taking My Living: My House great part of it burnt down about 2 years since. My Flux, great part of my Income now in my own Hands, I doubt will either be burnt or burnt in ye night, whilst I was last in London.
My Income sunk about one half by the low price of Grain and my credit lost by the taking away of my Regent. I was brought to Lincoln Castle June 23rd last past. About 3 weeks since my very unkind People, thinking I had not yet done enough, have in ye night stabbed my 3 cows, wth were a great part of my poor Nemours Family's Subsistence. For wth God for give them."

Some points in this letter require explanation.
When he speaks of being in London, he means on Convocation business: for he was elected Proctor for the Diocese, and in one of his absences Mrs. Wesley instituted those religious meetings at the Rectory which are thought by some to have been the precursors of the Wesleyan Society Meetings.
"His Regiment" was a Chaplain's army which had been given him in reward for a poem in praise of the Duke of Marl-brodh. The last and worst of the many fires through which he suffered was in 1709, when the rectory was entirely burnt down,
and the present house erected in its place.
The latter part of the Revolution year was more free from troubles. He met with many generous friends who enabled him to emerge from his pecuniary difficulties, the firmest and most constant of these friends being the admirable Archbishop of York, Dr. John Sharp: his sons grew up to be a comfort and a credit to him: his income was slightly increased by the addition of the neighbouring living of Wroth; and his parishioners gradually became more tractable. The annoyance carved by the famous Epworth Ghost can scarcely be reckoned among his serious troubles. In 1731 he met with an accident which probably hastened his end: he passed away and was buried in Epworth churchyard, leaving behind him the character... of an excellent parish priest, a good husband and father, and a man of very considerable abilities and attainments.

Mr. Wesley was a somewhat voluminous writer. His first publication was a volume of poems bearing the unassuming, not to say repressive, title of "Epistles." It appeared in 1692. In 1691 he became the clerical correspondent to the Athenian Gazette (afterwards Mercury) pub. by his brother-in-law, John Dunton. In 1692 appeared an Heroic Poem on the Life of Our Blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. This was dedicated to Queen Mary, and led to his appointment to the living of Epworth. In 1696 he pub. "Epistles on Queen Mary and Archbishop Tillotson;" and in 1698 a Sermon preached before the Society for the Reformation of Manners. The Epistles are rather fulsome and in bad taste according to the standard of the present day; but it should be remembered that high-flown panegyrics were the fashion of the age. The Sermon is a spirited and energetic defence of the "Society," which were regarded with some suspicion by many high-churchmen, but of which Mr. Wesley, like his friend Robert Nelson, was a warm supporter. In 1700 he published The Practice Communicant rightly prepared; or a discourse concerning the Blessed Sacrament, &c. With Prayers and Hymns suited to the several parts of that holy ordinance. To which is added A short discourse of Baptism. In this work appeared his version of the "Great Hallel," or "Paschal Hymn." In 1704 he pub. The History of the Old and New Testament in Verse, in three volumes, which he dedicated to Queen Anne. This, like his Life of Christ, was illustrated with numerous and costly engravings. In 1708 he pub. a poem of nearly 600 lines on the Battle of Blenheim, entitled Marlborough, or The Fate of Europe. For this he was rewarded with the Chaplaincy of Colonel Lepelet's regiment; but his political enemies at Epworth soon succeeded in getting him deprived of this office. In 1707 appeared A Reply to Mr. Palmer's Vindication of the Learning, Loyalty, Morals, and most Christian Behaviour of the Dissenters towards the Church of England. This originated in the publication, without his consent or knowledge, of a letter he wrote to a friend Concerning the Education of the Dissenters in their Private Academies. The letter was attacked anonymously and defended by Mr. Wesley in a pamphlet (1704). The pamphlet was answered by Mr. Palmers. After this, Mr. Wesley's pen seems to have rested for some time; but during the last ten years of his life he was engaged in his elaborate Dissertation on the Book of Job, his incessant labours upon which are said to have hastened his end. This work was dedicated to Queen Caroline, the wife of George II., and presented to her by John Wesley some months after the author's death.

Thus Samuel Wesley had the honour of dedicating works to three Queens. There is yet one more poem attributed to Mr. Wesley, but it seems very doubtful whether he was the real, or at any rate, the sole author. It is entitled Emptis's Hymn to the Creator, and is a sort of Christian Pindaric Ode of considerable length, written in the classical style affected in the 18th century. Dr. Adams Clarke tells us that the ms. is partly in the handwriting ofmethabel Wesley, and internal evidence certainly points to her as the chief author, for it bears traces of a far more delicate and elegant touch than Mr. Wesley ever showed that he possessed; while Methabel's other writings are fully equal, if not superior, to it. In fact, it must be confessed that the bulk of Mr. Wesley's poetical writings are tedious and prosaic. He had the disadvantage of being over-praised at the outset, and of winning a reputation which he was unable to sustain. Nahum Tate, the Laureate, and others lauded his Heroic Poem in absurdly extravagant terms; Ralph Thoresby refers to him as "that noted poet Mr. Wesley," and Thomas Hearne alludes to him in similar terms. The reception was sure to come, and his poetry began to be laughed at. Swift and Pope thought very slightly of it, and he appears to have narrowly escaped being pilloried.

ii. Samuel Wesley, eldest child of John, and was born in 1691. He received his education at the highest reach, and was worthy of his father, Bishop of Rochester, Scholar in 1717. He .was admitted to the master of the school in 1718. Samuel Wesley became an in-erbury, who was soon appointed at Westminster School. But he was turity, and then at last he subscribed his attendance without solic-ship of the trustees, and he spent the disapproving proceeds. He pressed the character- not cause relations be universally conscientious, he was a most both in the in of that time; he was the one at Epworth, the poor father to his children and was the Westmin-er in the 17th epitaph in the cemetery.

Samuel Wesley, pub. in 1738 A Collection of Poems on several occasions, some of which are full of a rather coarse humour, but all of a good moral and religious tendency. This work was reprinted in 1743, and again by W. Nichols in 1822. Dr. Adam Clarke specifies eight hymns of S. Wesley's composition which were in use among the Methodists of that time (1823). The Wesleyan Hymn-book of the present day contains five, the best-known of which is "The Lord of Sabahati let us praise." His other writings are scarcely of sufficient importance to claim a notice in this brief sketch.

iii. John Wesley, M.A. The life of the next brother is, or easily might be, so familiar to every one in its every detail that it will suffice to give the barest outline of his career. John Wesley was b. at Epworth Rectory in 1703, and, like the rest of the family, received his education at Oxford. He then went up, with a scholarship, from Charterhouse to Christ Church, Oxford. Having taken his degree, he received Holy Orders from the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Potter) in 1723. In 1726 he was elected Fellow of Lincoln College, and remained at Oxford until 1727, when he returned into Lincolnshire to assist his father as curate at Epworth and Wood. In 1729 he was summoned back to Oxford by his firm friend, Dr. Morley, Rector of Lincoln, to assist in the College tuition. There he found already established the little band of "Oxford Methodists" who immediately placed them lives under his direction. In 1735 he went, as a missionary, to the Moravians, and the Rev. Mr. Hensen, to Georgia, where a new colony had been founded under the governorship of General Oglethorpe. On his voyage out he was deeply impressed with the piety and Christian courage of some German fellow-travellers, Moravians. During his short mission he took in writing the hymns, it is not easy to ascertain: but it is certain that more than thirty translations from the German, French and Spanish (chiefly from the German) were exclusively his; and there are some original hymns, notably his composition, which are not unworthy to stand by the side of his brother's. His translations and paraphrases especially have had a wide circulation. Although somewhat free as translations they embody the fire and energy of the originals.

(iv. Charles Wesley, M.A. But, after all, it was Charles Wesley who was the great hymn-writer of the Wesley family perhaps, taking quantity and quality into consideration, the great hymn-writer of all ages. Charles Wesley was the youngest son and 18th child of Samuel and Susanna Wesley, and was b. at Epworth Rectory, Dec. 18, 1707. In 1716 he went to Westminster School, being provided with a house and board by his elder brother Samuel, then usher at the school, until 1721, when he was elected King's Scholar, and as such received his board and education free. While he was at Westminster, his father received a letter from a wealthy Irish man, asking him if he had a son named Charles, and if so offering to adopt him and make him his heir. The acceptance of the offer was left to Charles himself, who declined it. In 1725 Charles Wesley was elected to a Westminster studentship at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree in 1729, and became a college tutor. In the early part of the same year his religious impressions were much deepened, and he became one of the first band of "Oxford Methodists." In 1735 he went with his brother John to Georgia, as secretary to General Oglethorpe, having before he set out received Deacon's and Priest's Orders on two successive Sundays. His stay in Georgia was very short; he returned to England in 1736, and in 1737 came under the influence of Count Zinzendorf and the Moravians, especially of that remarkable man who had so large a share in moulding John Wesley's career, Peter Böhler, and also of a Mr. Bray, a brazier in Little Britain. On Whit Sunday, 1737, he "found rest to his soul," and in 1738 he became curate to his friend, Mr. Stonehouse, Vicar of Islington, but the opposition of the churchwardens was so great that the Vicar consented that he "should preach in the church no more." Heenceforth his work was identified with that of his brother John, and he became an indefatigable itinerant and field preacher. On April 8, 1749, he married Miss Sarah Gwynne. His marriage, unlike that of his brother John, was a most happy one; his wife was accustomed to accompany him on his evangelistic journeys, which were as frequent as ever until the year 1756, when he ceased to itinerate, and mainly devoted himself to the care of the Societies in London and Bristol. Bristol was his head-quarters until 1771, when he removed with his family to London, and, besides attending to the Societies, devoted himself much, as he had done in his youth, to the spiritual care of prisoners in Newgate. He had long been troubled about the relations of Methodism to the Church of England, and strongly disapproved of his brother John's "ordinations." Wesley-like, he expressed his disapproval in the most outspoken fashion, but, as in the case of Samuel at an earlier period, the differences between the brothers never led to a breach of friendship. He d. in London, March 29, 1788, and was buried in Marylebone churchyard. His brother John was deeply grieved because he would not consent to be interred in the burial-ground of the City Road Chapel, where he had prepared a grave for himself, but Charles said, "I have lived, and I die, in the Communion of the Church of England, and I will be buried in the yard of my parish church." Eight clergymen of the Church of England bore his pall. He had a large family, four of whom survived him; three sons, who all became distinguished in the musical world, and one daughter, who inherited some of her father's poetical genius. The widow and orphans were treated with the greatest kindness and generosity by John Wesley.

As a hymn-writer Charles Wesley was unique. He is said to have written no less than 5500 hymns, and though, of course, in so vast a number some are of unequal merit, it is perfectly marvellous how many there are which rise to the highest feelings on any subject.

Whether private expression in a man's own private thoughts or the public expression in a sermon, the sermons of Wesley are as needful as ever; as striking scenes of Christian experience which every Christian should see, as the best of the characters of the Christian life, as models of the Christian life, and as an inspiration to the life of the Christian.

As a preacher Wesley was eminently successful.

As a writer he has left a body of work which no one who studies the religion of England can avoid dealing with.

His writings are so full of the spirit of the Christian life, so full of the spirit of Christian love, that they will be read with profit by all who study the religion of England.
The hymns by the Wesley family are naturally most extensively used in the Methodist Societies throughout the world. Usually they are given in the hymn-books with little or no alteration. The American Methodist Episcopal Hymns of 1840 is an exception. The texts in that collection are more mutilated than in all other Methodism’s hymn-books put together. A large number of the Wesley hymns are annotated under their respective first lines. (See Index of Authors and Translators.) The following lists will complete the number in C. U.:—

John and Charles Wesley. In the article on Methodist Hymnody, p. 736, a full and detailed account of the hymns published by the two brothers is given. As a guide in indicating the sources of their hymns now in common use, and not annotated under their own first lines, we subjoin a Table of Titles, Dates, and Contents of their works which was compiled by the writer of the article on Methodist Hymnody. The Title-pages of those works which contain hymns by writers other than J. & C. Wesley are printed in italics.
It must be noted that the Wesleyan authorities, in the revised edition of their "Coll. of Hys. for the Use of the People called Methodists," 1875, decline to distinguish the hymns which appeared in the joint works of the two brothers. They say:—

"The letter W. is affixed to those hymns which first appeared in publications for which the Wesleyes were jointly responsible; in this case it cannot be determined with certainty to which of the two brothers a hymn should be ascribed." (Preface to the "Index to the Hymns.")

It has been the common practice, however, for a hundred years or more to ascribe all translations from the German to John Wesley, as he only of the two brothers knew that language; and to assign to Charles Wesley all the original hymns except as are traceable to John Wesley through his Journals and other works. In this Dictionary, this course has been adopted throughout.

Two works remain to be noted: (1) Collection of Psalms and Hymns, Charles Town, Printed by Louis Timby, 1757; and (2) The Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley: Reprinted from the Originals, with the last corrections of the Authors; together with the Poems of Charles Wesley not before Published. Collected and Arranged by G. Osborn, D.D. Lond.: Wesleyan-METHODIST Conference Office, 1865-72. In 15 vols. The first of these works has been reprinted in facsimile from the only known copy now existing, together with a Preface by Dr. Osborn. Lond.: T. Woolmer, 1882. The second contains facsimile reprints of the titles: Introduc tio Osborn; the usual 11 vols. i.—viii.: and an In every verse (except that extending to 239 pages) the Rev. Julius Briggs, the and Mr. William Sugg of the Wesleyan Normal Westminster. The a ness of the latter In praise.

The translations by John Wesley from the German are given in vols. i. ii. of the Poetical Works, and number 32. They can be easily identified and their history, together with the history of the originals, traced through the Index of Authors and Translators.

The foregoing list of original hymns, in addition to those by the Wesleys annotated elsewhere, all of which are in C. U. at the present time, and most of which have formed an important part of Methodist hymnody for more than a hundred years, shows the enormous influence of the Wesleys on the English hymnody of the nineteenth century. West, Robert Athow, an editor and author, was b. in England in 1802. In 1843 he went to America, and was the official reporter of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844. He was also one of the committee appointed by that Conference to prepare a Standard edition of the Methodist Hymn Book. That collection appeared as Hymns for the Use of The Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1849. To it West contributed two hymns—(1) “Come, let us tune our loftiest song” (Praise of Jesus), and (2) “Now, Lord, fulfill Thy faithful word” (On behalf of Ministers), (Nutter’s Hymn Studies, 1884, p. 32.) [J. J.]

Wetzel, Johann Caspar, s. of Johann Michael Wetzel, shoemaker at Meiningen, was b. at Meiningen, Feb. 22, 1811. He matriculated, at Easter, 1711, as a student of theology at the University of Jena, and afterwards went to Halle. After varied tutor work, &c., he was appointed, in 1727, диаконан at Ромбих, where he eventually became archidiaconus. While returning from a visit to the Bad Liebenstein he was unable to pro-

In addition to an abbreviated form beginning with st. i. there are also "Earth is but the land of shadows" (st. ii.), and "O Sun of glorious splendor" (st. iii.) in C. U. [J. J.]

What is the thing of highest [greatest] price? J. Montgomery. [The Soul.] Pub. in his Christian Psalms, 1825, No. 504, in 6 st. of 4 l.; and again in his Original Hymns, 1853. It is found in a few modern books in Great Britain and America. [J. J.]

What is the world? a wildering maze. J. Montgomery. [Holy Scripture a Light.] In his Poetical Works, 1851, p. 304, Montgomery dates this hymn "1815"; but in his newspaper, the Sheffield Iris, of 1817, he printed it in 3 st. of 6 l., and dated it "February, 1817." Under these circumstances it is difficult to say which of these dates is correct. The hymn was repeated in Montgomery's Greenland and Other Poems, 1819, p. 187; his Christian Psalms, 1825, No. 609, &c.; and in Rippon's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 26. It is also found in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, and in several of the older and modern hymn-books. It is not, however, a good example of Montgomery's powers as a writer of hymns. [J. J.]

What liberty so glad and gay? J. Keble. [Forgiveness of Enemies.] Written Feb. 7, 1826, on the words "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?" St. Matt. xvii. 21, and pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 12 st. of 4 l. as the poem for the 22nd S. after Trinity. In Elliot's Ps. & Hys., 1835, st. x.-xii. were given as "Thou ransomed sinner, wouldst thou know? This has been repeated in later collections, but is not in extensive use. [J. J.]

What! never speak one evil word? C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] This is the original form composed: St. i. ii. are from Wesley's Short Hymns, 1762, vol. ii., No. 753, on James iii. 2; and st. iii., iv. from the same, vol. i., No. 834, on Ps. ciii. 3. In this form it appeared in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 353, and has been repeated in several editions. Original texts in his Works, 1868-72, vols. xiii. and xiv. [J. J.]

What shall we ask of God in prayer? J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] Written in 1818, and first printed on a broadsheet with Montgomery's "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," "Lord, teach us how to pray," and "Thou, God, art a consuming fire," for use in the Nonconformist Sunday schools in Sheffield and the neighbourhood. It was included in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 291, in 4 st. of 8 l., and has been repeatedly in several editions. The same arrangement with the addition of st. viii. was previously published in the Baptist edition of the Sabbath H. Bk., 1858. [J. J.]

When at this distance, Lord, we trace. P. Doddridge. [Transfiguration.] This hymn is No. 90 in the first edition. It was included, without alteration, in J. Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 188, in 6 st. of 4 l.; and

What sudden blaze of song. J. Keble. [Christmas.] Pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 11 st. of 6 l., as the poem for Christmas Day. In the American Church Pastors, Boston, 1864, st. i., v., ix. are given in an altered form, but beginning with the same first line. [J. J.]

What tho' my frail eyelids refuse. A. M. Toplady. [At Night.] Pub. in the Gospel Magazine, Dec. 1774, in 6 st. of 8 l., entitled "A Chamber Hymn," and signed "Minimus." Also in Sedgwick's reprint of Toplady's Hymns, &c., 1860. It was given in its original form in several of the older hymn-books, but in Collyer's Coll., 1812, it was divided into two parts, Pt. i. being composed of st. i.-iii., and Pt. ii., beginning, "Inspirer and Hearer of prayer," of st. iv.-vi. From that date the first part fell gradually out of use, whilst the second part has been gradually extended, and has been rendered into several languages. The tr. into Latin by R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, begins, "Quem precum inspicias." [J. J.]

What various hindrances we meet. W. Cooper. [Exhortation to Prayer.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 60, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Exhortation to Prayer." It has passed into numerous collections, and sometimes in an abbreviated form. Dr. Hattfield, in his Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, dates it 1772. By this he probably means the date of its composition. We cannot, however, find any authority for that date. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, 5 stanzas are rendered into Latin as "Si precibus solus Geinitoris adire velimus." [J. J.] Whate'er to Thee, our Lord, be longs. [Holy Baptism.] This is the first of 13 "Single Verses on Baptism" given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1857, Nos. 455-476. The authors of these stanzas are; st. i., iii.-v., B. Beddome; ii. xi., J. Stennett; vii.-ix., H. F.; x.; xii.; xiii., G.; and vi. and xiii. anonymous, but possibly by Rippon. The object of this arrangement of these stanzas is thus stated by Rippon in a note just following: "As it is now pretty common to sing by the waterside, and as some of our brethren in the country give out a verse or two, while they are administering the ordinance, it is hoped these single verses will be acceptable. In the American Bap. Hymn [and Tune] Bk., Philadelphia, 1871, st. iii. iv. and vi. are given as "Behold the grave where Jesus lay." The same arrangement with the addition of st. vii. had previously appeared in the Baptist edition of the Sabbath H. Bk., 1858. [J. J.]

When at this distance, Lord, we trace. P. Doddridge. [Transfiguration.] This hymn is No. 90 in the first edition. It was included, without alteration, in J. Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 188, in 6 st. of 4 l.; and

When bending o'er [on] the brink of life. W. B. Collery. [Death anticipated.] Pub. in his Coll. &c., 1812, No. 827, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is found in several modern hymnals, but usually in an abbreviated form. It presents death in its saddest form, and embodies a prayer for divine assistance. In several American collections, including the Meth. Episc. Hymns, 1849; their new Meth. Hymnal, 1878; and others, it is rewritten in s. st. as, "When on the brink of death." [J. J.]

When blooming youth is snatched away. Aune Steel. [Death and Burial of a Young Person.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects Chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i. p. 106, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "At the Funeral of a Young Person." Also given in the 1780 ed. of the Poems, and in D. Sedge- wick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1803, p. 96. The form of the text usually found in American hymn-books is "When those love are snatched away." This was given in the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, in 5 st., and is found in later hymnals. Another arrangement in 3 st. is in use in G. Britain. It appeared in Bickersteth's Christian Psaltody, 1833, as "When youth or age is snatched away." The text in Common Praise, 1879, is in 5 st., the last of the original being omitted, and the rest somewhat altered. [J. J.]

When brothers part for manhood's race. J. Kebbe. [St. Andrew.] Written Jan. 27, 1822, and included in his Christian Year, 1827, in 11 st. of 4 l. Two centos from it are in C. U.; the first beginning with the opening stanza, and the second with st. vii., "First seek thy [the] Saviour out, and dwell." Their use is limited. [J. J.]

When came in flesh the Incarnate Word. J. Austing. [Christmas.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, p. 17, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is given in Hymns for the Use of the University of Oxford in St. Mary's Church, 1872, and several other modern collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

When Christ his body up had borne. H. More. [Witsusantide.] This is the opening line of a hymn in 14 st. of 4 l., entitled "An Hymn upon the Descent of the Holy Ghost at the Day of Pentecost," which appeared in More's Divine Hymns appended to his Divine Dialogues, &c., Lond. 1668. This hymn was rewritten in 15 st. by J. Wesley, and included in the Wesley Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1739, beginning "When Christ had left his flock below." From this revision, st. vi-xv., slightly altered, were given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, as, "Father, if justly still we claim" (No. 444); and "On all the earth Thy Spirit shower" (No. 445). These hymns have been repeated in many collections in G. Britain and America. Wesley's full revised text is in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 165. The first stanza of "Father, if justly still we claim" is by J. Wesley (1739). Dr. More's original text of the remaining stanzas of the two hymns is:
zine in Feb. 1812, accompanied with a letter explaining that it had been sent in an altered form, and signed as before. In 1835, Elliott included it in his Ps. and Hymns, No. 342, with a note in the Preface to the effect that it had been revised by the Author for that Collection. It was also given in the 1836 edition of "Poems" (pub. by his brother) in 1838, p. 3, the text being that of 1812. Three texts of this hymn thus exist, and all the author: (1) the first in the Christian Observer, 1806; (2) the second in the same, 1812, and in the Sacred Poems, 1839; (3) and the third in Elliott's Ps. and Hymns, 1856. Of these the second text is that usually received as authorized, and is given as such in Lyra Britannica, 1867, and in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862. The hymn is based on Heb. iv. 15, "For we have not a High Priest," &c., and is often given in an abbreviated form. In R. Bingham's Hymno Christi Latina, 1871, 4 stanzas are rendered into Latin as: "Quam circumcernae glomerantia nubila coronam." [J. J.]

When God of old came down from heaven. J. Keble. [Whitunantide.] 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 11 st. of 4 l., as the poem for Whitsunday. In an abridged form it is in extensive use. A cento therefrom is given in a few American hymn-books as "Lo", when the Spirit of our God." In Bp. Wordsworth's (St. Andrews) Series Collectorum, &c., 1890, st. i., iii., iv., vi., vii., ix., and xi. are rendered into Latin as "Olim curn Dominus supeṙ descendit ab arece." [J. J.]

When his lost sheep the Shepherd finds. [The Lost Sheep.] This appeared in the Uttoxeter Sel. of Ps. & Hymn, 1893 (p. 1944, ii.), and is also in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, and later hymnals, and is sometimes given (but in error) as an altered form of J. Needham's "When some kind shepherd from his fold" (p. 793, ii.).

When I can read my title clear. I. Watts. [Assurance of Faith and Hope.] Appeared in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is headed "The Hopes of Heaven our Support under Trials on Earth." It has been much used in G. Britain and America.

The original text of the whole hymn, as in the Hymn. Comp., is that most commonly used. Miller (Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 140) points out that the opening lines of the hymn,—

"There, anchor'd safe, my weary soul
Shall find eternal rest,
Nor stormy seas, nor billow roll,
Nor fears assai my breast."

It is hard to see that this is an improvement upon Watts's original:—

"There shall I bathe my weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest,
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across my peaceful breast."

The original text of the whole hymn, as in the Hymn. Comp., is that most commonly used. Miller (Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 140) points out that the opening lines of the hymn,—

"When I can read my title clear
Are used by Cowper in his poem on Truth (pub. in 1782), in his comparison of the lot of Voltaire and that of the poor and believing cottager, who

When I survey the wonders Cross. I. Watts. [Good Friday.] This, the most popular and widely used of Watts's hymns, appeared in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707, and in the enlarged ed. 1709, as:—

"(Crown the world, by the Cross of Christ.

1. "When I survey the wondrous Cross
On which the Prince of Glory dy'd,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride."

2. "Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast

All the vain things that charm me most,
I sacrifice to his Blood."

And in that charmer reads with sparkling eye—
Her title to a treasure on the skin.” "[J. J.]

When I can trust my all with God. J. Conder. [Resignation.] Written on the death of one of his children, Jan. 1818, and included in his Star in the East, &c., 1824, p. 113, in 5 st. of 6 l., headed "On the death of an Infant Son," and accompanied with the footnote "C. J. C. ob. Jan. 1818." In Conder's Cong. H. Bk., 1836, 3 st. were given as No. 311; and these were repeated in his posthumous Hymns of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1855. This form of the hymn is that in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

When I resolved to watch my thoughts. Anne Steele. [Ps. xxxi.] Pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. ii., p. 168, in 13 st. of 4 l.; in the 2nd ed. of the Poems, 1780; and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863, p. 171. It is not in C. U. in its original form; but from it the following are taken:—

1. Asimmetry Maker of my Couch. This cento, composed of st. iv.-vii., was given in Rippon's Hymn. Sel., 1807, as a hymn on "The Shortness of Life." It is found in many hymnals in G. Britain and America. It was repeated in the new ed. of her Poems, &c., 1780: and again in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. As a whole it is not in C. U. From it, however, the following stanzas are found in modern hymn-books:—

1. When I survey life's varied scene. Anne Steele. [Resignation.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i., p. 134, in 10 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Desiring Resignation and Trust in my God." It was repeated in the new ed. of her Poems, &c., 1780; and again in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. As a whole it is not in C. U. From it, however, the following stanzas are found in modern hymn-books:—

1. When I survey life's varied scene. In the Irish Church Hymnal, 1874, is composed of st. i., ii., vii., and ix., slightly altered.

2. Father, what'er of earthy bliss. This was given in Topley's Ps. & Hymns, No. 271, and the same thing came into use in the Church of England. From Topley it passed into Rippin's Hym. Sel., 1875, and thence into modern Nonconformist collections. It is now in extensive use. It is composed of st. vii., ix., slightly altered. A Latin rendering, "Quidquid opus atum faneulo prescans," by de R. Bingham, was pub. in his Hymno Christi Latina, 1871.

3. Lord, teach me to adore Thy Name. No. 178, in the Scottish Pres. Hymnal, 1876, is composed of st. ii., vii., and ix., slightly altered.

4. My God, what'er of earthy bliss. In T. Darlington's Hymns, for the Ch. of England, 1871. It is composed of st. vii., and a doxology not in the original. Taking these stanzas together this hymn has a wider circulation than any other of Miss Steele's compositions. [J. J.]

When I survey the wondrous Cross. I. Watts. (Good Friday.) This, the most popular and widely used of Watts's hymns, appeared in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707, and in the enlarged ed. 1709, as:—

"(Crown the world, by the Cross of Christ.

1. "When I survey the wondrous Cross
On which the Prince of Glory dy'd,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride."

2. "Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast
Save in the Death of Christ my God;
All the vain things that charm me most,
I sacrifice to his Blood."
3. "See from his Head, his Hands, his Feet,
Sorrow and Love flow mingled down!
This ever such Love and Sorrow meet,
Or Thorns compose so rich a Crown!"

4. "[His dying Crimson, like a Rose,
Spreads over his Body on the Tree;
Then am I dead to all the Globe,
And all the Globe is dead to me.]"

5. "Were the whole Realm of Nature mine,
That were a Pardon far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my Soul, my Life, my All."

The first to popularize the four-stanza form of the hymn (st. iv. being omitted) was G. Whitefield in the 1757 Suppl. to his Coll. of Hymns. It came rapidly into general use. In common with most of the older hymns a few alterations have crept into the text, and in some instances have been received with favour by modern compilers. These include:

St. ii. l. 2. "Save in the Cross," Madison, 1760.
St. iii. l. 2. "Love flow mingled," Salisbury, 1847.
St. iv. l. 2. "That were a tribute," Cotterill, 1819.

The most extensive mutilations of the text were made by T. Cotterill in his Sel., 1819; E. Bickersteth in his Christian Psalmody, 1833; W. J. Hall in his Mitre H. Bk. 1836; J. Keble in the Salisbury H. Bk. 1857; and T. Darlington in his Hymn, for the Church of England, 1857. Although Mr. Darlington's text was the only one condemned by Lord Selborne in his English Church Hymnody at the York Church Congress in 1866, the mutilations by others were equally bad, and would have justified him in saying of them all, as he did of Mr. Darlington's text in particular:—

"There is just enough of Watts left here to remind one of Horace's saying, that you may know the remains of a poet even when he is torn to pieces."

In the 1857 Appendix to Murray's Hymnal; in the Salisbury H. Bk. 1857; in H. A. & M. 1861 and 1875; in the Hymnary, 1872; and in one or two others a doxology has been added, but this practice has not been received with general favour. One of the most curious examples of a hymn turned upside down, and mutilated in addition, is Basil Wood's version of this hymn beginning "Arise, my soul,

The four-stanza form of this hymn has been translated into numerous languages and dialects. The renderings into Latin include:

"Quando admirandum Crucem," by R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871; and

"Mirabilis videns Crucem," by H. M. Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876. The five-stanza form of the text as in H. A. & M. (st. v. being by the compiler) is tr. in Bp. Wordsworth's (St. Andrews) Series Collectarum, 1890, as "Cúm miram intruor, de qua Præstantian omni." In popularity and use in all English speaking countries, in its original or in a slightly altered form, this hymn is one of the four which stand at the head of all hymns in the English language. The remaining three are, "Awake, my soul, and with the sun;" "Hark! the herald angels sing;" and "Rock of Ages, cleft for me." (See English Hymnody, Early, §§ xii. xvii.)

When Israel freed from Pharaoh's hand. J. Watts. [Ps. cxiv.] Written in 1719, and sent by Watts, with a letter, to the
When spring unlocks the flowers.

Bp. R. Heber. [Spring.] 1st publ. in the Christian Observer, 1816. p. 27, in 4 st. of 8 l. headed "Spring," and signed "B." In Hob's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1837, p. 98, it was repeated, after revision by himself, in 4 st. of 4 double lines, and appointed, without any apparent reason, for the 7th S. after Trinity. The text in C. U. is that of 1827. [J. J.]
When the Architect Almighty fashioned had the heaven and earth. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Consecration of a Church.] Appeared in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 221, in 10 double st. of 4 l., and headed "Consecration of Churches, or Laying the First Stone." In the 3rd ed. of the Holy Year it was repeated in two parts, Pt. ii. beginning "O'er the Fount's baptismal waters may the Holy Spirit move." Usually this hymn is given in an abbreviated form, that adopted by the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, being the most popular. For its special purpose, for use at the Consecration of a Church, it is one of the finest hymns in C. U. [J. J.]

When the earth was full of darkness. J. M. Neale. [St. Margaret.] Written for the use of the Sisters of St. Margaret's, East Grinstead, as a hymn for St. Margaret's Day, at Lewes, probably for the Festival of July 20, 1863, and first printed in the Church Times, July 15, 1863, where it is signed "J. M. N." In 1886 it was included, with slight alterations, in Dr. Neale's Original Sequences, Hymns, and Other Ecclesiastical Verses. With further alterations and the omission of st. v. it was also given in the People's H., 1867, No. 253. [J. J.]

When the Lord of Hosts ascended. Bp. C. Wordsworth. [Whitsunday:] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 103, in 8 st. of 4 l. In the 3rd ed. of the Holy Year, 1863, it was given in two parts, Pt. ii. being "Not in fire from heaven descending," the text throughout being revised by the author. Three centos therefrom are in C. U.: (1) Opening with st. i.; (2) "Guide of sinners, go before us;" (3) "Holy Ghost, Divine Creator." [J. J.]

When the wild [dark] waves round us roll. Bp. W. W. How. [St. Peter.] Pub. in the enlarged ed. of Morrell and How's Ps. and Hys., 1864, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, Thring's Coll., 1882, and others, it reads, "When the dark waves round us roll." It is a very popular hymn and is found in many collections. [J. J.]

When this passing world is done. R. M. McCheyne. [Deborah to Christ.] Printed in the Scottish Christian Herald, May 20, 1837; and repeated, in his Songs of Zion appended to his Memoir and Remains, 1844, in 9 st. of 6 l., and headed "I am Deborah." As a whole it is not in C. U.; but the following centos therefrom are in C. U.:

1. When this passing world is done. Various centos of unequal length, with this as the opening stanza are in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

2. When I stand before the throne. This cento, in Kennedy, 1865, and others begins with st. iii.

3. Chosen not for good in me. This cento is in extensive use. It begins with st. vi.

When these centos are taken into account it is found that this is the best known and most widely used of the author's hymn. Original text in Lyra Brit., 1867. [J. J.]

When thy faith is sorely tried. J. Conder. [Divine Footprints.] This hymn appeared in his posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "Divine Footprints." The idea is to devote a While conscious sinners tremble. W. Jenett. [The Judgment.] This is in Versts written on Various Occasions for Friends. London, 1843. Printed for Private Distribution, p. 4, in 2 st. 4 l. In a note to four hymns, of which this is the last, reads:

Beyond this we have no information, and the hymn must remain "Anon." [J. J.]

Where'er the Patriarch pitch'd his tent. J. Montgomery. [Abraham, the Father of the Faithful.] Written "Jan. 5, 1834" [m. mas.], and pub. in Leitchfield's Original Hymns, 1843, No. 25, and again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 39. It is given in a few modern hymn-books only.

[J. J.]

Wherefore, we sinners mindful of the love. W. Bright. [Holy Communion.] This hymn was pub. in The Monthly Packet for October 1873, in 6 st. of 4 l., and based on Mica 6 vi. 6, (J. P.'s Works, 1864-72, vol. i. p. 276). It is given in centers in the hymn-books as follows:

1. Wherewh, O Lord, shall I draw near? C. Wesley. [Praise for Pardon and Peace.] Written in May, 1738, together with the hymn, "And can it be that I should gain?" (p. 64. t.), on the occasion of the great spiritual change which the author then underwent. Minute details of the event are given in the author's Diary, May 21-23, 1738. Its biographical interests, together with that of "And can it be," &c., are not inconsiderable, showing as they do the struggles and triumphs of a sincere and cultured man. This hymn was 1st pub. in the Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1739, in 8 st. of 4 l. and again, with thePrefaces of st. vi., in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, p. 129. From hence it has passed to collections. Original text P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 91. Dr. Osborn's note on this hymn, vol. i. p. 91, is:—

"Probably the hymn written on his conversion by Charles Wesley. Compare his Journal, under date May 23rd 1738: "Least of all would he [the enemy] have us call what things God has done for our souls .... In his name, therefore, and through His strength, I will perform my vows unto the Lord, so not hiding His righteousness within my heart, if it should ever please him to plant it there!" (vol. i. p. 94). The same hymn was probably sung next day, when his brother John was able to declare, 'I believe' (ib. p. 95)."

Further extracts from the Journal are given in G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 46, together with other comments which are worth of attention, and are too lengthy to transcribe. [J. J.]

Which of the [mighty] petty kings of earth? C. Wesley. [Guardian Angels.] Given from the Wesley Hymn in Dr. Leitchfield's Original Hymns, 1842, and again in the Wesley P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xiii., in 6 st. of 8 l. It is based on Heb. i. 14. A cento therefrom is sometimes found beginning with st. iii., "Angels, where'er we go, attend." [J. J.]

While carnal men, with all their might. B. Beddome. [Zeal and Diligence.] This hymn appeared in Rippon's Baptist Set., 1767, in two parts as follows: Pt. i. consisted of 3 st. of 4 l. ; Pt. ii., beginning "If duty calls and suffering too," in 7 st. of 4 l. From Pt. ii. the hymn "Alike in happiness and woe," in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, is taken, the stanzas having been re-written throughout. In Beddome's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1817, portions of the hymn as in Rippon are given as Nos. 161 and 216. [J. J.]

While health and youth and strength remain. [Early Piety.] This hymn appeared with three others including “Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him,” on a supplementary sheet appended to the musical ed. of the Foundling Coll., 1796, and to the book of words issued in 1801. In the 1809 ed. of that Coll. it was included in the body of the work, and thence passed, in 1810, into J. Kemplorne’s Ps. & Hymns, No. exxvi. in 4 st. of 4 l., and somewhat considerably altered. Although still retained in the Foundling Coll., it has almost altogether fallen out of common use. On the authority of D. Sedgwick this hymn is usually ascribed to J. Kemplorne, but there is no evidence whatever in his favour. Its ascription is Anon. Foundling Coll., 1796.

While in sweet communion feeding. Sir E. Denny. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in his Sel. of Hys., 1839, No. 292, in 2 st. of 8 l. It was repeated in his Hys. and Poems, 1848, and 1870, and has also passed into several collections in G. Britain and America, including Snepp’s Songs of G. & G., 1872; Hatfield’s Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and others.

While justice waves her vengeful hand. Anne Steele. [National Humiliation.] This hymn was written for the National Fast of Feb. 11, 1757, and pub. in her Poems on Subjects Chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. 1, p. 250, in 9 st. of 4 l., and headed “National Judgments deprecated. On the Fast. Feb. 11, 1757.” It was also given in D. Sedgwick’s ed. of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 116. This hymn is usually given in an abbreviated form as in the American Presby. Sel. of Hymns, Philadelphia, 1861.

While midnight shades the earth o’erspread. C. Wesley. [Midnight.] Pub. in the Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1759, p. 35, in 6 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1808–72, vol. 1, p. 49), and entitled “A Hymn for Midnight.” In the P. Works, Dr. Osiorn adds this note on the title:—

“The phrase had been misapplied; and in a copy of the 5th edition now before me, it is corrected with his own hand to ‘A Midnight Hymn for one convinced of Sin.’”
WHILE SAINTS AND ANGELS

May I still enjoy this feeling,
In all need to Jesus go;

Prove His wounds each day more healing.
And Himself more deeply know.

In Cooke and Denton's Church Hymnal, 1853, No. 78, Shirley's st. i. and ii., ll. 1-4 were given, with slight alteration, and the following lines were added to complete the hymn in 3 st. of 8 l.

"Lord, in ceaseless contemplation Fix our hearts and eyes on Thee,
Till we taste Thy whole salvation,
And wondrous glories see.

For Thy sorrows we adore
For the griefs that wrought our peace;
Gracious Saviour! we implore Thee,
In our hearts Thy love increase.

Unto Thee, the world's Salvation,
Father, Spirit, unto Thee,
Low bow we in adoration,
Ever-blessed One and Three.

This text, with one or two slight alterations, was repeated in the Hymnery, 1872. The alterations and additions in 1853, and the changes in 1872, were by Canon William Cooke and Mr. Webb. In H. A. & M., 1861, Canon Cooke's arrangement, reduced to 4 st. of 4 l., was given as No. 95, st. i.-iii., being from Shirley, and st. iv. part of the additions by Canon Cooke as above. This text was repeated, with slight changes and the addition of st. iv., from Shirley's text, in the Hy. Comp., 1870; in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; Tiring's Coll., 1882, and many others.

Other arrangements from Shirley's text are in C. U. in G. Britain and America, and can be tested by Shirley as above. The H. A. & M. text has been rendered into Latin by the Rev. R. Thornton, b. d., in Glithey and Thornton's Fasceculus, 1866, and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, as "Sauve tempus et serenum;" and by Hodges in his The County Palatine, &c., 1866, as "Ter beats dulces horae;" and the Hy. Comp. text, with the omission of st. iii., by the Rev. R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1851, as, "O quam dulce et beatum!" Both these forms have also been rendered into other languages.

The full original text by J. Allen of "While my Jesus I'm possessing," is in Lyra Britannica, 1867. [J. J.]

While saints and angels, glorious King, J. Montgomery. [Charitable Objects.] Pub. in Dr. Sutton's Ps. & Hym. . . .. Song at the Parish Church, Sheffield, 2nd ed., enlarged, 1816, No. 102, in 6 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 235; in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 540; and in his Original Hymn, 1853, No. 945. In the last two works it is headed "Eng. for the Children in a Church School." It was probably written to be sung at an anniversary of one of the Sheffield Charity Schools. Sometimes it begins with st. iv. as "Father Thy heavenly gifts afford." [J. J.]

While shepherds watched their flocks by night. N. Tate. [Christmas.] Appeared in the Supplement to the New Version (p. 301. l.), in 1702, in 6 st. of 4 l., and in all later editions of the same. In full, or in an abbreviated form, it is found in most hymn-books in English-speaking countries. Original text in the Hy. Comp. In addition to the original, two additional versions are in C. U. --

WHITE, HENRY KIRKE 1275

1. While humble Shepherds watched their flocks.

This was given in the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, the opening stanza reading:

"While humble Shepherds watch'd their Flocks

In Bethlehem's Plains by Night,

An Angel sent from Heav'n appear'd

And fill'd the Plains with Light."

The alterations were confined to this stanza. On its adoption in the revised draft of 1745, it was included in the authorised issue of the Tri. and Paraphs., 1741, the concluding lines of the last stanza read:

"Good will is shown by Heav'n to men,

And never more shall cease.

This arrangement of the text has been in C. U. for more than 100 years.

2. On Judah's plains as Shepherds kept.

This original has been tr. into several languages. Those in Latin include: (1) "Pastorum in percutere mexit vigiliae catacru," by Lord Lyttelton, 1866; and (2) "Noctivagos, acceitus humo, pastoria pubes," by C. S. Calverley, both in L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867; (3) "Oves dum custodientes," by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1872; (4) "Pueri pastores vigilantam nocte silentium," by Bp. Wordsworth (St. Andrews) in his Series Collectarum, &c., 1890. [J. J.]

While with ceaseless course the sun.

J. Newton. [New Year.] Pub. in his Twenty Six Letters on Religious Subjects, &c., by Omaneron, 1774, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed, "For the New Year." It was repeated in R. Conyer's Ps. & Hym. the same year, and again in the Obney Hymns, 1779, b. ii., No. 1. It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. In some collections st. ii., iii. are given as, "As the winged arrow flies," but this is not so popular as the full text. [J. J.]

White, Henry Kirke, remarkable both for the early development of his genius and for the untimely termination of his brief life of splendid promise, was b. at Nottingham, March 21, 1785. His father was a butcher, but his mother must have been a superior woman, since for a number of years she successfully conducted a boarding-school for girls. The writing-master in her establishment was for some time Henry's teacher, and under his instruction he made remarkable progress in Latin and other subjects. At the age of 13 he composed the lines "To an early Primrose," which were subsequently printed with his poems. At 14 he left school, and was put to the stock-keeping, in order to learn practically the business of a hosier; but, dialling the employment, he was removed to an attorney's office in Nottingham, with a view to the legal profession. All his spare time was now devoted to literary pursuits, the acquisition of languages, and the composition of poetical and other contributions for the periodicals of the day. At the age of 15 he obtained from the Monthly Preceptor a silver medal for a translation from Horace, and a pair of globes for the best description of an imaginary tour from London to Edinburgh. Given only 17 years old he was encouraged to publish his Clifton Grove and Other Poems, which were certainly excellent as the compositions of a mere boy. About this time he was inclined to scepticism, but through the perusal of Scott's Force of Truth and the arguments and appeals of a young friend, R. W. Almond (afterwards Rector of St. Peter’s, Nottingham), he was led to earnest faith in Christianity. His well-known hymn “When marshall’d on the nightly plain” is understood to be a figurative description of his spiritual experience at this period. He now desired to become a Christian minister, and through the generosity of his employers he was released from his articles in 1804. With the help of the Rev. C. Simeon and other friends, he became a student of St. John’s College, Cambridge. There he speedily distinguished himself, and the highest honours seemed within his grasp but over application to study destroyed his health, and he fell ill and died Oct. 19, 1806, in the 22nd year of his age. Universal regret was expressed at his untimely end. Southey published his Remains, accompanied by a short memoir. Lord Byron composed some beautiful lines on the sad event. Josiah Conder and others wrote commemorative verses. The entire literary young manhood of England and America seemed moved with sympathy. A monumental tablet, with a medallion by Chantrey, was erected in All Saints Church, Cambridge, at the expense of a citizen of Boston, in the United States. Ten hymns are ascribed to H. K. White, which were printed by the Rev. Dr. W. B. Collyer in his Suppl. to Dr. Watts’s Psalms & Hymns London 1812. Of these four of the most popular are annotated as follows: “Awake, sweet harp of Judah, wake,” p. 103. ii.; “Christians, brethren, ere we part,” p. 331. ii.; “Much in sorrow, oft in woe,” p. 773. i.; “When marshall’d on the nightly plain,” p. 1271. i. These are all in extensive use. The rest, all in C. U. at the present time, are:

1. O Lord, another day has flown. Evening. From this the hymn “O let Thy grace perform its part” is taken.
3. The Lord our God is Lord of all. Divine Sovereignty.
4. Through sorrow’s night and danger’s path. The Resurrection. Sometimes given as “When sorrow’s path and danger’s road.”
5. What is this passing scene? Human Fragility. This hymn consists of selected stanzas from his “Ode on Disappointment.”

[Whitfield, Frederick, B.A. 8. of H. Whitfield, was b. at Threapwood, Shropshire, Jan. 7, 1829, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his B.A. in 1859. On taking Holy Orders, he was successively curate of Oldley, vicar of Kirby-Ravenworth, senior curate of Greenwich, and Vicar of St. John’s, Bedley. In 1875 he was preferred to St. Mary’s, Hastings. Mr. Whitfield’s works in prose and verse number upwards of thirty, including Spiritual unfolding from the World of Life; Voices from the Valley Testifying of Jesus; The Word Unveiled; Gleanings from Scripture, &c. Several of his hymns appeared in his Sacred Poems and Prose, 1861, 2nd Series, 1864; The Casket, and Quiet Hours in the Sanctuary. The hymn by which he is most widely known is “I need Thee, precious Jesus” (p. 557. 1). Other hymns by him in C. U. include:

W., p. 47.) It was included in the Unitarian Chrestomath, Boston, 1844, and has been repeated in later collections.

12. o, not alone with outward sign. Divine Invit

13. pure Reformers, not in vain. Freedom. This begins with st. xii. of his poem "To the Reformers of England," as given in his Comp. P. W., p. 77. The hymn was included in the Boston Bk. of Hymn., 1844, and has been repeated in later collections.

14. o sometimes gleams upon our sight. Old and New. This is taken from his "The Sermon on the Mount" and "The Hermit," 1842 (in 94 st. of 4 1.), and begins with st. xii. (Comp. P. W., p. 113.) The cento was given in the Boston Hymn for the Spirit, 1864, and repeated in later collections.

15. O Thou, at whose repute the grave. Merce

16. This was given in the Boston Bk. of Hymn, 1864.

22. O [God] Thou, Whose presence went before. National Hymn. This hymn is dated by the author 1824 (Author's MS.). It was sung at the Slavery Meeting at Chatham Street Chapel, New York, "on the 4th of the 7th month, 1841." It is No. 720 in the Unitarian Chrestomath. It is sometimes given as "O God, whose presence went before."
23. O, what though our feet may not tread where Christ trod. Presence of Christ's Spirit. The author dates this 1837 (Author's MS.). It is No. 150 in the Boston Hk. of Hps., 1846. In their Hps. of the Spirit, 1844, No. 652, it begins: "O, wherefore the dream of the earthly abode." Both cantos are from his poem
"Psalmon;"
24. Shall we grow weary in our watch! Patience, or Resignation. This begins with st. x. of his poem
"The Cypress-Tree of Ceylon." (Comp. P. W., p. 54)
This form of the text was given in the Boston Hk. of Hps., 1846, No. 275, in st. 4, and again in Horden's
Cong. Hps., 1844, in 3 st.
This begins with line 6 of st. x. of his poem "En-kleid," and was given in the Boston Hps. of the Spirit, 26. The green earth sends its inscription. Worship of Nature. The author dates this 1845 (Author's MS.)
It is from his poem "The Worship of Nature," and was given in this form in the Boston Hps. for the Church of Christ, 1853, No. 193. The cento: "The harp at Nature's advent strong," in the Unitarian Hymn (and Tune) Bk., Boston, 1845, No. 195, is from the same poem. The cento No. 321 in the Boston Hys. of the Spirit, 1844, is also (altered) from this poem.
27. The path of life we walk to-day. The Shadowing Rock. This in the Boston Hys. of the Spirit, 1844, begin with st. xi. of his poem on "The Rock in El Ghor," which the author dates 1859 (Author's MS.).
In full in Comp. P. W., p. 189.
28. Thine are all the gifts, O God. Children's Miscellaneous, or Ragged Schools. Written for the Annive-sary of the Children's Mission, Boston, 1874. It is given in Horden's Cong. Hps., 1844.
29. Thou hast fallen in thine armour. Death. From his poem: "To the memory of Charles B. Storrs, late President of Western Reserve College," pub. in his Ballads and other Poems, Lond., 1844, p. 84. Dated by the author 1838 (Author's MS.). Abridged form in the Hps. of the Spirit, 1844.
30. To-day, beneath Thy chastening eye. Seeing Revel. This begins with st. iv. of his poem, "The Wish of To-Day," dated by the author 1841 (Author's MS.)
and given in full in his Comp. P. W., p. 114. The cento is in Martineau's Hymns, 1875, and others.
31. We see not, know not; all our way. Resignation. "Written at the opening of the Civil War, 1861" (Author's MS.), and included in his In War Time, 1863, and his Comp. P. W., p. 190. In full in the Prim.
Math, Hymnal, 1857.
32. When on my day of life the night is falling, old Age. Written in 1862 (Author's MS.), and included in his work The Bay of the Seven Islands, and other 33. With aileence only as their benediction. Death.
1845. Written on the death of Sophia Sturges, sister of Joseph Sturges, of Birmingham, Eng. (Author's MS.)
It is in several collections, including Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1875; Horden's Cong. Hps., 1884, and others.

Notwithstanding this extensive use of portions of Mr. Whittier's poems as hymns for congregational use, he modestly says concerning himself: "I am really not a hymn-writer for the good reason that I know nothing of music. Only a very few of my pieces were written for singing. A good hymn is the best use to which poetry can be devoted, but I do not claim that I have succeeded in composing one." (Author's MS.) We must add, however, that these pieces are characterized by rich poetic beauty, sweet tenderness, and deep sympathy with human kind. (See also Index of Authors and Translators.)

In 1841 he was appointed Chaplain to Dr. Selwyn, Bishop elect of New Zealand, and sailed for that country in 1842. He was appointed the first Prior of the College which the Bishop established in New Zealand; but owing to the rupture of a blood vessel shortly after landing in New South Wales, he never took any duty in New Zealand.

The little time and strength which remained to him he spent in correcting the Maori translation of the Bible. He soon came, however, only too soon, and he died at Waimate, N. Zealand, March 19, 1843. The esteem in which he was held is emphasized by the fact that

When the new chapel of his college (St. John's Cambridge) was dedicated, Bishop Ken's name was inscribed with a series of figures, beautifully executed, according to the several successive centuries of the Christian era, the five which received the distinguished honour of being selected to represent the nineteenth century, all members of his college, were Henry Martyn, William Wilberforce, William Wordsworth, James Wood, and Thomas Whytehead.—"Mission Life, July 1873, p. 396.

Whytehead's Poems were pub. by Rivingtons in 1842, and his College Life, posthumously in 1845. In the former there are seven "Hymns towards a Holy Week." Of these "Last of creation's days" (Sixth day) and the widely known "Sabbath of the saints of old" (q.v.). Five days before he died he wrote to a friend:

"I took up the translation of the Evening Hymn (four verses for service) into Maori rhyming verse, the first of the kind of the same metre and rhythm as the English. Two hundred and fifty copies have been printed, and sung in church and school by the natives, and several of them have came and sang under my window. They call it the 'new hymn of the sick minister,' Bishop Ken's lines ["Glory to thee, my God, this night"] it is very hard for one to compress within the same bounds in a rude language. However it is done, and people seem pleased with it; and it is a comfort to think one has introduced Bishop Ken's beautiful hymn into the Maori's evening worship, and left them this legacy when I could do no more for them.

A life so short and holy could have had no more beautiful ending.

Wis ein Vogel lieblich singet.
[Morning.] This hymn, which Miss Winkworth appropriately entitles "A Morning Song of Gladness," is included as No. 207 in the Geistliche Psalmen und Gesänge, Marburg, 1722, in 6 st. of 8 l. It had previously appeared in the ed. of 1690 (Marburg University Library). In J. Köhler's Christliche Haftenstätte, Hamburg, 1840, p. 329, st. 1., iv., vi. are given, marked as "from the year 1580"; and this text is in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1850, No. 2255 (1865, No. 2293). We have failed to trace the hymn earlier than 1680. The tr. in C. U. is:—

A bird in meadows fair. A good tr. from Knapp, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Germ. 2. Ser, 1856, p. 73; repeated in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, beginning: "As the bird in meadows fair." In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 161. Miss Winkworth wrote it to the original metre, and there it begins: "As a bird at dawning sings."—[J. M.]

Wie gross ist des Allmächtigen Glüte.
C. F. Gellert. [Praise] A beautiful hymn of thanksgiving for the goodness of God, one of the finest and most popular of Gellert's productions. First pub. in his Geistliche Oden und Lieder, Leipzig, 1757, p. 34, in 6 st. of 8 l., entitled, "The Goodness of God." Included in the Berlin G. B., 1865, No. 20, in almost all subsequent collections, and recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:—

How bounteous our Creator's blessing! A good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 204 in his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

Other trs. are: (1) "How great the goodness of the Lord," in Madame de Pontes' Poëts and Poetry of Germany, 1856, vol. i. p. 473. (2) "How great Jehovah's love, how tender," by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1843, p. 47 (1844, p. 212). (3) "My God, how boundless is Thy love," in the Day of Rest, 1877, p. 466, marked as "A. R. H."

WILLARD, EMMA C.

mar, May 17, 1692 (Koch, iii. 110; Wetzel, iii. 426; Bode, p. 172, etc.).

Willet joined, in 1617, in founding the Fruiting society, the great (German Literary and Patriotic Union of the 16th cent., and, after the death (1660) of Lud- wig, Prince of Anhalt-Ciisern, became his head. Weimar was the centre of its operations, in the direction of which the Duke was assisted by Georg Neumark (p. 176). Neumark, in 1636, during the Civil War, in a book (1640), speaks of the Duke as having composed several hymns, as well-known in this place, especially the short Hymn of Peace, "Gott der Friede hat gegraben."

Besides this hymn on Peace only one other is known as Willet's, viz.:

Herr Jesu Christ, dich zu uns wend. Public Worship. This was included as No. 124 in the 2nd ed., 1645, of p. i. of the Cantores Stomiani, Gottha (1st ed. 1645), in 4 st. of 4 l., entitled "To be sung before the Sermon." As no author's name is there given, and as it did not appear in any of the three parts of the original ed. of 1646—49, the Duke's authorship is de- ducedly doubtful. So far as yet traced the Duke's name was not attached to it until in the Altendorf Liederfreude of 1676 (Fischer's Supplement, p. 71). In J. Niedling's Handbucheln, 4th ed., 1635, p. 746, it appears without author's name (Niedling, be it observed, was living at Alten- burg), and entitled "A heartfelt petition of pious Christians for grace and the help of the Holy Spirit, during Divine Service, to the end of the sermon." Koch says it was in the 1st ed., 1638, of Niedling, but this appears to be merely a guess, for the earliest ed. of Niedling which he describes at ill. 109, is that of 1655; and if it were in Niedling's 1638 ed., this circumstance would make the Duke's authorship still more unlikely. Whoever the author was the hymn soon became justly popular, and in 1678 was formally directed to be sung in all the churches in Saxony on all Sundays and festivals. It is a simple and forcible hymn, which survived the Rationalistic period, and is found in all recent German hymn-books, e.g. in the Berlin G. L. C., ed. 1863, No. 356. Tr. as:

1. Lord Christ, reveal Thy holy Face. In full by J. C. Jacobii, in his Psal. Ger., 1722, p. 42 (1732, p. 69). Repeated as No. 322 in p. i. of the Morav. H. B., 1758 (1886, No. 724), and as No. 54 in J. F. Thripp's Ps. & Hym., 1853.

2. Lord Jesus, to our prayer attend. This is a good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 12 in his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

3. Lord Jesus Christ, be present now! This is a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 13 in her C. B. for England, 1863; repeated in the Penningt. Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, No. 49.

Other trs. are:

(1) "Lord Jesus, turn us to, and down," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 48. (2) "Lord Jesus Christ, in mercy bend," by Mrs. Mavorington, 1863, p. 19. (3) "Lord Jesus Christ, now towards us bend," by X. L. Proehling- ham, 1870, p. 221. [J. M.]

Willard, Emma C. [née Hart]. A teacher and educational writer. b. at Berlin, Connecticut, 1787; resided in 1838 and some- time after at Hartford, and for many years connected a well-known school at Troy, New York. d. at Troy, 1870. Her hymn—

Rocked in the cradle of the deep (Sailor's Hymn), is sometimes said to have been composed in 1830. It is found in Beecher's Pulpit Coll., 1855, No. 1285. Its earlier appearance has not been verified. It is a successful sailor's hymn. It is included in several modern collec- tions. [F. M. B.]

WILLIAMS, David, a contemporary of William Williams (1717—1791) and author of numerous Welsh hymns. He also wrote Eng- lish hymns, some of which were pub. in a small tract of 24 pp., entitled, Joy in the Tent of Zion, or a Fes Gospel Hymns, Breconock, 1779. These hymns are rough, and in the style of W Williams. There is a wild Welsh bent about them which makes itself felt under the restraints of a gloomy Calvinism and a half foreign language. The original tract is very rare. [W. T. B.]

Williams, David, of Bethesda Frø, was a minister with the Independents in South Wales. He was b. at a farm-house, called Treheulyn, near Cowbridge, Glamorganshire. In 1812 he published a collection of hymns, which he called Llais y Durtur, or The Voice of the Turtle Dove. In 1824 he published a new edition under the title of Dysroeried Bethesda, containing 143 hymns and 183 tunes. Many of his hymns are still used by all denominations in Wales. [W. G. T.]

Williams, Edward, or Iolo Morgan, the greatest Welsh scholar of his time, published two vols. of hymns under the title Sainau yr Efyguiu yr yr Anlialch, "The Psalms of the Church in the Wilderness." He is the chief author of the Myryvian Ar- chaeology of Wales. His hymns were chiefly used by the Unitarians. [W. G. T.]

Williams, Helen Maria, daughter of Charles Williams, an officer in the Army, was b. in the North of England in 1762. Through the influence of Dr. A. Kippis (p. 685 l.) whose help she sought in London, her first poem, Edvin and Eltruda, a legendary tale, was pub. in 1782. This was followed by An Ode on the Peace, 1783, and Fern, a Poem. These were all included in her Poems, 2 vols., 1786; 2nd ed. 1791. Being on the point of marrying her sister's husband with a French Protestant family, she resided in Paris during the period of the Revolution and the reign of Terror. There she became well known as a political writer of strong republican sympathies; but her too independent expressions of opinion led to her temporary imprisonment by E-Bespierre. Her Letters from France, 1790, were pub. in England and America, and in a French translation, in France. She also pub. Letters containing a Sketch of the Politics of France from the 31st May, 1793, till the 28th of July, 1794, and Part II. of a letter of a like kind; some additional Poems, and a tr. of Humboldt's Personal Narratives of his Travels, 1815. The closing years of her life were spent at Amsterdam, in the house of her nephew, Athanas Coqerel, a pastor of two Reformed Church there. Miss Williams d. in 1827. From her Poems, 1786; the following hymns have come into C. U.:

2. While Thee I seek, protect me. Safety in God. This hymn was in Dr. Priestley's Birmingham Coll., 1790; in Kippis's Coll., 1795; the Rudder Coll., 1801; and almost every other Unitarian collection to the present time. In the New Eng. H. Bk., 1859, it begins "While Thee I seek, Almighty Power;" and in several 4 N collections a cento beginning "Father, in all our [my] comforts here," is given as in Stowell's "Ps. & Hymns," 1811 and 1817, and several others.

[V. D. B.]

Williams, Isaac, B.D., was b. at Carmarthen, Cardiganshire, Dec. 12, 1802, where his mother happened to be staying at her father's house at the time of his birth. But his parents' house was in Bloomsbury, London, his father being a Chancery barrister at Lincoln's Inn. He received his early education from a clergyman named Polehampton, with whom he was at first a day pupil in London, but whom he afterwards accompanied to a country at Worpleston, near Guildford. All Mr. Polehampton's pupils (15), with the exception of Isaac Williams and his two elder brothers, were being prepared for Eton, where great stress was laid upon Latin versification; and it was in these early years that Isaac Williams acquired his fondness for, and proficiency in, this species of composition. In 1814 he was removed to Harrow, where Mr. Drury was his private tutor. He gained several school prizes, and became so used, not only to write, but to think, in Latin, that when he had to write an English theme he was obliged to translate his ideas, which were in Latin, into English. In 1821 he proceeded to Trinity College, Oxford, that college being chosen on the advice of Mr. Drury; and in his second term he was elected scholar of Trinity. In 1823 he won the University Prize for Latin Verse, the subject being Ars Geologica. The gaining of this prize was indirectly the turning point of his life, for it brought him into close relationship with John Keble, who may be termed his spiritual father. He had been previously introduced to Mr. Keble by the Vicar of Aberystwith, Mr. Richards, whom he had met at his grandfather's house. But there was no intimacy between them until he had won the Latin Verse Prize, when Mr. Keble came to his rooms and offered to look over the poem with him before it was recited and printed.

This led to an intimate acquaintance which ripened into a warm friendship of infinite benefit to Isaac Williams's spiritual life. Mr. Keble offered to take him with him into the country and read with him during the Long Vacation, without any payment. Robert Wilberforce, then an undergraduate of Oriel, was also to be of the party. They settled at Southrop, near Fairford, a name familiar to the readers of Keble's Life. Here Isaac Williams made the acquaintance of Hurrell Froude, who was also reading with Mr. Keble, and this acquaintance also ripened into a friendship which was terminated only by death. Keble was like a boy with his pupils, entering with zest into all their amusements, but he also exercised a deep influence over their religious characters, especially that of Isaac Williams. Williams spent this and all his subsequent Long Vacations at Southrop, and became more and more influenced for good by Mr. Keble. He also became a great friend of Sir George Prevost, then an undergraduate of Oriel, who afterwards married his only sister. During one of these sojourns at Southrop, Keble showed Williams and Froude a ms. copy of the Christian Year, but, strange to say, the young men did not appreciate its beauty. W. caused alarm the Vicar to bring the greatly shocked of Mr. Keble duce him to person there the who spent no the forens, Ryd son), Hurrock an accompli of Keble's that he was doubt, he attempted ing of the "double were not congeval preparations severe for he was a degree, the accuracy of Fairfax twenty Sir George was curate Windrush compete ship, an year as great Fellow to J. able Tract 90, had given the greatest offence of all, viz.: Tract 80, or Reserve in the Commonwealth of Religion. Keble, who was also known as the erudite friend and late coadjutor of Newman. It is not, therefore, surprising that vehement opposition was raised against his election. A rival candidate was found in the person of Mr. Edward Garbett, of Brasenose, a First Classman, but quite unknown in the domain of poetry. There was really no comparison whatever between the fitness of the two candidates, but that counted for little when men's minds were heaved by the "odium theologicum." It became simply a party question; but a public contest was happily averted by a private comparison of votes, when it was found that there was a large majority of votes in favour of Mr. Garbett. Mr. Williams was much hurt—not by the opposition of the Low Churchmen, for he expected that,—but by the desertion of several whom he counted upon as friends. He withdrew from Oxford and from public life (which had never possessed much attraction to a man of his retiring and studious habits) altogether. He remained at Bisley until 1848, when he removed to Stinchcombe; and there he lived until his death. From time to time some thoughts which worked upon him were given to the world, but that was all; and when the announcement that he had quietly passed away on SS. Philip and James' Day, May 1, 1865, appeared, the outer world had almost forgotten that he was still living. (Though it had not forgotten, and will not, it is hoped, while the English language lasts, ever forget his writings. He died of a decline, the seeds of which had long been sown.)

As a devotional writer both in prose and verse the name of Isaac Williams stands deservedly high, but as a writer of hymns for congregational use, he does not, either for quantity or quality, at all reach the first rank. Indeed, it would have been very distressing to him if he had done so, for he shared the distaste which most of the early leaders of the Oxford movement felt for the congregational use of any metrical hymns written by Keble, Cowley, or Taylor, and it is said that he purposely made his translations from the "Porrian Breviary" rough, in order to prevent them from being so used. His poetical works are:

(1.) The Cathedral, his first publication in verse, issued in the early part of 1838. It was written about the same time as the famous Tract on Reserve, and "in pursuance of the same great object we had undertaken" (in the Tracts for the Times). What that object was is intimated in the alternative title, The Cathedral, or the Catholic and Apostolic Church in England. It followed a tract which the same Mr. Low had already published, and it only worked out the ideas far more in detail, connecting each part of the edifice with some portion of church doctrine or discipline. The whole volume is written in the true spirit of poetry, and some of the sonnets in it are good specimens of that difficult form of composition; which besides, has scarcely any verses out of which even centos of hymns can be formed.

(2.) The same in the same year (1838) he published a volume, entitled The Church of England, A Poem, of which the title implies, many of its contents were written at an earlier date. In fact the composition ranged over a period of at least a quarter of a century, when there was more true poetry in this volume than in any other. But the latter had the advantage of some effort at selection, while the The Church of England was a selection of detached poems. The connection between the four divisions of the volume was, that they were all suggested by the writer's surroundings. Thus the "Golden Valley" was the beautiful district in the neighbourhood of Stroud known by that name; "The Mountain Home" was the name of a place between Cwmcefnant in Cardiganshire; "The River Bank" was the River Windrush, on the banks of which was the writer's nest of "The Sacred City." In a later edition (1852) there is an additional division entitled The Side of the Hill," that is, Stinchcombe Hill, Gloucestershire; while The Church of England is rather a volume of sonnets and sacred poems for private use, than of hymns in the popular sense of the term. The same volume contains some of his Poems, or Harrow School Exercises, and his Oxford Prize Poem, Ars Geologica. The Latinity of these poems fully betrays the writer's own recognition of what he was trying to do, for he was more at home in Latin than he was in his own language. It also contained translations of three Latin sonnets, "Dies Irae, Dies Iilla," to which, in the revised and enlarged edition of 1848, were added, under the title of Lyra Ecclesiastica, a number of translations from other Latin and Greek Hymns. These translations are for the most part very free, and are not adapted, as they were certainly meant to be, for congregational use.

(3.) His next publication, more translated from the Porrian Breviary, 1839. He thought that "the ancient Latin hymns were the best source from which our acknowledged & necessary poetical psalmody should be supplied, as being much more congenial to the spirit of our own liturgy than those hymns which are too often made to take part in our sacred service." and he had already published many of the translations which appear in this volume, at intervals from 1833 to 1837, in the British Magazine, and the church organ of Oxford was edited by Hugh James Rose. A few hymns from this volume, e.g. "O Heavenly Jerusalem," "Disposer supreme," "O Word of God also," have been used for congregational use, but most of these are, perhaps purposely, done into such irregular metres, that they are not available for the purpose. Indirectly, however, they have been highly serviceable to the cause of congregational psalmody, for Mr. Chantler tells us in his Preface to his Hymns Intended for the Use of the Parochial Church Mission that Mr. Williams's translations in the British Magazine led him to produce that work.

(4.) The next little volume, Hymns on the Catechism, was written at Bisley and published in 1842. Its object was "strictly practical; it was intended as an aid towards following out that catechetical instruction which is so essential a part of the church system." It cannot be said that these hymns are likely to be so attractive to children, as, for example, those of Mrs. Alexander, but they are suitable for congregational, or at any rate, for Sunday school use, and he gives of them, "Be Thou my Guardian and my Guide," has found its way desirably into most collections.

(5.) In the same year 1842, he much more ambitious work, The Baptistery, also saw the light. It seems to recognize in this work the pupil of John Keble, for its leading idea is very much the same as in Tracts for the Times, viz. that earthly things are a shadow of heaven. It is divided into thirty-two "Images," as the author terms them; it is not easy to do justice to the careful attention which it requires, for both in form and matter it is the product of a true poet. One of the "Images," the 20th, "The Use of the Water and the Gift of the Holy Spirit; Manifestation," has supplied our well-known hymn, "Lord, in this, Thy mercy's day," but the general tenour of the work is quite apart from hynmody.

(6.) The same may be said of The Altar, published in 1849, which takes the second great Sacrament of the Gospel, as The Baptistry took the first, for the basis of a series of devout meditations, 34 in number. The ed. was illustrated by 34 pictures, one to each meditation, after the fashion of a foreign book which the writer had seen; but the illustrations were thought to be a disadvantage of the subject, and the later editions appeared without them. The object of the work was to connect the various events which occurred at the time of the Blessed Lord's Passion with the Eucharistic Service. It consists exclusively of a series of sonnets, and supplies no hymns for congregational use.

(7.) In the same year (1849) appeared another work of a very different type. It is entitled The Christian Scholar, and its object is "to restore the classics subservient to a higher use." It incidentally gives us an interesting insight into the author's own training under Mr. Keble, in the Preface that he himself derived, not merely moral benefit, but actual religious training from this indirect mode of instruction in another than whom the "youthful mind that renders life valuable." The plan of the book is, in a word, to take passages from all the chief classical authors, and to give Christian comments on each.

(8) His only other poetical work was Ancient Hymns for Children, 1842, which consisted of a reprint, with slight alterations, of 30 of his trs. from the Latin, previously published in 1538 and 1539 as above.

Although Isaac Williams's prose writings are as valuable, and perhaps more popular than his verse, yet from the point of view of this article it will suffice to enumerate the principal of them. They include—

Several reviews for The British Critic at various dates; Thoughts on the Study of the Gospels, 1842; Sermons on the Characters of the Old Testament, 1856; The Beginning of the Book of Genesis, with Notes and Reflections, 1861; The Psalms interpreted of Christ, vol. 1, 1864 (no other volumes were published); A Memoir of the Rev. R. A. Suckling, late Perpulal Curate of Bussage, 1852; A Harmony of the Four Gospels, 1850; Sermons on the Epistles and Gospels, 3 vols., 1853; Sermons on the Female Characters of Holy Scripture, 1859; The Apocalypse, 1851, and many other minor works.

Besides these, he edited a large number of Plain Sermons at different dates by various writers, and he also wrote some of the Tracts for the Times, notably Tract 80 (1838), and 87 (1840), on Reserve in Communicating Religious Knowledge. It is difficult to see why these should have given so much offence. The principles on which the conclusion is based are obviously correct. Perhaps the title Reserve was alarming when men's minds were excited by the fear that they were being led by the new Oxford school they knew not whither. These two Tracts, with Tract 86, also by Isaac Williams, would fill an octavo volume of more than 200 pages. Both the character and the writings of Isaac Williams are singularly attractive. They both present a striking combination of qualities which are not often found in union. He was as firm as a rock in the maintenance and expression of his principles, but so quiet and retiring that his personality came far less before the public than that of any of the other leaders of the Oxford movement. His writings are so Christian and unaggressive in their tone that we are wont over to his side almost without knowing it. He was a most valuable ally on this very account to his party; and the hymnologist must well regret that he did not devote his exquisite poetical taste, his refined culture, and his ardent piety more to hymn-writing than he did.

[J. H. O.]

Isaac Williams's position in hymnody does not lie so much in the actual work which he did, as in the influence he had over others. His trs. from the Latin, mainly through the metres which he deliberately adopted, have not had a wide acceptance in the hymnody of the Church. J. Chandler, however, has left it on record that Williams's trs. in the British Magazine led him to undertake kindred work, and Chandler's trs. are amongst the most popular in the English language. Williams's Hymns on the Catechism, 1842, were with Dr. Neale's Hymns for Children of the same year the forerunners of the more popular productions on the same lines by later writers. Williams's trs. together with the more important of his original hymns may be traced through the Index of Authors and Translators. Of his original hymns the following are also in C. U.:
WILLIS, NATHANIEL P.

7. Jesus, lead us with Thy power. Divine Guidance Desired. Sometimes given as "Father, lead us with Thy Holy Spirit."

10. White and ruddy is my Beloved. Beauty of Jesus.

Wills is most widely known through his two hymns, "Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah," and "O'er those gloomy hills of darkness." William S. at Fayette, Pa., died Jan. 17, 1791. [See Welsh Hymnody.] [W. G. T.]

Wills, Nathaniel Parker, was b. at Portland, Maine, Jan. 29, 1807, and educated at Yale College, graduating in 1826. After writing for a time for the American Monthly Magazine, which he established, and the New York Mirror, into which the former was merged, he was attached to the American Legation at the French Court. His stay in Europe extended from 1831 to 1837. On his return he became in 1832 one of the editors of The American Magazine. His works are numerous, and include Sacred Poems, 1843. He d. Jan. 29, 1867. His sister, Mrs. Parton, is the well-known "Fanny Fern." His hymn — The perfect world by Adam trod" (Dedication of a Place of Worship), was "Written to be sung at the consecration of Hanover Street (Unitarian) Church, Boston," in 1826, and since then has been widely used, although of no exceeding merit. Welkamer unterm deiner Schaar.

N. L. von Zinzendorf. [Christian Church.] The origin of this hymn was somewhat remarkable. On May 10, 1737, Zinzendorf had been consecrated, at Berlin, by Daniel Ernst Jablonsky (see p. 766, ii.), as Bishop and Ordinary of the Moravian Brethren's Unity. In 1741 J. L. Dober, who had officiated as General-Elder (General-Aelteste) of the entire Moravian connection, resigned his office. Zinzendorf then held (from Sept. 11 to Sept. 23, 1741) a noteworthy synodical conference at London at which the assembled brethren agreed that no suitable successor to Dober could be found in their midst. On Oct. 17, 1741, Zinzendorf therefore resolved to bestow the Lord Jesus Christ Himself to the office of General-Elder of the entire Unity, and, as on casting lots the result was favourable to their wishes, they took for granted that He had assumed this position, and appointed 12 Assistant-Elders (Vize-Aelteste) to form the directing General Conference of the Unity, Zinzendorf's power of general superintendence being abolished (see Koch, v. 264). It was on this occasion that Zinzendorf wrote this hymn. Albert Knapp, in his ed. of Zinzendorf's Geistliche Gedichte (1848, p. 289), quotes it: "When Jesus assumed the position of General-Elder," and dates it Sept. 16, 1741. It was included in Aeppl. xi, circa 1743, to the Herrnhut G.B., No. 1778, and in 14 st. of 8. 1. In the Brüder C. B., 1778, No. 1609, st. vi., viii., were omitted, and in the Hist. Nachrichten (ed. 1851, 1885) it is dated "In London, 16 Sept. 1741."

2. Welcome among thy chosen flock. This is No. 234 in the Appt. of 1743 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1742 (ed. 1754, 4 st., ii., No. 117). [J. M.]

Wilson, Caroline, nee Fry, daughter of a tarnuer, was b. at Tunbridge Wells, Dec. 31, 1787. In 1831 she was married to a Mr. Wilson, and d. at Tunbridge Wells, Sept. 17, 1846. Her publications were somewhat numerous, and included a History of England in Verse, 1801; a Poetical Catechism, 1821; Serious Poetry, 1822; Death, and other Poems, 1823, &c. Her Autobiography, Letters, and Remains were pub. in 1843, and her Table of the Lord in 1859. Her best known hymns are:—

1. For what shall I praise Thee, My God and my King? Thanksgiving in Affliction. In C. u. in G. Britain and America.

2. Oft the clouds of deepest woe. Affliction leading to glory. From her Poetical Catechism, 1821, p. 25. In Kennedy, 1843, it begins "Falls the cloud of deepest woe." [J. J.]

Wilson, Jane, known as Sister Beatrice, the Mother Superior of the Sisterhood of St. Thomas the Martyr, Oxford, was the daughter of a clergyman, and d. in 1872 aged 36 years. She pub. Legenda Monastica, and other Poems (Oxford: Mowbray), which has passed through several editions. This work includes 16 hymns, originally written for Hymns used at the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr, Oxford, edited by the Vicar, the Rev. T. Chamberlain, 1861; enlarged ed. 1870, as follows:—

1. A Fast before a Feast. Shrove Tuesday.
2. A virgin heart she brought to Christ. St. Bride's day.
3. Again our Lent has come to us. Lent.
4. At even tide was light. Evening.
5. Behold, she comes, in silence. Conception of B. V. M.
6. Calm the saint's stammer. St. Peter ad Vincula; or, Lammas Day.
7. Deep thoughts were in her breast. Visitation of B. V. M.
8. I love the courts of Jesus. Love for the House of God.
11. Love and death have wrestled fiercely. St. Mary Magdalen.
13. The Church and world for once. SS. Philip and James.
14. 'Tis good, O Jesus, that alone with Thee. Advent.
15. We hall renowned Alban. St. Alban.
16. We cry to Thee, O Jesus. Evening. [J. J.]

Wilt Thou forgive that sin when I began. John Donne. [Lev.] Concerning this hymn, to which special reference is made in the article on Early English Hymnody, Isaac Walton says, in his Life of Donne, after quoting the hymn in detail:—

"I have the rather mentioned this hymn for that he caused it to be set to a most grave and solemn tune, and to be often sung to the organ by the Choristers of St. Paul's (Cathedral) Church in his own hearing, especially at the evening service, and at his return from his customary devotions in that place, old occasionally say to a friend, 'the words of this hymn have restored to me the same thoughts of joy that possessed my soul in my sickness, when I was ill. And O the power of Church-music! that harmony added to this hymn has raised the affections of my heart, and quickened my consciousness of soul and gratitude; and I observe that I always return from paying this public duty of prayer and praise with an unexpressible tranquility of mind, and a willingness to leave the world."—Walton's Life, 1670.
The special sickness during which this hymn was composed fell upon the author during the earlier part of his life. It was sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, at intervals from 1621 to 1631, when Donne died. It was published subsequently in Donne's Poems in 1633; again in 1635, and in later editions, and is usually entitled, "A Hymn to God the Father." Orig. text in Walton's Life, 1670 (1856, pp. 33-4). [English Hymnody, Essay, § vii.] [J. J.]

Winchester, Caleb Thomas, m.a., was b. in 1847. He is Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut. His hynn, "The Lord our God alone is strong" (Dedication of a Science Hall), was written for the opening of the Orange Judd Hall of Natural Science, Wesleyan University, Middletown. It was included in the Meth. Episco. Hymnal, 1878 (Nutter's Hymn Studies, 1884). [J. J.]

Winckler, Johann Joseph, s. of Gottfried Winckler, town clerk of Lucka, Sachsen-Altenburg, was b. at Lucka, Dec. 23, 1670. He became a student of Theology at the University of Leipzig, during the time when A. H. Francke and J. C. Schado were holding their Bible readings, and his sympathies henceforth were with the Pietistic movement. In 1693 he was appointed preacher to the St. George's Hospital at Magdeburg, and afternoon preacher at St. Peter's Church there. He became chaplain to the Prince Christian Ludwig regiment in 1695, and went with it to Holland and Italy. After the Peace of Ryswijk (Oct. 30, 1697) he made a tour in Holland and England. Returning to Magdeburg, he was appointed, in 1698, diaconus of the Cathedral, and in 1703 also inspector of the so-called Holzkreis. Finally, in 1714, he became chief preacher at the Cathedral, and in 1716, also Consistorialirth. He d. at Magdeburg, Aug. 11, 1722 (Wetzel, iii. 437; Grischo-Kirchner Nachricht zu Freylinghausen, p. 53; Koch, iv. 383; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1888, p. 170, &c.).

Winckler was a man who had the courage of his opinions, and his hymn No. iv. below is a picture of the stand he was willing to make when conscience bade him. Not that he was fond of controversy, but rather the reverse. Twice however he raised considerable feeling against himself in Magdeburg, first by the position he took up against theatre-going, and afterwards by his well-meant attempts to bring about a closer union between the Lutheran and Reformed churches in Prussia. But the opposition he encountered he bore patiently, and in the spirit of his hynn No. i. below. His hynn, some 27 in all, appeared mostly in the Lips., to the 2nd ed., 1703, of H. G. Neuss's Heil-Opfer (p. 798. ii.), in Porst's G. R., Berlin, 1705, * and in Freylinghausen's Neu geistreiches G. R., 1714. They rank among the better productions of the earlier Pietist writers, and are distinguished by firm faith, saintliness, and picturesque; but are somewhat lengthy and frequently in unusual metres.

Those of Winckler's hynn which have passed into English are:

1. Meine Seele senket sich. Resignation. 1st pub. in the 1703 ed. of Neuss's Heil-Opfer,

* Dr. J. F. Bachmann in his Zur Geschichte der Berliner Gesangbücher, 1854, was only able to describe the 3rd ed. of 1713. The present writer has examined the 2nd ed. of 1711 (Neu-vermehrtes geistreiches G. R.). The references to the 1st ed. of 1703 are from the markings by Professor Mittel, in a copy of the 1st ed. presented to him by Dr. Bachmann, and now in the possession of the present writer.
WINKLER, Edwin Theodore, D.D., was b. in Savannah, Nov. 13, 1823, and educated at Brown University. He entered the Baptist ministry in 1846, and subsequently filled several important literary and other appointments in addition to his pastorates. He d. at Marion, Alabama, Nov. 16, 1883. He compiled The Sacred Lake, a Collection of popular Hymns, 1855 (enlarged ed., 1890), to which he contributed 8 hymns, the first lines of which are given in Burridge. (Burridge’s Baptist H. Writers, 1888, p. 416.) Some of these have passed into other American collections, including "Our land with mericles crowned." (National Hymn.) [J. J.]

Winkworth, Catherine, daughter of Henry Winkworth, of Alderley Edge, Cheshire, was b. in London, Sep. 13, 1829. Her early life was spent in the neighbourhood of Manchester. Subsequently she removed with the family to Clifton, near Bristol. She d. suddenly of heart disease, at Monnetier, in Savoy, in July, 1878. Miss Winkworth pub.:—

Tr. from the German of the Life of Pastor Fiedler, the Founder of the Sisterhood of Protestant Converts, most of her at Kaiserworth, 1861; and of the Life of Amelia Sisec-king, 1859.

Her sympathy with practical efforts for the benefit of women, and with a pure devotional life, as seen in these tra, received from her the most practical illustration possible in the deep and active interest which she took in educational work in connection with the Clifton Association for the Higher Education of Women, and kindred societies there and elsewhere. Our interest, however, is mainly centred in her hymnological work as embodied in her:—

(1) Lyra Germanica, 1st Ser., 1855. (2) Lyra Germanica, 2nd Ser., 1856. (3) The Chorale Book for England, containing tr. from the German, together with music, 1863; and (4) her charming biographical work, the Christian Singers of Germany, 1869.

In a sympathetic article on Miss Winkworth in the Inquirer of July 20, 1878, Dr. Martineau says:—

"The translations contained in these volumes are invariably faithful, and for the most part both terse and delicate; and an admirable art is applied to the management of complex and difficult versification. They have not quite the fire of John Wesley’s versions of Moravian hymns or the wonderful fusion and reproduction of thought which may be found in Cobbe. But if less flowing they are more concentric than either, and at the same time as poetical, tender, and mellow. Winkworth, as Dr. Martineau admits, being only a little short of ‘native music.’"

Dr. Pереival, then Principal of Clifton College, also wrote concerning her (in the Bristol Times and Mirror), in July, 1878:—

"As a person of remarkable intellectual and social gifts, and very musical and musical, what specially distinguished her was her combination of rare ability and great knowledge with a certain tender and sympathetic refinement which constitutes the special charm of the true womanly character."

Dr. Martineau (as above) says her religious life afforded "a happy example of the piety which the Church of England discipline may implant. . . . The fast hold she retained of her discipline is an example of ‘feminine simplicity,’ carrying on the childish mind into maturity, but the clear allegiance of a firm mind, familiar with the pretensions of non-Christian schools, well able to test them, and undeviated by them from her first love."

Miss Winkworth, although not the earliest of modern translators from the German into English, in all probability the first to render them into English and popularize. Her translations are the most widely used of any from that language, and have had more to do with the modern revival of the English use of German hymns than the versions of any other writer. [J. J.]

Winter reigneth o’er the land. Bp. W. W. How. [Winter.] Written for and first pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 64, and from thence has passed into numerous collections. In a few hymn-books, including Sir Josiah Mason’s Birmingham Orphanage Hymnal, st. iii.—vi. are given as a hymn, "Sunny days are past and gone," but this mutilated text is not popular. [J. J.]

Wir glauben all an einen Gott, Schöpfer Himmels und der Erden. M. Luther. [Nicene Creed.] This very free setting of the Nicene Creed was 1st pub. in the Geistliche gesang Buchlein, Wittenberg, 1524, in 2 vols. as form. of the Reformation period it was generally sung after the Sermon. Luther included it among the Christliche Geseng . . . zum Belehnung, 1542. It had been used at the funeral of the Elector Friedrich the Wise of Saxony, on May 9, 1523, and was often in later times sung before funeral services. Tr. as:—

1. We all one only God believe. By A. T. Russell, for his Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 15.

2. We all believe in One true God, Maker of the earth and heaven, Who hath. By R. Massie, in his Martin Luther’s Spiritual Songs, 1854, p. 59. Repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1890.

3. We all believe in One true God, Maker of the earth and heaven; The Father. By Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, Appx., No. vi. Repeated, recast, by Dr. Bacon, in his Hymn of Martin Luther, 1884, p. 47.

Other tras are:—

(1) "We believe all upon one God." By Bp. Overdale, 1539 (Remains, 1846, p. 346). (2) "We trov in God allanne." In the Guide and Godly Ballater, ed. 1664, folio 6, (1665, p. 9). (3) "We believe we all in our Lord God," as No. 18 in part i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1734. (4) "In One God we all believe." By Miss Fry, 1845, p. 86. (5) "We believe in God the Father." By J. Anderson, 1846, p. 97 (1847, p. 72). (6) "We all believe in God Most High." By Dr. J. Hald, 1853, p. 86. (7) "In One true God we all believe." By Dr. G. Maconald, in the Sunday Magazine, 1867, p. 571. Repeated, altered, in his Hymns, 1876, p. 89. [J. J.]

Wir legen. Herr! in deinem Namen. [Laying the Foundation Stone of a Church.] Included as No. 140 in the Ohio G. B., 1870, in 4 st. of 6 l. entitled, "For the Festival of the Corner Stone laying of Christ’s Church’s name is given. Tr. as:—"In Thy dear name and by Thy favour." in full by C. H. L. Schuette. as No. 126 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl, 1880. [J. M.]

Wir singen dir Immanuel. P. Gerhardt. [Christmas.] Included in the Berlin of
ed. of 1653 of Cruger's Praeis, No. 100, in 16 st. of 4 l. In Ebeling's ed. of Gerhard's Geistliche Andachten, Fünfte Dutz. 1667, No. 52, four st. were added as iv., viii., ix., xvii. The complete text in 20 st. is in Wackernagel's ed. of Gerhard's Geisli. Lieder, No. 10; Bachmann's ed., No. 42, and the Ue. L. S., 1851, No. 58. It is a beautiful hymn of praise to Emmanuel, the longed for by the Fathers and the Prophets.

1. Emmanuel, we sing Thy praise. This tr. of st. i.-iii., v.-vii., xviii.-xx., appeared in the British Magazine, January, 1838, p. 35. Repeated, omitting the tr. of st. xix., and beginning, "Emmanuel, Thy Name we sing," in Kennedy's, 1863.

2. Emmanuel, we sing to Thee. A tr. of st. i.-iii., v., by A. T. Russell, as No. 12 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1846.

3. Emmanuel, to Thee we sing. Of life, &c. A tr. of st. i.-iii., vi., xx., based on the earlier versions, as No. 35 in J. F. Thrupp's Ps. & Hymns, 1853.

4. Thee, O Emmanuel, we praise. A good tr. of st. i.-iii., v.-vii., xviii.-xx., by Miss Cox, contributed to Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 55, and in her own Hymns from Ger., 1864, p. 35. In Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 59, it is in full, and in Felton's Coll. Palestine, 1871, and, beginning, "With all thy saints, Thee, Lord, we sing" (st. ii.), in Boardman's Sel., Philadelphia, 1861.

5. We sing to Thee, Emmanuel. The Prince, &c. A good tr. of st. i.-iii., v.-vii., xviii.-xx., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 28. In her 2nd ed., 1856, p. 24, she added a tr. of st. ix., and thus in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 35. Repeated, abridged, in the Hym. for St. John's, Anglesey, 1870, and Flett's Coll. Palestine, 1871; and, beginning, "With all thy saints, Thee, Lord, we sing" (st. ii.), in Boardman's Sel., Philadelphia, 1861.

6. We sing to Thee, Emmanuel! Thou Prince of Life. A tr. of st. i., ii., xix., xx., signed "F. C. C.," as No. 26 in Dr Pagenscher's Coll., 1864.

Other trs. are: (1) "We sing to Thee, Emmanuel, Thou Prince of Life," &c., as No. 108, in pt. iii., 1744, or the Moravian H. Bk. (1754, pt. i., No. 436). (2) "Emmanuel, to Thee we sing, Thou Prince," &c., by L. E. Schles, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789, No. 45 (1866, No. 45). (3) "Immanuel! Thy praise we sing," by Miss Fryr, 1859, p. 163. (4) "To Thee, Emmanuel, we sing, The Prince," &c., by Miss Manning, 1864, p. 30. (5) "Immanuel! to Thee we sing, Thee Praise," by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 37.

WITH THANKFUL HEARTS

Prel. Ps. & Hymn., 1857, and slightly altered, and omitting st. iii., iv., vii., in Miss Jane E. Leeom's Paraphs. & Hymn. for Congregational Singing, 1833, as pt. i. of No. 64. In the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 503, and Martinuse's Hymns, 1873, No. 122, beginning with st. v. altered, "Come unto me, all ye that

[J. M.]

With thankful hearts our songs we raise. [Holy Baptism.] This hymn is No. 278, in the 4th ed., 1832, of J. Bickersteth's Ps. & Hymns, in 4 st. of 4 l. In common with all the hymns in the collection, it is un-signed, and there is nothing to determine its authorship. It is sometimes attributed to "Bickersteth," but for this ascription we know of no authority whatever. It is in somewhat extensive use in America. [J. J.]

With Thee, Lord, will I walk by day. T. Davis. [Morning.] 1st pub. in his Devotional Verse for a Month, 1855, in 4 st. of 4 l., and based upon the words "When I awake I am still with Thee," Ps. cxxxix. 18. In 1858 it was included, unaltered, in the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, No. 911, and in later editions. When given in the author's Family Hymnal, 1860, and Hymns Old and New, 1864, st. iv. 1.3, "give" was changed to grant. This rendering was repeated in his Annua Sacra, 1877, p. 246, as the authorized text. [J. J.]

With years oppressed, with sorrow worn. Sir R. Grant. [Ps. lexi.] Pub. in his posthumous Sacred Poems, 1889, p. 31, in 5 st. of 6 l. It is in C. U. in its full or abridged form, and also as "Thy mercy heard my infant prayer" (st. ii.).

Wither, George, or Wyther—spelled in both ways by himself, the first usually, the second occasionally, e.g. in Prince Henrie's Obsequies (1612), and erroneously Withers, was b. on June 11th, 1588, at Bentworth, near Alton, Hampshire. He was the only son of George Wither, of Bentworth. His early education was at the Grammar School of Colemore or Colemere, under its celebrated master, John Greaves. After thorough training and discipline here he was entered in 1594 at Magdalen College, Oxford. His tutor was John Warner, subsequently n.d. and Bishop of Rochester. He had only been three years at the University when malicious and ignorant persons persuaded his father that more learning was not required. And so, as he modestly tells us in his Abuses Stript and Whipt (1613), he was withdrawn "without taking any degree" by his father, and was put to, "for the plough," that is, for rustic employment on the paternal estate. This proved utterly ungenial. He is found next at one of the Inns of Chancery, afterwards at Lincoln's Inn, and intimate with William Browne, the poet, of Britania's Pastoral's. His title-pages from 1617 to 1620 self-describe him as "Gentleman," and as "of the Society of Lincoln's Inn" (Fidelia (1617), and 1st Psalme (1620), and Workes (1620)). But Anthony a-Wood informs us:—

"still his gaff after things more smooth and delightful, he would be teach'd, and made himself knowledged (as he had taken several railways therein) by certain specimens of poetry, which being dispersed in several hands, he became shortly after a public author and most admired by some in that age for his quick advancement in that faculty" (Athenae, Oxon. s. a. n.).

How uncritical was this marvellous criticism, will be understood when it is recalled that amongst these "certain specimens" was the Shepherds Hunting under the first form of "A new song of a young man's opinion of the difference between good and bad women" (Teppisin, ad Percy MS.). Prince Henrie's Obsequies (1612), Epithalamia (1612), and his stinging and patriotically outspun Abuses Stript and Whipt. The last drew down upon him the wrath of the monarch (James I.) and nobles, and cast him prisoner into the Marshalsea. Four large editions within a year, and numerous others up to 1622 and continuously onward (exclusive of the reproductions in his Workes) was the answer of the People to the Upper Ten. While in prison he wrote some of the most delicious of his verse. He likewise composed A Satyre to the King (1615). The wisest fool in Christendom was shrewd enough to perceive that it would be safer to make such a subject a friend than an enemy. He had deftly signed the dedication to the king "his Majesty's most loyal Subject, and yet Prisoner in the Marshalsea." It procured him his release. From this time onward he was perpetually printing something, now in verse and now in prose, until the aggregate exceeded a hundred of books and pamphlets. There are several fairly accurate enumerations of them, e.g. British Bibliographer, i. 174-205, 305-32, 417-10; ii. 17-32, 378-91; Sir Egerton Brydges' Censoria and Restituta; Hazlitt's Bibliography (1867). The Spenser Society reprinted a large portion of the Works in prose and verse; but there was really no editing and no annotation. His successive books are the main facts of Wither's life; yet was he an active member of the nation. Spike of his hard usage and imprisonments, he was loyal as any cavalier. When Charles I. proceeded to declare and carry war into his native Scotland against the Covenanters, 1629, George Wither served his Majesty as a captain of horse and quarter-master of his regiment under the Earl of Arundel. How sorrowful the wrong-headedness of the king who compelled such a true man as Wither to forsake him and prefer the kingdom to the king, as many others who with pathetic reluctance became Roundheads! In 1641-2 he sold his hereditary estates and raised a troop of horse for the Parliament, in whose army he was promoted to major. On his colours he carried this motto, Pro Rege, Legi, Graeco. Having been taken now not by the Covenanters, but by a good-humoured j-eat of Sir John Danham it is alleged saved his life, to wit, that "his Majesty really must not hang George Wither, for so long as he lives no one will account him [Sir John] the worst poet in England." He was set free. Not long after he was constituted by the Long Parliament a Justice of Peace in quorum for Hampshire, Surrey, and Essex. This he held for six years, and afterwards was made by Cromwell Major-General of all the horse and foot in the County of Surrey. On the title-page of his Bin Ominis Vatum (1656) in the British Museum there is a contemporary ms. note.
"lately made Master of the Statute Office." At the Restoration he was shamefully dealt with, and, by a vote of the Convention Parliament, committed to Newgate because of his Vex Vulgo—a noble piece of fiery and idiomatic English, and manly pleading for respect to popular rights and liberties. For his Prisoner's Plead humbly offered (1661) he was again imprisoned, this time in the Tower. He married (Aubrey informs us) Elizabeth, eldest daughter of H. Emerson of South Lanark, who, he says, was "a great wit and could write in verse too," and was of the same English Emserons from whom the great American Ralph Waldo Emerson descended. He had issue. He was at liberty when he died on 2nd May, 1667. Aubrey states that he was buried within the east doorway of Savoy Church in the Strand, having apparently lived near it, and either died in the church or in his own house (the phrasing being ambiguous).

This Dictionary is not a fitting place for any detailed criticism of the superabundant writings of George Wither. James Montgomery, in his admirable Lectures on Poets and Poetry, thus sums up his estimate of him and them:

"There are scattered throughout his multifarious and very unequal productions, many passages of great beauty and excellence. He was a soundly Christian poet, though he frequently lost his Christian meekness in the heat of polemics; but his zeal carried with it every evidence of honesty; and he was a sufferer almost to martyrdom, both for his loyalty and orthodoxy, in the troublesome times in which he lived. That he was a poet can never be questioned by any reader who has taste and sensibility enough to understand and enjoy the exquisitely affecting confession of his obligations to the Muse. That he was a Christian will be so little questioned by those who are most extensively acquainted with the character of his religious compositions." (s. n.)

Archbishop Trench, in annotating a charming sacred song entitled Vanished Blessings ("No voice which I did more esteem, Than music in her sweetest key," &c.), thus annotates:

"I have detached these two stanzas from a longer poem of which they constitute the only valuable portion (?). George Wither (a most profound poet of English rhyme, Philips calls him) was indeed so intolerable a power in verse, so overlaid his good with indifferent or bad, that one may easily forget how real a gift he possessed, and sometimes showed that he possessed" (Household Book of English Poetry, 1868).

Mrs. Masson says of him—"he is remembered now-a-days as pre-eminently the Puritan poet, whose irrepressible Muse made herself heard even amid the din of civil war." (Three Centuries of English Poetry, p. 375). She quotes his delightful "Christmas" ("So now is come our joyfulest part"), and "Of Poesy" (which Milton did not disdain to utilize), and his "Shall I, waiting in despair." With reference to the "irrepressible Muse" of Wither, it is a felicitous characterisation however regarded, inasmuch as so "irrepressible" was he that he actually set up the types and printed off at least one of his bulkier books. Wither's contributions to hymnology are to be found chiefly in the following:

1. Exercises Upon the First Psalm. . . . . . . . (1629).
2. The Benediction. (1630).
3. The Statute. (1630).
4. The Psalms. (1631).
5. The Psalms, by Mr. Wither, revised and corrected. (1631).
6. The Psalms, by Mr. Wither, revised and corrected. (1631).

Wohrer kommt mir doch diese Zeit. [Cross and Consolation.] F. Hommel, in his Geistliche Volktälerlese, Leipzig, 1864, p. 147, prints this, in 4 st. of 4 l., from the Nova Sollertia, or Singschule Roman Catholic collection which he describes as "apparently of the second half of the 17th cent." It is tr. as "Why is it that life is no longer sad?" By Miss Winkworth, in her Christian Singers of Germany, 1869, p. 255 (she quotes the first line as "Wohrer denn kommt zu dieser Zeit"). [J. M.]

Wohl dem, der in Gottes Furcht steht. M. Luther. [Ps. cxlvii.] This version of Ps. cxlvii, was 1st pub. in Eyn Enchiridion, Erfurt, 1524, in 5 st. of 4 l., and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 8. Also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 82, in the Unr. L. S., 1851, &c. Being the description of a pious household it was never sung at weddings. Tr. as:—

(1) "Blessed are all that fear the Lord." By H. Cowperdale, 1539 (Remains, 1846, p. 573). He also gives a second version of Ps. cxlvii, 3 st. of 9 l., which contents of course are identical, but in which he makes the version beginning "Wohl dem, der den Herren furchtet," which Wackernagel, iii. p. 553, gives, in 3 st. of 7 l., from the Dürnb erg Enchiridion of 1527.
(2) "Blessed art thou that sit in God's stead." In the Guda and Godde Battalay, ed. 1686, folio 66 (ed. 1668, p. 113).
(3) "Blessed art thou that sit in God's stead." By F. Anderson, 1646, p. 51 (1847, p. 68). "(4) "Blest is the man who walks away." By Dr. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 31. Repeated by Rev. Dr. Bacon. In his Hymn. of M. Luther, 1884. (5) "Happy who in the fear of God." By R. Massie, 1854, p. 51. Repeated by Dr. Bacon, in his Hymn. of M. Luther, 1884. (6) "Happy who in the fear of God." By Dr. G. Macdonald, in the Sunday Magazine, 1867. In his Exotic, 1876, altered and beginning "Happy who in God's fear doth stay." [J. M.]

Wolcott, Samuel, d.d., was b. at South Windsor, Connecticut, July 2, 1813, and educated at Yale College, 1833, and Andover Theological Seminary, 1837. From 1840 to 1842 he was a missionary in Syria. On his return to America he was successively pastor of several Congregational congregations, including Belchestsont, Massachusetts; Providence, Rhode Island; Chicago, &c. He was also, in 1846, the same year Secretary of the Ohio Home Mission Society. He settled at Milton, Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1858. His hymn-writing began late in life, but has extended to more than 200 hymns, many of which are still in use. Those of his hymns which have come into C. U. include:—

2. Christ for the world we sing. Missions. Written Feb. 7, 1849. Its origin is thus recorded by the author:—
The Young Men's Christian Associations of Ohio met in one of our Churches, with their motto, in evergreen letters on the pulpit, 'Christ for the World, and the World for Christ.' This suggested the hymn 'Christ for the world we sing.' It was when on his way home from that service that he composed the hymn. It is in several American collections, including Laudes Domini, 1884, &c.
3. If ever I own Thy voice. Trust and Aspiration. This, his first hymn, was written in 1848, more as an experiment in hymn-writing than anything else. It was pub. in the Rev. Parrus E. Jones's Songs for the New Life. Chicago, 1850, &c. It has been passed into other collections.
4. Peace in thy tents, 0 Israel. Missions. Written May 31, 1881, and included in Laudes Domini, 1888, &c.
11. This house, most holy Lord, is Thine. Opening of a Place of Worship. In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874.

For most of the information given above we are indebted to Duffield's English Hymns, N. Y., 1880. [F. M. B.]

Wolfe, Aaron Roberts, was b. at Menden-ham, New Jersey, Sep. 6, 1821, and educated at Williams College, 1844; and the Union Theological Seminary, New York, 1851. On April 9, 1851, he was licensed by the Third Presbytery of New York. For some time he had charge of a school for young ladies at Tallahassee, Florida; and in 1859 he established "The Hillside Seminary for Young Ladies" at Mount Airy, New Jersey. In 1858 he contributed 7 hymns under the signature "A. R. W." to Hastings's Church Melodies. These are:—

1. A Parting hymn we sing. Close of Holy Com-
2. Draw near, 0 Holy Dove, draw near. Holy Communion, by whom first given."
3. How blest indeed are they. In the Likeness of Christ.
6. Thou Maker of our mortal frame. Chief end of Man.

The most popular of these hymns are Nos. 1, 2, and 3. [F. M. B.]

Wolff, Jakob Gabriel, L.L.D., is of Jakob Wolff, sometime corrector at Greifswald, was b. at Greifswald in 1684. He matriculated, in 1702, at the University of Greifswald, as a student of law. In 1705 went to Halle, where he graduated L.L.D. In 1716 he was appointed extraordinary professor of law at Halle, and afterwards received the title of Hofrath. He resigned his professorship in 1744, and d. at Halle. Aug. 6, 1754 (Koch, iv. 375; Bode, p. 174; the Gris-

Wolff's hymns were mostly written early in life, principally during his student years at Halle. He was in thorough sympathy with the characteristic teachings of the Haile Pietists, and his hymns share in their excel-lences and defects. Some of them are of considerable merit, elegant in style, earnest and glowing in devotion, and have attained considerable popularity in Germany. Nineteen were contributed to Freylinghausen's Neues geistreiches G. B., 1714; and these, with nine others, were included in his autobiography (see No. iv. below).

Those of Wolff's hymns which have passed into English are:—

1. Es ist gewiss ein köstlich Diag. Patience. 1st pub. 1714 as above, No. 411, in 6 st. of 7 l. In the Hannover G. B., 1745, No. 653, with a new st. as st. vii. Tr. as: "It is, indeed, a precious thing," by Miss Montgomery, 1843, p. 59.
2. O wie seelig ist die See. Love to Christ. 1st pub. 1714 as above, No. 418, in 12 st. of 4 l. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1683, No. 1207. The trs. are: (1) "O how happy is the soul," by As. No. 698 in pt. i. of the Moravian B. H., 1754. (2) "O those souls are highly blest." As No. 294 in the Moravian B. H., 1749. In the 1801 and later eds. (1866, No. 296) it begins "Blest are they, supremely blest."
Woodd, Basil, M.A., was born at Richmond in Surrey, Aug. 5, 1760. The influences of his home and of his widowed mother were most salutary, and produced the best results. As a boy he studied under the Rev. T. Clarke, of Chesham Bois, and at seventeen he entered Trinity College, Oxford. Taking Holy Orders in 1783, he was chosen lecturer of St. Peter's Cornhill, in 1784; morning preacher at Bentinek Chapel, Marylebone in 1785, and Rector of Drayton Beauchamp, Buckinghamshire, in 1808. Bentinek Chapel being a proprietary chapel, he purchased the lease in 1793, and held the incumbency, together with the Rectory of Drayton, from 1808 to his death on April 12, 1851. He took a deep interest in the great religious societies, and in the anti-slavery movement. His prose works were not numerous or important. He is associated with hymnody through the publication of the following:

(1.) The Psalms of David, . . . Adapted to the Services of the Church of England, &c., 1794. 2nd ed. 1800. (2.) The Psalms of David and other portions of the Sacred Scriptures arranged according to the Order of the Church of England, for every Sunday in the Year, &c., London: Printed and sold by Watts and Bridge-water, n.d. circa 1810-20. The Preface is signed "B. W.". (3.) A New Metrical Version of the Psalms of David; with an Appendix of select Psalms and Hymns, adapted to the service of the United Church of England and Ireland. . . . By the Rev. Basil Woodd, M.A., &c., London: Printed and sold by E. Bridgewater, 1821. Dedicated to the Bp. of Durham. A portion of the preface of No. 2 was repeated; but the preface as a whole, was more historical than the preceding. With the exception of 4 hymns, and 4 doxologies at the end, this collection is a reprint of No. 2, with a new title-page, a dedication, and an enlarged preface.

Very few of Basil Woodd's hymns and paraphrases of the psalms are now in C. U. The best known is "Hail, Thou Source of every blessing" (p. 480, i.). The rest include:

3. In Thee, O Lord, I trust, My hope is in Thy Name. Ps. xxii. 1794.

Woodford, James Russell, D.D., was b. April 30, 1820, and educated at Merchant Taylors School, and Pembroke College, Cam-Wordsworth, Christopher

his annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, has drawn attention to the similarity between this hymn and the 17th Sequens, in the Verbum Dei, Doctor's Sermons," which, according to Mr. Keble, "probably suggested some of his ideas." It has also a trace of Adam of St. Victor's "Verbi verum substantivi." In his annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, Mr. Biggs has rendered Keble's hymn into Latin as, "(1) Verbum Dei doctor..."

Wordsworth, Christopher, D.D., was b. at Lambeth (of which parish his father was then the rector), Oct. 30, 1807, and was the youngest son of Christopher Wordsworth, afterwards Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Priscilla (née Lloyd) his wife. He was educated at Winchester, where he distinguished himself both as a scholar and as an athlete. In 1826 he matriculated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where his career was an extraordinarily brilliant one. He swept off an unprecedented number of College and University prizes, and in 1830 graduated as Senior Classic in the Classical Tripos, and 14th Senior Optime in the Mathematics Tripos, the First Chancellor's Medal for classical studies, and was elected Fellow of Trinity. He was engaged as classical lecturer in college for some time, and in 1836 was chosen Public Orator for the University. In the same year he was elected Head Master of Harrow School, and in 1838 he married Susan Hatley Freere. During his head-mastership the numbers at Harrow fell off, but he began a great moral reform in the school, and many of his pupils regarded him with enthusiastic admiration. In 1844 he was appointed by Sir Robert Peel to a Canony at Westminster; and in 1848-49 he was Hulmean lecturer at Cambridge. In 1850 he took the small chapter living of Stanford-in-the-Vale cum Goocey, in Berkshire, and for the next nineteen years he passed his time as an exemplary parish priest in this retired spot, with the exception of his four month's stipulated residence each year at Westminster. In 1860 he was elected Bishop of the diocese of Lincoln, which he held for more than fifteen years, resigning it a few months before his death, which took place on March 29th, 1883. As bearing upon his poetical character, it may be noted that he was the nephew of the poet-laureate, William Wordsworth, whom he constantly kept in mind up to the time of the poet's death in 1850, and with whom he kept up a regular and lengthy correspondence. Christopher Wordsworth was a very voluminous writer, his principal works being:

(1) Athena and Attica, 1836; (2) Pompian Inscriptions, 1837; (3) Greek Pictorial and Descriptive, 1839; (4) King Edward VII's Latin Grammar, 1841; (5) Book of Common Prayer, 1842; (6) Thucydides Anglo-cized, 1843; (7) Memoirs of William Wordsworth, 1851; (8) Hippolytus, 1853; (9) Notes at Paris, 1854; (10) Commentary on the Book of Bible, 1855-1870; (11) The Holy Year, 1862; (12) Church History, 1881-1883; many volumes of Sermons, and an enormous amount of Pamphlets, Addresses, Letters, Speeches, on almost every subject in which the interests of the church were concerned, and also on subjects connected with English Church literature.

Of his many works, however, the one which claims notice from the hymnologist's point of view is The Holy Year, which contains hymns, not only for every season of the Church's year, but also for every phase of that season, as indicated in the Book of Common Prayer. Dr. Wordsworth, like the Weisleys, locked upon hymns as the means of stamping permanently upon the memory the great doctrines of the Christian Church. He held it to be "the first duty of a hymn-writer to teach sound doctrine, and thus to save souls." He thought that the materials for English Church hymns should be sought (1) in the Holy Scriptures, (2) in the writings of Christian Antiquity, and (3) in the Poetry of the Ancient Church. Hence he imposed upon himself the strictest limitations in his own compositions. He did not select a subject which seemed to him most adapted for poetical treatment, but felt himself bound to treat impartially every subject, and branch of a subject, that is brought before us in the Church's services, whether of a poetical nature or not. The natural result is that his hymns are of very unequal merit; whether his subject inspired him with poetical thoughts or not, he was bound to deal with it; hence while some of his hymns (such as "Hark! the sound of holy voices," "O, the Conqueror mounts in triumph," etc., "O, day of rest and gladness") are of a high order of excellence, others are prosaic. He was particularly anxious to avoid obscurity, and this quality of his hymns are simple to the verge of baldness. But this extreme simplicity was always intentional, and to those who read between the lines there are many traces of the "ara celans artem". It is somewhat remarkable that though in citing examples of early hymn-writers he almost always refers to those of the Western Church, his own hymns more nearly resemble those of the Eastern, as may be seen by comparing The Holy Year with Dr. Mason Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church translated, with Notes, etc. The reason of this perhaps half-unconscious resemblance is not far to seek. Christopher Wordsworth, like the Greek hymn-writers, drew his inspiration from Holy Scripture, and he loved, as they did, to interpret Holy Scripture mystically. He thought that the dangers to which the Faith of England (especially in regard to the Old Testament) was exposed, arose from the abandonment of the ancient Christian Apostolical and Synodal system of interpretation of the Old Testament for the frigid and servile modern exegesis of the literalists, who see nothing in the Old Testament but a common history, and who read it (as St. Paul says the Jews do) 'with a veil on their heart, which veil (he adds) is done away in Christ.' In the same spirit he sought and found Christ everywhere in the New Testament. The Gospel History was only the history of what "Jesus began to do and teach" on earth; the Acts of the Apostles and all the Epistles were the history of what he continued to do and teach from Heaven; and the Apocalypse (perhaps his favourite book) was "the seal and colophon of all." Naturally he presents this theory, a theory most susceptible of poetical treatment, in his hymns even more prominently than in his other writings. The Greek writers, more or less, assumed the same; hence the resemblance between his hymns and those of the Eastern Church. [J. H. O.]
The Holy Year; or Hymns for Sundays and Holydays, And other occasions. Lond. Rivingtons, 1862.

This work contained an extended Preface; a Calendar of Hymns; 117 Original Compositions; and a Supplement of 82 hymns from other sources. In the 3rd ed., 1863, the Supplement was omitted, and the Original hymns were increased to 127. Several of these hymns are annotated under their respective first lines, the rest in C. U. are:

From The Holy Year, 1st ed., 1862:

1. Five pebbles from the brook. Templest. Stanza ix. added in 1863.

6. How blest are hearts which Christ the Lord, Holy Matrimony. In 1863 in two parts, Pt. ii. being "Bless these Thy servants, gracious Lord."

7. How blessed is the force of prayer. St. Peter. In 1863, in two parts, Pt. i. being "Behold! at hand is Herod's doom."

8. How wondrous and mysterious are. Holy Baptism. In the 1863 ed. it is divided into four parts: Pt. ii. "In Jesus Thou didst sanctify"; Pt. iii. "Thee risen in triumph from the grave"; Pt. iv. "Baptized in Christ we put on Christ." The cento, "By Water and the Holy Ghost," is also from this hymn.

11. Lord, may we never, save to One. Against False Worship. Stanza vii. was added in 1863.

12. Lord not with (by) poor and paltry gifts. Offer.

13. Lord, Who didst the Prophets teach. 2nd S. in Advent, or, Holy Scripture. The doxology was added in 1863.

15. Mankind in Adam fell. Good Friday. In the 1863 ed. it is divided into three parts: Pt. ii. being "We fell by Adam's sin;" and Pt. iii. "Thy Cross a Trophy is."

17. Not gifts of prophecy can save. Self Discipline, or, 4th S. after Trinity.

18. O Jerusalem beloved, joyful mor ris has dawned on Thee. Purification of B. V. M., or, The Presentation. In the 1863 ed. it is divided into two parts, Pt. ii. being "Light the gentile world to lighten, and thy glory Israel."

20. O Son of God, the Eternal Word. The Queen's Accession.

21. Once all the nations were as one. Sabel and Sion a Content.
first appeared in Hymns for those that Seek, and those that have Redemption, &c., 1747, in 6 st. of 10 l. Of these st. i.-iv. and vi. were given in the H. Bk. in 1800. In an edition subsequent to that of 1809, st. iv. was also omitted, and in the revised ed., 1875, this form in 4 st. is retained. Orig. text P. Works, 1868-72, p. 297-91. It is suggested that the "tumult" referred to was that which took place at Wednesday, October 26, 1743. Although this is quite probable it yet lacks certain proof. See G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk., Notes, 1883, p. 211. [J. J.]

Worthy the Lamb for sinners slain. [Praise to Jesus.] This cento appeared in the General Baptist New Hymn Book, edited by the brothers J. B. and J. C. Pike (Baptist Hymnody, p. 113.), in 1851; and was repeated in the Baptist Hymnal, 1879, in 5 st. of 4 l. Of the cento st. i.-ii. are from J. Montgomery's "Sing we the song of those who stand" (p. 1060), i.); and the rest (iii.-v.) are anonymous, The Rev. W. R. Stevenson, editor of the Baptist Hymnal, is strongly inclined to think that these stanzas were by the Rev. J. G. Pike, of Derby (with whom he was co-pastor for some time), who was the father of the brothers Pike named above: but he was not quite satisfied with his authority. [J. J.]

Wrexford, John Reynell, d.d., b. Dec. 12, 1800, educated at Manchester College, York, and in 1826 succeeded the Rev. James Yates as co-pastor to the Rev. John Kentish at the New Meeting, Birmingham. In 1830 he pub. a tr. of Coleridge's Lectures on the Authenticity and Divinity of the Old Testament. In the following year, in consequence of failure of voice, he withdrew from the Ministry, and in conjunction with the Rev. Hugh Hutton, Minister of the Old Meeting, opened a school at Edgbaston. In 1832 he pub. a Sketch of the History of Presbyterian Nonconformity in Birmingham; and in 1837, Laws of Loyalty, in celebration of the Queen's accession. He also contributed, in 1837, to the Rev. J. R. Beard's Coll. Of Hys. for Public and Private Worship 55 hymns, of which the following are still in C. U.:—

1. Lord, while on the ocean, sea, and sky, God seen in His Works. In var. hymn collections, including those by Page Hoppe, G. Dawson, and others.

2. Lord, I believe; Thy power I own. For increase of Faith. In Martinuse's Hymns, 1849.

3. Lord, while for all mankind we pray. National Hymn. This is in a large number of collections of various denominations, and is by far the most popular of his hymns. Sometimes it begins with st. iii., "O guard our火焰 from every foe."

4. When my love to Christ (God) grows weak. Passiontide. In Longfellow and Johnson's Unitarian Hys. of the 18th Century, Boston, U. S. A., 1864. "When my love to God grows weak." This is repeated in Martinuse's Hymns, 1863 (p. 1271, l.).

Dr. Wrexford was also the author of several volumes of verse, chiefly devotional. The latter years of his life he spent in retirement at Bristol, and d. there in 1891. [Y. D. D.]

Wretched, helpless, and distressed. C. Wesley. [Lent.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1742, p. 43, in 8 st. of 8 l., as a second hymn on Rev. iii. 17. In 1780, st. ii. was omitted when the hymn was given in the H. Bk., No. 103, and in the same form it is still retained. Orig. text P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. pp. 92-94. The somewhat peculiar lines:—

"My whole heart is sick of sin, And my whole head is faint" is furnished with this note by Dr. Osborn (P. Works as above). The singular expression of the Prophet's words (Isaiah i. 5) though found in all the editions, must still be regarded as an oversight."

No evidence, however, of its being such is forthcoming, and the revised ed. of the H. Bk., 1875, retains the old reading. [J. J.]

Wright, Philip James, was b. in London, May 1, 1810. He was brought up to the old section of the Methodists, but not agreeing with the form of government he found there, he withdrew, and became a member, and subsequently a minister, with the New Connexion Methodists. After labouring most successfully for several years in various circuits, he d. in 1863. His published works include:—The Study of Creation, 1848; The Way of Salvation, 1848; the Gathered Rose, 1858; Revival Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1860, &c. The Revival Hys., &c., is composed of 91 of his original compositions. Of these a few were included in the New Conn. Hys. for Divine Worship, 1863. "The Lord of glory left His throne" (Redemption), and "Soldiers of the Cross, Servants of the Lord" (Young Men's Societies, are still in C. U. [J. J.]

Wyatt, Henry Herbert, m.a., was educated at Queen's College, Oxford (B.A. 1844, M.A. 1847), and took Holy Orders in 1845. He was travelling secretary for the S. P. G., 1852-66; incumbent of Holy Trinity church, Brighton, 1856-66; principal of the Brighton Training College, 1863-86; and vicar of Bolney, Sussex, 1872-86. In 1886 he became rector of Compton, Ely. Mr. Wyatt has pub. Principal Heresies relating to our Lord's Incarnation, 1881; The Gospel according to St. Matthew, with Explanatory Notes: Use of Teachers in Schools, 1884; and Ps. and Hys. for Public Worship, 1859 (4th ed., 1868). To this Coll. he contributed in 1859 his well known hymn for National Thanksgiving, "God the Lord has [hath] heard our prayer." It is given in several collections, including the P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Trinitarian Hys., 1882, and others. [J. J.]

Wyn, Ellis, the Author of Bardd Cwag, was b. near Harlech, Merionethshire, in the year 1670. He stands unrivalled as a Welsh prose writer. He was induced by Bishop Humphreys to enter Holy Orders, and was ordained deacon and priest on the same day, and on the next presented to the Rectory of Llanfair. He held at the same time the other parishes. In 1703 appeared his admired work, Gweledigathau y Bardd Cwag, or the "Vision of the Sleeping Bard," which in style is one of the most beautiful works written in the Welsh language. In 1710 he was charged by the Bishops of Wales to superintend a new edition of the Book of Common Prayer. His "Emsyn Cophhebrwn" or Funereal Hymn is found in all Welsh hymnals. He d. in July, 1734, and was buried under the communion table in Llanfair Church. [W. G. T.]

Xavier, St. Francis, the great missionary saint of the Roman Catholic Church, was the son of Don John Giasso and Donna Maria d'Azipilueta y Xavier; he was born at the castle of Xavier, near Pamplona, Spain, on April 7, 1506, and is known to history by his mother's name. At the age of eighteen he entered the University of Paris, where in due course he graduated, and then devoted himself to teaching. It was here that he became acquainted with Ignatius Loyola the founder of the Jesuits, who was then planning the colossal work which he afterwards accomplished. Xavier became one of the first nine of Loyola's converts, and the most enthusiastic of the little band. The date of the formation of the Order of the Jesuits is given as Aug. 15, 1534, and the place as Montmartre near Paris. We find Xavier at Venice with Loyola in 1537, where the visitation of a hospital for incurables was assigned to him. Here in the discharge of his duties he gave early evidence of his enthusiasm and self-devotion. He subsequently visited Rome, where with Loyola and others of the Order he was brought, through the influence of the Rector of the University of Paris, who was then at Rome, to the notice of John III. of Portugal, who desired some of them for mission work in India. Circumstances led to the selection of Xavier for the work. He left Rome in March 1540, and set sail on April 7, 1541, for Goa, the chief city of the Portuguese possessions, where he arrived on May 6, 1542. From that time to the day of his death at Sancian, near Canton, on Dec. 22, 1552, he devoted himself to his work in a most heroic and devoted manner, visiting Travancore, Ceylon, Malacca, Japan, and other heathen lands with Cross in hand, and a burning zeal in his heart. Xavier's life has been written by many hands. The roll of deeds which he is said to have done, and the miracles he is said to have wrought, even to the raising of the dead, is long, but many of the alleged facts are open to the gravest doubt, and others are beyond belief. The hymns which are associated with Xavier's name are, "O Deus ego amo Te, Nam prior Tu amasti me" (p. 886, i.), and "O Deus ego amo Te, Nec amo Te ut salves me" (p. 931, ii.). That the first was written by him is most improbable, the evidence in his favour being absolutely nil. The second may possibly be his (see above), it breathes his abnegation of self in every word, his spirit in every line. See Murray's Mag. for Oct. 1890, for an interesting account of Goa and its Cathedral, where Xavier lies buried. [J. J.]

Ye boundless realms of joy. Tate & Brady. [Ps. cxxxiii.] Appeared in the New Version, 1636, in 8 st. of 8 l. It is seldom if ever found in its full form in modern collections, but usually as a cento. The metre, which is now somewhat common, is an imitation of John Pulsn's version of the same and in hearing the word of life and mercy." (Small ed., 1846, p. 191.)

The hymn is in 12 st. of 4 double lines. In the West. H. Bk., 1780, sts. i., ii., viii.-xii. were given as No. 38, and this has become its recognized form in later collections. [J. J.]

Ye principalities and powers. G. Rawson. [Burial.] 1st pub. in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, No. 858, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in the author's Hymns, Verses, &c., 1876, p. 195, and in the Bk. of Hymns, &c., 1845, No. 616, it was given with the omission of st. i., and began "Though tears will fall and hearts are stirred." This form of the text is repeated in later collections. [J. J.]

Ye royal priests of Jesus, rise. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in his Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 137, in 7 st. of 4 l.; again in later editions of the same; and in P. Works of J. & C. Wesley, 1852-53, vol. iii. pp. 319-320. Its use is not extensive. This hymn is one of the most pronounced of C. Wesley's hymns on "The Lord's Supper." It is based on a portion of Dr. Brevini's work on The Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, sect. vi. 2, "Concerning the Sacrament, as it is a Sacrifice. And first, of the commemorative Sacrifice":

"Nevertheless, this sacrifice, which by a real oblation was not to be offered more than once, is by a devout and thankfull commemoration to be offered up every day. This is what the apostle calls, to set forth the death of theLord: to set it forth as well before the eyes of God His Father as before the eyes of men; and what St. Austin expalined, whereby the holy flesh of Jesus was offered in three manners: by preparing sacrifices under the law before His coming into the world, in real deed upon His cross, and by a commemorative Sacriment after He ascended into heaven. All comes to this: (1) That the sacrifice in itself can never be repeated; (2) That nevertheless this Sacrament, by our remembrance, becomes a kind of sacrifice, whereby we present before God the Father that precious oblation of His Son once offered. And thus do we every day offer unto God the meritorious sufferings of our Lord, as the only sure ground whereon God may give, and we obtain, the blessings we pray for," &c. P. Works, 1853-55, vol. iii. p. 203.

It is curious to note how faithfully C. Wesley reproduces Dr. Brevini's views not only of this aspect of the Holy Communion, but also of its faulty administration. It is desirable that all C. Wesley's Hys. on the Lord's Supper be read with the extracts from Dr. Brevini's work, upon which they are based, and with which they are published in the P. Works, as above. [J. J.]

Ye saints! in blest communion. J. S. B. Monnell. [Saints Days, Special and General.] Pub. in his Hys. of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 186, and composed of 5 opening sts. of 8 l. and 4 special days, as St. Andrew, St. Thomas, and others; and a concluding doxology. In this form it was repeated in his Parish Hymnal, 1873, and in both instances directions were given in a note as to the use which might be made of these 28 st. for special festivals. This hymn suggests to me a well-known "From all Thy saints in warfare, for all Thy saints at rest," p. 398, ii. [J. J.]

Ye servants of God, Your Master proclaim. C. Wesley. [Missions.] Pub. in Hys. for Times of Trouble and Persecution, 1744, in 6 st. of 4 l., as No. 1 of "Hymns to be sung in Tumult" (P. Works, 1858-72, vol. iv. p. 51). It is given in its full, or an abbreviated form in several of the older collections, and especially those of the Church of England. In 1830 a cento was included in the Supplement of the West. H. Bk., No. 557, st. i.-v. being from this hymn, and st. vi. from C. Wesley's Funeral Hys., 1746, No. 6, st. v. In the revised ed. of the West. H. Bk., 1875, this last stanza was omitted. [J. J.]

Ye servants of the Lord. Eaoh in his office wait. P. Doddridge. [Christian Activity and Zeal.] Applied in J. Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 210, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The active Christian"; and again in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 234. It is in extensive use, and usually in its original form. Sometimes, however, st. v. 1-3, "And raise that favourite Servant's head," is altered to "And raise that faithful servant's head." [J. J.]

Ye simple souls that stray. C. Wesley (?). [Exhortation.] 1st pub. in Hys. for those that Seek and those that Have Redemption, 1747, in 7 st. of 8 l. In 1780 it was given in the West. H. Bk., No. 79, with considerable alterations, and the omission of st. iii. The authorship of this hymn has been a matter of dispute for many years, some claiming it for John Wesley on the authority of Mr. Henry Moore, and others for Charles on the word of Dr. Whitehead. The work in which it appeared is known to have been pub. by the Coxe brothers, and the contents were unsigned. Under these circumstances the difficulty of determining the authorship is great. There is some probability in the suggestion that it was written by Charles, and that the extensive alterations made therein for the West. H. Bk., in 1780, were the work of other brother. Original text, P. Works, 1858-72, vol. iv. p. 239. [J. J.]

Ye sons of earth, prepare the plough. W. Cooper. [The Sower.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 85, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Sower." It is in several modern collections, but it does not rank in popularity with many of Cowper's hymns. [J. J.]

Ye that pass by, behold the man. C. Wesley. [Good Friday.] 1st pub. in Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1712, in 18 st. of 4 l. and entitled, "A Passion Hymn" (P. Works, 1858-72, vol. ii. p. 70). In the West. H. Bk., 1780, 15 st. were given as No. 24, the omitted st. being ii., iv., and viii. In the 1800 ed. of that collection the hymn is divided into two parts, pt. ii. beginning with "O Thou dear suffering Son of God." Many expressions in the hymn, such as "Give me to feel Thy agonies," and others, have been much criticised from time to time, and this may possibly account for the omission of the hymn from the revised edition of the West. H. Bk., 1875. Both parts, however, are still in use in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Ye that put on the heavenly crown. G. Rawson. [Burial. Eater.] Contributed to the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, in 6 st. of 4 l., No. 856. In 1858 st. iii.-vi. were given as "Glory to Him Who tasted death," in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., No. 273; and have been continued in later editions. The reason of this curtailment of the hymn probably arose from objections to the opening stanzas, and especially to the lines:—

"Breathe in glory, bend ye down,
And aid our faltering hymn."

The abbreviation has however changed a funeral hymn into one for Easter. In 1876 Mr. Rawson republished the full text in his Hymns, with the simple change in st. ii. 1, of "beside" to "to near the grave." [J. J.]

Ye whose hearts are beating high.
J. Kohl. [Palm Sunday.] Given in his Christian Year, 1827, as the Poem for Palm Sunday, in 6 st. of 8 l., and based on St. Luke xix. 40. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 296, it is given in an altered form as "Come, all grateful human hearts." [J. J.]

Ye wretched, hungry, starving poor.
Anne Steele. [The Gospel Feast.] 1st pub. in her Poems Chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i., p. 17, in 7 st. of 4 l. and headed "Longing Souls invited to the Gospel-Feast, Luke xiv. 22." also in the ed. of 1780, and D. Sad- wick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 10. From this hymn the following abbreviated texts and cantos have come into C.U.:—

2. Ye wretched, starving poor. This in the American Church Pastorals, Boston, 1864, is composed of st. i.-iv. rewritten from c.m. into s.m.

3. See, Jesus stands with open arms. In the American Bap. Service of Song, 1871, beginning with st. ii. In the N. Y. Church Prayze Bk., 1882, st. iv. is also omitted.

Through these various forms this hymn is somewhat widely used. [J. J.]

Yes, thou hast drained thy Master's cup. [Conversion of St. Paul.] This cento is in W. J. Blew's Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852-55; and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 120, in 7 st. of 4 l. St. i.-iii. are a tr. from "Sudore sat tuo fides"; and iv.-viii. from "Sal Paulo sat terris datum." Both hymns are by G. de la Brunetiere, in the Paris Breu. of 1689. The trs. are by Mr. Blew. [J. J.]

Yes, God is good! in earth and sky.
[Goodness of God in nature; or, Flower Services.] The history of this popular hymn is somewhat curious and intricate. It is of American origin and came into modern hymn-books in the following manner:—

1. The original hymn appeared in Hymns for Children, Boston, U.S.A., 1825, in 6 st. of 4 l., the opening stanza reading:—

"God is good! each perfumed flower,
The smiling fields, the dark green wood,
The insect fluttering for an hour;
All things proclaim that God is good!"

The editor of this collection is not named. Possibly it may have been Mrs. Follen, the writer of the hymn. The false metre of the opening line (7's instead of 8's) was probably a misprint. In several instances this line has been republished, notwithstanding the clearness of the error. (See p. 380, i. 4.)
appeared in the Protestant Dissenter's Juvenile Magazine, 1833, and again in T.R. Taylor's Morals and Select Remains, 1836, p. 245, in 5 st. of 6 l. It is found in C. U. in its original form; and also rewritten as "Children's voices high in heaven," in the Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 953, and later collections. The rewritten form of the text by Mr. George Rowan, and was made for the Baptist Ps. & Hys., 1856.

Yet a little while: the Lord gave His saint's this precious word.
Lady Campbell, née Malcolm. [Second Advent.]
The first stanza was written early in Nov., and the remaining two on Dec. 26, 1830, and subsequently pub. in litography from the author's ms. It was included in J. G. Dock's Ps. & Hys., London, D. Waitler, 1842. P. i., No. 189; in Walker's Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., 1855; in Harland's Ch. Psalter & Hyl., and others. [J. J.]

Yet there is room! The Lamb's bright hall of song. H. Bonar. [Parable of the Marriage Supper.] This most appropriate hymn for Home Missions appeared in 1875. It has been somewhat widely adopted, and is given in the collections of Hopton, Sandy, and others, and is worthy of this attention. [J. J.]

Yonge, Charlotte Mary, dau. of William Crawley Yonge of the 52nd Regiment, was b. at Otterbourne, Hants, in 1823. Miss Yonge is widely known as the author of The Heir of Redclyffe, The Dairy Chain, and other popular novels; of a series of historical works for the young, including Stories of English History, 1874, Stories of Greek History, 1876, &c.; of The Life of Bishop Patteson; and as the Editor of the Monthly Packet. In 1841 Miss Yonge contributed two hymns to The Child's Christian Year, which was edited by her mother (see below). The hymns are:

(1) "Into Christ's flock we are received (Holy Baptism); (2) "Why lived I not in those blest days?" (St Thomas).

Yonge, Frances Mary, née Bargus, was b. Jan. 13, 1795, was married to William Crawley Yonge of the 52nd Regiment, and d. Sep. 28, 1868. Mrs. Yonge pub. in 1841, The Child's Christian Year, with a Preface by John Keble. The contents are mainly by J. Austene, J. H. Newman, I. Williams, and Mrs. Yonge, with a few hymns by Miss Yonge, Mrs. Mozley, T. Whitehead, J. Keble, and others. Mrs. Yonge's hymns are:

1. Behold a Prophet,—yes, and more, St. John Baptist.
2. His are the cattle on the hills, All things for God.
3. Not only as a sacrifice. Jesus the Example.
4. Put far from us, 0 Lord, we pray. Advent.
5. The Assyrian King in splendour came. Defeat of the Assyrians.

The use of these hymns is limited. [J. J.]

You now must hear my voice no more. W. Robertson. [Ascensiontide.] First appeared as No. 15 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of John xiv, 25-29, in 6 st. of 4 l. and was slightly altered in the revised ed. issued in 1751. In the Draft of 1825 it was included as No. 43, considerably altered, and with st. v., vi. omitted. In the public worship ed. of the Trs. & Paraphs. issued in that year by the Church of Scotland and still in use, st. ii. was re-written, and st. i., 1. 3, 3. iii., 1. 1, were altered from the Draft. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), the original is ascribed to Robertson, and the alterations in 1781 to Cameron. The revised text of 1781 is included in the Eng. Prefab. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and a few other modern hymnals. It is the conclusion of the same passage of Holy Scripture "Peace—it was our Saviour's blessing," No. 73, in Miss Leeson's Paraphs. & Hys. for Cong. Singing, 1833.) [J. M.]

You who dwell above the skies. G. Sandys. [Ps. cxlviii.] This fine rendering of Ps. cxlviii. appeared in his Paraphrase of the Psalms, 1839, and st. i., 1. 3, 3. iii., 1. 1, was re-written in this Paraphrases upon the Divine Poems, 1838, and in later editions. Also in the Library of Old Authors. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, No. 639, it is given in 9 st. of 4 l. as "Ye, who dwell above the skies," where the text is but slightly altered. It is worthy of more extended use than is accorded to it in the modern hymnals. [See Psalters, English, &c.] [J. J.]

You who the Name of Jesus bear. [Humiliation and Exaltation of Christ.] First appeared as No. 7 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of Phil. ii., 6-12, in 7 st. of 4 l. The author is unknown. In the revised ed. issued in 1751, st. iii. vii. were altered, and this form was included, slightly altered, in No. 52 in the Draft of 1781 beginning "Ye who the Name of Jesus bear." In the public worship ed. of the Trs. and Paraphs. issued in that year by the Church of Scotland, and still in use, st. v. was re-written, and st. ii., ii. 2-4, st. vi. 1. 1, the alterations by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron, (p. 200, ii.) the original is ascribed to Isaac Watts (in whose works it is not to be found) and the alterations of 1781 to Cameron. The revised text of 1781 is included in Pratt's Coll., 1829, the Eng. Prefab. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and a few other modern hymnals, beginning "Hence God this glorious love to men," were included, with an added doxology, in the Twickenham Chapel Coll., 1845, p. 58. In Miss Leeson's Paraph. and Hys. for Cong. Singing, 1855, it is slightly altered as pt. i. of No. 81; her pt. ii., beginning "Hail, name of Jesus' glorious name," being paraphrased from "All hail the power of Jesus' name." [J. M.]

Young, Andrew, second s. of David Young, for more than fifty years a most efficient teacher in Edinburgh, was b. at Edinburgh, April 28, 1807. After passing through a distinguished eight years' literary and theological course at the University of Edinburgh, he was appointed in 1830, by the Town Councill, Head Master of Niddrie High School, Edinburgh, where he began with 80 pupils, and left with the total at 600. In 1840 he became Head English Master of Madras College, St. Andrews, where he was equally successful. He retired from St. Andrews in 1873, and lived in Edinburgh, where he was for some time the Secretary of the Greenside Parish Sabbath School. He d. Nov. 30, 1889. Many of Mr Young's hymns and poems were contributed to periodicals. A collected edition of these was pub. in 1876, as The Scottish Highlands and Other Poems. His poems entitle him to rank in the first order of Scottish minor poets. Some of his hymns are very sweet. His "There is a happy land" (q. v.) has attained great popularity. [J. M.]

Young children once to Jesus came.

Jane Taylor. [Christ receiving little children.]

This hymn was given in the 1st ed. of Hymns for Infant Minds, 1810, as "As infants once to Christ were brought." In the 4th ed., 1812, the opening line was altered to "Young children once to Jesus came," and this is repeated in the revised ed. of 1886. It is in 6 st. of 4 l. and based upon the words "Suffer little children to come unto me." It is given in several modern collections for children. [J. J.]

Your harps, ye trembling saints.

A. M. Toplady. [Encouragement to Believers.]

Printed in the Gospel Magazine, Feb. 1772, in 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "Weak Believers Encouraged." It was included in his Hymns on Sacred Subjects, &c., London, W. H. Collingridge, 1856; and in D. Selkirk's ed. of his Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1860. Several abbreviated forms of the text, all beginning with the original first line, are in C. U. in G. Britain and America. There is also in American use a cento beginning "Through unruffled seas," in 4 st. of 4 l., of which st. ii.–iv. are from this hymn, and stanza i. is by another hand. It is given in the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, the Lawes Domini, 1884, and others. [J. J.]

Zage nicht wenn sich der Himmel.

[Cross and Consolation.] Included in J. Köhner's Christliche Harfentöne, Hamburg, 1840, p. 150, in 6 st. of 4 l., entitled "Guidance." No author's name is given. The tr. in C. U. is "Tremble not, though darkly gather." A good tr. expanding st. ii. as ii., ili., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1st ser., 1854, p. 19 (1884, p. 24). Included in Gillilan's Sel., Dundee, 1875, No. 51. [J. M.]

Zeller, Christian Heinrich, s. of Christian David Zeller, Hofrat at Hohenentrigen, near Tübingen, was b. at Hohenentrigen, March 29, 1779. He matriculated at the University of Tübingen in 1797, as a student of law. After completing his studies he chose, however, the profession of teaching. He became director of the Latin School at Zöllingen, Switzerland, in 1809, and finally removed in April, 1820, to Beuggen on the Rhine (Baden), near Basel, as director of the newly founded Institution there, meant for the education of poor children and for the training of teachers for poor children. He d. at Beuggen, May 18, 1860 (Koch, viii. 188, &c.).

Zeller was best known as an educationist, and in connection with the working of the Institution at Beuggen. His hymns, which are simple, Scriptural and earnest, were written primarily for use at Beuggen, and mostly appeared in the Montabebatt (begin in 1828), and other publications of the Institution. They came into notice...
ZINZENDORF, NICOLAUS I. 1301

ZINZENDORF, Nicolaus Ludwig, Count von, was b. at Dresden, May 26, 1700; was educated at the Paedagogium at Halle (1710-1716), and at the University of Wittenberg (1716-1719); became Hof- und Justizrat at the Saxon court at Dresden in the autumn of 1721; received a license to preach from the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen in 1734; was consecrated Bishop of the Moravian Brethren's Unity at Berlin, May 10, 1737; and d. at Herrnhut, May 9, 1760.

An adequate sketch of the life and labours of this remarkable man would far exceed the limits of our space. The details of his life are fully given in his Leben, by A. G. Spenenberg, 8 vols., Barby, 1772-75 (English version, abridged, by Samuel Jackson, London, 1836); and good sketches, with references to the fuller biographies, will be found in Koch, v. 248, Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie, xvi. 513, &c. The English reader may also consult T. Kübler's Hist. Notes to the Lyra Germanica, 1865, p. 107; Josiah Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 160; Miss Winkwirth's Christian Singers of Germany, 1889, p. 305, &c. It is impossible to speak of Zinzendorf apart from the religious Communion of which he was the Second Founder; and accordingly an account of his life and labours is given in this Dictionary in the article Moravian Hymnody (see pp. 763-769).

Zinzendorf's first hymn was written at Halle in 1712, and his last at Herrnhut, May 4, 1760. Between these dates he wrote more than 2000 hymns. He himself published an edition of his poems as his Teutsche Gedichte at Herrnhut, 1733 (2nd ed., Barby, 1766), but this only contains 128 hymns. The fullest representation of them is in Albert Knapp's

ZINZENDORF, Nicolaus Ludwig, Count von, was b. at Dresden, May 26, 1700; was educated at the Paedagogium at Halle (1710–1716), and at the University of Wittenberg (1716–1719); became Hof- und Justizrat at the Saxon court at Dresden in the autumn of 1721; received a license to preach from the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen in 1734; was consecrated Bishop of the Moravian Brethren's Unity at Berlin, May 10, 1737; and d. at Herrnhut, May 9, 1760.

An adequate sketch of the life and labours of this remarkable man would far exceed the limits of our space. The details of his life are fully given in his Leben, by A. G. Spanenberg, 8 vols., Barby, 1772–75 (English version, abridged, by Samuel Jackson, London, 1836); and good sketches, with references to the fuller biographies, will be found in Koch, v. 248, Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie, xvi. 513, &c. The English reader may also consult T. Kübler's Hist. Notes to the Lyra Germanica, 1865, p. 107; Josiah Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 160; Miss Winkwirth's Christian Singers of Germany, 1889, p. 305, &c. It is impossible to speak of Zinzendorf apart from the religious Communion of which he was the Second Founder; and accordingly an account of his life and labours is given in this Dictionary in the article Moravian Hymnody (see pp. 763–769).

Zinzendorf's first hymn was written at Halle in 1712, and his last at Herrnhut, May 4, 1760. Between these dates he wrote more than 2000 hymns. He himself published an edition of his poems as his Teutsche Gedichte at Herrnhut, 1733 (2nd ed., Barby, 1766), but this only contains 128 hymns. The fullest representation of them is in Albert Knapp's Geistliche Gedichte des Grafen von Zinzendorf, pub. at Stuttgart in 1845 (hereafter, in this article, referred to as Knapp, 1845). This contains 770 pieces, arranged in three books, with an introduction and a biographical sketch by Knapp.

In preparing this edition Knapp had access to much unpublished material in the archives at Herrnhut, and found there many of the hymns in Zinzendorf's autograph. But too much of the labour he bestowed thereon was spent in endeavouring, not so much to reconstruct the text from the original sources, as to modernize it. In various instances the hymns are altogether rewritten, so that the form in which they appear is not that in which, as a matter of fact, Zinzendorf did write them, but that in which he might have written them had he been Albert Knapp, and lived in the year of grace 1845. So much is this the case, that comparatively few of the hymns are given in Knapp's ed. in their original form. If not altered they are often either abridged or else combined with others.

The keynotes of Zinzendorf's hymns, and of his religious character, was a deep and earnest personal devotion to and fellowship with the crucified Saviour. This is seen even in his worst pieces, where there is his perverted fervour that leads him into objectionable familiarity with sacred things both in thought and in expression. If his self-restraint had been equal to his imaginative and productive powers, he would have ranked as one of the greatest German hymn-writers. As it is, most even of his best pieces err in some way or other, for if they are reverent and in good taste, they are apt to lack concentration and to be far too diffuse. His best hymns, and those which have been most popular in German and English beyond the Moravian connection, are those of the period prior to 1734. Among the characteristically Moravian hymns of the period 1734 to 1742 there are also various noble pieces. The later productions, especially from 1743 to 1750, are as a rule one-sided, unreal, and exaggerated in sentiment, and debased in style; exemplifying a tendency inherited from Schelle (see p. 1006, I.), and suffered to run to riot. Without doubt he wrote too much (especially considering the limited range of subjects treated of in his hymns), and gave too little care to revision and condensation. Yet many of his hymns are worthy of note, and are distinguished by a certain noble simplicity, true sweetness, lyric grace, unshaken faith in the reconciling grace of Christ, entire self-consecration, willingness to spend and be spent in the Master's service, and fervent brotherly love.

The hymnbooks in which Zinzendorf's productions mainly appeared, or with which they have been associated, are described at length at pp. 767, 768. The more important may for convenience be briefly noted here, as follows:

1. Sammlung geistlicher und lieblicher Lieder, Leipzig, 1728, with 889 hymns. The 2nd ed., was published circa 1734, and contains an Anhang with Nos. 980-1078 (Berlin Library, Ed. 2017); while some copies have a Zusatz with Nos. 1079-1149 (Berlin, Ed. 2016), and others have also an Andere Zugabe, circa 1730, with hymns 1-44, bound up with them (Berlin, Ed. 2014, and Brit. Mus.). The 3rd ed., with 1416 hymns in all, was published at Görlitz in 1731. A copy of this, now in the Hamburg Library, has bound up with it a Nachlese einiger geistlicher Lieder, dated 1733.

2. Herrnhut G. B. 1758 (Das Gesang-Buch der Gemeine in Herrnhuth) with its various Anhange and Zugaben up to 1749.

4. Bruder G. B. 1778 (Gesangbuch zum Gebrauch der evangelischen Brudergemeinen) pub. at London in 1778.

Zinzendorf's hymns passed into German non-Moravian use mainly through the Ebersdorff G. B., 1742 (Evangelisches Gesangbuch in einen hinlänglichen Auszug der Alten, Neuen und Neuesten Lieder, &c.), and in recent times through Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1857-1865. Comparatively few are found in non-Moravian English hymnbooks prior to 1840, save in the versions made by John Wesley. The translations made by the English Moravians have been very little used by others,
On his wife's 25th birthday (she was b. Nov. 7, 1790, see p. 789, l.), and with the note, "This poem was written for the birthday feast of her Lordship, Mrs. Henrietta von Hessen, a company or coterie of friends, or, as member of which was indicated according to their circumstances at the time." It had previous copies of all the stanzas, and this form, which begins, "Hiera, der gött-lichen Natur," is noted at p. 517.

My all things more than earth and sky. This is a tr. of st. vi., by C. G. Clemens, as No. 396 in the Moravian H. B., 1794. In 1801 altered to "My all in all, my faithful Friend," and this to in 1836, trs. of st. vii., v.-ix., by F. Latrobe, were added (1806, No. 399). From this form a cusita in st. of L., beginning, "O Lord! Thou art my rock, my guide," was included in Dr. Martin von Hesse, 1844.

xv. Ein hoh berufene Mihe. Christian Church. Written in Is. 117 (Knapp, 1845, p. 232, as Du gesehn und auch heute). 1st pub. in Appx. viii., circa 1730, to the Herrnhut G. B., as No. 1183, in 1 st. of 1 l., entitled, "Hymn of the Witnesses." In the Bruder G. R., 1778, st. li. is given as No. 1042. Tr. as:

Jesus Christ, most holy. This is a tr. of st. of tr. of st. ly. by C. G. Clemens, as No. 457 in the Moravian H. B., 1794 (1845, No. 867), beginning, "Lord Jesus Christ, of Spurgeon's," included in No. 506. It is a "I am indebted for this to the kindness of the translator. Repeated in S. D. Major's Book of Praise for Hymn, 1852, p. 424.

I. A little child you see. By C. Knichen, as No. 49 in the Moravian H. B., 1742. This form is followed in G. S. T. A. J. M. C. G. (1754, p. 454). In the Moravian H. B., 1794, it begins with st. vi., "Thou, gracious Saviour, for my good;" and this form altered to, "in Aeternitatem in the Lyra Evangelica, 1794, as No. 1369, in 9 st. 4 l. In the Bruder G. R., 1778, No. 321. Tr. as:

Sinners, come the Saviour's peace. This is a full and tr. by C. Knichen, as No. 120, in the Moravian H. B., 1794. Of this st. 11. are included in Spurgeon's O. G. H. B., 1846. The first two lines are tr. as (1) "Are you formed a creature now" (st. vi.). In the Lyra Evangelica, 1794, as No. 513, in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, as (2) "Rise, go forth to meet the Lamb" (st. vi. alt.). In J. A. Latrobe's H. B. (1841, No. 305).

xii. Kreus und Lohn besserner Ringer. The Restitutes. Founded on St. Matt. v. 3-12. In his Teutsche Gedichte, 1728, p. 41, dated, Sept. 7, 1722 (his marriage day), and entitled, "Thoughts on my own marriage," 1st pub. as No. 706 in the Sammlung, 1725, in 11 st. 121. In Knapp, 1845, p. 30. In the Bruder G. R., 1778, No. 513, beginning, "Jesus, der du es bist," Tr. as:

Jesus! Lord so great and glorious. This, omitting st. xiv., xxv., is No. 226 in pt. ii. of the Moravian H. B., 1754 (1845, No. 799, as "Jesus, Lord most great and glorious") in the Lyra Evangelica, 1794, No. 513, in the Moravian H. B., 1794, was included in the Zinzendorf Hospital G. B., 1848. It should begin with lieben Glücker of Christian G. The composer of the Christian Composition. Written in 1731 (Knapp, 1845, p. 212). 1st pub. in the 3rd ed., 1731, of the Sammlung as No. 1416 in 11 st. 212. Also in the bruder G. R., 1778, No. 456. Tr. as:

I. Friends in Jesus, now draw near. This is a free tr. of st. xxv., in "Christlichen G. H. B.," by Miss Bortwick, in H. L. L., 4th sec., 1845, as No. 77, in the German being quoted as "Komit kunem, ihr lieben Glücker im Himel," in "Christlichen G. H. B.," and in E. Stryker's Lyra Evangelica, 1863, p. 31, and abridged in G. S. B. L. E. H. (1847, No. 490, and Warr. in 1876, No. 451.

xxx. A new approach to the table. This is No. 556 in the Moravian H. B., 1794 (1846, No. 945).
Hymns not in English C. U.:

xxi. Auf, auf, se ist gesehen. Holy Communion. This is No. 166 in the Sammlung, 1725, in 12 st. of 4 l., and in the Tütsche Gesche, 1735, p. 2. In the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1188 it begins, "Ich eil in Jesu Armen" (4 st. being added, and st. viii., xi. omitted), and in the Hst. Nachrichti theo et. (ed. 1851, p. 181) is marked as written on the occasion of his first communion in 1714. In Knapp, 1845, p. 6, it begins, "heil ja, es ist gesehen. Tr. as "Happy, happy hour of grace." By L. T. Nyberg, of st. i., ii., No. 593 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1879, (No. 1912; repeated in C. H. Baten's Omp. Poesie, 1846.

B. as No. 1856, in 16 st. of 4 l. entitled, "Hymn for the ship's company, February 1743." Written during a stormy passage from America to Germany. In Knapp, 1845, p. 164. The tr. are: (1) "Our ship upon the surging sea." In the British Herald, Aug., 1846, p. 313, repeated in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. (2) "Our little bark, it rocks itself." In L. Reinhous's Church of Sea, 1869, p. 18.

xxiv. Die Christen gehn von Ort zu Ort. Burial of the dead. In the Tütsche Gesche, 1735, p. 113, as part of No. 45, which is entitled "Over the grave of the grandmother" (Henriette Catharina von Germshoff. She d. March 6, 1726), and dated March 1726. The hymn itself is entitled, "Air after the funeral rites." It had appeared in the Anders Zögale, circa 1738, to the Sammung, as No. 6 (ed. 1731, No. 1246), in 3 st. of 4 l. entitled, "Funeral Hymn." In Knapp, 1845, p. 72, and in the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1701. The tr. are: (1) "Believers go from place to place." By Dr. J. Hunt in his Spirituals of Martin Luther, 1853, p. 146. (2) "Through scenes of woe, from place to place." By Dr. G. Walker, 1864, p. 50. (3) "From place to place the Christian goes." By J. J. Burns in his Memoir & Remains, 1869, p. 263. (4) "From land to land the Christian goes." By J. D. Burns in the Moravian H. Bk., 1846.

xxv. Du innig geliebter Raiser der Bänder. Readiness to serve Christ. Written in 1735 (Knapp, 1845, p. 222), 1st pub. in Appx. iv., circa 1737, to the Herrnkat G. B., as No. 1900, and in 6 st. of 4 l. In the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1335, Tr. as "Sinners Redeemer whom we love," This is a st. of 11 l. in, v., v., by C. Kinchen, as No. 121 in the Moravian H. Bk., 121. In the 1799 and later eds. (1864, No. 861), it begins, "Sinners Redeemer, gracious Lamb of God." The text of 1742, slightly altered, is No. 206 in Lady Huntington's Select., 1790.

xxviii. Ich bitte dich, herrliches Gottes-Lamm! Love to Christ. Written in Oct. 1741 (Knapp, 1845, p. 132, as "Ein selig Herz flißt dieser Sprach." 1st pub. in Appx. xi., circa 1743, to the Herrnkat G. B., as No. 1724, and in 12 st. of 5 l. In the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 704, it begins, with st. ii., altered to "Ein selig Herz flißt dieser Sprach." Tr. as "Whens heavenward my best affections move." By Miss Borthwick (from the 1778), dated April, 1861, in the Family Treasury, 1861, p. 228, in the H. L. B., 4th ser., 1842, p. 60 (1844, p. 222), altered to "When I turn to heaven's

ZION STANDS BY HILLS

XXVI. Vor seinen Augen schweben. Living to Christ. [Prussian Gedichte, 1737, p. 94. ]
"Enoch's Life," and dated 1731. 1st pub. in the 3rd ed., 1731, of the Sammlung, as No. 498, in 5 st. of 4 l., as a hymn of praise. In the 1737 (1806. ed.) it is No. 216, it begins "Vor Bruthaus Augen," and in the Bruder G. B., 1774, No. 1557, it begins "Vor Jesu Augen." It was set by Eberhard, whose sister (see Nos. xil., xiv. above) became Zimmermann's wife in 1722. In Annoij, 1844, p. 100. The text at the last of the Berlin L. Z., ed. 1848, is No. 1109.
In Knapp's L. Z., 1855, No. 1352, dated Sept. 1731. Tr., as "beneath the eye of Jesus." In the British Hymn, May, 1846, p. 261, and in Bevis Praise S., 1872.

ZION stands by hills surrounded.
T. Kelly. [The Security of the Church.] 1st pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1806, in 5 st. of 6 l. (ed. 1853, No. 136). It is in C. U. in its full form, and also in centos, as:

1. Every human tie may perish. This cento, beginning with st. ii., is given in Wackenroder's collection.
2. On the Rock of Ages founded. In the 1841 Supplement to the New Comp., No. 1216, is st. 1, ii., iv. written.
3. Zion stands by hills surrounded. This slightly altered text is in a few American hymn-books.

Taking the original text and these centos together, it is found that the use of this hymn is somewhat extensive. It is based on Ps. cxxv., 2, and is a vigorous hymn on the Security of the Church of Christ.

Ζωμήρια τρικυλία. St. Anatolius [Christ Stillling the Tempert.] The Very Rev. S. G. Hatherly, in his ed. of Dr. Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1882 (4th ed.) says:

"These Stichera are not in use in the Church Service. They are probably taken by Dr. Neale from the work of some German antiquarian. Sundays of the First Tone at the Lord's Supper, and the Second, the 23rd, 10th, and every eighth Sunday after Pentecost until the Sunday next after Easter." It is more probable, however, that Dr. Neale got his text from the "dateless Constantinopolitan book" from whence he said he got his "Art. Jesus Christi non Schmorti" (see above) in that he secured it "from the work of some German antiquarian." Dr. Neale's text, "Fierce was the wild billow," was pub. in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed "Stichera for a Sunday of the First Tone." It was included in the Parish B. H., 1863; and subseqently in American collections in G. Britain and America. In some hymnals it reads, "Fierce is the wild billow was," and in others "Fierce was the Galilee," but Neale's text is that which is most extensively known.

Zwick, Johann, s. of Conrad Zwick, Rathsherr at Constatz, was b. at Constatz, on Nov. 24, 1496. He studied law at the Universities of Basle, Freiburg, Paris, and Padua (where he graduated M. D., 1513, and was made M. B., 1517), and was appointed tutor in law at Freiburg and at Basel. In 1518 he entered the priesthood, and in 1522 was appointed parish priest of Riedlingen on the Upper Danube. Being accused of Lutheran tendencics, he was forbidden in 1523 to officiate, and in 1525 his living was revoked. He then formally took refuge in Switz. and was appointed by the Council in 1527 as one of the town preachers. Here he laboured unwearyed, caring specially for the children, the poor, and the refugees, till 1542. In Aug. 1542, the people of Bischofszell, in Thurgau, having lost their pastor by the pestilence before, invited him to send them a preacher; and Zwick, proceeding there, preached and visited the sick till he himself fell a victim to the pestilence, and d. there Oct. 23, 1542 (Koch, ii., 76; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xvii. 578, &c.).

Zwick was one of the leaders of the Swiss Reformation. He ranks next to Blaurer as the most important of the early hymn-writers of the Reformed Church. His hymns are collected in Wackenargel, iii., Nos. 672-694. The best ed. is in B. G. L., 1858, p. 45 (1884, p. 211). [See also Appendix] [*].

Zyma vetus expurgetur. Adam of St. Victor. [Easter.] Gautier, in his ed. of Adam's Oeuvres poétiques, 1881, p. 42, gives this from a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 14522), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (B. N. No. 15015), and a Missal of St. Genevieve, c. 1292. It is also found in an early 14th cent. Paris Missal in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 146 b); in a Sarum Missal, c. 1370, and a York Missal, c. 1390, both in the Bodleian; in a St. Gall ms. No. 383, of the 15th or 14th cent., &c. The printed text given with full notes in Trench, ed. 1804, p. 165; also in Daniel ii., p. 69; Kehrlein, No. 91; D. S. Wrangham's The Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, i. p. 80, and others. Of this grand sequence Clicheovae says with accuracy:—

"The wonderful mysteries of the Resurrection of our Lord are here set forth in the Old Testament by many types, and through the goodness of God explained more clearly to us in the New. And of a truth this whole passage, both in the Hebrew and in the few words, and all distincty taken from the Sacred Scriptures."

In this eulogy Abp. Trench agrees. The explanation of the Scriptural allusions is given by Abp. Trench, Dr. Neale in his Med. Hys., and Mr. Wrangham in his Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor. In the Sarum use this was the Sequence on Monday in Easter Week; Paris on the Tuesday; York on the Friday; St. Victor and St. Genevieve on the octave of Easter.

The trs. of this Sequence include:

1. Purge out the ancient leaven. By J. M. Neale, in his Mediaeval Hys., &c., 1851, p. 88, in 13 st. of 6 l., the text used being that in Daniel ii., 69. Interesting notes are added explanatory of various and in some cases obscure references in the sequence to figures applied by the early Fathers to Christ and His holy work; and also of the typical teaching of certain historical events recorded by the early Fathers, referred to in the sequence as

1. Purge out the leaven, Plumptre, made for the Sarum in 1872, in two parts, some stanzas to be sung at the opening of the service, begin "Shadows ... Publican", and the obscure parts of the liturgy referred to in the sequence as

Other trs. are:
1. Purge the old leaven, Pearson in his Sequences, 1881.

2. Purge the old leaven, 1871.

3. Purge away the old leaven, 1881.

4. Purge away the old leaven, 1881.

At length, after a long journey, the speaker arrived in the town where he was to perform his duties. He found the place to be much larger and more elegant than he had expected. A large number of people had gathered to welcome him, and the town was full of excitement and joy. The speaker was deeply touched by the kindness of the people, and he determined to do all in his power to merit their esteem and support. He addressed the assembly in a clear and impressively solemn manner, and the effect of his speech was highly gratifying. The...

APPENDIX.

PARTS I. AND II.

SUPPLEMENTAL INDICES.
APPENDIX.

The ten years which have elapsed since the first pages of this Dictionary were sent to press have seen many changes and developments in hymnological history and research. Old statements and conclusions have been retested, and in some instances overthrown, and new hymnbooks and hymnological works have been published. Many hymn writers have passed away, and new authors have come to the front. These causes, together with the late arrival of a few leading articles have necessitated this Appendix, which we now give in two parts: Part I. containing these articles, and Part II. those of less importance, together with notes on, corrections of, and additions to the annotations already in the Dictionary. Each Part is arranged in alphabetical order.

APPENDIX.—PART I.

American Hymnody. Additional.

Dutch Hymnody.

England Hymnody, Church of.

Hymn-Book of the Evangelical Association, Cleveland, Ohio, 1881.

The 170 authors and translators are fairly representative of the Christian Church; the selection of hymns, of the Christian point of view, good; and the theology is decidedly Evangelical.

4. Laudes Domini. A Selection of Spiritual Songs. Ancient and Modern. The Century Co., N.Y., 1894. This new edition contains 1109 hymns, including the "Te Deum" and other psalms in prose, the "Te Deum" and other hymns from the Prayer Book, doxologies, tunes, and hymns from the ancient and modern of the Church of England. The tone is bright and joyous, and its literary excellence is outstanding. Amongst the standard American hymn-books of the same ecclesiastical and doctrinal character, we know few to equal it as a popular manual for divine worship.

5. Hymns of the Faith, with Psalms, for the Use of Conferences. Edited by G. Harris, D.D., W. J. Tucker, D.D., and E. K. Gleason, M.A., Boston and N.Y., 1887. The editors inform us that "the order of topical arrangement is determined by the Apostles’ Creed, which has suggested the title of the book, and has also determined the proportion of the various parts." They also say that it is not a revision of some existing book with better tunes of the modern school introduced here and there, but is a fresh work from beginning to end. To accomplish the desired end upwards of 260 authors and translators are requisitioned representing most branches of the Christian Church. The selection and arrangement of the hymns from a non-episcopal standpoint, are excellent. The "Selection of Psalms" from the Authorized Version, and the indices are of the usual character. This is a valuable collection.

6. Songs of Pilgrimage. A Hymnal for the Churches of Christ. By H. L. Hastings. Boston, 1889. This complete edition contains 1532 hymns by over 400 authors and translators, and gathered from about 20 nationalities. It is furnished with a long introduction and several indices. Tunes also accompany the hymns. Of the hymns some 450 are original or re-written hymns by the Compiler, a proportion by one hand, and that by no means the best, sufficient in itself to render the book a failure. The collection is huge, cumbrous, and unwieldy.

7. Church Song for the Use of The House of God. Prepared by McIlrath & Webster. N.Y., 1895. This contains 844 hymns by nearly 360 authors and translators. The hymns are arranged mainly in the order of subjects, and are taken to a great extent from well known writers. It is a sound, solid book, with a strong dash of the editor's personality.
The historical and critical works published since we went to press, include:—

1. Hymn Studies. An Illustrated and Annotated edition of the Hymnal of the Methodist Episcopal Church. By Rev. Charles S. Nutter, N. Y., 1884. In this the hymns are printed as in the Hymnal, and the Notes, although very short, are carefully written, and generally very accurate. As an annotated hymnal it is very valuable.

2. The Poets of the Church. A series of Biographical Sketches of Hymn-Writers, with Notes on their Hymns. By Edwin F. Hatfield, D.D. N. Y., 1884. There are about 300 biographical sketches, with short notes, all well-written, and, on the whole, accurate in detail.

3. English Hymns, Their Authors and History. By Samuel Willoughby Buftield. 2d ed. revised and corrected, N. Y., 1886. This is mainly a biographical and critical hand-book to Dr. Robinson's Laudes Domini (noted above). It is a very readable and reliable work.

4. Baptist Hymn-Writers and their Hymns. By Henry S. Burrough, D.D. Portland, Maine, 1888. This is a most exhaustive work on the Baptist hymn-writers from the beginning of the Baptist movement to the present time. All nations where Baptists have been located are included. The work is very complete in its range and is well done. It is strictly denominational, and, as such, is unique of its kind.

5. The Latin Hymn-Writers and their Hymns. By the late Samuel Willoughby Buftield. 2d ed. revised and corrected by Prof. R. B. Thompson, D.D. N. Y., 1888. This is the most complete and popular account of Latin hymn-writers and their hymns which has been published to date (1888) in the English language. Some of its most important statements and conclusions are, however, certainly most erroneous and misleading. This arose mainly from the fact that Mr. Buftield was unable to consult the ms. in the English, French, and German libraries. He was also too dogmatic and self-opinionated to be an accurate and discriminating critic.

The position thus taken by America in hymnological work during the past ten years is exceedingly creditable to her hymnological students, and surpasses every other English-speaking country.

Butler, Henry Montagu, D.D., was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and graduated B.A. as Senior Classic in 1855, and became a Fellow of his college in 1855. Taking Holy Orders in 1859, he became Head Master of Harrow School in 1859. This position he held until 1885, when he was preferred to the Deaneary of Gloucester. He held the deanery for a short time only, and became Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, on the death of Dr. W. H. Thompson in 1886. Dr. Butler has also held the important appointments of Hon. Chaplain to the Queen; Examining Chaplain to Archbishops Tait and Benson; Select Preacher at Oxford, 1882; and Prebend of Holborn in St. Paul's Cathedral. Dr. Butler edited the 3rd ed. of Hymn for the Chapel of Harrow School, 1865, and the 4th ed., 1881. (Public School B. Bks., pp. 937—939, where an add 4th ed., 1881,) To the Harrow H. Bk. Dr. Butler contributed:—

1. Art thou the Healer that should come. St. John Baptist.
3. Jesus died for us and rose again. Death and Burial.
6. Rejoice to-day with one accord. Founder's Day.
7. The night of agony hath passed. Good Friday.
8. Where shall we find our mightiest saint? St. Paul.

Of these Nos. 2 and 3 were given in the 3rd ed. of the Harrow H. Bk., 1865, and the rest were added in 1881. Nos. 3, 5, 6 and 8 are also in Hymn for the Use of Sherborne School, 1888, Nos. 5 and 6 being much altered. Dr. Butler's hymns are very lyrical and spirited and are admirably suited to their purpose.

Dutch Hymnody. The Dutch Reformed Church, as the national form of religion in Holland is called, is a Calvinistic body, maintaining a Presbyterian form of government, and has grown up side by side with the rise of the Dutch Republic. Calvinism was a plant of early growth in the Netherlands, where the soil had long been prepared by the influence of the Church, and the consequent presence of Waldensian and Hussite doctrines. Waldo's French tr. of the Scriptures was turned into Dutch rhyme and eagerly caught up by the people. There were also a number of half-Latin, half-Dutch hymns of the kind introduced by Peter of Drede, about the year 1440, for the spread of Calvinism. A collection of these was printed at Campe (Kempens) in 1550 with the title Sederomb, inzichthende vele nieuwericke komeen en oudgheid, in Latijn en duytsch, geschreven te Campe. Thus the change from Latin hymns to those in the vernacular was very gradual in Holland, as in Germany.

1. Psalters.—1. The speech of Calvinists rather than of Lutheran doctrines in Holland raised a strong opposition to original hymns, and led to the introduction of metrical psalms. The feeling against hymns grew so strong that it was resolved by three synods that only such should be sung which were found in Holy Scripture. There was no lack of versions to meet the taste for metrical psalms. Early as 1530 a collection was pub. at Antwerp by Willem van Zuilen van Nyevelt, and set to music by Gerardus Mes, under the title Southeriedekens (Psalter Songs). This was so eagerly received that a 2nd ed. was issued the next year; and five other eds. appeared between 1538 and 1566. These psalms were sung in most of the Reformed congregations in Holland, and by the Dutch Protestant refugees in England.

2. In or about 1555 Lucas d'Here, the artist-poet of Ghent and friend of William the Silent, translated 36 psalms from the French of Marot and Beza; and in 1566 appeared two versions of the whole psalter—one by Uithove, the other by Dathenus.

3. Johannes Uitenvong was a Ghentish noble who took refuge in England, where he was an elder of a Laureo's Dutch congregation in London. There he pub. in 1551, 25 psalms, which were reprinted at Embden in 1557, and republished the next year with the addition of part of Ps. 119. Soon after, 30 psalms with the Magnificat and Benedictus appeared without name of place or printer; and in 1561 a selection of 100 of his psalm-verses was pub. by the well-known English printer, John Daye. Finally Uitenvong compiled the remaining 50 psalms; and the whole collection was then pub. with a preface under the title De Psalmis Davidis in Nederlandischer samergyme zu nutte der geestlichen Christi, Londoni, by John Daye. 12 Sept. 1566. This version, which like that of d'Here was set to the tunes of Marot's French Psalm, was adopted by the Dutch congregations in England, but was never much used in the Netherlands, where it was anticipated by Dathen's version, the preface to which is dated 25 March, 1566.

4. Peter Dathen was a Flandrian monk who renounced his vows and became an ardent preacher of Calvinism. His version of the Psalms was made from that of the Vulgate, and it is the most rugged verse, displays but little poetic ability, and bears evident marks of great haste in its production. It was eagerly received, first by Dathen's own congregation at Frankenthal, and then by other rapidly spreading reformed congregations in the Netherlands. When it appeared, Dathen was preaching with a violent, stormy eloquence in West Flanders and Zeeland, where immense crowds gathered to hear sermons and to sing psalms in the open air. This was the first great popular rebellion, and it helped to popularise Dathen's collection, which was exclusively authorised by a synod at Wezel in 1568. This authorisation was renewed by later synods, especially that of Dort, in 1578, under the presidency of Dathen himself, at which a resolution was passed that only those psalms should be sung in churches, to the exclusion of hymns. Another resolution of the same synod against the use of organs is a further proof of the stern Calvinism of that assembly.

About the same time the Dutch congregations in London and at Sandwich urged their superintendents to substitute Dathen's version for that of Uitendijke. This was done with the result that Dathen's version became the authorised psalmody of the whole Dutch Reformed Church.

5. A formidable rival appeared, however, in 1578. This was a metrical psalter by the renowned Philip van Manix van St. Aldegonde, whom Mr. Motley styles "poet, orator, hymn-book maker, burgo-master, lawyer, polemical divine, soldier." St. Aldegonde, while deprecating the use of hymns other than those of Holy Scripture, added to his psalter a metrical version of the Lord's Prayer, the Commandments, Creed, and the Lord's Prayer. He was greatly assisted in this work by Bonaventura Velleius, tutor to his son, and afterwards professor of Greek, at Leyden. Attempts were made by the synods of Middelburg (1581), and the Hague (1586), to substitute in public worship this new and improved version for that of Dathen, but were defeated by the ultra-Calvinistic party, supported by the influence of the Earl of Leicester. The clergy especially were opposed to any change, and a final attempt was defeated at the great synod of Dort in 1619. Another century and a half was to elapse before good taste triumphed over Dathen's halting verse.

6. During the 17th cent., many poets and poestaters attempted to improve upon Dathen's version, with varying success. A Psalter pub. in 1713 for the use of an Anabaptist community at Haarlem has, in addition to the psalms and a few hymns, a free metrical version of the added psalm in the LXX. "by David when he fought against Goliath." This collection displays considerable poetical ability, and the preface states that Dathen's psalms had been abandoned by all the religious communities in Holland, except the State Church. Besides those already mentioned, Van Abbondine's Nieuw Register van Nederduitsche Boeken (1745) contains a list (by no means exhaustive) of 82 metrical psalters pub. up to that time, and many of them had passed through more than one edition.

7. In 1696 the attention of the synod of Friesland was drawn to a revised version of Dathen's Psalter, made by A. Trommms, minister at Groningen (Zedige verbetering van den rijen van Dathenius over de 150 psalmen Davids, Amsterdam, 1695). The necessity of improving the psalmody being almost universally admitted, the Synod drew up in 1701 a scheme, with the co-operation of the theological faculty at the university, for a new selection of Psalms from existing versions. This scheme however fell to the ground until 1754, when the presbytery of the Hague presented to the Synod of South Holland a proposal to amend certain expressions in Dathen's psalms. Considerable discussion ensued, and lasted throughout Holland for some years, but finally it was agreed by the Synods that a new selection should be made from three existing versions, and a commission was appointed in 1772 for this purpose. The states of each province nominated a minister from each provincial synod (time in all) and the States-General sent two political commissioners. The commissioners met at the Hague, in January, 1773, and finished their labours in July. The versions to which their selection was limited were those of Hendrik Glijtjen, 1686; Johannes Eusebius Voet, 1762, and that of a literary society, called Laten Der Salus Popula, 1761. Glijtjen's version was not original, but a compilation from 17 preceding psalters, and was entitled Den Hoornigraf der psalmlichten (Amsterdam, 12th, 1686). Voet's version had been pub. at the Hague, in 1764, and that of the society Laten Deo Salus Popula, in 1761. The compilers had practically therefore a choice of 19 psalters, extending over a period of more than 100 years, from which to select, and they succeeded in compiling a fairly representative and satisfactory Metrical Psalter, which is to Dathen's version what Tate and Brady is to Sternhold and Hopkins. They appended the usual metrical versions of the commandments, Magnificat, Benedictus, Nunc Dimittis, two rhymes of the Creed, prayer before sermon, a grace, and morning and evening hymns, the last named being a free rendering of the hymn Christ, qui lux es et dies.

8. The new version was gradually introduced throughout the provinces, and was on the whole well received, though in some places it had to encounter much prejudice and opposition, and its enforced use after 1775 even led to open riots in the province of Zeeland. The commissioners had also suggested that the psalms might be sung faster, but one old-fashioned preacher staunchly protested that he could not conscientiously sing one verse in less than twelve minutes! The new version was adopted by the Dutch congregation in London, and introduced into the foreign possessions. It is now in general use throughout the Dutch Reformed Church, though the Separatist (Dopper) congregations in South Africa until quite recently still cling to the time honoured doggerel of Dathen.

We may note that there is a reprint of Dathen's psalms published in 12mo. at Goningen, 1865, with the spelling modernised and archaisms explained in the footnotes.

2. Hymn Books.—Although original hymns were compiled from the public worship of the Dutch Reformed Church, certain paraphrases or versified portions of the Scripture were retained from the first in addition to the psalms. These were originally the songs of Moses, Isaiah, Hezekiah, and of the Three Children, and the evangelical canticles; but later the O. T. canticles were omitted, and metrical versions of the Creed, Lord's Prayer, Commandments, and Morning and Evening hymns were inserted. The oldest Souwterliedekens had 12 such hymns; St. Aldegonde's Psalter had more; even Dathen's had 7, only 5 of which were from the Scriptures, while one was a direct tr. in Old Low Dutch of the hymn "Christe, Qui lux es et dies." But these were evidently intended more for private than for public use, since hymns were regarded with much less favour of Roman or Arminian doctrines.

2. The want of suitable hymns was gradually however making itself felt, and this feeling was strengthened, by the adoption, among Dutch Lutherans, of tr. from the rich store of German hymnody. A resolution of a Synod at Utrecht, in 1612, had permitted hymns upon the life of our Lord to be sung in public worship, and a collection of 58 such hymns was issued (Lofzangen der Christelijke feestdagen: Utrecht, 1615, 8vo.). But this attempt of common sense to assert itself over prejudice was promptly suppressed by the resolution of the Synod of Dort (1619), which prohibited the use of any but Dathen's psalms.

Hymns were however sung at festivals by several congregations in different parts of Holland, and the Synods of Drente and Friesland (circa 1688) recommended their use. To meet the want of suitable hymns, especially in private or family devotion, Willem Slatter, minister of Eibergen in Gelderland, published in 1650, his Psalmen, Gesangen, en Geestelijke Liederen, and composed, in 1661, 10 books of Gesangen which were pub. after his death. His books spread rapidly, and soon formed together with the Bible and psalm-book the whole religious library of the country people, and were generally used in family worship.

3. The first religious bodies in Holland to authorise the use of hymns in public worship were dissenters from the Dutch Reformed establishment. The Amabaptist Psalter of 1713 contained an Appendix of 12 hymns for Christmas, Easter, Ascension, Whitunday, as also Holy Baptism and the Holy Communion. A hymnal for the use of a separatist congregation at Werkendam was compiled about 1750 by Jacob Groenewegen, and ran through 8 eds. before 1799; and a bulky collection of Mennonite hymns dates from about the same period.

4. The Psalter revision committee of 1778 had discussed the desirability of compiling a hymnal, but took no further steps in that direction. Meanwhile the feeling in favour of hymns was spreading among the educated classes, and even among the clergy, whose tastes were being elevated by the use of the improved version of the psalms. The poet Van Alphen in the notes to his Carusius published in 1783 strongly urged "the need in public worship, as well as in private religious assent of hymns in which poetry and music might be combined to meet all circumstances, and the taste of the day." The feeling found expression at the provincial synod of North Holland in 1796, which invited the co-operation of the other provinces.

In the meantime Engelbert, Minister at Hoorn, and A. Rutgers, Minister of Haarlem, were asked to give the subject their attention. During the next seven years the matter was discussed with much warmth by the various synods: *Van Alphen contributing towards the discussion a specimen hymn-book of 55 original compositions (Prooje van Liederen en Gesangen voor de openbare Godsdienst, 5 Gravenhage 1801, 8vo.), and finally in 1803 a committee of eighteen ministers and elders was appointed by the nine provincial synods to compile a hymn-book for use in public worship in the metropolitans. The commission held its first meeting at the Hague, on the 27th Sept., 1803, and its last, there also, on the 12th June, 1805. During the interval two other contributions towards the collection appeared, one by Ahasuerus van den Berg, minister of Arnhem and president of the commission, who had also been on the psalm commission of 1773 (Prooje van Gesangboek, Amsterdam, 1801, 4 vols.), the other by Rhijnvis Feith, ex-senior of Svolle, and a member of the commission (Prooje van eene Gesangen voor den openbaren godsdienst, Amsterdam, 1804, 2 vols. 8vo.). The hymn-book appeared in Sept., 1805 (192 hymns with tunes), as:

"Evangelische Gesangen, om镊 het boek de Psalmen bij den openbaren Godsdienst in de Nederlandsche Gemeenten gebruikt te worden; op uitdrukkingen, leest van alle de Gesante der over- norme Gemeenten bijeen verzameld en in orde gebracht in de jaren 1803, 1804, en 1805. Tr Amsterdam, by Johannes Allart, MDCCLIV. (8vo.)."

The compilers in a very interesting preface dedicate the Dutch reformed congregations in the Fatherland, regret that the national poets had done little for sacred poetry, but express their obligations to the poetical works of Van Lodenstein,† Vollenhoven, Schuier and Schute, as well as to those of Van Alphen and other living poets. Many of the hymns are original compositions or tr. from the German by members of the commission. Van den Berg contributed 9 original hymns, including a metrical version of the 7th, 8th, and 20 th tr. of Psalms, much altered and abbreviated. Feith was the author of 26 hymns and 4 tr. Tru hymns are derived from Van Alphen's Prooje of Nichtkrijlige Poëzie, the joint work of Van Alphen and Van de Kasteele, ex-senior of the Hague, and a member of both commissions. Abraham Rutgers adapted the or two hymns from his cantata De loop der saligheid, besides contributing some trs. from the German.

The Gezangboek was formally adopted by resolution of all the provincial Synods on the resolution of 1st January, 1807, and is now, together with the Municipal Psalms, the authorized hymnal of the Dutch Reformed Church.* Like the revised psalter, it had at first to encounter the opposition and prejudice, especially in Flushing and Friesland, but it gradually found its way, and even in private use has entirely succeeded all other hymnals, Willem Sluiter's not excepted. Its language, though sometimes stiff and acidulated, is sober and devout, and it contains many beautiful hymns, especially among those which have been trs. from the German.

5. In 1847 the general synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in Holland resolved that an Appendix should be issued, and the work of compilation was entrusted to the standing committee for revising and printing the publication of the hymn-book. Several successive committees were engaged upon it, the principal share of the work being undertaken by Dr. N. Beets, minister of Utrecht, and Professor Ter Haar of that University, and a considerable number of hymns, translated and original, was collected. In 1856 a synodical committee was appointed to revise the collection and arrange appropriate tunes to the hymns, and in July, 1866, the Appendix was issued as:—Ferree- bundel op de Evangelische Gezangen.

As the authorised hymnal of the largest Dutch speaking religious body, the Evangelische Gesangbundel naturally exercised a very considerable influence over all later Dutch hymnals, most of which have borrowed largely from it. This is especially the case with regard to the Dutch population of South Africa, where there are no less than eight different missionary bodies, all of them largely indebted to what may be called the mother hymnal, that of the Dutch Reformed Church. Of sixty-seven hymns which are found in not fewer than five out of these eight hymnals, and may thus be said to have received the hallmark of the present general assembly of the Church, six are from this source. Hence such hymns are

* Op bergen en in dalen; Jesus neemt al zondaaars aan; Juich aarde, juich ad om den Heer (Ps. 100, which may almost be called the Cape national hymn), God enkel licht, and others, are familiar as household words in every part of South Africa and in every Dutch speaking congregation of Christians, white or coloured, from Cape Lauglas to the Zambesi.

iii. Evangelical Lutheran Hymns.—There is one other Dutch hymnal which demands a brief notice. It is that of the Dutch speaking Luthers.

The Reformed or Calvinistic Church of Holland was most intolerant of any dissent, and those congregations which had disentertained the Lutheran confession of faith embraced the settled once only on this, and were not permitted to build the new Church until 1632. Hence the Luthers adapted their form of worship as far as possible to that of the Calvinists, abandoning the use of the crucifix, altar lights, &c., and even singing metrical psalms, though in a version of their own. In time however hymnals were adopted by the Lutheran congregations of Amsterdam, of Rotterdam, and of the Hague. But besides the inconvenience of having three distinct hymnals, those collections were very meagre in general hymns. Thus of 165 hymns in the Amsterdam collection, 80 were appropriate to festivals only; indeed, Dutch Luthers anticipated in form and expression, and needed recasting. The first regularly organized Lutheran Synod in Holland met in 1819, and here it was resolved that a new hymnal should be compiled for general use, which was to include the best hymns in the three existing collections, hymns from the collections of other Protestant bodies, and new hymns to be specially composed by the first Dutch poets of the day. The carrying out of this scheme was entrusted to a committee of seven, who met at Amsterdam in 1820, though the result of their labours did not appear until six years afterwards as:—Christelijke Gezangen voor de Evangelische Lutherische Gemeente in het koningsrijk der Nederlanden, Amsterdam, 1826, 8vo.

It contained 374 hymns, comprising 125 hymns and 25 psalms from the three old hymnals, 64 from the Dutch Reformed Book, 26 from other collections, and 162 new compositions. The tunes were for the most part the familiar old German melodies, and a few selected by the musical editor, Mr. J. W. Wilms. Strange to say the collection did not include the Marienlied of the reformation, Ein Friedlied, and many of the best German hymns were unrepresented. To supply these and other deficiencies, an Appendix was added by a synodical commission, in 1850, containing 114 hymns.

Though this book contains some undoubtedly fine hymns, the intricacy of its metres, the length and number of verses (instances occurring of 15, 18, and even 23 verse hymns) combined with the rigid and somewhat antiquated character of the collection, seems to altogether, will prevent its being used in the first rank of Dutch hymnody, but it is useful to refer to for the purpose of comparison with other trs. of the same General sources.

iv. Various.—It must suffice only to mention here Utzgoedtische Liederen by Mr. Mood, and Dutch Baptist hymnal, containing several good hymns, and the Opeekkingsliederen van Sankey, trs. of Moody and Sankey's Sacred Songs & Solos, pub. at Amsterdam by M. S. Bromet. Of a higher order of merit are Dr. R. Ben- nink Jansen's trs. of some of the best Latin hymns and sequences (Gezangen der Kath. KerK. Hague, 1800), though formetrical reasons not well adapted for congregational use.

v. Conclusion.—In conclusion, it is worthy of remark how very few Dutch hymnals are original compositions. This may be attributed partly to the fact that the store of noble hymns at hand in the cognate German language, which readily lend themselves to translation into Dutch; partly perhaps to the lack of religious enthusiasm and fervour among the Dutch in modern times. There do not seem to be more than abut 3000 Dutch hymns extant, and of this number, at least two-thirds, and these the best known and most popular, will be found to be translations. N. R., if we except the trs. of Willem Sluiter, is there any one writer whose name stands out England Hymnody, Church of, pp. 333. Since these pages went to press the following collections and hymnological works have been published:—

1. Supplemental Hymns to Hymns Ancient and Modern, 1839. This is an addition of 165 hymns made to strengthen some of the weak points in the former edition. The book, with the Supplement, is as a whole much as it was before, except that it is greater in bulk and more modern in character.

2. The Church Hymn Book, 1839. This is designed as an independent Appendix to the 1875 ed. of H. & A. M., and seems to have been compiled by some one who was not satisfied with the official Supplement of the Compilers. It is in two parts. Part I. is set forth as "Consisting chiefly of Modern Hymns, and of Ancient Hymns not translated into their original Metres." Part II. consists of the Hymns to be used at Matins and Evening Day throughout the Year, and consists entirely of hymns fr. the Latin, the total additions being 112 hymns.

3. The Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer, 1839. This is the 1876 ed. of the H. C. P., revised and enlarged. Several of the older hymns not commonly used in Public Worship have been omitted, and others of a more modern and popular type have been substituted. Of these additions those by F. P. Bickersteth, the editor, are very beautiful and of much value. The Introduction has been rewritten, and the notes to the hymns corrected. Of its kind, and from a theological standpoint, as an Evangelical hymn-book it is in poetic grace, literary excellence, and lyrical beauty, the finest collection in the Anglican Church.

The hymnological and critical works on hymn-writers and hymns published during this period include:—

1. Christian Hymns and Hymn-Writers, A Course of Lectures by J. E. Prentice, D.D., Archdeacon and Canon of Carlisle, etc., 1863. This is a weak book; there is no original research, and the result is from a hymnological point of view, most disappointing.

2. Anglican Hymnody, Being an Account of the 325 Standard Hymns of the Highest Merit according to the Verdict of the whole Anglican Church. By Rev. James King, M.A., 1865. In this work Mr King has begun borrowing the whole idea and design of the work from the April and May numbers of the Churchman's Shining Magazine, 1874; he has filled in the body of the book, and has added information gathered from Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church; Biggs's Annotated Hymns Ancient and Modern, and his English Hymnology; and a few additional well-known works; and concludes without any acknowledgment of his indebtedness to any one.

3. Historical Companion to Hymns Ancient and Modern; containing the Greek and Latin; the German, Italian, French, Latin, and Welsh Hymns; the first lines of the English Hymns; the Names of all Authors and Translators: Notes and Index. Edited by the Rev. Robert Maude Morcom, M.A., 1889. This work is on the same lines as the annotated edition of H. & A. M. by L. G. Biggs, and includes the Supplement of 1889. It is by no means an accurate work, and some of its surmises are very curious, as for instance, the quotation of a Greek Canon from the Office of Christmas Day as possibly the basis of C. Wesley's "Hark, the herald angels sing." Notwithstanding these weak points the book is nevertheless readable.

This does not indicate a notable era in the hymnological history of this Church of England, although it is the fullest resume we can present.

[J. J.]

Here is the spring where waters flow. [Holy Scripture.] On p. 582, i. six stanzas are given from a poem on The New Jerusalem dated circa 1660, beginning "Jerusalem, my happy home"; and the last three stanzas of the six are set forth as the original of the lines prefixed to some editions of the English Bible which were put "in the only part of the 17th cent. and beginning: Be-tho the spring whence waters flow." Since that article was stereotyped we have found the same lines in a hymn pub. 55 years before the date given at p. 582, i.

The lines are printed on the page facing the Title-page of an Edition of the Bible pub. by C. Barker, in London, in 1578, and read, together with the various references to Holy Scripture, as follows:—

Psalm 16, 3. & 4. "Here is the spring where waters flow, to quench our heart's desire.

Revel. 21, 16. Here is the tree where truth doth dwell, and we, like to the lines therein:—

Jer. 23, 16. & 17. Here is the tree where truth doth dwell,

Ps. 119, 142. & 144. "Here is the Judge that slayeth sin, when men's deuces fail.

John 6, 25. Here is the bread that gives the life, and upholds the heart.

Luke 10, 20. "Here is the tidings of salvation here, to come to our ears, even here.

Eph. 6, 16. "Here is the weapon of our salvation, and shield of our defence.

Matt. 7, 6. & 7. "Here is the bread that gives the life, and upholds the heart,

Ps. 22, 27. & 28. A takes more pleasure in the song and willing in the night.

Ps. 119, 11. "Before the sun, and without light or in the dark.

Ps. 104, 12. "Then happy thou in all thy life, life and death, and plenty and want.

Rom. 10, 11. What so to these blessed.

Ps. 144, 13. "When good by death they call thee.

"Of Gracious God and most merciful Father, with haft vouchsafed to the rich and precious jell of thy holy word, affiit us with thy spirit, that it may be written in our hearts to our everlasting comfort, to form us, to renew us according to thine own image, to shape and educe us into the perfect building of thy Christ, Sanctifying and encreasing us in all heavenly virtues. Grant this, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen."

We have seen these lines, including the prayer, attributed to Beza. If he had been the author, we should expect to find them in an edition of the English Bible printed at Geneva at or about the same date as the above. In the Brit. Mus. there is a copy printed at Geneva by John Crispin in 1569: but the lines are not therein. Not having any reliable evidence either for Beza or for any other writer, we must therefore give these lines and the prayer as Anon.

The peculiarity to be noticed in the fact that St. Hilili, as above, are also in the broadsheet named on p. 582, i. in a slightly different form, we cannot explain. We can only suggest that there is a possible original not yet discovered from which both pieces may have been taken.
HORDER, WILLIAM G. [APPENDIX I.] INNOCENT III.

and was b. on July 18, 1013. He entered the school of St. Gall, c. 1029, and soon devoted, although so young, an intense interest in his studies. It is said of him that he rapidly mastered Latin, Greek, and Arabic. History, music, mathematics, philosophy, and theology engaged his attention, and in each he attained marked success. Some go so far as to say with confidence that he translated Aristotle's Poetics and Rhetoric into Arabic, but the statement is disputed by others. After thirty years of age he removed from St. Gall to the monastery of Reichenau, where he remained to his death, Sept. 24, 1054. His name is associated with several hymns of his own, and notably the following, which are annotated in this Dictionary:

1. Alma Redemptoris Mater quae pervia cost, p. 51, ii.
2. Rex omnipotens die bidenta, p. 967, i., 966, ii.
5. Veni Sancte Spiritus, Ex eunte, p. 1215, i., ii.
6. Veri Spiritus, pan 1316, ii.

The conclusions arrived at in the annotations of these hymns concerning their respective authorship will be found somewhat adverse to Hermannus's claims with regard to Nos. 2 and 4, and positively against him with regard to Nos. 3, 5, and 7. Some of these conclusions will be found to be utterly opposed to those of Duftield on the same hymns in his Latin Hymn-Writer, &c., 1889, pp. 149-168. This difference of opinion arises mainly out of the fact that the mass at St. Gall and at the Brit. Mus. were not examined by Duftield, and are much older and more important than any of those with which he was acquainted. [J. J.]

HORDER, William Garrett, was b. at Salisbury, and educated at the City of London School. In 1862 he entered Cheshunt College as a student for the Congregational Ministry. On leaving College in 1866 he undertook the pastorate of a Congregational Church at St. Helen's, Lancashire. In 1869 he removed to Torquay, and in 1873 to Wood Green, London, where he still resides. Mr. Horder has compiled:

The first of these was published in 1881 in The Book of Praise for Children, pub. by the Congregational Union under the editorship of the Rev. G. R. Barrett. With this latter work Mr. Horder had no connection beyond the helping over of the text to the editor. The former for the use of the Union. From Mr. Horder's former for the use the editor, the latter is in the style of a 'Set' was published, 1883, ed. of 'The Children's Hymns,' The Poet's Bible is "For the Use of Jewish Children." The Poet's Bible is "The Congregational Hymns" is referred and preached there (p. 260, ii. 10). In addition Mr. Horder has published the following original works: in 1889: (3) The Silent Voice and other Discourses, 1889.

The Hymn Lover is practically a handbook to Mr. Horder's Cong. Hymns. As in that collection the hymns are gathered from all ages, nations, and churches, opportunity is afforded for the discussion of each epoch of hymn-writing and for the grouping together of interesting particulars concerning hymn-writers and their work. This opportunity

Mr. Horder has availed himself of with great skill and judgment; and although the outcome is not severely technical, the result is all the more striking to the majority of studies. Although popularly it is not a scientific production, practically and within its range, it is the most useful and attractive work we have on its special subject. The reproduction therein of specimen hymns of each epoch, in a new and valuable addition to this special kind of work.

Hrabanus (Rabanus) Maurus, a. of one Rithard, was b. probably at Mainz, about 776. At an early age he was sent to the Monastery of Fulda to receive a religious education. In 801 he was ordained Deacon, and the following year he went to the monastic school of St. Martin at Tours to study under Alcuin, a celebrated teacher of that time, who gave to Hrabanus the name of Maurus to which Hrabanus added Magnoeius. On his return to Fulda in 804 he became the head of the school connected with the Monastery. Towards him Ratgar the abbot showed great unkindness, which arose from the fact that Ratgar demanded the students to build additions to the monastery, whilst Hrabanus required them at the same time to study. Hrabanus had to retire for a season, but Ratgar's deposition by Ludwig the Pious, in 817, opened up the way for his return, and the reopening of the mission. In the meantime, in 814, he had been raised to the Priesthood. Ercil, who succeeded Ratgar as abbot, died in 822, and Hrabanus was appointed in his stead. This post he held for some time, until driven forth by some of the community. In 847, on the death of Archbishop Oger, Ludwig the younger, with whom Hrabanus had sided in his demand for German independence as against the imperialism of his elder brother Lothar, rewarded him with the Archbishorship of Mainz, then the metropolitan see of Germany. He held this appointment to his death on Feb. 4, 866. He was buried first in St. Alban's, Mainz, and then, during the early days of the Reformation, in St. Maurice, Halle, possibly because of the opposition he is known to have made to the doctrine of Transubstantiation. With German historians Hrabanus is regarded as the father of the modern system of education in that country. His prose works were somewhat numerous, but the hymns with which his name is associated are few. We have the "Christe sanatorum decus Angelorum," p. 999, ii.; "Tibi Christe, splendor Patris," p. 1176, ii.; and the "Veni Creator Spiritus," p. 1306, i.; but recent research convinces us that the ascription in each case is very doubtful; and none are received as by Hrabanus in Professor Dümmler's ed. of the Germania of Hrabanus in the Poetae Latinorum Carolinorum, vol. viii. The "Rabanus" as it now limits itself even from the "lyms of uncertain origin."

Innocent III. Pope, was a member of the celebrated Conti family, which gave nine Popes to the chair of St. Peter. He was b. at Ausigni, c. 1160, and was educated at Rome, Paris, and Bologna. On his return to Rome, through his powerful family influence he became a Canon of St. Peter's, a subdeacon before he was thirty, and Cardinal Deacon in 1190, and as such was known as Cardinal Lothario. During the Pontificate of Celestine III., having little to do, he wrote his De Contemptu Mundi. On the death of Celestine III. on Jan. 8, 1198, he was ordained Priest, consecrated Bishop, and enthroned as Pope within the few days between that date and Feb. 22, of the same year when he began his Pontifical reign, being at the time about thirty-eight years of age. His reign is well marked in ecclesiastical history, although it was comparatively short. He d. at Perugia, July 16, 1216. In hymnody his name is associated with the ground Sequence the "Stabat mater dolorem" (p. 1061, l.); and the glorious "Veni Sancte Spiritus, E tuemite" (p. 1012, i.). In each case, however, there are many reasons to doubt his authorship, or, at least, to accept the ascription with caution. See details as indicated above.

Italian Hymnody.—Although Italy has been renowned for centuries past as a land of music and song, it has been chiefly in the celebration of secular themes that her lyre has been employed. Sacred hymnody, at least since the times of the Renaissance, has been comparatively little cultivated. It is proposed in the present article to give: I. A brief sketch of Hymnody in the Italian language from the 13th century to the 19th; and II. An account of its present condition (i.) in the Roman Catholic Church, (ii.) in Protestant communities.

I. Hymnody in the Italian language from the 13th century to the 19th.

1. "It is now," says Prof. Bartoli, in the Encyclo. Britannica, 9th ed., vol. xiii., p. 498, "an established historical fact that there existed no writing in the Italian language before the 13th century." But in the early part of that century lived St. Francis of Assisi (b. 1182, d. 1225), founder of the Franciscan order, and to him have been attributed several short religious poems in the Italian of that period. One, in particular, is famous, known as the "Cantico Solis," or more fully, "Cantico de le creature comuneamente de lo frate Sole." True, its authenticity has been the subject of considerable controversy, but it is now admitted that the general sense and many of the expressions are those of St. Francis, though in the lapse of ages the original structure may have been changed into a style more modern and ornate. The following is the text as now given:

"Attisimo omnipotent bon Signore, tua son le lamento la gloria, lo honore, e ogni benditione. A te solo che confessano e nulla homo e degno de nominarti. Laudo sia Dio mio Signore, con tutte le creature, specialmente messer lo Frate Sole, il quale giorna e illumina noi per lui. E ello e bello e radente con grande splendore; de te, Signore, porta significativa."

"Laudo sia mio Signore, per Soora Luna e per le stelle, il quale in elo le bot forme chiare e belle."

"Laudo sia mio Signore, per Frate Vento, e per l'Aire e Nuvole e sereno e ogni tempo, per le quale le diverse creature somatamente."

"Laudo sia mio Signore per Soora Acqua, la quale e molto utile, e humile, e pretiosa, e casta."

"Laudo sia mio Signore, per Frate Fuoco, per lo quale in umilità la notte; e ello e bello e focando, e robustissimo, e forte."

"Laudo sia mio Signore, per nostra Madre Terra, la quale le sostenne d'urna e produce diversi frutti, e coloriti fior, e erbe.

"Landato sia mio Signore, per quelli che penans per lo tuo amore, e sostengono infiniti e tribulazioni. Beati quei che sostengono e peggio, de te, Attisimo, seranno incorrotti."

It is said that this hymn used to be chanted by the saint and his companions, and that in his last illness another stanza was added, giving thanks for "Our Sister, the Death of the body." [v. Stephen's Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography, Art. St. Francis; Les Poesies Franciscaines en Ital., par O. F. Ottman, Paris, 1852.]

2. From A.D. 1250 onward, the development of literature in the vernacular was rapid. In the cities of northern Italy the people had been accustomed to listen in the parishes to the songs of the jongleurs. About this time Giacomino of Verona, and Bonaventura of Brescello, composed religious poems in the Vernese dialect, which were sung or chanted to similar groups of hearers. Their treatment of the Rubicon, the terrors of the Rubicon Infernale, and the blessedness of the Gerusalemme Celeste, in form, their poems consisted of verses of 13 syllables, arranged in stanzas of four lines, all lines in the same stanza ending in the same rhyme.

3. In the latter half of the 13th century appeared in Italy that extraordinary manifestation of the nascetic spirit, the processions of the Flagellants. Vast bodies of men, women, and even children girded with ropes and scourging themselves with whips till the blood flowed freely, passed from city to city, with hymns and prayers, and calling on the people everywhere to repent. Their hymns or laments were in the Umbrian dialect, in verses of 13 syllables, and were sung in dialogue.

Towards the end of the century arose in Tuscany a school of lyric poetry represented by Dante (b. 1265, d. 1321) in his Canzoniere, and in the next generation by Francesco Petrarca (b. 1304, d. 1374) in his sonnets. But the subject of these compositions was for the most part earthly love, and nothing which these poets wrote resembled what we now mean by hymns.

4. The chief religious poet of the period, leaving out of view Dante's great epic, was Jacopo dei Benedetti, commonly called Jacopone (b. before 1250, d. 1306, p. 475, i.). He is usually regarded as the author of the well-known Latin poem, the "Stabat Mater dolerosa," as well as of its companion piece, not so familiarly known, the "Stabat Mater speciosa." He wrote in Italian 211 poetical pieces, which have been arranged in seven books. Some are mere theological dissertations in verse; others are satires, but others approach more near the nature of hymns, being short compositions written to popularise a sacred thought or celebrate a festival. "Jacopone," says Prof. Bartoli, "was a mystic, who from his hermit's cell looked forth upon the world, denouncing the immoralties of the age, and especially the malpractices of popes Celestine V. and Boniface VIII. Cast into prison for his faithful testimony, his spirit was still unconquered. In his dungeon he composed songs extolling the Madonna in striking and original manner. These were sung throughout the 14th and 15th centuries by the pious members of the religious orders, such as the Minimi, the Jesuati.
and the lay schools of the Laudi, or singers of God’s praise.
5. Passing to the 15th century we come to Florence, a warm-hearted Christian man and the author both of numerous Laude and of Biblical dramas. The latter are not so numerous as the Laude. Nevertheless, these hymns of praise, being simple in style, full of feeling, and adapted to popular melodies, became extensively known and were widely used.

6. Belcari had, at an earlier period, appeared in Florence the Laude of Girolamo Savonarola (b. 1451, d. 1498). He not only from the pulpit denounced with prophetic earnestness the sins and vices of the time, but also sought to avail himself in the interests of morality and religion of the power of sacred song. Lorenzo de Medici had written certain monastic productions, called Casti Carnavaleschi ("Carnival Songs"), which were sung by the young nobles and populace during the Carnival, and Savonarola, to counteract their influence, composed songs of a different order but similar in form and metre, and capable of being sung to the same tunes. His biographer Villari, however, acknowledges that but little true poetry is to be found in them, only "a temperate tone of decorum and good sense." At an earlier period Savonarola had written certain Canzoni of the Ruth of the World, the Ruin of the Church, and other subjects; but they are poems rather than hymns. Also, he appended to his treatise on the Love of Jesus Christ some Laude e Contemplazioni illustrative ("Exciting Hymns of Praise and Contemplation"), in which he extols the mercy and goodness of the Saviour, and expresses an ardent desire to become one with Christ, being uplifted on the same cross, fixed to it by the same nails, and thorns. These hymns, however, are said by Italian scholars to have been used in public worship, and could never have been written by a man of Savonarola’s ardent love of art and the letters of Girolamo Beneventi (about a.d. 1500). A specimen cited by Villari shows that occasionally he was extremely fanciful, almost passing the bounds of common sense, but a competent judge says of his productions, that they are "sometimes sweet and always warm with religious feeling." Another says that he paraphrased the psalms in a simple, happy, vigorous style, and that some of his hymns belong to the finest lyrical productions of Italy in the 15th century.

7. One other name may be mentioned belonging to this period, that of the highly accomplished Vittoria Colonna, the Marchess Pescara (b. 1490, d. 1547), a great friend of Michael Angelo. Among other poems she published (about 1540) some of a religious character, called Rime Spirituali. These are described as "the productions of a delicate and sensitive imagination rather than of vigorous and original genius," and there is no evidence that they were ever used as hymns in worship.

8. The latter part of the 16th century was the commencement of a long season of decline in Italian literature, and for nearly 200 years there appeared no religious poet of eminence. Nevertheless, in the years 1588 and 1708 there were published two collections of hymns which claim a brief notice. The first is entitled: Corona di sante Canzoni, o Laude Spirituali di piu dediti Autori (A Chaplet of Sacred Songs, or Spiritual Hymns of Praise, by several devout authors). The names of the authors are not stated, but the editor was Matteo Cenini, a priest of the Florentine Permission to print the 1st ed. was given by the Grand Duke of Tuscany, Nov. 30, 1687. A 2nd ed., revised and enlarged, was printed at Florence in 1689, by Jacopo Carlieri. It contains about 380 hymns. There is no attempt at orderly arrangement, so that from a hymn on the Resurrection of Christ we pass to one on the Nativity, and a composition, whose subject is the Vanity of the World, is followed by one on the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin. Melodies accompany the hymns.

The other book, printed at Florence in 1763, comprises 212 hymns, all composed by Bernardo Adimari, a priest of the Oratory of S. Filippo Neri. This work consists of three parts. The 1st contains hymns suitable for use at any time; the 2nd, hymns for the fixed prescribed Festivals and for those of the Blessed Virgin; and the 3rd, for the Sundays in Lent and the movable Festivals. To all these hymns melodies are attached, and the following sentence from the preface both shows that they were intended for public use, and throws an interesting light on the usage of those days in regard to sacred song:—"Signor G. M. Castri has not only given the airs to these Little Songs, as may here be seen, but has besides affixed music arranged for four voices, it being the custom in many places for one stanza to be sung by the choir and the other by the people." It may be added that another Florentine poet with the surname of Adimari lived about this time, the Marquis Ludovico Adimari (b. 1644, d. 1708), author of Satires and Sonnets, and prose works of a religious character. Not improbably he was an elder brother of Bernardo Adimari.

10. The middle of the 18th century saw an improvement in the Italian Hymnody. Not only did secular poetry revive, as represented by Alfieri, Moni, and others, but the celebrated Doctor and Saint Alfonso Maria de Liguori, distinguished especially for his writings on casuistry and theology, also composed hymns and spiritual songs known to this day throughout Italy. He was b. near Naples in 1696, d. in 1787. Of the special character of his hymns we shall say more when we come to speak of the present condition of hymnody in the Roman Catholic Church of Italy.

11. Another poet of this period composed one fine hymn used in the worship of both R. Catholics and Protestants. This was Meta stasio (i.e. Pietro Trapani, b. at Rome in 1698, d. 1782), creator of the modern Italian opera. The subject of his hymn is "the omnipresence and omniscience of God," and the first stanza is as follows:

"Dunque il guardi giro, Immens. Dio ti vede; Nell'opre Tuo l'ammiro, Ti riconosco in me. La terra, il mar, le sere Parian del Tuo potere; Tu sei per tutto, e solo Tutt'ciò viviamo in Te."
12. In the first quarter of the 19th century we meet with a hymn-writer in Alessandro Manzoni, author of tragedies and other poems, and of a work of fiction, I Promessi Sposi ("The Betrothed"), which has been translated into most European languages. He was born at Milan in 1785, his mother being a daughter of the celebrated Becaria. In 1815 he published a small volume of Santi Sacri ("Sacred Hymns"), their subjects being "The Nativity," "The Passion," "The Resurrection," and "The Name of Mary." A few years later he pub. one on "Pentecost." Prof. Bartoli says of these hymns that they have "glooms of genius, especially when the author describes the human affections." Comprising 10 or 18 stanzas each, they are too long for use in ordinary public worship; but a selection of 5 stanzas from the hymn on "The Nativity" is found in two of the Protestant hymn-books mentioned below. The first stanza is as follows:

"Ecco e e nascu un Parolone, Chi fu Jesus, un Figliuol."

Also, eight stanzas from the hymn on "Pentecost" are in the collection edited by Rev. T. W. S. Jones, of Naples (v. infra). One stanza in particular seems to us beautifully descriptive of the effects of the Holy Spirit's presence in the Church:

"Come la luce rapida, Paur di cosa in cosa, E il color vari la sua."

13. Luigi Carrer, of Venice (b. 1800, d. 1850), and Francesco Dall'Ongaro (b. 1808, d. about 1876), two Italian poets who in their writings chiefly gave expression to intense patriotic aspirations, also wrote hymns, which however we have not met with in any collection intended for use in worship.

14. With a mention of another poet of the patriotic school, Giuseppe Giusti, we may close this part of our article. Giusti (b. 1809, d. 1850) was the greatest Italian satirist of this century, but in a Roman Catholic Hymnal described below, La Lira Cattolica, we find a beautiful little song of his, entitled "A Mother's Love." He died of consumption at a comparatively early age. The following touching lines, in the translation of W. D. Howell's Modern Italian Poets, are said to be the last which he wrote:

"For the spirit confused With misgiving and with sorrow, Let me, my Saviour, borrow The light of faith from Thee.
O lift from it the burden Which bows it down before Thee, With sighs and with weeping I commend myself to Thee; My faded life, Thou knowest, Little by little is wasted Like wax before the fire, Like snow-wreaths in the sun. And for the soul that panteth For its refuge in Thy bosom, Break, Thou, the ties, my Saviour, That hinder it from Thee."

II. Italian Hymnody at the present time.

1. In the Roman Catholic Church.

1. A very competent authority, an ecclesiastic in high position in Rome and a writer for the press, informs us that the Roman Catholic Church has never considered hymns by the people in the vulgar tongue as liturgical, the language of the Church being Latin. In Germany and in the Slavic countries popular singing has a certain historical value as regards either words or music; and on this account its use there is not uncommon, and has been commended by bishops and councils. These, however, have required that the words of new hymns should be approved by proper authority, and not even in these countries is singing in the language of the people permitted in the celebration of the solemn Mass. If such singing has sometimes occurred in country churches, it has been condemned by provincial councils.

2. But in Italy, our informant tells us, popular singing has no historic importance as regards either words or melody. The people take part in the worship by singing in Latin the Litany, the Tantum ergo, and other similar portions of the service, and in many places, in the country, the people sing in Latin, and with the Gregorian melody (although somewhat barbarously) the Credo, the Sanctus, &c., of the solemn Mass.

3. But in extra-liturgical services, e.g., in the daily devotion of the month of May, in popular missions, or in the exercises before and after preaching in congregations of young people and especially of boys, they are accustomed to sing some strophes in Italian. These, however, have no sanction from public authority. The Church does not oppose such singing, but she does not consider it an official matter in which she ought to intervene with her authority.

4. Among hymns and verses of this kind, those most frequently used in the Devotions above-mentioned are the compositions of St. Alfonso Maria de' Liguori (see § 1.9). The English reader may refer to a volume published in 1863, with the title Hymns and Verses on Spiritual Subjects: being the Sacred Poetry of St. Alfonso Maria Liguori, translated from the Italian and edited by Robert A. Coates (London, Burns and Lambert). The hymns there given are 49 in number; but the last four, though commonly inserted among the poetry of St. Alfonso, were not composed by him. The translator has divided Liguori's hymns into 3 classes: (1) Devotional, relating to the Lord Jesus Christ or to the Blessed Virgin Mary; (2) Ascetical; (3) Mystical. Their character may be inferred from some of the titles:

These hymns abound in utterances of intense devotion; much of the imagery is taken from the Song of Solomon, and although here and there are striking thoughts and beautiful turns of language, the expression of emotion is often so warm and passionate as to seem unreal to our colder English temperament. It is said that, like some of the Canti of Savonarola, the compositions of St. Augustine were written for the most part for the use of the people, and intended to replace the profane and pernicious love songs of which the Neapolitans were so fond.

5. In the northern Italy of the 16th century, the collection of hymns and songs was popular, entitled La Lira Cattolica; raccolta di Sacre Lodi scelte e poste in musica per cura del Cav. Ab. Francesco Pasquale di Bruno. The 1st ed. appeared in 1584. The 4th is before us, pub. at Turin in 1886. Those compositions are used in extra-liturgical services, and are also often sung by people at their work in the fields. The Roman ecclesiastic, who is our authority for the statements previously made as to Roman Catholic worship, speaks rather slightingly of this collection, and we can well imagine that, by the more cultivated of the Italians, it is regarded very much as I. Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos are by many persons in Great Britain. It includes a few hymns by poets of the first rank, but the majority are of a lighter and more popular character, often interspersed with choruses. The names of the authors of some of these latter are E. Bixio, S. Zambaldi, Spinaceti, and C. C. Berta; but, as the editor of the collection is now deceased, we have been unable to obtain further particulars.

The collection comprises 123 pieces, in 5 sections. The first 24 relate to the worship of God, the Holy Trinity, Jesus Christ from his birth to his ascension to heaven, and to the Eucharist. Then follow 22 in honour of Mary and her various attributes. Twenty others are in honour of certain other Saints, Virgins and Martyrs.

The fourth section contains 22 hymns on different subjects, adapted to illustrate the book chosen with a number of hymns of an instructive and moral character suited to the young, together with translations into Italian of the "Bisar-Itrr, " *Hab- bet Mater," and the "Te Deum."

6. In the years 1817 and 1818 there were pub. at Florence two vols. (now bound in one), with the following title:—Iani Sacri e Sequenze del Breviario e Missale Romano Consacrati in versi liturgici dal sacerdote Arcangelo Lastri, Fiorentino, con vari disegni per illustrazione dei medesimi. These translations from the Latin Breviary and Missal are often from the Roman Breviary and Missal are often from the Roman Breviary and Missal, and are sometimes adapted to illustrate, in a free and paraphrastic manner, the corresponding notes and dissertations are interesting and instructive. The work is adapted for private rather than public use.

7. The last remark holds good in regard to another book, Il Salterio del Pellegrino, pub. in 1860. The contents of this little vol. are not really hymns in any sense, but devotional meditations in the style of the Psalms of the Bible, and for this reason are called "Psalms and Psalms," and are supplied simply to name "Salterio.

8. It may be said that, in the Roman Church in Italy, the Latin hymns in the Salterio have 100 works have 100 works, and preceding this section, we may add that the several Catholic Churches during the 19th century have distinctly encouraged such singing in private. In the preface to La Lira Cattolica (§ 5), there are quotations from official announcements by Popes Pius VII. and Pius IX., and by six Italian Archishops, granting indulgences of 80, 90, or 100 days, and even of a year, to those who shall sanctify this pious exercise with a contrite heart. The object is stated to be "to excite the faithful to the singing of spiritual hymns of praise, and to hinder as much as possible the singing of dangerous profane songs."

ii. Among the Protestants of Italy.

1. The principal Protestant communities in Italy at the present time are the following:—

(1) The Waldensians, descendants, ecclesiastically, of the Waldenses of Piedmont: (2) The Free Italian Church ("Chiesa Libera"); (3) The Mission Congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America; (4) The Mission Congregations of the Wesleyan Methodists, in North and South America; (5) The Baptists, who have stations in Rome, Turin, Leghorn, Venice and other places; some supported by the Baptists of England, others by the Baptists (Southern Convention) of the U. S. of America; (6) The Brethren ("I fratelli"), represented in Great Britain by G. Miller, of Bristol (see Plymouth Brethren Hymnody), having in Italy about 50 small congregations; (7) Missions unconnected with any Denominational Society, as those of Rev. E. Clarke at Spezia, and Count Foppenghita at Naples. For the use of these communities the following books have been prepared:—

(1) Ainsi e Canti ("Psalms and Canticles"), pub. by the Florence Tract Society, comprising 150 hymns with appropriate music. The hymns are by more than 20 authors, whose names are mentioned below. We recognize 16 or 17 as from the English or German, principally the former, e.g., Ken's evening hymn; Wesley's "Soldier of Christ, arise!"; Daddidge's "Rise with songs on every hand!"; T. R. Taylor's "I'm but a stranger here." But the greater part are originals. This book is used by the Waldensian Church, the Free Italian Church, the Methodist Episcopalians, and some Baptist congregations. Indeed, this book is more widely used than any other Protestant hymnal.

(2) Iani Sacri per uso delle chiese, delle scuole, e della famiglia Romana, by G. Giustiniani (first ed. 1810 in verse), by T. S. Jones, superintendent of the mission in South Italy. In 1811 it was re-edited by him and considerably enlarged, and now contains 324 hymns, together with the Te Deum, and other anthems. Mr. Jones informs us that a new edition is in preparation, but the greater part are originals. This book is used by the "Brethren," and at Rev. E. Clarke's station at Spezia, and many of the hymns are found in other collections.

(3) Ainsi e Canti spirituali, by T. P. Rossetti, Florence, 1876. This is a collection of 203 hymns, including 18 Iani by Rossetti from I. Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos, 24 by Rossetti himself; and 41 by J. S. Bach and others. Of T. P. Rossetti's own hymns 46 were pub. in 1867. The complete collection of his hymns was issued in 1867, and a 2nd ed. with additional from other authors in 1874. The book described above is called the 3rd ed. The collection is used by the "Brethren," and at Rev. E. Clarke's station at Spezia, and many of the hymns are found in other collections.

(4) Ainsi e Canti spirituali cantati dal Sig. Sankey, e volgarizzati da T. P. Rossetti. Como supplemento di altri scrittori, Firenze, 1882. A translation of 23 of the English and American hymns which have been popularized by I. Sankey, such as "The Prodigal Child," "The Ninety and Nine," "I hear the Voice of the Master," and "Jesus of Nazareth passest by." All translated into Italian by T. P. Rossetti, and in it the book before us, accompanied with music.

In this book are 75 hymns with music. It is pub. by the Tract Society at Florence, and is largely used in Sunday schools. Two or three are translations, the rest appear to be original.

(5) Inni Sacri ad uso dei Cristiani d'Italia ("Sacred Hymns for the use of the Christians of Italy"), Rome, 1807. A collection of 35 hymns or parts of hymns, edited by Rev. J. Wall, Baptist Missionary in Rome, and used principally by the congregations under his care. Nearly all are found in the collections named above.

(7) Inni et Canzoni, Rome, 1808. A collection of 38 hymns similar to the last named, made by Rev. H. Shaw, General Baptist Missionary in Rome, but now discarded. Here it may be stated that the Baptist Union of Italy has decided to compile a new hymnal, and has entrusted the work to a committee consisting of Messrs. Wall, Shaw, Landells, and others.

(8) Canto spirituale per l'ufficio divino nella chiesa evangeliola di confession fiesolana ("A sacred spiritual song for Divine worship in the evangelical church of the Fiesole confession at Fiesole"). Of this book we only know the title. Fiesole, as is well known, is regarded by many Italians as belonging to Italy.

(9) Celestini Celebriti: Inni Sacri di Vincenzo Tummo ("Celestial Sparks: Sacred Hymns by V. Tummo"). Casella, 1808. A mostly printed vol. of 30 hymns and religious poems, several being adaptations of the Psalms. These hymns have been favourably received by the Christian public of Italy, and some of them will probably be included in future collections.

Sig. Tummo is an evangelist labouring under the direction of the Rev. H. Shaw, of Rome.

(10) Amonia Biblica ("Biblical Harmony"), by Vincenzo Belloni (Rome, 1808), consists of 150 hymns and religious poems, considered by some to be of superior character. The author is a minister in Venice, labouring under the auspices of the American Baptist Missionary Society (Southern Convention). The book is used in Sig. Belloni's own congregation, and occasionally in the Baptist Church in Via Teatro Valle, Rome.

2. The authors of the hymns in the Protestant Italian Hymn-books include the following:

1. Rossetti, Gabriele, author of 7 hymns in Hymn No. 3, 19, 21, 31, and 32, and in No. 4, 35, and 36. His works are considered as being of great value in the development of Italian Hymnology.

2. Rossetti, T. Pietrocola, a relative of the preceding, was b. in 1885. He is the author of several well-known Italian hymns.

3. Ricci, G., author of 13 hymns in Hymn No. 3, and in No. 4, 35, and 36. His works are considered as being of great value in the development of Italian Hymnology.

4. Manzelli, G., author of 13 hymns in Hymn No. 3, and in No. 4, 35, and 36. His works are considered as being of great value in the development of Italian Hymnology.

5. Tarsio, Don Pietro, of Bergamo, living, pub. in 1886 a small vol. entitled Inni Cristiani, from which 17 hymns are found in Nos. 3, 4, 35, and 36. Most of these are translations of English hymns.

6. Ferrari, Salvatore (b. 1877, d. 1878), lived for a time in England, where he edited a journal entitled L'Esperienze d'Italia, and in 1886 pub. Inni e Canzoni ad uso dei Cristiani d'Italia (Lenti). He afterwards returned to Florence, where he established a Protestant orphanage.

7. Jones, Rev. Thomas W., has been a Wesleyan Missionary in Italy for 20 years, and now resides in Naples as Superintendent of the Southern district of the Mission. He was not only compiler and editor of Hymnal 17 of the hymns in this collection were not his composition, but 147 of the hymns in this collection are his composition. A larger number, however, are free translations of the best English hymns.

8. Di Pietro, Michele, Licentiate in Belles Lettees, is a native of the Abruzzi, and was a student of medicine, but is now a teacher in the Wesleyan schools. He is the author of 171 hymns in No. 3, many of which are very popular and useful.

9. Biancardi, Stanislao, author of 5 hymns in No. 1, and of 3 in No. 5, was b. in 1871, became a professor in Florence, and translated many English books; he was b. in Bologna, 1879, and d. at Rome in 1891. He was a Canon of the R. C. Church, and author of the "Travels of Petrarch," and other works.

10. Rosselli, D., author of 5 hymns in No. 3. He was a teacher of Italian, a student of a new translation of the Bible, and a Hebrew grammar, and other learned works. He received the degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1886, and the degree of D.D. from Cambridge University in 1888. He was afterwards appointed a Regius Professor of Hebrew in Cambridge University.

11. Ragghianti, Salvatore, also at one time taught in the Roman school; De Sancta, Giovanni Battista, was also a professor of Hebrew and Latin, and the author of the "Travels of Petrarch," and other works.

12. Roselli, D., author of 5 hymns in No. 3. He was a teacher of Italian, a student of a new translation of the Bible, and a Hebrew grammar, and other learned works. He received the degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1886, and the degree of D.D. from Cambridge University in 1888. He was afterwards appointed a Regius Professor of Hebrew in Cambridge University.

13. Roselli, D., author of 5 hymns in No. 3. He was a teacher of Italian, a student of a new translation of the Bible, and a Hebrew grammar, and other learned works. He received the degree of D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1886, and the degree of D.D. from Cambridge University in 1888. He was afterwards appointed a Regius Professor of Hebrew in Cambridge University.
The text is too fragmented and contains many abbreviations and partial sentences to be accurately transcribed. It appears to be a historical document discussing the printing and publication history of hymns, particularly focusing on a collection titled "Jesu Dulcis Memoria." The text mentions various editions, authors, and publishing houses, including references to Bp. Ken's hymns and the London Printers. It discusses the publication dates, the number of stanzas, and the text's presence in various publications and collections. The text is rich in historical and bibliographical details, typical of 18th-century scholarship. The full context and meaning would require additional historical knowledge and access to the original documents.
Old Version, Hymns of the (pp. 857-866). In the article on the Old Version the main object was to trace out the origin and development of Sternhold & Hopkins, and the authors of the Psalm-versions given in that Psalter. The Hymns th-rein, the Licence to Print, and the Authority to Use both the Psalms and the Hymns formed but a small part of the scope of the article.

In citing the various editions of Sternhold & Hopkins, on pp. 857-866, several hymns are referred to as forming an integral part of those editions. These include translations of a few ancient hymns; metrical versions of the Creeds, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and the Song of the Three Children; and original hymns on various subjects as "The Lamentation of a Sinner," the "Complaint of a Sinner," a "Thanksgiving after the receiving of the Lord's Supper," and others. In tracing out the history of these hymns we shall begin with the Partial Psalter of 1561 and the Complete Psalter of 1562. Sternhold & Hopkins, keen to many as the Old Version, had an eventful history, as the following Schedule will show. In this Schedule we note (1) the Library in which each Psalter referred to was found; (2) the Date of each Psalter; (3) its Title; (4) the Use to be made of it by the People; (5) the Licence and Authority for this Use; (6) the Imprint and Preliminary remarks arising out of the foregoing facts.

Before giving the Schedule in detail, we subjoin the title-pages of the four editions of the Psalter which mark the successive stages of its history.

(1) The Psalter of 1561:

"Hymnes, of David in Englishe metre, by Thomas Sternhold and others; conferred with the Hebreu, in certain places corrected (as the fates of the text required); and the Notes synoned with all, so farre as the same is made to rest of all sortes of people privily for the godly, solace and comfort: laying apart all superfluous Songs and Balladates, which tende only to be nothing more then the sounding of voice, and corrupting of youth.

"The whole booke of Psalmes, collected into English metre by T. Sternhold, J. Hopkins and others; conferred with the Hebreu, with apt notes to expound the same; Faithfully put upon, and where necessary, corrected; containing the whole Psalms, and all the songs and ballades which tend to the nourishing of youth and corrupting of youth."

(2) The Psalter of 1562:

The whole booke of Psalmes, collected into English metre by T. Sternhold, J. Hopkins & others; conferred with the Hebreu, with apt notes to expound the same; Faithfully put upon, and where necessary, corrected; containing the whole Psalms, and all the songs and ballades which tend to the nourishing of youth and corrupting of youth.

(3) The Psalter of 1566:

The whole booke of Psalmes, collected into English metre by Thomas Sternhold, J. Hopkins and others; conferred with the Hebreu, with apt notes to expound the same; Faithfully put upon, and where necessary, corrected; containing the whole Psalms, and all the songs and ballades which tend to the nourishing of youth and corrupting of youth.

(4) The Psalter of 1567:

The Schedule in detail, with the omission of the editions in the Brit. Mus. Lib. and elsewhere, from 1567 to 1577, which are all under the ten years' Licence, is as follows:

- Collated from an unique copy then in the possession of J. Fry, of Bristol, by Dr. H. Allon in 1860, and by Dr. N. Livingston in 1863.
From the last date given in the above Schedule (1578) the publication was continued "Cum gratia & privilegio Regnum Maiestatis," for several years. It finally read "Cum privilegio" only. The printing passed from John Day to his Executors and Successors, then to the "Company of Stationers," and finally to the Universities. The last issue was from Cambridge in 1828. In the Brit. Mus. Lib. alone there are copies of some 600 different editions of this Psalter.

The foregoing Schedule brings the following facts clearly to the front:—

1. That in 1561 a Partial Psalter with accompanying hymns was published under an Interim Licence for Private Use.
2. That in 1562 the Complete Psalter was issued, together with the Hymns, under a Seven Years' Privilege to print.
3. That in 1566 the Seven Years' Privilege to print was cut short by an Interim Licence for the Public and Private Use of both Psalter and Hymns.
4. That in 1567 this Privilege to print was granted for Ten Years.
5. That in 1577 this Privilege to print expired.
6. That in 1578 the new Privilege to print was unrestricted as to time, and remained so until the Psalter ceased to be printed in 1582.
7. That the Licence (cols. 4 and 5) was, from 1561 to 1566, for Private Use only.
8. That from 1566 to 1828 it was for both Public and Private Use.

In this Schedule we have used the words Licence and Authority and Imprint and Privilege (cols. 4 and 5) to distinguish between what seem to us to be two distinct features in the successive titlepages of the Psalter. Taking first the column which is headed Licence and Authority we find the titlepage begins with these few words:—

1561. Verily mete to be used of all sortes of people privately for their goudly solace and comfort... Newly set fourth and allowed according, &c.

These words were used with respect to the Partial Version of 1561. On the issue of the Complete Version of 1562, it was expanded thus:—

1562. Faithfully perused and allowed according... Very mete to be used of all sortes of people privately...

This rearranged and expanded wording continued from 1562 to 1566, when it was still further rearranged and expanded to:—

1566. Newly set forth and allowed to be sung of the people together in Churches, before and after Morning and Evening prayer, as also before and after the sermon, and moreover in private houses...

In the issue for 1557 (the first of the ten years' Licence and Privilege) it reads:—

Newly set forth and allowed to be sung in all Churches, of all the people together, before and after Morning and Evening prayer.

In these various editions of the Psalter we begin in 1561 with the simple expression of the authors' opinion that the book is "Verily mete to be used of all sortes of people privately," and to this end it is "Newly set forth and allowed"; in 1562 it is "Faithfully perused and allowed," for the same purpose: in 1566 it is "Newly set forth and allowed to be sung of the people together, in Churches," and later it is "in all Churches." This gradual expansion of the titlepage of the Psalter as it passed through what we may term, its period of trial from 1561 to 1578, is of some importance in this inquiry. Although the legal and technical meaning of the words "Newly set forth and allowed" is licenced only, yet, when read as it does in the first issue for Public Use in 1566, "Newly set forth and allowed to be sung of the people together, in Churches before and after Morning and Evening prayer: as also before and after the sermon, and moreover in private houses,..." it plainly points out the wide scope of the Privilege given in 1559, which was evidently meant to include all the church music of the nation, and to be the means of reestablishing the ancient forms of religious service. These authorities therefore deemed it right to raise the book from the position of a private manual into a public and authorized book for use in public worship. This they did by licencing it to be printed and published with the full knowledge that it was to "bee for of the people together, in Churches, before and after Morning and Evening prayer: as also before and after the Service. Its acceptance was universal, and continuous.

The opening lines of the psalm-versions of this Psalter are given on pp. 665-66. We now give the Hymns.

Old Version Hymns in the Psalter of 1561.

1. Hymns before the Psalm.
   (1) Veni Creator Spiritus.
   Come holy Ghost, eternall God proceeding from above.

2. Veni exultemus.
   O come, and let vs now rejoice, and sing unto the Lorde.

3. Te lucrifer.
   Wrete thee God, we knowled-through thee.

4. Benedictus.
   The only Lord of Israel be praised euermore.

5. Magnificat.
   My soule doth magnifie the Lord, my spirit eke.

   O Lorde because my hart's desire, hath wished long to.

7. Credo Anthanasi.
   What man souter he be that.

8. The Lamentation of a Sinner. [Marked N. at top.]
   O Lorde turne not away thy face.

   Our father which art in heauen, art Lord bawode be thy name.

    Hearke Israel, & what I say give heed to understand.

11. Hymns after the Psalms.
    (1) The Ten Commandments. [Signed W. Whitt.]
    Attend my people and give care
    [Here follows "An Addition" thereto of 4th or 1st.]
    The spirit of grace graunt vs (O Lorde)
    To kepe these laws, our hearts restore.

12. The Lord's Prayer. [Signed D. Cox.]
    Our father which in heauen art
    And makst vs one brotherethe.

    All my beleif, and confidence.

    Cometh the Spirtte, the God of myght, Comforter of all.

15. Da pacem domini.
    Peace in these our daies (O Lorde).

16. A thanks giving after the receving of the Lord's Supper.
    The Lord be thanked for his gifte.

17. No heading.
    Preserve vs O Lorde by thy dierde word.

The above represent these hymns as they stood in the 1561 Psalter, the headings only, being modernized, except in the case of No. 15, which is as in the original.

From 1561 to 1566 additional Hymns were given in the above, and in 1566 (the first for Public Use) the Psalter included the above and those following also:

18. The humble suit of a Sinner. [Signed M.]

19. Before Morning.
    O Lord, of whom I do depend.

20. Prayle the Lord. [Signed T. Be.]
    O ye Gentiles all.

    Prayle the Lord.

22. Complaint of a Sinner.
    Behold now yee leve God's face be.

23. The Song of the Three Children.
    Where righteounesse doth fay.

    Of the Lorde in the three Children.

25. O Lorde in the three Children.
    The Lamentation of the Lord.

    O Lorde in the three Children.

27. O all ye works of God the Lorde.

In a Cambridge ed. of the Psalter of 1662 the Psalter the same hymns are retained. Later the number gradually grew less until they numbered about fourteen. Of these hymns that is most of the most importance is the "Thanksgiving after the receiving of the Lord's Supper." The Lord be thanked for his gift. This was the first metrical hymn written for, and adopted by, the English Reformers for use at the Celebration of Holy Communion. It was first printed, so far as yet known, in the incomplete 1561 Psalter of Stembergh and Hopkins (as set forth above), p. 228, in 31 st. of 1. lat. and in this manner:

3. A thanks giving after the receving of the Lord's Supper.

The Lord be thanked for his gift.

That he dids fowke into his ainte
To him be laude therefore.

The above is somewhat formidable, and in these latter days its 124 lines would be regarded as a tax upon the patience of the congregation. When it is known however that it was sung by those who had communicated, and those who were waiting to communicate, whilst another portion of the people were communicating, that the congregation sat during the time it was being sung, that it could be curtailed if the communicants were few in number, and that its object was, as George Withers says in deference of his hymn of 200 lines for the same purpose (Hymns and Songs of the Church, 1623), to meet the "custom among us that during the time of administrating the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is some Psalm or Hymn sung, the better to keep the thoughts of the communicants from wandering," its length is understood and accounted for. The practice of sitting during the singing of hymns in the Church of England prevailed in various countries to 1840. In several collections of Psalms and Hymns dating from 1809 to 1840 the duty of standing during the singing of the hymns, as against the practice of sitting, was strongly set forth in the Prefaces thereto. [England, Hymnody. Church of, p. 946, ii.] From this it is evident that sitting to sing at the Holy Communion had extended to other parts of divine worship. The history of the hymns for Holy Communion in the New Version of Tate and Brady, which superseded this hymn in Public Use in the Church, is given at pp. 801-2. [J. J.]

Psalter, Versions in English, pp. 926-933. Since this article was stereotyped we have received the following additions to the list of Psalters and Partial Versions of the Psalms from Mr. W. L. Taylor, of Peterhead, N.B., whose collection of Psalters is very complete.

5. 1773. A New Version of the Psalms of David as used in the English Church in America, to which is added the Heidelberg Catechism. Amsterdam, 1712.

10. 1820. William Burn. See p. 545, I.

12. 1830. The Book of Psalms arranged metrically after the original Hebrew, and disposed in chronological order. London. S. Bagster, 1830.

17. 1847. John Imrie. The Book of Psalms in Metre, constructed upon the Hebrew Original, and from former Versions for Public and Private Devotion. Printed for the Author by Robertson & Co., Glasgow.

27. 1870. Spare Moments. Poems together with some selected Psalms. By John, Thornton. This is a descendant of C. S. Smart, p. 608, and contains metrical versions of 44 psalms.

Psalters, Versions in Germany. German versions of the Psalter have had comparatively little influence on the development of English Hymnody. The present work has accordingly not been planned on the scale of English Psalters, but is merely intended as a brief list of the less complete versions in German rhyme.

No versions in blank verse or in rhyme have been included, and as a few versions are mentioned unless they are renderings of at least 50 Psalms. No version has been made to include versions written before 1520, or later versions which have been printed; and only those were enumerated regarding which it has been possible to obtain definite information. The versions are given as shortly as possible. They are arranged in square brackets to show where copies of the various works intended at present (1890) to be found. The principal German Psalter is that of the principal the British Museum (representing B. M.); the Royal Libraries of Berlin, Munich; the University Library at Göttingen; the Town Libraries at Hamburg, Leipzig, Augsburg; and the library of the Congregation at Wernigerode.

The versions may be classed as follows:

I. Versions in Germany, not including Catholic Versions

1. 1517-1560.

1. During this period many very few single Psalms were included in the books of the Lutheran Church, e.g. King's G. B., 1529, and in the books of the same, which is still greater, in the Zwicke's G. B., 1528, Rostock G. B., 1531. But no version was adopted for church use in any of the Lutherans. Versions of select Psalms made by M. Luther, J. Jonas, J. Agol, E. Heuser, L. Trench, L. Trimmer, and many others. The versions were:

1. Der ganze Psalter. Leipzig, 1547 [Johann Claus, of Ansbach, in Bavaria, but not intended for singing].

2. Der ganze Psalter Uebersetzt in ganzne Sprache. Nürnberg. 1541 [B. M. and Wernigerode, Hans Gammerfeif, of Burghausen, near near in Bavaria. A number are recast of versions by S. Sachs, and others.]

3. Der ganze Psalter, in neuem Gesangbuch der H. Landt, in dem und M. und Ber.]. By Burkard Wallis, who was pastor at Altenrode in Hesse. It was in general favour, though never adapted for
The Reformed Church a more prominent place was given to Psalm versions than in the Lutheran, as the following details will show:

In the Constanza Neues geanggeschichte of 1524-40, out of Kirchen Regeln of 1524-26 the Psalms were versioned in the Strassburg Psalmen of 1529. Men of 1530 contained Psalms only, added to the Lutheran psalter, as is the case in the Strassburg Psalmen of 1537. The Psalms were translated in the Augsburg, 1539 (Munich), revised by Joachim Biber, in the Theologische-Lexicon in 1546, and in the succeeding ed., of 1546-60 the number of 1 salm detached Psalms were versioned by T. and A. Baurer, W. and G. Reiss. Besides the Strassburg Psalter of 1529 another complete version appeared as:

1. Der gantzer Psalter (1543) of Joachim Alber, sometime pastor in Augsburg. The version are few or few of them passed into the hymn-books save of Strassburg and Augsburg.

2. Among the Enthusiasts a complete version appeared as:

During this period a considerable number of detached Psalm versions appeared, and at least 13 complete versions, one of which, the Augsburg, 1546, dominated in the Reformed Church. In the Lutheran Church versions of all the Psalms, collected from various sources, principally from Johann Magdeburg (see below), were included as part of the Kirchen-Gesang, pub. at Frankfurt am-Main in 1563. Variations of individual Psalms were made by N. Herman, C. Fugger, R. Ringwaldt, N. Schnecker, L. Helmbold, S. Schoengass, J. Fischart, D. Werler, W. Ammonius, J. Mühlmann, and others. In the Bohemian Brethren's Kirchen-Gesang of 1566 a number of Psalm versions by J. Jechky, P. Herbst, C. Hertischak and M. Polycarp were included (see p. 156, ii.).

The more important complete versions of this period were:

1. Der Psalter Davidis von alten und neuer Zeit, in deutsche reimen verfasset. Frankfurt-am-Main, 1565 (Heidelberg). By Johann Magdeburg, diaconus of the St. Katharine's, were included in the Kirchen-Gesang, pub. at Frankfurt am-Main in 1565 and 1600. In the Frankfurt Psalmen und Gesang, 1603.

2. Der Psalter der Alten und Neuen Testament in 1566, the most complete version in the Reformed Church. He not only rode to the tunes of the French Psalter, including them in four-part harmony, but literally tr. the Marot-Besa versions. He had written his version in 1564 and shown it to Duke Albert of Prussia, but from various reasons he was not then printed, and the Duke's death in 1568 delayed its appearance. Employed at first only for private distribution this version gradually came into universal use in the Reformed Church, e.g. before, 1561; Heise Cassel, 1666; St. Gall, 1692; Bern, 1699; Zürich, 1646, lic. This delayed version until the appearance of Jortins version in 1789, and it was in recent times still used in some parts of Switzerland. It was as warmly welcomed, and was stigmatized by the Lutherans as a Calvinistic, and as a service of worship, as obscuring the Evangelical spirit of the Psalms. The English version of 1662 was published in opposition to it. To the ed. of Loboasse pub. at Herborn in 1595, and in one later ed. there was added an appendix of Kitche Psalmen and gesellige Lieder. Of the melodies many passed into use among the Lutherans, and also a few in the Psalms-versions. The only one tr. into English in that of Ps. xxxiv. (see p. 663, ii.)

3. Der Psalter Davidis Pumpney, auct. die in Lutherschen Kirchen geschworeene Mas-geschichte ausge schickt. Leipzig, 1562 (Berlin). By Cornelius Becker (p. 124, i.). This was written for the use of a genuine Lutheran spirit and to Lutheran tunes, in order to counteract the influence of Loboasse's version. It soon gained popularity, and was set to four-part music by Seth Calvisius (Leipzig, 1646, lic.), and by Heinrich Schütz (Freiberg in Saxony, 1629). The complete Psalter was as part of the Weisentals B. C. 1641, a large edition in the Dresden, 1678. Few versions, such as those of Ps. xii, xiv, xxvi, are still in use in Germany, and the first of these has passed into English (p. 124, i.).

4. Other versions of this period were:

f. Der Psalter Davidis Davidis Pumpney ge fasst. Frankfurt-am-Main and Strassburg, 1582 (Berlin). By Cyriacus Naapengem, a-sometyme town and court preacher at Mansfeld, d. 1619 at Nürnberg. There is a version of each Psalm by himself (except Ps. 145, where he gives a version by his father), and a few by other hands.

12. Psalmen des Königlichen Propheten David's auf die Fränkische Kunst, C. 1588 (Munich); by Philipp, the Younger, Baron of Wiirtemberg and Beilstein. Written about 1544.

During this period the Litauischer Psalter obtained its ascendency in the Reformed Church, and no considerable additions of merit were made to the Psalm-versions of the Lutheran Church. Versions of detached Psalms were made by M. A. von Löwenstern, M. Behm, A. Buecher, P. Flemming, J. H. Schein, M. Rinkart, B. Heßler, Dietrich von der Werder, G. Weissel, H. Albert, J. P. Titius, J. Rist, D. Demenke. Weber, and others. The more important complete versions were:

29. Die Psalmen Davids. Nach der Prantseitslichen Weisheit gesetzt. Danzig, 1637 (Wernigerode). By Martin Opitz (p. 871, l.v.). A number had previously appeared, e.g. in his Zehn Psalmen Davids, 1634. An improved ed. was pub. in 1639 (Berlin), but few came into C. U. in Germany, and none have passed into English.

30. Deutscher Psalmbuch. Davids. Rinteln, 1640 (Wernigerode). By Andreas Heinrich Bu-bolts, sometime Prefect at Rinteln, and finally Lutheran Superintendent at Brunswick, where he d. in 1671. By his contemporaries this version was ranked higher than that of Opitz, but it is diffuse and wanting in force. Included in his Geistliche Deutsche Pomata, Brunswick, 1651 (Royal Library, Hanover).

Other versions of this period were:

33. Der Psalmer Davids in die gebrauchlichste Kirchen-

34. Die Psalmen Davids, im wesentlichen nach dem lateinischen Text gesetzt. Nürnberg, 1630 (Wernigerode). By Ambrosius Mettler, who in 1607 became one of the masters in the 34. Athenaeum school at Nürnberg, and d. at Nürnberg about 1627.

35. Psalmen Davids, im wesentlichen nach dem lateinischen Text gesetzt. Nürnberg, 1635 (Ps. 1-10, 14-23, 29-34). By Georg Werner (Appx. II.). These versions are above the average in merit, and a few from p. 1. came into German C. U.

66. Die Psalmen Davids, by Johann Heinrich Solms, who in 1785 became rector of the school at Liiben in Saxony, and d. there 1785.

During this period the tendency was to write moral hymns rather than to attempt Psalms-versions. Among the Lutheran the only Psalm-versions that need be noted, besides those by Cramer and Lehms, is G. G. Bürde's (Ps. prophy. Psalmen (1764, 4to.)). In the Reformed Church there now appeared a tendency to write versions of the Psalms.

67. Die Psalmen Davids, by Simon Ludwig Eberhard de Mercès (since 1760 court preacher and superintendant of the Reformed Church at Danzig, d. 1820), 11 of which are renderings are repeated in the Alt-Dessau G. B. 1700, mainly from J. A. Cramer, but partly supplied by the editor.

During this period various editions of individual Psalms were made by F. H. C. de la Motte Eq, J. F. von Meyer, E. R. Stier, C. J. P. Spitta, J. F. Lange, J. C. R. Stru, and others. Versions, more or less complete, ap-Porfriesham. Basel, 1838 (B. M.) By Eduard Eys, finally, 1847-77, director of the Theological Seminary at Blaubeuren, thereafter retired to private life at Ulm, d. 1851, pub. 96 selected Psalms.

96. Psalmlieder, oder die Psalmen in singbaren Lieder umgewandl. Lubeck, 1846 [Berlin]. By Johann Christoph Blunhardt, after 1852 director of an asylum at Bud Boll, near Gippenheim, Württemberg, d. 1860. 185 versions, embracing the complete Psalter.

97. Ausgewählte Psalmen Davids. Erlangen, 1852 [Wernigerode]. By Dr. J. H. A. Ehrard (p. 330 f.). Good and faithful renderings of 72 Psalms. One or two are found in recent hymn-books of the Reformed Church.

98. Die Psalmen Davids in Kirchenlied für die katholische Andacht, Breslau, 1854. By Sigismund Friedrich Gottlieb Schneider, at present pastor at Leon, and superintendent of the district of Trebnitz in Silesia, d. 1866.

105. Die Psalmen der alten Hebräer in neuer Gestalt und Anordnung. Neuwied, 1864. (H. M.) By Dr. Georg Heinrich Jahr, who was from 1825 to 1830 master in the Moravian schools at Newield, h. 1861.

III. Roman Catholic Versions.

An account of German Psalters would be incomplete without some mention of the Roman Catholic versions. Very little information is however available regarding these, and, excepting those by Ueberling, they do not seem to possess much intrinsic value or to have exercised any great influence on the development of German Roman Catholic Hymnody. In the ordinary services of the Church the Psalter continued to be used in the Latin Vulgate version. The Roman Catholic Church abolished, from the earliest (Michael Veit's Neues Gesangbuchlein, Leipzig, 1537) onwards, as a rule contained a certain proportion of Psalm-versions, but no complete rhymed German version of the Psalms appears to have been authorized for use in any diocese in Germany. The only complete, or approximately complete, rhymed Psalter made by private individuals, that has been possible to trace, are the following:

122. Die Psalmen Davids in alther Teutsche gar gesang... Cologne, 1561 [B. M. and Berlin]. By Caspar Ueberling, then C. pastor at Kaiserswerth. (4th ed. at Cologne 1617). This is one of the best 16th cent... to the Elector of Saxony.

123. Der Psalter Psalms. Dresden, 1590 [Berlin]. By Vittus Abel Endter, elsewhere described as "of Carlsbad... in the service of the Elector of Saxony.

125. Die Psalmen des Königlichen Propheten Davids. In Teutsche Reimen und Melodien verfasst. Mainz, 1656. This work has also a second title, beginning Kasuarischer Psalter, dass... in der winterm... zum Datum Frankfurt-am-Main, 1656. [Gottingen.] No name of author is given.

126. Harmonie Davids mit teutschen Satiren bespannet... Gesangweise anerklert. Augsburg, 1653 [B. M. and Wernigerode]. In the preface it is said to be for the use of the Austrian, Bavarian, and Swabian churches. The colophon describes it as "by one of the Society of Jesus."

127. Der schöne Psalmen-Brant des Königlichen Propheten Davids, in hochdeutschen Reimen gesang... geflossen. Frankfurt-am-Main, 1673. By Johann Philipp, Baron von Schönborn, who d. 1673, as Bishop of Mainz. (Breslau, 1677, Kc. by Joseph Anton Cramer, b. 1737, sometimes Jesuit precepteur at Hildesheim, where he d. 1784.

The above article, though doubtless imperfect, contains an approximately complete list of versions of the Psalter in German rhymed verse, and is much fuller than anything has yet appeared in Germany. For kind help in its compilation thanks are especially due to Professor Dr. Oscar von Giesbert, Berlin; Dr. Eduard Jacobs, Wernigerode; Dr. Laubmann, director of the Royal Library at Munich; Dr. J. Frank, pastor at the Town Church, Augsburg; Pastor Dr. Kraft, Ellerfeld; Pastor Carl Berthou, b.d., Hamburg; Seminarius Wilhelm Jaks, Lüneburg; and M. Felix Bovet, Grosseto.

Among the non-rhyming versions may be mentioned those by J. Alde (Colmar, 1521); P. H. Ritter (Breslau, 1535); F. W. G. Weicks (Nuremberg, 1542) and J. B. König (Augsburg, 1562-63); Ferdinand Stender (Liége, 1568); Wilhelm Patz (Hamburg, 1666); (Basle) Rockel (Innsbruck, 1583). This is vol. iii. of Die Durchgang der Hymnus; while most of the recent German commentaries on the Psalms contain a version according to the parallelism of the Hebrew.

We may add that some collections of hymns have appeared under titles which conveyed the erroneous impression that they consisted of Psalm versions, e.g. the Psalmen Evangelisch (Wolfe-Hittel, 1827) of Albert Ldber (Stuttgarten); the Psalmen Psalter (Breslau, 1843) of David von Schweinitz (R. M.); the Baslerischen Psalter und Hymnenbuch (Altenstein, 1872-73) of Johann Müller (Hist. und Antiq. Society at Stettin); and the Johannes des Hymnuspsych (Nuremberg, 1872) of N. E. Zobel (Royal Library, Haarlem).

After this article had been finally arranged the interesting work of Dr. O. Wetzstein entitled Diel religiöse Lyrik der Deutschen im 19. Jahrhundert (Neustrelitz, 1891) came to hand. There are pp. 310, 311 a long note on recent German versions of the Psalms. These not noted above are the versions by Hermann Brüllow, photographic in Danzig (Psalmen Davids in Liedern, 1884); by Wilhelm Preger (Psalmbüchlein, Rothenburg on the Tauber, 1886; 2nd ed. Gütersloh, 1888, as Stimmen aus dem Heiligthum); and Professor Dr. Watterich (Die Psalmen metrisch übersetzet, Baden Baden, 1890).

To Deum laudamus, pp. 1119 - 1334.

The following additions to this article must be noted:

1. At the end of §1. Authorities, 1119, ii. read:

There is an interesting article [by Dom G. Morin] in the Revue Benedictine for 1897 which contains some curious notes and discussion, Belgium., "L'Auteur du Te Deum." Morin attributes the introduction of the hymn (verses 1-21) into the Breviary of St. Benedict in the 14th century (Liber 119, p. 182) to Bishop Nicasius of Aquileia (444-484), and hence explains the titles which attribute the hymn to them as authors.

2. At the end of §6. Version, i. Old German, p. 1127, ii. read:

The Icelandic Post-reformation Graduale (to use up to the end of the last century) contains a version in a sort of rough rhyme, beginning:

Herrn God pig heldukr viur
Herrn God vier Jokum VIor
Hvar Filur Elime
Vegsamaal altt Jarðbík

The literal translation of verse 16 is "The Virgin's womb hath this not despised, this mark of grace through the Grace." The copy quoted is Ediitio xii. anno 1775, pp. 251-256.

3. At the end of §vii. Liturgical Use 7, (4) (Rubrics of the Roman Breviary) p. 1130, i. read:

Dom G. Morin sums up the case of present usage thus: "Aujourd'hui... comme chacun le sait dans la liturgie romaine on ne chante régulièrement le Te Deum aux Matines que si l'on doit chanter le (citer en crevole à la Messe," i.e. p. 155 note.

4. Read on from p. 1130. ii. immediately before §viii. Musical Settings, as follows:

In Appendix B to Mr. Walter de Gray
Birch's volume edited for the Hampshire Record Society in 1889, An Ancient MS. of the 8th or 9th Century formerly belonging to St. Mary's Abbey or Nun's Abbey, Winchester, is a remarkable text of the Te Deum was printed for the first time, though apparently without the editor's fully perceiving its importance. It is contained in a small ms. of 7 leaves, now numbered Harl. 7633 in the British Museum, but also bearing the press-mark Add. 5004, and once bound with Add. 5002. It is in bold Irish hand, apparently of the 8th century (see Brit. Mus. Catalogue of Latin MSS. with facsimiles, p. 61). These leaves contain a certain number of prayers and Litany and a hymn on fol. 7, headed Oratio, beginning "In pace Christi dormium! Ut nullum malum ulede at in which Erias, Helias, and Saint Patrick are invoked. The Te Deum runs as follows (fol. 5 v.):

It may be noticed that the writer once at least elsewhere seems to write a woman, as on fol. 7, "Suscipite orationem familiam tuam," though here "pecatorii" is used.

This text of the Te Deum stands alone in ending at verse 21, which we have seen was concluded to be the original close of the hymn, at any rate in Latin. It agrees with the other Irish texts in the most appropriate and probably correct reading "Tu ad liberandum mundum suscipiit hominem," but it has also the following extremely peculiar readings:—verse (1) the inversion; (2) "caeli et terrae;" (6) the addition "osanna in ecclesia;" (9) the omission of "laudat;" (16) "abhorristi" for "horrusti;" (17) the whole verse containing a confusion of two readings, "devota morte;" and "devota moris acersti;" and esp. "emoristii" without "credentia;" possibly the correct reading. (18, 19)

This reading may possibly be the more ancient. It is at any rate more intelligible than "index credentes eos venturas;" (21) "in gloriae intrinse;" it may be either the original reading or it may be an attempt to soften "munerarum," taken in a Pelagian sense.

In any case this text confirms the Irish text in an important particular.

If the legend which connected St. Patrick with Lirins has any foundation (see J. H. Todd, St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, p. 336, Dublin, 1861), it might reasonably account for a very primitive text of the Te Deum preserved in Ireland. [Jons 8.]

Thomas of Celano. It is also remarkable that neither the date of the death of this writer, whose intimate association with the Deus is on record. He was a native of Celano, small town near the lake of Fucinum, farther Abruzzo, and hence his name Thomas of Celano. Several of the important of this time were driven there by the same Frederic. The Franciscan Order was established first there during the lifetime of St. Francis. Thomas was therefore one of the first. He was subsequently informed of the convents of Worms, Montbrison, and afterwards sole master of the Rhine districts. The last named appears to have been held till 1230, when he returned to his native town. As he was now advanced in years, he was not on record. He is sometimes given as "Thomas of St. Francis." His claim to the authorship of the Te Deum is discussed at p. 964, 8. Thomas always appears as "Life of St. Francis."

Viva! viva! Deus! Che par mio bene. [Paesiantiae.] The author of the hymn is unknown. In the Index of a People's Hymn. 1867, it is attributed to "Alfonso" (Liguori), but we know of no certainty for the ascription. The hymn is in the Raccolta di Orazionei e Pie Opere dell' Indulgenza, and is one of the "Aspiraciones Divote." There is usually regarded as belonging of the 16th century, but we have not traced it beyond this work. The original of the stanzas in C. U., as in H. A. d. others, read:

> Viva! viva! Deus, Che par mio bene.

Tutto il Sangue versò dalle Sue Vene.

Il Sangue di Gesù fu la mia Vita:

Benedetta la tua Bonda Infida.

Questo Sangue in enormi sec luce:

Che dall' Inferno il Mondo ha ricavato.

D'Abele il Sangue gridava vendetta,

Di quel Gesù per noi dopera a spezzar.

Se di tal Sangue aspetta il nostro caro,

Fuggi il ministro dei tuoi fancer.

Se di Gesù il calza il Pariv Sangue,

Triumphi il Ciel, trummi l' amore e l' armonia.

Il calmo dunque insegna il cristiano.

Faber in his note appended to this hymn says:

> To all the faithful who sing or play the above

Pinsa, [1890-1923] grants an indulgence of 7 days for all applicable as to the souls in Purgatory.

This hymn has been tr. as:

1. Hail Jesus! Hail! Who for my sake, & c. Tr. by V. P. Mahony, in his Hymns for St. Wulfrun, 1849, p. 136, Hymns of St. Francis and Hymns of St. Francis, 1849; and his Hymns and Prayers, 1862. It is given in several collections, including the Hymn Book, 1867, and others.

2. Grave be to Jesus. By E. Caswall, pub. in his Descriptive Hymn Book, 1843, p. 133; and in his Hymns and Prayers, 1862. Since then it has been repeated in several collective editions. A tr. of the Raccolta di Orazionei, was given as The Raccolta: Collection of Indulgent Prayers. Translated by Andrea St. 1880. In it Caswall's tr. as above was bodied in full at p. 119, and therein is it said that the compiler of the "Raccolta was a Roman priest of the name of Thelesphoemps Galli, who d. in 1845. There is no evidence to show that he composed the "Viva! viva! Gezant." [J. J.]

Young, Edward Mallet, M.A., S. of Sir G. Young, Bart., was b. Jan. 24, 1839, and educated at Elton and Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. first class Classical Honours, 1863, and Fellow of Trinity College, 1865-78. He became Assistant Master at Harrow School in 1863, and Head Master of Sherborne School in 1878. He entered Holy Orders in 1869, and was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1876-79, and Hon. Canon in Salisbury Cathedral 1891. In 1888 he edited Hymns for the Use of Sherborne School, an excellent collection for its special purpose, and to it he contributed:

1. Abide in me and I in you. Union with Christ.
3. Captain of our salvation take. Ember days. This is C. Wesley's hymn rewritten and adapted for Public Schools [see p. 594, ii.]
4. O merciful and holy. This is the altered form of Dr. Butler's hymn noted on p. 590, iii. 5.
5. We praise Thy grace, O Saviour. This is an altered form of Bp. How's hymn noted at p. 540, ii.

APPENDIX—PART II.

A

A blessing on our pastor's head. J. Montgomery. [Psalms and Hymns.] Written Dec. 28, 1848, for the Jubilee of the Rev. W. Jay of Bath, in 4 st. of 11 l. (5. 9.) In 1863 it was included in Montgomery's Orig. Hymns. It is sometimes given as "A blessing on Thy servant's head," as in the Prin. Meth. Hymn. 1867.

A. Patre Unigenitus. p. 3. Atract is, "The Father's sole-begotten Son," by T. B. Pollock in the 1867 ed. of St. A. & M.

Aberdeen Breviary. [See p. 171, ii.]

Abide with me, fast falls the eventide, p. 7. A cento from this hymn, beginning "Swing to the lily robe," is found in "Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884.

Ach! treuer Gott. p. 10, ii. This hymn is found in the Berlin ed. of Cruger's Praxis, &c. 1853, No. 737.

Ach, uns wird das Herz so leer, p. 10, ii. This hymn was written in the spring of 1828.

Ad laudes Salvatoris. p. 12, ii. We have found this in a ms. of circa 1199 in the Bodleian (Liter. Misc. 341, f. 58).

2. To share the Lamb's high marriage rites. By J. D. Chambers, 1866, p. 81. The opening stanza of this tr. is noted at p. 395, ii. 3, as part of a cento in the Hymnary, 1872.

Ad perennis vitae system. p. 12, i. 4. Du Méril's text is from a ms. of the 10th cent. in the Bibl. Nat. Paris (Lat. 10597). The poem is also in the St. Gall nos. 573, of the 9th or 10th cent. Note also that Neale's tr. (No. 2 at p. 13, i. 3) in his Poetical and Pious Parody, 1868, which was based on Wackerbarth's tr., 1843, "At the Fourmost day of life eternal," has yielded a second edition "in the People's Hymn. 1867, and the St. Margaret's Hymn. (East Grinstead) as, "Where the sacred holy bath." This tr. has alterations by Dr. Littlechild, from Dr. Neale's text direct the cento: "There no wash-mo-on, nor wash-in" in the St. Margaret's Hymn. 1875, is taken.

Ad regiam Agni lapses. p. 14, i. Once the angel started back. This is in the American Epico. Hymn. 1871, begins with st. 3 of J. Williams' tr. 1845.

Ad tempus non rasura, p. 14, i. When first the world sprang forth, in Kennedy, 1863, is based on E. Caswall's tr. beginning with st. iii.

Adatum de St. Victor, p. 17, i. A 2nd and greatly improved ed. of this "Quasi Fidelissimus by L. Gautier was pub. at Paris in 1841.

Ades Pater supremus. p. 19, i. This is in a ms. of the 5th cent. in the Bibl. Nat. Paris (Lat. 10594, f. 19). Another tr. of the cento Ades Pater is "Father, Most High, be with us." In the 1889 ed. of H. A. & M., by the Compilers.

Adesae, Coelitum cornuti. p. 19, ii. This hymn was given in the Charitac Brev., 1664, p. 423, as "Promissus on Isstati dies." [Adesae corollae. p. 20, i. In the Evening Office of the Church in Latin and English, Lond. 1766, this hymn consists of st. 1, ii. vii. viii. of the text as on p. 20. Concerning the tr. it must be noted:

1. That to Canon Oakeley's tr. as in the Altar Hymn. 1844, No. 7, Mr. W. T. Brooke added a tr. of st. vii. vii. as on p. 20, thus producing a tr. of the full text.

2. The tr. No. 7, "Come hither, ye faithful," is attributed, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1866, to "C. P. Krauth." "Come, all ye faithful," in the B. C. Hymn. for the Year, 1867, is a slightly altered form of Neale's tr. (No. 9), which dates 1844.

Adesae sanctae Triasias. p. 23, i. Also tr. as "Be near us, Holy Trinity," in H. A. & M., 1889, by the Compilers.

Adote to devote, p. 23, ii. Additional trs. are:

2. Devoutly we adore Thee, Deity unseen. This in the Altar Hymn, 1844, is Neale's tr. slightly altered.

3. O lying Pelican, O Jesus, my sweet Lord. Anon. in the R. C. Parochial H. Bk., 1848.

4. Hoole's tr. noted on p. 23, ii. 7, should read "Thee I adore, the Truth concealed."

5. O illustrious memorial of our dying Lord. This in Literator Domini, N. Y., 1884, begins st. ii. of Bp. Woodfall's tr.

Adias superius Spiritus. p. 23, ii. This hymn we find based upon the "Veni sancte Spiritus Bk., (p. 103, ii.), and is found in the Paris Brev., ed. 1822, but not in that of 1736. Concerning the tr. it must be noted that No. 5, attributed to H. Bonar, is really a tr. by him of the Vesu superius Spiritus, Pater benigne.

Adius sanctae primus. p. 23, ii. We have found this hymn in a Monastic Hymnary of the 11th cent. in the Brt. Mus. (Add. 30831, f. 165).

Aeterna Christi munera. Et. p. 24, i. The original of the transcript by Junius has been found in the Bodleian. It dates circa 890. (Junius, 26, f. 116.) It is also in a 9th cent. ms. at St. Gall, No. 454; and later
ms. elsewhere.

Aeterna coeli gloria, p. 35, ii. From E. Caswall's
(No. 2) the cento in the Hymns for the Year, 1867; beginning with 'The star that heralds the morn' and that in Hymns & Songs of Praise, N.Y., 1874, with it; 'Jesus, be near us when we wake'.

Aeneas Rex relinquse, p. 26, ii. We have found this hymn in several ms., in addition to those named at p. 27, i. The most important of these are the Bein mss., No. 363, circa 900, and No. 416 of the 10th cent.
The Monastic text, in 15 st., is also in a 14th cent. ms. in Aeterna festa gaudia, p. 57, ii. Since this article was in the Church of God review. See E. G. Minshull has pub. a 2nd ed. of his work on Adam of St. Victor (1861) in which he corrects his first impression that this hymn was by Adam. He omits the text, says it has been falsely attributed to Adam; and is unworthy of him. The earliest ms.

which he cites is a Gradual of St. Victor written before 1239, in which begins, 'Interni festa gaudia'. (Bibl.

it is a portion of "Do I believe what Jesus saith?" that the hymn in its full form appeared in Walpole's Hymns, 1787, and that the portion begins, "Am I a soldier of the CROSS?": subsequently appeared in his Sermons, 1721-24. The facts are (1) that the portion began, "Am I a soldier of the CROSS?" and (2) the two were united as one hymn. The former is "Do I believe what Jesus saith?" in Sermons, and the latter in Hymns, No. 37, Pt. II, sometime in the present century. We find it in T. Nelson's ed. of Walpole, 1844, and others, but in its full form before 1800.

Charles, David, youngest brother of Thomas Charles (see above), was b. in 1752, and was a Minister of the Calvinistic Methodists. He wrote several hymns, some of which are in C. U. in Wales.

Charles, Elizabeth, née Bussdle. Mrs. Charles has scandalously assumed the name of "Humble-Charles," as given in the 1809 ed. of the Hy., Comp. Other hymns in C. U. are:
1. Around a Table, not a tomb, Holy Communion, dated Oct. 1833. In her Poems, 1868, in 4 st. of 4 l.
5. What marks the dawning of the Y. a? New Year. From her Three Wakings, 1850 p. 184.

Charles, Thomas, M.A., s. of a farmer, was b. at Pant-dawn, Carmarthem, Oct. 14, 1755, and educated at Oxford. He was curate at Halifax for three years, and then returned to Wales as curate of Llanymollwyd. Through a disagreement with his Rector, mainly over the education of the children in the parish which Charles took great interest in, he left his curacy, and shortly after joined the Calvinistic Methodists. His work in assisting to found the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the organization of Sunday Schools as now conducted in Wales, is well known. He d. in 1814. He wrote but one hymn, "(By far the merriest holiday I've ever had," Full Selection, in 10 st.), which is given in the Calvinistic Methodist's H. Bk. In two parts. This is held in some repute in the principality.

Chaterton, Thomas, was b. at Bristol, Nov. 20, 1752. He received his early education at Colston's charity school in that city, and then was articled to an attorney. In April, 1770, he proceeded to London, where he earned but little through his literary labours. Overcome at last by poverty and distress, he poisoned himself in August the same year. He was buried at St. Andrew's, Holborn. His Mickey-Mauns in Prose and Verse were pub. posthumously in 1778. From this work two hymns have come into C. U.:
1. Almighty Framery of the skyes. (1764.) Christmas.
2. O tid, Whose thunder shakes the sky. (1765.) Resignation.

Cheser, O. B., p. 218, i. He d. Oct. 1, 1890.

Children, in your earliest youth. (Lark's Pity.)
This hymn is in the 23rd ed. of the Silver Street S. Scholar's Companion, 1829, in 4 st. of 4 l. The principal compiler of that ed. was John Latta. Although it may possibly be his, yet, lacking direct evidence to that effect, we must give it as "Anon."

Children, listen to the Lord. (Public Worship.)
This is an upper hymn for a children's service. It is given in Dr. T. Hastings's (American) Mother's H. Bk., 1834, in 3 st. of 4 l, and is there said to be from the "Lion Michtreel."

Children, you have gone astray. J. Burton. [Invitation.]
Contributed to the Child's Companion, April 1834, in 3 st. of 4 l. In 1846 it was repeated in the S. N. U. H. Bk., and again in the author's One Hundred Hymns, 1850. It is given in several modern collections for children.

Chesley, Henry Fishburne, b. at Blackleyhurst, Lancashire, Dec. 6, 1840, and educated at the Royal Institution, Liverpool. In 1831 he was engaged as a member of the staff of the London Athenaeum. This connexion he retained for 25 years. He d. Dec. 15, 1872. He pub. some novels and a large number of songs.

Christ crescendo dominator alme, p. 226, ii. Daniel, 1646, p. 7, cites this as in the Vatic. ms. 82 of the old testament. It is also in several psf. of the 16th and 17th cents. additional to those named in p. 227, i.

Christ, qui lux es et dies, p. 227, i. This hymn occupies in Dutch hynmody a position which is probably unique, being the only instance of a hymn passing without interruption from the ancient office books of the church into general use among the laity. At the reformation in Holland, when hymns were forbidden and only metrical psalms allowed to be sung, a translation of the hymn in very archaic Dutch, "(Christ, thou sun thy light doth shine") was appended to the authorized metrical psalter of Petrus Dathoens, 1664. When a new and revised psalter was adopted in 1723, a revised, in a free translation by H. Glissius, "O groot Christus, eeuwleicht," occurred at the same place at the end of the psalter. From this source it has been adopted into all the hymnals compiled for the use of Dutch speaking mission congregations in South Africa, where it is so universally popular that a Western missionary, John J. van der Stroom, has adopted it for the "beautiful evening hymn of the nation." J. A.

Christian seuctor decus, p. 229, ii. The name of this hymn is very doubtful, and it is not a L. H. Bk.

Christian! see: the orient morning. Romans, This hymn is given in the American Hymnal of 1846, as from "Lausania's Hymns." It is also in the Dutch Hymn of the Church, N. Y., 1849.

Christians and brethren, see: part. This in Gramm and Rassall's H. Bk., 1840, is largely much; the name of the "Christian's brethren" is as p. 229, i.

Christians of St. Thomas. [See Syrian Hymns, pp. 111-13.]

Churton, Edward, p. 233, ii. From his Caledon Psalter the following are also in C. U.:
1. High raised upon the holy hills. Ps. Lxxvi begins in some collections with st. b, "O Zion, prepare things to come."
2. Lord, keep me for I trust in Thee, Be Thou A. C.

Clementian Breviary, p. 179, i.

Claren, Mary F. Sister Mary F. Clare of Kneum, in written several hymns of merit, including:
1. Before the throne of God above, Angel.
2. Hark, the angels' bright are singing. Easter.
3. Jesus was once a little child. Jesus the Holy Family.

Of these Nos. 1, 2 are in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, and No. 2 in W. G. Horsey's Hymn Book, 1889.

Clark, C. G., p. 236, ii. Other hymns are:
1. From the priceless harvest. Harvest. In his Suppl. Hym. to Harland's Ch. Ps. and Hym., 1847.
2. Though then didst in spire in ancient days, Founding a Memorial Window. Written for the Enlarging of a Memorial Window in Thetford Church, Devon, in Aug. 25, 1849, and printed with the prayers used at that occasion.

Clayton, George, b. in London, Apr. 9, 1804, 6 July 1, 1862, was a Congregational Minister at Walthamstow. His hymn on Conversion of Self to Christ, taken "From you delusive scenes." Selby's date his hymn 1815.

Clementinus, Titius Flavius, p. 238, i. A tr. of his hymn 'Tresorier waakely,' by Mrs. E. Charles, in her Five Ch. Life in Song, 1846, p. 44, is "Month of labor we cannot speak." In the American Universal Hymn and Tune Book, 1869, No. 424, "Ever be near our side," composed of two stanzas from Dr. Dexter's tr. and add. it p. 388. ii. Ivan Plumridge has also tr. it as "Our is the stubborn sheeple," in his Lassus and other Poems, 1864, p. 171. He tr. it in March, 1846. Dr. Mangin's tr. in his hiberna, st. 176, and in the Second Set, French Hymnal, 1876. The latter begins "Lead, lead sheeple, lead on."

Clearchse, Anna Jane Douglas MacLean, lady. General W. B. M. Clephane, was b. 1803, and d. 1860. Her hymn on Tolling of the bell (p. 156) is in Thring's Coll., 1845, and several other p.

fourth daughter of Ebenezer Fuller-Maitland of Stanford Hall, and Park Place, Henley-on-Thames, was b. at Shinfield Park, near Reading, June 29, 1809; married, on Jan. 29, 1831, to John Colquhoun, son of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., and d. May 27, 1877. To her mother's collection, entitled Hymns for Private Devotion, &c., 1832, she contributed anonymously a piece beginning "Launch'd upon the stormy ocean," and her well-known additions to Kirke White's fragmentary poem in sorrow, oft in woe" (p. 774, l.). In the 1863 ed. of her mother's work there is another piece by her—"There is a vale in Israel's road," and signed "S. C. M."

Holy Ghost, descend from high, p. 24.ii. in some American collections this reads "Come Holy Ghost, come down on high."

Holy Spirit, calm me (wear) mind. (Withertone.) We have traced this hymn to A Coll. of Ps. and Hymns for the Use of the Lock Chapel, 1803, where it is the first hymn to be sung before Divine Service, in 3 st. of 4. In Bickersteth's Christian Psalmodist, 1833, it has an additional stanza, and in this form it is repeated in the Eng. Presbyterian Church Prayse, 1833. It is sometimes attributed to "John Stewart"; but we have failed to find authority for the statement. The 3 st. form of the text is given in Cowman Psalms, 1797, as by "Brownie." This we regard as an error. [W. T. B.]

Come, let us all unite to praise. (Praise to Christ) This hymn, possibly by M. Madan, appeared in his Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 111, in 4 st. of 4. It was repeated by R. Conyers' Ps. & Hys., 1772; Bickersteth, 1833, and others to modern hymn-books.

Come, let us to the Lord our God. p. 240. I. This has been rendered into Latin by H. M. Macgill, 1876, No. 67, as "Veinami importationem."

Come, O some with sacred [pious] lays. G. Wilber. [Ps. cxvilv.] From his version of Ps. 145 in his Psalms of David, &c., 1632. It is in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, and other collections.

Come, O my soul, in sacred lays. [compliment.] In Miller's Sings and Songs, &c., 1849, p. 225, in Lusfield, 1846, p. 109, and in others this hymn is attributed to "Thomas Blacklock" (p. 144, ii.), but in no instance is the statement supported by satisfactory evidence. We have failed to trace it in any of Blacklock's works.

Come, O my soul, to Calvary. H. L. Hastings. [Good Friday.] This hymn, in the Bap. Prayse Bk., N.Y., 1871, is attributed to "H. L. Hastings's Songs of Pilgrimage, Boston, U.S.A., 1848; it is signed "H. 1871." From this we understand that it is by that writer.

Come, O Thou Traveller unknown, p. 256. i. In the Prim. Met. Hys., 1875, Nos. 546-15, are three stanzas from this poem:—(1) "Come O Thou Traveller unknown"; (2) "What though my shriveling flesh complain"; and (3) "I know Thee, Saviour, Who Thou art."

Come, Thou Fount of all blessing, p. 258. i. Sometimes given as "Father, source of all my blessing," and as "Jesus, source of all my blessing."

Come, Thou long expected Jesus, p. 255. ii. This is rendered into Latin by H. M. Macgill, 1876, No. 11, as "Veniam Nostro Optate."

Come to the ark. [Invitation.] This anonymous hymn has been traced to Percy Francis Hall's Christian H. Bk., 1844; it was put into print in J. Colman's Coll., 1846; H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1848; and in several later hymn-books in G. Britain and America.

Come ye who bow to sovereign grace. Maria in Plenius. [Holy Baptism.] Appeared in J. Middleton's Hymns, 1793, No. 309, in 6 st. of 4. In Spurgeon's H. Bk., 1860, No. 223, is a cento, 3 st., 4 st., 4 st., 3 st., 4 st., 3 st., 4 st., being from this hymn, and st. 4 st. by Mr. Sprague. In Miller's Sings and Songs, &c., 1840, p. 320, the original hymn is attributed to James Upton in error.

Conder, E. B., p. 255. ii. Dr. Conder's Heart Chords were replenished with an additional piece of music in 1847. His hymn, "Ye fair green hills of England," ("Laying a Foundation Stone") and "Lord, may a sinfull life be saved?" (A Child's Prayer).

Conder, Josiah, p. 256. i. Other hymns are:—

1. O love beyond the reach of thought, The love of God, p. 2. O Thou, our Head, enthrone on high, p. 3. Son of David, turn in light, incense Enlightening-desires.

4. Thou Lamb of God for sinners slain, Christ the Heard of the Church. From "Substantial Truth, O Christ, Thou art."
These hymns are all from his Hym. of Praise, dec., 1856.

Dues est lactiae. In ortu regali, p. 294, l. G. M. Prevost, in his C联动mus Bekenianum, 1846, p. 42, cites this as in four ms. now at Prag, the fullest form being in a ms. cited 1410, of the Abbey of Hohenfurt, which omits Rome's st. VIII.

Dues irae, dies illa, p. 296-301. In a ms. in the Brit. Mus. of the beginning of the 14th. (Harl. 1865, f. 178 b.), there is a Resignation, which might possibly have suggested at least some of the stanzas in the "Dues irae." The first part reads:

"Libera me Domine, de morte aeterna, in die illa tremendae;
Quando celi moviendi sunt et terra,
Dum venustus judicatur secutus per ignem.
Dias illa, dies irae, calamitatis et miseriae,
Dias magna et amara vide.
Quid erga miseriamus, quid deceam vel quid lactam, um tam boni perfeream ante tanaum judicem."

This Resignation is also in a Brit. Mus. ms. of the beginning of the 13th. (Lanudens 103, f. 143), and is evidently reduced to in a 12th. Life of Gundulf, Bishop of Rochester, who d. 1108. See Henry Wharton's Anglicar Sermon, vol. ii., 1691, p. 260. He primo's the life from a ms. now in the Brit. Mus. (Serg. These hymns are from his After Songs, 1867.

Dohne, William Howard, p. 304, l. was b. Feb. 3, 1832. His first S. School hymn-book was Sabbath Gems published in 1831. He has composed about 500 tunes, some of which are anthems, &c. He has written but few hymns. Of these "No one knows but Jesus," "Precious Saviour, dearest Friend," and "Saviour, like a bird to Thee," are noted in Dr. Pusey's "Baptist H. W.," p. 587.

Doddridge, Philip, D.D. At p. 305 is an account of a ms. vol. of Doddridge's Hymns, which is the property of the Bookers family. Since that article was written another ms. vol. has been found. It was the property of Lady Frances Gardiner, née Erskine, an intimate friend of Doddridge, and was left to her daughter, Mrs. Gardiner. It is a copy of the famous ms. vol., with the revised text, as in the margin of that ms., and is in Doddridge's handwriting. It was from this ms. that the Doddridge hymns were taken for the Scottish Tract and Paraphrase, 1745. Additional hymns by Dr. Doddridge still in C. U. include:—

1. My God, how cheerful is the sound. All in Christ.
2. My Saviour, let me hear Thy voice. Pardon me.
4. No more, ye wise, your wisdom boast. Glorifying in God alone. From Hymns, No. 128.
5. Now be that Sacrifice survey'd. Christ our Sacrifice.
7. Our fathers, where are they? Considering the Past. From Hymns, No. 154.
8. Praise to the Lord on high. Missions.
10. Return, my soul, and seek thy rest. Rest in Jesus.
14. There is a Shepherd kind and strong. The Good Shepherd. From Hymns, No. 216.
15. Wait on the Lord, ye heirs of hope. Waiting on God.
16. We bless the eternal Source of light. Christ's care of the Church.
17. With transport, Lord, our souls proclaim. Immutability of Christ.

These all appeared in Dr. Doddridge's Hymns, 1755.

Dominican Breviary, p. 179, l.

Douglas, Thomas, was the s. of a Quaker of the firm of James & Esterley, Soap Sellers, Newcastle on Tyne. When over 30 years of age he joined the Church of England, and died in her communion. He was the author of two dramas, Diocletian, and Cyrus Marus; and of a novel, The Eve of St. Mark. His tr. of the Latin were pub. as Hymnarium Anglicanum in 1844.

Doonead, Sarah, p. 307, l. Other hymns in C. U.:—
1. For all Thy care we bless Thee. Morning.
2. Lord, the golden harvest. Harvest.
4. One, 2, are from Miss Doonead's Poems of Life, 1851, and No. 3 in Mrs. Brock's "Children's H. B.," 1854.

Douglass, Frances Jane, née How, sister of Bp. W. W. How, was b. in 1829. Her April verses were printed in 1844, but were never published.

Down the winding path. [Good Friday.] We find this hymn in three forms:—(1) "Down from the wintry bough." In Dr. Alexander's "Augustine H. B.," 1849 and 1850, in 1851; (2) "Love, love divine, I sing," in Dr. Alexander's "Hymns, for the Ch. Cath.," 1852, compiled of st. ii. vi.; and (3) "Love, love on earth appears," in H. W. Beecher's "Plymouth Vol. II.," 1855, composed of st. iii., two additional st., and then st. vi. from No. 1. In each of these collections the hymn is attributed to Mrs. Southey, née Bowie, but we have failed to identify its author.

Doxologies, pp. 308-310. See also pp. 161, 162, 256, 257, 405, 406, 4-2, 496, 667, 711, 949, 1179.

Drawn to the Cross whom Thou hast blessed. [Good Friday.] A tender anonymous hymn in the Cong. Church H. B., 1857.

Drosten, Percy Howard, M.A., was b. in 1850, educated at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1875), and Rector of Bungay, Notts, 1894. His hymn "Beloved our Lord ascendeth up to His bright throne of light" (Jewett) was written for the Jenny Hymnary, 1864.

Drummond, William, p. 318. In the Royal Museum there is a copy of Drummond's Poems in town—Poems by William Drummond of Hawthornes, B.M. 1606, 1656, and in his Latin Hymns and Hymns posthumously, edited by Dr. E. K. Thompson, 1869. (See p. 1348, l.)

Duleis Jesus Nazarenus. [The Name of Jesus.] Its fine Sequence is probably of the 17th cent. In a three Missals of the 14th cent., now in the Bodleian Library, are found the words "Jesus" in Andrei, No. 33; and another, No. 262, prints it as "Jesus ducis Nazarenus," from the Latin "Praxmnonstratensium Missal" of 1541; and in p. 141 it refers to it as "Dominus Jesus Nazarenus." The word Jesus, gentle Nazarenus, by Mrs. Hammond, in "Altar H. B.," 1844, also by C. R. Pearson, 1846, p. 31, and 1871, p. 165.

Dunsterville, Patty Caroline, née Selina, daughter of Captain Selén, of the Royal Navy, and wife of the Rev. Darcy Dunsterville, D.D., at Exmouth, Devon, Jan. 7, 1867. Her hymn "The day is done and the Sun" (Evening) is in Thring's (d.1812).

Dwight, John Sullivan, s. of Timothy Dwight, p. 141, was b. at Boston, U.S.A., May 15, 1748, and educated at Harvard, and at the Cambridge Divinity College. He laboured in the ministry for six years, and then devoted himself to literary work. About five years he was editor of a Journal of Music. His connection with hymnody is very slight. (See "did bless our native land," p. 1566, l.)

E

E. C. W. These are the initials of a lady who pub. through Mr. John Hughes, of Truro, Bp. for many years Minds [s. n.], and who desires to remain invisible. From this work the following hymns are in C. U.:—
1. I love to think of heaven, O Lord, Redeemer.
2. Lord, Who last made me Thy dear child. Last.
4. No 1 and 2 are in W. R. Stevenson's "Boy H. B.," 1850, and others; and No 3 in Hooker's "H. B. of 1646, 2 vols."

E. O. D. Under this signature the following hymns appeared in Mrs. Brock's "Children's H. B.," 1841, one of which have passed into other collections:—
1. Again the morning shines so bright. Morning.
2. Lord, we come to ask Thee blessing. Temple.
4. Our Lord and Saviour has come again. Last.
5. Safely, safely gathered in. Death and Burial.

The signature of E. O. D. is that of Mrs. Horsey, Octavia I.e. Lila Doherty, b. 1831. Originally a member of the Church of England, she joined the Roman communion some time ago.

E. S. A. The initials of Ella Sophia Armitage or "Builder, daughter of S. M. Bulley, of Liverpool, and granddaughter of T. Raffes, nms. (p. 944, l.)" No b. at Liverpool, March 2, 1841, and married the Rev. E. Armitage, M.A., "now (1911) Theological Professor in the Congregational United College, Redford. Mrs. Armitage has pub. (:1) The Children of the English Nation; (2) The Association of England and Scotland; (3) The Education of a Christian Home; and (4) a Service of Song entitled The Service of the Lord, Lord, Novello, 1841. In the last two there are 16 of her original hymns. Mrs. Armitage's hymns in C. U. include:—
2. Except the Lord the temple build. Laying Foundation Stone of S. Nikola. Written at Watertown, Ontario, in 1875 for the laying of the foundation-stone of a new Sunday school.
3. In our dear Lord's garden. Christ's love for ELWIN, J. F.  [Appendix II.]  FAITH IS THE

Hymn & Spiritual Songs, being for the most part from various authors. It was reprinted in 1769 and 1776.

A few of his hymns from this work are in C.U. in America.

Elwin, John Fountain, F.R.C.S., & of Col. Fountain Elwin, was b. in Sicily, June 19, 1809; was Medical Superintendent of the British Medical Mission from 1872 to 1895; and d. Nov. 17, 1896. A few of his hymns are in the Enlarged London H. B., 1874, including “Peace, what a precious word!” (Peace we meet God).

Emergi undas et Deo, p. 339, i. Another tr. is “The Son of Man from Jordan rose,” in 1889 Suppl. Hymn to H. A. & M. It is by E. M. Moorson and the Compilers. At p. 4, II., read “O, Lord, express our medium.”

En tempus acceptable, p. 331, i. This is in the Chauvire Book, 1746, and the Le Mans, 1748. Another tr., “To: now the time accepted peals,” is in the 1849 Suppl. Hymn to H. A. & M. It is by E. M. Moorson and the Compilers. Mr. Moorson’s tr. is given in full in Church Work and Mission Life for Dec. 1896.

England, Samuel Simpson, b. in London, Nov. 29, 1811, and educated for the Congregational ministry at Homerton College. He has held several charges, and was one of the compilers of The New Cong. H. B., 1839, to which he contributed his version of Ps. xvi., “In anger, Lord, rebuke me not.” He d. Feb. 11, 1896.

Ennodius, Magnus Felix, p. 350, i. Since this article was sent to press we have reason to conclude that the two hymns annotated, p. 321, i. are not by Ennodius. They are not in the two critical editions of his Opera, viz. (1) the Monumenta Germaniae, ed. by F. Vogs, Berlin, vol. vii., 1845, and (2) the Corpus Scriptorum, ed. by H. Hartle, Vienna, vol. viii., 1892. We have not found them earlier than the Moscatel Book, pub. at Toledo in 1592.

Entrophon in Licht, eternal Lord. [Dedication of a Church.] This hymn appeared in Parish Hymn, Phila., U.S. A., 1843, No. 492, and signed “C. M. A.” It is repeated in a few American collections, including H. A. Boardman’s Psalms, Hymns of Phila., 1861, No. 363.

Ero evening shadows round me close. [Evening.] Given in H. Formby’s Easy Hymns & Sacred Songs (1847), No. 2, and signed “Sister M. J.” It is repeated in Mrs. Brock’s Children’s H. B., 1891.

Ero on my bed my limbs I lay. S. T. Coleridge, p. 382, i. This hymn appeared in the 1826 ed. of Coleridge’s Nightly Leaves as “A Child’s Evening Prayer,” in 16 lines.

Ero to the world again we go. [Close of Worship.] This popular hymn with the American Unitarians has been traced to George E. Ellis’ Ps. & Hymn, Boston, U. S. A., 1845, where it is given anonymously in 3 st. of 4 l. It is found in most later Unitarian collections.

As zieh ein stiller Engel, p. 355, i. This hymn was written in Feb., 1820. Another tr. is “A silent angel wanders here,” in J. P. Hoppin’s Hymns, Chants, and Anthems, 1877.

Eulaling, Catherine H., & Watterton, was b. in 1812, and married in 1840 to George J. Kelling, of Philadelphia. Her poems were collected and published in 1850 as The Green Bracelet, and other Poems. She is widely known as the author of “Come unto Me, when shadows...darkly gathering” (Invitation), which appeared in the Christian Releas, annual, 1829, in 9 st. of 4 l. It is usually given in an abbreviated form. Mrs. Eulaling is a member of the American Protestant Episcopal Church. (Jutler, 1884, p. 253.)

Eternal Source of life and power. T. Havies. [Holy Baptism.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Grammar (1809, No. 147, in 5 st. of 4 l. It was titled “Baptismal Hymn.” In 1817 J. Nunn, a part of it in his Ps. & Hymn, beginning with st. 1., “Our children, Lord, in faith and prayer,” was repeated in F. Bickersteth’s Christian Psalmody, 1833, and others of his later collections. It became a part of the Church of England’s later collections. In some hymnals it begins “these children, Lord, in faith and prayer,” but the former text is the more popular of the two.

Ever let thy soul rejoice. A. Mellius. [Jesus Only.]
Victory and Triumph, in FourParts, was publishe in 1610. The edges of the leaves of the book are cut very close, so that the verse is lost. By a number of persons to be subscribed for, 1610. The book is set in type by Thomas Cotes, and is printed on fine paper. The title-page is printed in red and black. The book is bound in red morocco, with a gilt edging. The volume is very rare.

Fletcher, Phineas, p. 376. Another of his hymns in C. U. from his Poetical Miscellanies, 1633, p. 93, in "From the depths of grief and fear" (Repentance). This hymn is in the Cumb. Ch. Hymn., 1857.

For ever ours, The good and great, &c. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [S. James the Apostle.] Written in 1853, and published in his From Fear to Fear, 1853, 6th ed. of the H. C. P. This is a beautiful hymn, and its original hymn appears in the Index.

Two of his original hymns are in the Cumb. Church Hymnal, 1853: (1) "Lord, Who didst wondrous things (Hosanna desired); and (2) With thanks to the Lord appear." (Praise of the Supreme).

Francis Samuel Trevor, s. of an artist, was at Cheshunt, Herts, in 1829, and is a merchant in London. His father has written numerous hymns, which have been printed in various religious newspapers and periodicals during the past 20 years. Of these hymns the following are in the Exeter London H. Bk., 1852:

2. He begins the prayer, Grant Thy word. Last.
4. I am waiting for the dawn. Heaven's Litanies.
5. Jesus, we remember Thee. Patrocinii.
7. O Jesus, how great is Thy mercy. Salvation in Jesus.
9. The earthly gates are open. Heaven.

10. Here are pilgrims far from our fatherland. Heaven Desired.

Of these hymns Nos. 1, 2, 4-7 first appeared in the Exeter London H. Bk., 1852. Mr. Trevor also pub. in 1851 (see the Revised Version with Poems).

Franciscan Breviary, p. 179. 1.

Franzoi, Franz Michael, was b. at Ulbing, Germany, in 1772, and educated at the University of the City where he became Librarian and Professor of Literary History. He was subsequently Minister at Kuna, and afterwards at the University of Gotha. He was also a Canon of the Cathedral of Halle, and a Bishop of Halle, 1814, and d. there in 1874. (See Supplement to Longfellow's Poems and Poetic of Europe.) Of his pieces one is a Eulogy on Cardinal Newman, 1862. He published several works. His poem on the Mistletoe is given in Kennedy, 1852, in two parts, as (The Salisbury sweet removal brings), and (2) "What is the sapling quiet walk.

From the first dawn of infant life. "Charity shall dwell in my heart." Anon. in Brit. Lit., 4th ed., 1872, in 4th ed.: and in H. In a few hymns, as in the American Presb. Soc. of Hymns, Philadelphia, 1861, it is said to be "And begins." (From earliest dawn of life.

From year to year in love we meet. p. 600. B. Written for the Sheffield School Union Festival, Whit Monday, May 19, 1823.

Frothingham, N. L., p. 400. B. Other hymns are —

1. O Saviour, Whose immortal word. Opening a Place of Worship. Written for the Dedication of the Church of the Saviour, B.se., November 16, 1847.
2. Remember Me, the Saviour said. Holy Communion.
3. They passed away from sight. Death and Burial.
4. When I am weak, I am strong. Spiritual Strength.

From his high throne above the sky. [Excerpted from "The Gospel of the Son of God." Anon. in Brit. Lit. Vol. II, 1852, in 4th ed. of vol. II, and in H. In a few hymns, as in the American Presb. Soc. of Hymns, Philadelphia, 1861, it is said to be "And begins." (From earliest dawn of life.

1. O Saviour, Whose immortal word. Opening a Place of Worship. Written for the Dedication of the Church of the Saviour, B.se., November 16, 1847.
2. Remember Me, the Saviour said. Holy Communion.
3. They passed away from sight. Death and Burial.
4. When I am weak, I am strong. Spiritual Strength.
Fulgens praelacra, p. 401, ii. Another tr. in a "Midst of life..." 1879; and Dr. Albert Ritschel's Geschichte des Pietismus, vol. 1, B. 1880, B. 1881, E. 1882, contains many references to hymn-writers and hymns of the Pietistic school.

The only two purely hymnological works which need be noted are (1) Wilhelm Bonsen's Quellenkunde über die Lieder des hannoverschen und des linksbaltischen Evangelischen, 1881, and (2) the present writer's "Religiöse Lieder der Deutschen in 19 Jahrhundert," 1891. This is very well done, embracing both Catholic and Protestant authors, and the information is brought up to date. We may add that in 1886 Dr. Fischer pub. the first part of a Supplement to his Kirchendichter-Lexicon, but the final part has not yet been printed.

Brock, Karl van, p. 418. He was b. at Valletta and on the Eos (at Stuttgart), and at Stuttgart, Jan. 14, 1880.

Gibbons, Thomas, p. 430, l. From his Hymn, sec., of 1784, and also in C. U.:—

1. Lord God, omnipotent to bless. Divine Help desired.
2. Now may the God of peace and love. Class of Service.

Giles, Charles, an American Methodist minister, was b. near Fort Griswold, Connecticut, Feb. 22, 1783, entered the ministry in 1808, and d. at Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 19, 1867. His hymn, "The four and twenty burning lamps," (Heaven Anticipated), is found in 6 st. of 5, in Dr. Galagher's New Selection, Cincinnati, Ohio, 1835; and in 6 st. of 5. From it the hymn, "This world is poor from shore to shore," in Becker's Hymn (vol. 3, 1850; J7. Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, and others, is taken.

Gill, George, s. of William Gill, was b. at Tinteron, Devonshire, Jan. 23, 1820, and for some time a missionary in the South Sea Islands, and then was made to work in the Barnstable (Mass.) Mission, 1862. His written text of Phoebe Cary's "One sweetly solemn thought" (p. 216, 1.) begins this "sweetly solemn thought," it is dated 1840, and also appeared in the Jev. Mag. Gill left the South Sea in 1840, and in 1861 became pastor of Westgate Congregational Chapel, Burnley. He d. Aug. 19, 1860.

Gillette, Abram Dunns, b. editor of Hymn, for Social Meetings, 1843, to which he contributed 13 pieces, including one on Missionary Love, "Far all beyond the sea, in Cambridge, Washington County, New York, Sep. 8, 1867; entered the Baptist ministry in 1850; and elsewhere; and d. Aug. 24, 1862.

Gill, T. H., pp. 481-3. Additional hymns to those annotated are in C. U.:—(1) "O dreadful glory that doth make," a cento from No. 48, pp. 423, ii.; (2) O mystery of Love Divine ("The Love of Christ") (3) Ye fools for whom the Saviour died ("Erecting Love"). These all are from his Golden Chain of Prayers, 1860.

Giver of every perfect gift. This is an altered form of God of all redeming grace, p. 404, ii.

Gladden, Washington, was b. at Pittsford, Pennsylvania, Feb. 11, 1836; was educated at Williams College; and entered the Congregational Minister in 1859; was for some time editor of the New York Independent, and of the Sunday Afternoon. In the Sunday School, his hymn, "Only One There" (Walking with God), appeared in 3 st. of 1, in March 1919. Of these st. i. and ii. are in Lauder Doane's, 1864, and others.

Gloria laus et honor, p. 496, ii. Additional trs. include (1) "All glory, praise, and honour," an altered form of Nale's tr. in the Pennsylvania Lutheran Church, 1863; (2) "To Thee, O Christ, be glory, praise, and power," in the Divine Office, 1763, and the E. C. Parochial H. Bk., 1st ed., (3) "Wide, unending, and worshipping be," by W. Himmel, circa 1530, in Wright and Halliwell's Balneis Anglicus, ii. 1845, p. 229; (4) "Praise, glory, and honour, Redeemeth, to Thee," by J. Wallace, 1814.
Gloriösi, p. 427, l. F. W. E. Roth gives in his Latinische Hymnen, 1887, p. 37, the readings of a 15th cent. MS. Brechor, now at Darmstadt, and apparently the use of Cologne. This text adds a doctrine.

Glory to the Father give, p. 428, ii. This hymn was printed on a broadsheet for use at the Sheffield Whitsonside National and School Festival, June 11, 1821, and again for the Sheffield S. S. Union, as stated at p. 428, ii.

Glory to the King of glory! By E. H. Rickertsh. [Ascension.] Written at Penmanpawr, N. Wales, 1803, and pub. in Mr. Roy's Hymn Book, 1822, p. 23, in 6 st. of 4 double lines. It was included in the 1830 ed. of the Hymn Comp.

Olyde, Elizabeth. In the 8. Mss. (T. No. 7) there is the following note on this writer and her hymn, "Be with me in the valley" (Death Anticipated): "Written in 1806 ed. by Mrs. Siddal some ten years before it was published. Miss Siddal was the daughter of Mr. Siddal, of Exeter, donor of an Independent chapel there." Snopp. In the 1806 ed. of his Songs of G. & G., No. 974, gives 1840 as the date of the hymn.

Go, bury thy sorrow. (Resignation.) We find this hymn in F. Halle's Gospel Songs, Cincinnati, 1874, p. 39, in 4 st. of 4 double lines. The words are given anonymously, whilst the music is signed "P. P. R.," i.e. P. Blisse. In J. D. Sankey's Sacred Songs & Solos this is also the case. There is no authority given to us for attributing the words to Blisse.

On earth, in spirit go. J. Gambold. [Good Friday.] This appeared in the English Moravian H. Rk., 1742, in 8 st. of 4 l., the sixth stanza beginning: "That heart our Saviour loves." In the 1801 ed. this stanza was omitted, and the stanza "His blood thy cause will plead," by John Hartley, was substituted. This form of the text is retained in the 1868 ed. of the same book. In Salem's Universal H. Rk., 1855, No. 266, st. 1-7, are from the 1742 ed., as above, and st. 8-11 is the first stanza of the hymn repeated, with slight alterations.

Go thou in life's fair morning. (Youth for Christ.) Anon. In W. B. Bradbury's Orioda, 1860; J. D. Sankey's Sacred, &c., and Solos, 1878, and others. It was apparently suggested by Mrs. Simpson's "Go when the morning shineth," p. 1088, ii.

Go to dark Gethsemane, p. 430, ii. Nearly all the alterations in the revised version of this hymn as printed on p. 430 were given in the Leeds Hymn., 1822, No. 804, which shows that the revision was originally made for that Sel. and not for the Christian Psalmist.

Goody, F. W., p. 431, ii. A companion hymn, for Church Restoration, to his hymn, No. 3, on p. 431, ii., is given in Allen's Cong. Psalmist Hymn., 1845, as "Our fathers Friend and God."

Goody, Thomas, p. 431, ii. He d. at Nottingham, March 16, 1829.

God bless our native land. (National Hymn.) Several hymns opening with this first line are in C. U. The basis of each is the English National Anthem, "God save the Queen." The most popular form is that which had its origin in America, about 1834, the English form, dating 1836, not being in very general use. The following details and texts are of some interest to hymnologists.

I. The American History and Texts.

1. The Rev. C. T. Brooks, an Unitarian minister, during the time that he was studying at the Divinity School, Cambridge, U. S. A., 1832 to 1833, wrote the following, said to be in tr. from the German:—

"God bless our native land! Firm may she ever stand Through storm and night! When the wild tempests rave, Ruler of wind and wave, Do Thou our country save By Thy great might!"

"Let our hearts' prayers arise Into the upper skies, Regions of light! Who hath heard each sigh, Watches each weeping eye; He is forever near, Veiler of Right!"

II. The next form of this hymn is by the Rev. J. S. Dwight (p. 1560, iii.), and reads:—

"God bless our native land! May she, her protecting land Still guard our shore! May peace her power extend, For she transformed to friend, And Britain's rights depend On war no more."

The full text is in the 1836 Sing. to the Baptist Ps. & Hymn.; the Math. Psalms &c., Hymn., 1839; the Cong. Church Hymn., 1867, and other collections.

2. In the Muth. S. H. Rk., 1873, No. 460, is an anonymous hymn which begins:—

"God bless our native land! Her strength and glory stand Ever in Thee,"

III. In the Cong. Church Hymn., 1887, No. 454 opens with the same stanza as No. ii, but st. ii. is "God guard our sea-girt land," and st. iii. is "God smile upon our land."

The texts in these two hymn-books suggest a common original of four or more stanzas, but this cannot be ascertained. If it exists, we have not seen. [J. J.].
God forbid that I should glory. In his Notes to the Scottish Psalt. Hs. of 1787, Mr. Thin says of this hymn, “Anon. Appended to Cowper’s Selah, circa 1698.”

God made me for Himself, to serve Him here. Sir. H. Baker. [Home Mission.] The hymn was published in the 1838 Hymns of the Rev. H. Baker, in the same year.

God moves in a mysterious way. A mystic. This hymn is attributed to Pusey, and also to the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. It points to an earlier source from which the hymn was taken, but the editors of both collections, but this source we have failed to find.

God of our Fatherland. Mr. E. H. Bidder, Belfast, [National Hymn.] This hymn is attributed to Pusey, and also to the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. It was included in the Hymn, Comp. 1830.

God, Who is just and kind. J. Patrick. [Ps. 119.] The text was published in the 1838 Hymns of the Rev. H. Baker, and also in the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. The hymn is attributed to Pusey, and also to the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. It was included in the Hymn, Comp. 1830.

God, Who madest earth and heaven. P. 450. The text was published in the 1838 Hymns of the Rev. H. Baker, and also in the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. The hymn is attributed to Pusey, and also to the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. It was included in the Hymn, Comp. 1830.

Goethe's elegy. W. v. von. [National Hymn.] This text was published in the 1838 Hymns of the Rev. H. Baker, and also in the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. The hymn is attributed to Pusey, and also to the American Sabbath H. Bk. in the same year. It was included in the Hymn, Comp. 1830.

Gotch, Frederick William, M.A., L.L.D., was b. at Kent, and died at Dublin. Bk., 1872.

Hey, and. Several, of whose tr. from the German are in the Singing, Lutheran Hymnal, Columbus, Ohio, 1880, is a Custom House officer in Philadelphia.

Hey and his master. [A Child's Prayer.] This hymn is usually attributed to W. Spark, Mus. Doc., of Leeds, but in error. Dr. Spark says he found it in an old Crystal Palace Juvenile Festival Concert Programme, and being struck with its beauty, at once set it to music. Hence the error of associating the authorship with his name.

Heavenly Father, all creation. J. B. H. (Tory Priests.) Contributed to P. Mauritius' Choral 2, 1861, No. 713 in 4 st. of 10 l.

Muse, Charles E., p. 774, i. He d. at 31, Marlefield Gardens, Hampstead, Oct. 28, 1890. His hymn, "I lift my heart to Thee, O.," was written in Oct., 1871.

Nasal, in the sinner's cries! A cento from "I am a soldier of the Cross," p. 55, ii.

Must Jesus bear the cross alone? [No Cross no Crown, I. i.], from "Frederick's Songs of Infantry," 1852, No. 9. It is signed "G. N. Allen" by an American authorities. It is said to have been taken from G. N. Allen's collection, "The Social and Sabbath Hymn Book," 1849. In this form st. i. is altered from T. Shepherd's "Pentecostal Hymns," 1833, No. 23, st. ii., and st. iii. is found in a missionary collection pub. at Norwich (England), circa 1818. To these three stanzas three other stanzas were added in the "Plymouth Codd.," which are attributed to the editor's brother, C. Becher (p. 135, ii.).

2. In the American Meth. Episc. Hymn. 1678, the 3 st. of T. Shepherd's collection as above are given us by Thomas Shepherd, ait. G. N. Allen was b. in 1812, and d. in 1877.

3. In the Oberlin Manual of Praise, 1880, No. 416 is composed of 4 st., of which st. ii. is unknown to the Plymouth Codd.

My Father, when I hear Thy voice. This hymn is No. 65, in 3 st. of 4 l., in the Songs of Zion, A col. of Ps. for Worship. Alphabetically arranged. By the Rev. Isaac Asher, 3d ed. enlarged. Dublin Tract Repository, 1890.

My God, how fair soeaw sweet, p. 790, i. In Eliot's Ps. & Hymns, 1835, No. 254.

My God! though cleaving to the dust. [Land.] This fr. from Adini Boissev.'s "Seigneur! de mon de la poussière," is from H. Draper's Hymns and Verses, 1875.

My horse is stranded, and laid aside. [Hoping for a return.] Appeared in the "Gloucester Hymns," 1779, Bk. II, No. 52, in 1st of 4 l., and headed, "Hoping for a return." From latter stanzas in the hymn, "While I to my soul gave way," sometimes "While to my grief I my soul gave way," beginning with st. iv., is taken. In the Preface to the "Gloucester Hymns" Newton says: "My grief and disappointment [at the downfall of Cowper's health and mind] were great; I hung my heart on the housetops, and for some time thought myself determined to proceed [with hymn-writing] no farther without him. Yet my mind was afterwards led to resume the labour. On comparing this extract with this hymn it seems very probable that this was his first effort after resuming his sometime abandoned work.

My Hiding-place, my Refuge Tower. Part of "Begin, my tongue, some heavenly theme," p. 126, ii.

My Lord, my God, my Love. [Christian All in All.] From the Catholic Hymnary, 1842.

My opening eyes with rapture see. [Sunday Morning.] Usually attributed to J. Hutton (p. 646, ii). Duffield, "Hymns," 1888, says it is in the Appendix to D. Benham's "Memorial of Hutton," 1886, but we have failed to find it in any English edition of that work. It is in J. Odwin's "Boston Coll.," 1813, in 4 st. The modern form of 4 st. is from the American Prayer Book Coll., 1826.

My son, give me thine heart, and let. J. Montgomery. [Sunday School Anniversary.] Written for the Sheffield Wesleyan Red Hill Sunday School Anniversary, held on March 3, 1834.

My soul, know thou the Lord. [Early Piety Enforced.] Anon. In Rebecca Wilkison's "Short Sermons to Children," C., circa 1790 (see p. 1029, ii.) at the end of Sec. xvi. In J. Benham's "Hymns for Children and Young Persons," C., 1814, No. 61, it is given with others as by "Brackenbury." As this was four years before R. C. Brackenbury's death (see p. 106, i.), and both he and Watson were Wesleyan ministers, and well known to each other, we hold this to be good proof of Brackenbury's authorship.

My soul and all its powers. A cento from "God of my life," to Thes., p. 433, ii.

My soul, praise the Lord, speak good of His Name. [Ps. cxxxii.] This in Kennedy, 1845, No. 1053, is an altered form of W. B. Kethe's paraphrase of Ps. 103, in the O. P.

Neale, Cornelius, a. b. of James Neale, of St. Paul's Churchyard, was b. Aug. 12, 1799, and educated at St. John's, Cambridge; B.A. 1811; Sen. Wrangler; Fellow of St. John's, 1812; w.a. 1815. He took Holy Orders in 1822, and became Curate of Mildenhall, near Newmarket. He d. Aug. 9, 1823. His Lyrical Dramas, with Domestic Scenes, a Miscellaneous of tales and songs, were pub. in 1819, and his Memoirs and Remains in 1831. In the latter the following hymns are found:--(1) "Thee dust still forgive me," (2) "When safely on dry land above, My soul would fain be there," (Heaven desired;); (3) "Tell but a film of flesh divides," (Heaven anticipated). The second and third of these hymns are also in his son's (Dr. J. M. Neale's) Hymns Chiefly Med. on the Joys & Glories of Paradise, 1865.

O day of God, most calm, most bright. From "Day of God, most calm, most bright," p. 140.

O Deus ego amo Te, Nam prius Te sustinui, p. 886, i. We find that this hymn is a paraphrase of a prayer to St. Ignatius Loyola's Spiritual Exercises and is the 1st ed. Rome, 1544 [Brit. Mus.], which is found on the last leaf of shed 1. The prayer is part of the "Contemplatio ad amorem spiritualis est sub extantudum," and runs thus: "Suspece Domine unam nos membra vehementer. Accepit memoriam, intellectum, volutum obviam omne. Quaesitque hortae, vel positionis, vel intentionis, vel tibi totum residuum, atque aequat obviam gaudium. O Holy Father, Who in tender love. R. E. H. Bickersteth. [Holy Communion.] Printed for use in the diocese of Exeter, and dated, "J. & T. Scott, Exeter, 1842." (Exeter, J. Townsend.) It is printed as a leaflet, and is accompanied by the following note by the author:—"The structure of this hymn was suggested by Canon Bright's verses, so well known in their abbreviated form, beginning, "And now, O Father, mindful of the love," and the hymn was written with the echo of the most beautiful tune, 'Une et m'or,' by W. H. Monk, to which those verses are set in hymns Ancient and Modern, vibrating to my heart." It was included in the 1890 ed. of the Hymn Comp. with the above note in a rewritten form, and the addition that showing some misapprehension might arise he sent a copy to Canon Bright, from whom he received an assurance that he should regard it as a "parallel hymn," to his own. O Love that will not let me go. G. Matheson. Jesus all and in All. Dr. Matheson says this hymn was "written in the Manse of my former parish (Inverness, Argyleshire) one summer evening in 1882. It was composed with extreme rapidity; it seemed to me that its construction occupied only a few minutes. Occasionally I felt myself rather in the position of one who was being dictated to than of an original artist. I was shortfaced by extreme mental distress, and the hymn was the fruit of pain." (1st. ed.) This hymn first appeared in the Church of Scotland magazine Life and Work, in 1882. From thence it passed into the Scottish Hymn, 1884; and there

O Lord, who in the flesh reveals. C. Wesley. [Jesus th'e:naching.] Pub. in Hymn. & Sac. Poems, 1749. From it is taken "Jesus, a word, a look from Thee" [P. Works, iv., p. 317].

O Thou God of my salvation. T. Holders. [Praise to the Saviour.] This hymn we attribute to T. Holders on the following evidence:

1. It appeared at the end of A Short Account of the Death of Mary Langeon of Tarstall, in cheshire, who died January the 23d, 1759. Printed in Sea in Mik CYLIXT.

2. We find it next in the Wesley Psalms Bk., 1774 (5th ed.), No. 171, in 5 st. of 4 l., Bp. in a trimmed form, with the title abbreviated and re-arranged, it is still popular.

3. T. Oliver's was the Superintendent of the Local Circuit in which Taxall was included, in 1780 (or in is usually regarded as the author of the short verse in the hymn appended there.

4. From the ms. evidence in our possession and the general feeling, we feel that the authorship of the canto by T. Oliver is correct.

Veni Creator Spiritus, Mentone. p. 1206, H. Bp. Bickersteth has tr. this as "Creator Spirit, make Thine;" (tr. in 1880), and includes it with the Latin te; and an extensive note in the 1890 ed. of his Hymn, from several additional trs. and altered forms of old renditions of this hymn are known to us, but being of minor importance are omitted here.

Veni Sancte Spiritus, p. 1212, H. B. Dr. R. Palmer's tr. p. 1215, H. & S., is given in the Savoy Hymnary, N. & S.

"There's peace and rest in Paradise" (Courage a Hope).

VERNON, John Richard, M.A., of Hertford College, Oxford, Rector of St. Andrews, Bridgewater since 1872, an author of The Harvest of My Quiet 3 Years and other works contributed to the 1889 Suppl. Hymn, to H. A. & M.
When bending o'er the brink of life, p. 196, l. 1. In the Even. Mag., 1866, p. 490.

When Christ came down on earth of old, Cecil F. Alexander. [Addenda.] Contributed to the S. P. C. K. Hymn., 1852, No. 2, in 4 st. of 4 l. This is altered in Kennedy, 1863, p. 1; "From Ieaven when Christ came down of of old," and in the Westminster Abbey Hym. Bk., 1863, to "When Christ from heaven came down of old." In the Lyra Anglicana, 1862, Mr. Aspinall expanded the original hymn to 8 st. of 4 l., as "When Jesus came to earth of old." This is in Thring's Collect., 1862. From it "O N e of God, in glory crowned," in the Brutal. Bk., 1811, is taken.

When first before His mercy-seat. Part of "Be still, my heart, these anxious care," p. 804.

When God is mine and I am His. Part of "I know that my Redeemer lives, and ever prays for me," p. 546.

When God's right arm is bared for war. Part of "Awake, swift harp of Judah, wake," p. 103, l. 2.

When His salvation bringling. [Palm Sunday.] In B. and J. G. Butler's Psalms, &c. Sel. of Ps. Bk., 8, Lond., 1836, there is 1 psalm version signed "J. King," and 1 psalm version and 4 hymns signed "J. King." One of the latter is "When His salvation bringling." No. 417, in 3 st. of 8 l., with a chorus. This hymn is in extensive modern use. Concerning the author great difficulty has been experienced in tracing his identity. Under date of Aug. 15, 1865, the Rev. John Gwyther informed D. Sedgwick that the signatures above stood for, "Johanna Kings, late Vicar of Hull." In a second communication, dated Aug. 19, 1865, he writes further, "Mr. Joshua King was投入to Mr. J. Eynon, of Wellington, Shropshire, in 1834, of whom I have his collection of Hymns and wrote them for his book, but whether he published them in any of the books is unknown. Mr. Eynon died, and I am not sure Mr. E. gave his Hymns to any brother." From the Registers of Eynon Church we find that Mr. King's name was John. He graduated at Queens' College, Cambridge, b.a. 1814; became incumbent of Christ Church, Hull, in 1822, and d. Sep. 12, 1866, aged 60.

When morning's first, and hallowed ray. [Morning.] Anon. from Creeve's Amer. Commonplace Bk. of Poetry, 1831, into the Bap. Prize Bk., 1871, and others.

When round the camp for Israel's sin. [Easter.] Appeared in the British Magazine, Sept. 1822, p. 31, in 6 st. of 4 l., headed "Hymn for the first S. after Easter," and signed B. J. W. It was included in Kennedy, 1863.

When shall I bear the inward voice. Part of C. Wesley's "Father, if Thou my Father art," p. 507, l.

When shall I see the welcome hour! Part of C. Wesley's "My God, I know, I feel Thee move," p. 779, l.

When shall sound of gladness. J. Elsdon. [Mission.] From his Fifty Missionary Hymn., 1822, into a few collections.

When the morning paints the sky. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [*Christian, the Child's Example.] Written in 1800; pub. In his From Year to Year, 1843, and included in the Bp. Comp., 1899. In the latter the author says, "This hymn was suggested by seeing the words 'What would Jesus do?' in illuminated letters on a card suspended in a child's morpance."

When thou, O Lord, in fresh worst dress. J. Anticke. [Christmas.] From his posthumous Hymns, 1836.

When Thy soldiers take their wands again. Frances M. Owen. [Conversion.] Written circa 1872, and pub. in her Essays and Poems, 1887. It is in Bp. E. H. Bickersteth's Text of the Chapel of St. Helenian Coll., 1859, p. 5, as Frances Mary Owen, nee Syngye, wife of the Rev. J. A. Owen, Assistant Master at Cheltenham College, was b. April 16, 1832, and d. June 12, 1883.

When up to nightly skies we gaze. John Sterling. [Tract.] In Martineau's Hymn., 1872, this hymn is dated 1800. It is also in Border's Song. Hym., 1843, and others.
STERLING was b. at Kane's Castle, Bute, July 20, 1666, and d. at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, Sep. 18, 1844.

Whither, O whither, should I fly. Part of C. Wesley's "God of my life, whose gracious power," p. 433, ii.

Whitmore, Hannah M., sister of W. M. Whitmore, is the author of "How sweet to think that all who love," (Unity), which appeared in her brother's The Short Hymn-s, and again with others in her uncle Jonathan Whitmore's Supplement to All Hymns, 1860. This hymn is dated by D. Sedgwick "1756," and is included in several modern collections as the Holy Hymn, 1879, &c.

Whitmore, William Keynell, Editor of Sunshines. Rector of St. Katherine Cree, London, is the author of "I want to be like Jesus" (Early Piety), in his Infant Altar, 1812; and "We won't give up the Bible" (Early Scriptures), 1839. The form of the latter in Scoop's Songs of G. & G., 1872, is a revision by Ps. John Gregg.

Who feels not thoughts within him rise? R. P. H. Bickerstaff. [St. Luke.] Written at Westmancaster in 1883; pub. in his From Year to Year, 1883, in 8 st. of 4 l., and the Hym. Comp., 1890, abbreviated to 6 st. of 4 l.

Why those fears! behold the pillow. An altered form of "Why those fears? Is that Jesus?" (p. 615, ii. 56).

Wassermeier, Burchard, was a native of Holstein, and d. at Petershagen (probably Petershagen near Alt-Lambrecht), apparently before 1609. He was from 1637 to 1644, and probably somewhat longer, one of the masters in the Greyfriars Gymnasium at Berlin. (Koch, iii. 241; M. Michael Schirmer. By Dr. J. F. Bachmann, Berlin, 1859, p. 226, &c.) He assisted in preparing the two hymn-books which his colleague at Berlin, Johann Zeger (p. 271, Nos. 1, 4), issued in 1640 and 1653. To these he contributed a few recasts of earlier hymns. The only one, into English is noted at p. 1091, i.

[J. M.]

Withiesworth, Esther, daughter of Thomas Wrigleyworth, was b. at 6 Bruce Terrace, Tottenham, Middlesex, in 1727, and is now (1991) Matron of the Magdalen Asylum, Stratham. She has composed a large number of small poetical works, and has contributed numerous hymns and poems to the periodical press. The works from which most of her hymns in C. U. are Zehner, Samuel, d. d., p. 58, ii. 8. B. at Suhl in Thuringia, May 4, 1894; became pastor and superintendent at Schleswigen, 1822, and d. there April 5, 1838.

Zinzendorf, Nicolaus Ludwig, Count von, p. 201, ii. The Rev. J. T. Müller of Herrnhut, has kindly supplied the following additional notes to certain of Zinzendorf's hymns:

2. Ich bin ein kleines Kindlein, p. 200, ii., 1st. appeared as an Appel to the catechismand Lauter Stich der Wahrheit von Jesu Christo, pub. in June 1723.

3. Ruht aus von eurer Mühle, p. 200, ii. Written Feb. 6, 1737, at London, on receiving the news of the death of some of the Brethren on the island of St. Thomas.

5. Du innig geliebter Erlöser der Siinder, p. 200, ii. Written in December 1739 for his cousin Theodora (see no. xxxvi. at p. 200, i.). The initial letters of ii. 1-30 form the acrostic Sophia Theodora Graefin zu Castell; and the initial letters of ii. 31-36 were intended to represent "Prinz selig mit der verliebten Schwester."

The following notices were omitted in error:

Sachs, Hans, the famous German poet and showmaker, was b. at Nürnberg, Nov. 5, 1494; settled there in 1516 after his journeys wanderings, and d. there on the evening of Jan. 19, 1576 (see full notices in K. Goethe's Grundriss, vol. ii. 1886, pp. 468-473; Alt. deutscher Dichter, xxxii. 110, &c.). His poetical works were pub. at Nürnberg in 3 vols., folio, 1581-6 (vol. 4, 1578; vol. 5, 1579); and a complete ed. of his works was pub. by the Literatur Union of Stuttgart, of which vol. xvii. appeared in 1855. His pre-Reformation hymns are given by Wackernagel, ii. Nos. 148-1112; and his post-Reformation hymns by Wackernagel, iii. Nos. 83-806. Two of his hymns (Wackernagel, iii. Nos. 987) have been (or seen) by Bp. Coxe, in 1581 (see no. 443, ii. Nos. 16, 577); and two others (Wackernagel, iii. Nos. 86, 972) by Mrs. Winkworth, 1869, pp. 131, 134. Sachs, Hans, d. 1834, i. and ii. 1844. ii.

Salis-Beecia, Johann Gaugend, Baron von, was b. Dec. 7, 1662, at the castle of Bodmer (Bethmann), near Malans, Grisons, Switzerland. From 1779 to 1792 he was an officer in the French army; and after 1798 he held various offices connected with the Swiss Militia, and with his native canton. He d. at Bodmer, Jan. 29, 1834, and was buried at Beecia, near Malans (Allg. deutscher Dichter, xxxii. 215, &c.). His Poems appeared as his Gedichte at Zürich, 1793; 2nd ed., 1794; 3rd, 1797; 4th, 1800; 5th larger ed., 1805; new ed., 1808 (all in Berlin Library, and many later eds. The most famous of his poems is "Das Grab der tief und stille," in his Gedichte, 1793, p. 35, entitled "The Grave, 1783." of which there are at least 7 trs. into English. The only one in English C. G. U. as a hymn is:

Ins stille Land! Wer leitet uns hinüber. For the Dying. 1st pub. in his Gedichte, Neue Auflage, Zürich, 1805, p. 146, in 3 st. of 7 L, each ending "Ins stille Land." In his Gedichte, Cologne, 1816, p. 134. The tr. in C. G. U. is:

Into the Silent Land! Ah! who shall lead us thither. In full by H. W. Longfellow in his Voices of the Night, Cambridge, U. S., 1860, p. 14, repeated in the later eds. of his Poetical Works, pub. at Cambridge, in Hodge and Huntington's Hymn, for the Church of Christ, 1883, and many later American collections. It has been translated into Greek verse by Dr. B. H. Kennedy, in his Between Walls, 1877. There are at least three other versions in English.
